“The Department of Work and Pensions and HMRC are both considering a 42 day time period in Britain.”

4853. There is no way that I experienced appeals being dealt with within 42 days: what happens is that, if the Department can deal with an appeal within a reasonable time, that is fine; if they cannot, it goes to the back of the box. That is a fact.

4854. Mr M Byrne: It is up to the president of the appeals service, I suppose, as to how appeals are managed after they get into that system.

4855. Mr Brady: I just wanted to clarify that.

4856. Mr M Byrne: I am not aware of any current plans to introduce a time limit for that.

4857. Mr Brady: All I am saying is that it is not feasible.

4858. Mr M Byrne: No. Well, maybe that is why it will not be introduced.

4859. Mr Brady: That is OK. I just wanted to clarify that.

4860. The Chairperson: OK. Thank you for that.

4861. Ms Corderoy: Under clause 102, there is a query about the security of electronic communications.

4862. Amendments being made by this clause have nothing to do with the electronic sharing of information between Departments and HMRC. The amendments are designed to enable the Department to include provision for electronic communication in relation to claims to benefits and in relation to notification regarding changes of circumstances in regulations. That is rather than our having to make a separate Order under the Electronic Communications Act 2000. The clause will simply allow provision to be made under social security legislation rather than having to use electronic communications legislation. It will be a more effective approach to introducing something new or making changes, for example, if you wanted to make provisions for additional benefits regarding electronic communication in the benefit system.

4863. Clause 103 concerns the recovery of benefit payments, and the Committee paper advises:

“Members should note that this will also include the recovery of overpayment where the claimant was not at fault and is unaware that an overpayment has been made.”

4864. There will be guidance on that, particularly on whether the claimant is eligible for a hardship payment.

4865. Mr Brady: Essentially, you are saying that an infallibility will be visited upon the Department. It will always be right, regardless of who made the mistake. That has always been a bone of contention. A person who does not know that an overpayment has been made will, through no fault of their own, still be penalised.

4866. Ms Corderoy: The Department has to take responsibility for its mistakes. At the same time, if the Department makes a mistake, that money does not belong to the person to whom it has been paid.

4867. Mr Brady: The person may have a different opinion because, essentially, they will be penalised through money being deducted from their weekly benefit, which will put them below the subsistence level. That is more than grossly unfair. If a person makes a false statement, or something similar, they would expect there to be recovery eventually. However, you are saying that it does not matter who makes the mistake; the individual is responsible.

4868. Ms Corderoy: It is definitely worth putting on the record that an individual's personal financial circumstances will be taken into consideration when the money is being reclaimed.

4869. Mr Brady: The general point is that the recovery would still be made from their benefit, even though it was not their fault.
4870. Mr M Byrne: There is guidance in place on the circumstances in which the Department will or will not pursue recovery. All the circumstances of a case will have to be taken into account. The overpayment of a claimant, without their realising it, is not a regular occurrence.
4871. Mr Brady: With respect, the figures for customer error and departmental error are now higher than those for customer fraud. The Department makes mistakes more often than customers commit fraud, allegedly.
4872. Mr M Byrne: In pursuing recovery, the Department will have to take into account all the circumstances of a case, including the amount overpaid.
4873. Mr Brady: I just want to finish on this point: irrespective of what the Department takes into account, clause 103 still gives it the right to recover overpayment, regardless of who made the mistake.
4874. Mr M Byrne: Yes, it does.
4875. The Chairperson: That was a simple question and a simple answer.
4876. Mr Durkan: Maurice, will you give an example of the sort of circumstances that might lead to the Department not seeking to recover an overpayment? Would it be very unusual for it not to do so?
4877. Mr M Byrne: It would be unusual for a claimant not to realise that they had been overpaid. They would normally see that an extra amount was coming into their account every week, month or whatever.
4878. Mr Durkan: In circumstances in which there is a single household payment, one member of the household might not know how much of that is theirs. Should, for example, their partner die, how do they know what should be left?
4879. Mr M Byrne: The payment may increase for no apparent reason or someone may receive a second payment for no apparent reason.
4880. Mr Durkan: Yes, but what happens if the payment does not decrease when it should or by as much as it should?
4881. Mr M Byrne: If the person expects their payment to decrease but it does not, should they not query that, too? All those circumstances need to be looked at.
4882. The Chairperson: I think that Mark's question is whether you have in mind any circumstances in which the Department may decide, having taken into account everything in the round, not to seek recovery of the money. Do you have an example of that?
4883. Mr M Byrne: A health condition might be a major consideration. You have to take into account a claimant's health, state of mind and whether they are capable of realising that they should not have got the money.
4884. The Chairperson: Would those types of circumstances be written into guidelines or regulations?
4885. Mr M Byrne: As far as I am aware, they are in the guidance.
4886. Mr Brady: You gave the example of money going into an account. However, there is an assumption by claimants, rightly or wrongly, that the Department actually knows what it is doing when it pays people. That might sound a bit simplistic, but, in my experience, people consider the Department to be, for the most part, competent.
4887. Mr M Byrne: If claimants are told that they are getting x pounds a week, month, fortnight or whatever, and, all of a sudden, get more —
4888. The Chairperson: We are now clear that clause 103 provides for the recovery of benefits overpaid to people by way of a Department error. Exclusions and exemptions to that will be drafted in guidelines. That is what we are being told. Are we happy enough that we understand?

4889. Ms Corderoy: There are no comments on clause 104.
4890. Clause 105 concerns the application of the Limitation Order and puts beyond doubt that the Department can recover overpayments by means other than court action. However, it also secures that time limits do not apply to that. One stakeholder suggested that time limits should apply to prevent unnecessary hardship to claimants. The Department has a duty to protect public funds and recover overpayments on social fund loans. Therefore, it is right that it should be able to do so over an extended period. Without that, there could be higher repayment rates to enable the debt to be recovered sooner, which could put undue financial pressure on those repaying a debt. We think it appropriate that there should be no time limit on that.
4891. The Chairperson: OK.
4892. Ms Corderoy: Clauses 106 to 115 relate to fraud policy. Colleagues from the agency are due to come before the Committee on Thursday.
4893. The Chairperson: Sorry, I missed that point.
4894. Mr Pollock: Clauses 106 to 115 are to do with fraud. We can omit the detail of those, as Conrad McConnell from the fraud policy unit will talk to them on Thursday.
4895. Clauses 116 to 120 are on information sharing. There is quite a bit of concern that the right people get the right information to facilitate the delivery of benefits.
4896. These clause relate to the information-sharing gateways needed to deliver benefits, in particular passported benefits, under the Welfare Reform Bill. Stakeholders relayed the same sort of concerns that we had about collecting personal information, ensuring compliance with the Data Protection Act 1998 and ensuring that the gateways are regularised to facilitate the delivery of mainstream benefits and passported benefits, which include the likes of free school meals and school uniforms. There is nothing really else to say.
4897. “Welfare services” are covered in clause 117, and that is a fairly broad term to try to encompass many of the passported benefits. In many situations, it will be for the relevant Department or organisation to say that they need access to the computerised information system that holds the social security information for such and such a purpose, whether that is to deliver a rates scheme, for school uniforms, free school meals or whatever. In that sense, we hope that we have captured all the needs at this point. We have certainly been round the Departments and their satellite bodies to try to ensure that everybody knows that some of the legal gateways for information sharing will close when the Bill is enacted and that others need to be opened to ensure the continued delivery of service. We will bring forward regulations on information sharing, probably as soon as the Bill achieves Royal Assent.
4898. The Chairperson: Is that OK, Fra?
4899. Mr F McCann: I would like clarification on clauses 116 and 117. At an evidence session, the Northern Ireland Federation of Housing Associations (NIFHA) mentioned that housing associations were not included in the groups that can be given information. Do you review who fits into that category?
4900. Mr Pollock: It depends on why they need the information, Fra. Anyone who requires access to your information or my information has to specify what information they need and what purposes they need it for, and then access is granted or not granted. Currently, housing associations are not included, because they are a further step removed.
4901. Mr F McCann: I take it that, if they made an application, there would not be any real opposition, given the wide range of housing and care that they provide.
4902. Mr Pollock: As I said, it depends on why they need the information. The information that we are talking about

- is personal information held on the benefits system.
4903. The Chairperson: OK, Michael. Thank you for that. Would there be any point in talking to NIFHA about that, as it made the point? I accept entirely the very strong data protection argument, but it might be useful to ask NIFHA specifically why it thinks that it needs to be included. We could then go back and say that we accept its argument for being a qualifying person, or not, as the case may be.
4904. Mr Pollock: We will take a wee look at that to see what we can come up with.
4905. The Chairperson: We are happy with that action, so you can fast forward to clause 121.
4906. Ms Corderoy: Clauses 121 to 125 relate to child maintenance provisions. The Committee has commented on supporting maintenance and whether it may wish to consider the clause in the context of its response to the consultation. I do not know whether you want us to say anything about that, or do you want me to address some of the queries raised by stakeholders?
4907. The Chairperson: There was a specific query, if I remember rightly, about the process.
4908. Ms Corderoy: The gateway process.
4909. The Chairperson: Some people were asking if it could lead to something additional. I think that you might have responded to that point at our previous meeting. I am trying to remind myself of it.
4910. Mr Douglas: Sorry, but we have been notified that we need to go to the Chamber for a vote.
4911. The Chairperson: Is there no buzzer in here?
4912. Ms Brown: We will hear it in here.
4913. The Chairperson: Thank you, Sammy, for bringing that to our attention. We are on clause 121. If there is a vote, it will take about 10 minutes. Members, we could complete this in a very short time, so we will work away until called to vote. If we run down to the Chamber and run back up again, we could complete this process, and it would be a job well done.
4914. Sorry, Jane, go ahead.
4915. Ms Corderoy: The Committee raised four specific queries at the previous meeting. Two related to payment in kind and the maximum amount allowed to be taken from the non-resident parent, and I can cover those now. I will begin with a clarification of whether payment in kind can be included in the regulations. Regulations will not be made under clause 123. It merely provides for a calculation to indicate how much maintenance a person might expect to pay or receive, based on the circumstances at that time. Maintenance calculations will be based on the gross income figures supplied by HMRC and will, therefore, not reflect payment in kind. The clause allows parents to apply to the Department for a calculation of what child maintenance would be under statutory rules — [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.] We have a list of what payment in kind covers, and we can send that to you. The second query was about the maximum amount allowed to be taken from a non-resident parent. I think that we already supplied that information to the Committee.
4916. The other two queries were to do with company directors and cases in which a non-resident parent lives in another jurisdiction. We did quite a lot of work on that, but our response was issued to the Committee only today. As you will not yet have received that, I can cover those issues now if you want me to.
4917. The Chairperson: If you can, although, as Michael Copeland raised that — 4918. Ms Corderoy: It is quite complicated.
4919. Mr M Byrne: Maybe, if Michael is not here, we can leave it.
4920. Ms Corderoy: OK, we can send that in writing.

4921. The answer to the cross-border query is a good one: the European Council regulation (EC) No 4/2009 on jurisdiction, applicable law, recognition and enforcement of decisions and co-operation in matters relating to maintenance obligations provides for the reciprocal enforcement of maintenance between EU member states. So existing EU legislation covers that. There is a procedure — I cannot remember its name — by which the central authorities share information between one another to allow that to be resolved in cross-border cases.
4922. As you know, we have received your response to the public consultation as well as several others. We will do as we did with PIP, which is that we will make representations to DWP on the particular issues raised here.
4923. Mr Pollock: Clauses 127 to 130, Chair, are the final few clauses. There is nothing in your pro forma about clause 127, which concerns the use of job centres by the sex industry; clause 128, which is the reduced fee for dog licences; or clause 129.
4924. The only comments relate to clause 130 and the concern expressed by Citizens Advice and the Law Centre about a replacement for the rates element of housing benefit. Things are moving on in that respect. The Executive have agreed to preserve any shortfall in the existing entitlements for up to two years out of public expenditure. That was discussed by the Executive subcommittee on welfare reform and agreed around the Executive table. The Department of Finance and Personnel and our Department are working closely on that. We are conscious of the issue and will share any details that emerge with the Committee as soon as possible.
4925. The Chairperson: OK, thank you.
4926. Mr Pollock: That is our lot, then.
4927. The Chairperson: That completes the examination today. Thank you very much for your attendance, responses and explanations and for the work that you put in to help us with ours. With the exception of the section on fraud, we have gone through the whole process, which means that the Committee's schedule is firmly on track.
4928. Mr Durkan: I certainly found today extremely useful and helpful, particularly your outlining of various costings. Would it be possible for the Committee to have sight of the outline business case for universal credit, which contains, one would presume, all the costings?
4929. Mr Pollock: The business case for universal credit is with the agency.
4930. Ms M Campbell: I think that you or the Committee Clerk has written to the agency to ask for that outline business case, and it will reply shortly. I will send an e-mail to remind it.
4931. The Chairperson: We are always one step ahead, even if we do not realise it. Well done to the Committee Clerk. On the basis that members have nothing further to say, that ends today's meeting.

8 November 2012

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Alex Maskey (Chairperson)
 Mr Mickey Brady (Deputy Chairperson)

 Mr Fra McCann
 Mr David McClarty

Witnesses:

Ms Martina Campbell Department for Ms Jane Corderoy Social Development
 Mr Conrad McConnell
 Ms Leonora McLaughlin
 Mr Michael Pollock

4932. The Chairperson: With us are Conrad McConnell, Leonora McLaughlin, Angela Clarke, Jane Corderoy, Michael Pollock and Martina Campbell. I thank all of you who are here to support the Committee. We will further examine clauses 106 to 115, which relate to fraud and error. This will also be an opportunity for the officials to talk to us about the social fund. Members will recall that there are some outstanding matters from the discussions over the past number of days.
4933. The following papers are in members' tabled items folder: advice from the Examiner of Statutory Rules; the paper provided by the Committee Clerk on issues relating to clauses; and a paper from the Social Security Agency on the social fund.
4934. Without any further ado, Conrad, I think you are on now.
4935. Mr Conrad McConnell (Department for Social Development): OK, Chair. I was going to work through the points that were brought up by the advice sector and others. Is that how you want me to do it? You have provided a table of comments, and I was going to start to working through them. Would that be OK?
4936. The Chairperson: OK, thank you, Conrad.
4937. Mr McConnell: The first of the clauses that deal with fraud and error, on which points were made, was clause 109. Clause 109 relates to penalties that tend to be applied to people who attempt to commit fraud. It is the administrative penalty part of that. Some of the points that were made were that the introduction of the administrative penalty in response to attempted fraud was disproportionate and draconian in its application. A particular point was made that the minimum penalty will be £350, which is disproportionate, given that people would have received no money and we would not have incurred an actual loss. I think that that is a fair summary of the points that were made.
4938. The key point that I would make on the administrative penalty for attempted fraud is that it is not in place at the moment. Currently, if someone attempts to commit fraud, we have no option but to take that case through the courts. The clause will not take away from taking cases through the courts. Rather, it will provide an alternative when we might consider that it would be disproportionate to take cases through the courts and that the administrative penalty would be a better way of dealing with it. It provides an extra option, rather than taking away from something, and that is the key point.
4939. People will have their own view on whether a minimum penalty of £350 is disproportionate for suspected fraud. Frauds can run to many thousands of pounds, and someone who attempts to commit a fraud offence can get away with many thousands of pounds before anyone cottons on. We sometimes bring people to court who have had overpayments of up to £50,000. That is at the extreme end, but fraud can keep going and end up costing big sums of money. To provide some context, the average level of fraud that we find in the system is around about £4,000. The question for members is whether the £350 minimum penalty is disproportionate to that scale of fraud. Fraud is, of course, intentional and deliberate behaviour and it is criminal. Are there any questions on that?

4940. Mr Brady: To clarify, you said that if someone attempts to commit fraud, at the moment, you have to take them to court. Presumably, there has to be an overt act for you to act on. If there is no overpayment, but someone does something that you consider to be alleged fraud, you can do something in the legal context. Will you give us an example of that?
4941. Mr McConnell: The offence stands when, for example, someone has attempted to defraud the system by providing false information. That could be on the claim form, where someone has claimed their income to be x amount of pounds when it is actually much higher. The offence is attempting to gain access to the benefits system.
4942. Mr Brady: If that is the case, that is fraud. I am not condoning fraud. Is this, really, in mitigation, rather than taking someone to court —
4943. Mr McConnell: Yes.
4944. Mr Brady: So it will, in a sense, provide a civil penalty?
4945. Mr McConnell: It will provide an alternative to court. Where we have found someone who has committed that act, it will allow us to deal with them by alternative means.
4946. Mr Brady: Obviously, there has to be an overt act that would indicate attempted fraud?
4947. Mr McConnell: Absolutely. There has to be attempted criminality. This is not about making mistakes or anything else.

It is about people who have attempted to commit a criminal act.

4948. Mr Brady: I just wanted to clarify that.
4949. Mr F McCann: Following on from that, I think that we have all dealt with cases like this. People get the forms in front of them, and I know that when they go in, they are told that they should have read every piece of documentation, including the small print. However, a lot of people are semi-literate or cannot read or write, and they are embarrassed to say so. In cases like that, genuine mistakes can be made. How do you distinguish between genuine mistakes and attempted fraud?
4950. Mr McConnell: We would never take someone through the fraud route if there was no criminality. Furthermore, if someone takes a different view to us as to whether there was criminality, there is a court procedure and course for them to take. People do not have to accept that penalty; they can go to court and say that that they were not guilty of that or did not do it intentionally as the Department suggested. The Public Prosecution Service (PPS) is in the middle of that process, and it makes the decisions on whether there is sufficient evidence to go to court in the first place. All those safeguards are there if someone believes that they did not act in that criminal way.
4951. Mr F McCann: I have sat through a number of hearings. It has been a while since I have done that, and I think that a couple of them were with you. People come in, and their benefits claims are in a bag. They are taken out and the people are asked whether they signed the forms. They are also asked whether they have read them and they might reply, "No". However, ignorance is not a defence. If they could not read the form or could not understand it, that is not an excuse. That is what I am talking about.
4952. Mr McConnell: Ultimately, if there is any question of guilt, there is recourse through the courts system, with the PPS deciding in between times whether there is physical evidence to prove the - offence. The courts, not the Department, make the ultimate decision. Whether it is non-intentional behaviour or a mistake, the courts can decide that.

4953. Mr F McCann: Mickey mentioned people filling in their forms wrongly or giving wrong information. I take it that it would be taken on board if someone was spoken to by officers and said that not only did they not understand the form but they could not read or had difficulties reading?
4954. Mr McConnell: Of course; absolutely. Every case is dealt with on its merits. If someone has a circumstance that would point us to believe that the act was not intentional, we would not, of course, think about fraud. That would be something very different.
4955. Mr F McCann: Thanks.
4956. The Chairperson: OK. We are happy enough with that one.
4957. Mr McConnell: Clause 110 relates to the increase in the administrative penalty from 30% to 50%, and it introduces the minimum figure of £350. Some have commented on the fact that £350 is too high, especially, to go back to the same point, if no actual loss has been incurred by the Department. Some people have said that it may deter people from taking up benefit. In the summary, the comments were that the increase is not justifiable. From our perspective, we want to deter people from committing fraud. This goes back to the point that administrative penalties are in response to people who have committed fraud; they are not about mistakes. They are about non-intentional behaviour and about people who have tried to do that or have actually done it.
4958. You made the point earlier: in the benefits system, fraud in average cases is about £4,000. They are big sums of money, increasing up to £50,000 and beyond. The desire is not to apply a penalty to people: the desire is for people not to commit fraud in the first place and to maintain the integrity of the system.
4959. There is probably not much more to say. It is a view as to whether £350 and an increase to 50% is disproportionate against the drive to deter people from committing fraud in the first place.
4960. The Chairperson: Is that on top of the recovery?
4961. Mr McConnell: It is, yes.
4962. Mr Brady: For information purposes, in the distant mists of time when I worked in the Department, if an error was committed by a member of staff, an overpayment was raised. Obviously, he did not have to pay it back, but it was on his record if he went for promotion or that kind of thing. Obviously, if somebody had a continuing record of errors, it would be held against them. The reason why I am raising this is that the figures that we get from the Department are that error — customer and departmental — is now more than fraud. It is kind of a unilateral thing. Is any provision made for staff error? This is not a criticism of staff, because they are under pressure and a lot of the errors may be because of that. As far as I know, that has been removed.
4963. Mr McConnell: As far as I am aware, there is no penalty for staff who make mistakes.
4964. Mr Brady: I am not saying that there should be, but it seems very unilateral to say that if a mistake is genuinely made by a member of staff or by a member of the public, the member of the public still has to pay money back if there is an overpayment. It is very unequal.
4965. Mr McConnell: I will make two points. The penalty referred to in this clause is in respect of fraud; it is not in respect of mistakes by any party, whether customers or staff. The distinction for this is that it is about intentional behaviour. There is an element of staff error in the system as well. Last year, staff error for 2011 was at its lowest point ever. It was down to 0.6%, which is an accuracy of 99.4% in such a complex system. I make the general point that staff accuracy last year hit its highest - point ever and is much less than the 1% of spend overall. Obviously, from our perspective, it is good news that error is down to its lowest level. However, the distinction still stands: error is not fraud.

4966. Mr Brady: I am not suggesting that it is. The good news is that fraud is going down as well.
4967. Mr McConnell: Fraud is down to 0.4%.
4968. Mr Brady: Happy days all round.
4969. Mr McConnell: We had one comment about clause 111 regarding reduction from 28 days to 14 days for people to decide whether they want to choose the administrative penalty or not. One comment was that it will take away people's ability to take advice before they make their decision. The issue here is that we are trying to get the balance right between not having a system that runs on too long. After a length of time, people may decide not to take an administrative penalty. At the minute, 28 days is built into the system, and that has not advanced anything to any point. This is about trying to streamline the process in the best way that we can but still give people sufficient time to get advice before they make their decision, and 14 days is the suggestion for that, if that is the right balance. Members may take a different view as to whether it needs to be 14 days or 28 days. We believe that 14 days gives you sufficient time to seek the necessary advice before you decide.
4970. The Chairperson: Is any discretionary provision available if someone had good cause — I cannot think of a specific example — for not being able to do that within 14 days?
4971. Mr McConnell: I cannot say at this stage whether there is or is not. From the administrative perspective, we would want to give people extra time if there were good cause to do so. I am not sure whether the Bill allows that to happen. I will have to check.
4972. Mr F McCann: If someone comes to me after you tell them that they have 14 days to pay the penalty, the first thing that I would advise them to do would be to see a solicitor to show that they have had the best possible legal advice before making a decision on whether to take the penalty. Sometimes, that cannot be done within 14 days.
4973. Mr McConnell: That might be an issue. In practice, very few people decide not to take the administrative penalty as an alternative to prosecution.
4974. Mr F McCann: If someone comes to me, I would advise them to see a solicitor and get the best possible advice.
4975. Mr McConnell: I will need to find out whether the Bill allows that discretion.
4976. Clause 112 deals with civil penalties, and quite a lot of comment was received on it. This, of course, relates to the application of a £50 penalty to people who have not committed fraud but have failed to take reasonable care or have been negligent in respect of their claim and have not told us pertinent information that is necessary for the correct payment of their benefit.
4977. Comments were made by individuals that the penalty would be punitive, may put people off claiming benefit in the first place, and may push up the appeal process. The suggestion was made for a civil penalty to apply the second time around but not on the first occasion that someone makes some sort of error that we deem to be negligent. The provision for civil penalties is not about genuine mistakes but about people who really do fail to take reasonable care and are negligent. It is not, perhaps, at the point of fraud, but, at the other end of the scale, it is not for a genuine mistake.
4978. Obviously, we will have to issue guidance to our staff on the application of this provision, and it will be up to the decision-makers in each case to decide whether, in their view, the actions of an individual in not reporting have or have not been negligent. There will be a whole range of circumstances in those regulations in which that may or may not be deemed to be the case.

4979. We have not got to that kind of level of detail yet, but I can use an example of where people say that they forgot that they had to tell us that they were working or where they forgot to say that their income had gone up. We would deem that to be without reasonable excuse or to be negligent. On the other hand, in cases where someone has had some sort of trauma, a bereavement or some reason for not reporting something because of some other circumstance in the background, we would deem that to be a reasonable explanation for why they did not come forward at the time. It will be a matter of guidance and about us trying to be reasonable in our application of this provision. The point is that we want to deter people from not telling us about things that they need to tell us about, otherwise we will be into overpayments, potential fraud and all the rest of it if these things continue.
4980. Mr F McCann: It just seems a bit crazy that all these types of fines are being introduced for people who are being paid at subsistence level. Whether it is a family unit or an individual involved, I am trying to work out who will feed them if they have to pay all that money back? It also goes back to the question of literacy, when genuine mistakes are made. I know that you say that all these things will be written in, but there does not seem to be anything in the Bill to convince me that, if someone comes in with what they believe is a genuine excuse, they will not be subject to a penalty. I have come across situations in which I thought that it was perfectly unreasonable for a sanction to be applied and the person on the other end of the phone thought that it was perfectly reasonable. After the argument, it was found by another person that it was unreasonable. Measures need to be built in to ensure that people are not being penalised because of their level of education or their ability to understand what they are dealing with.
4981. Mr McConnell: Certainly, we would always say, most definitely, that this is not about targeting people who make genuine mistakes. It was never the intention to do that; it would not be the intention to do so. This is about negligence, not about genuine mistakes. To my mind, the detail about those circumstances, as you suggested, in which some people may not be literate would point to a genuine mistake. It would not point to a civil penalty, which is about negligence and about not having a reasonable excuse for failing to report something. The detail on how it will be applied will come forward in regulations and guidance. The appeal process will also be there, and people will be entitled to appeal against a civil penalty decision as well. If, as you said, the view is taken that this was reasonable but we said that we thought that it was not, the appeal process can provide a second opinion on the matter.
4982. The Chairperson: OK. Fair enough, Conrad, thank you for that. You may have covered this matter earlier. I was flicking through some of the notes. Some housing organisations raised a couple of key points around third-party verification, etc.
4983. Mr McConnell: I received that question this morning. I have asked for information and I will get back to you. I am sorry; I do not have the answer just yet.
4984. The Chairperson: OK, Conrad. Thank you for that.
4985. Mr McConnell: Clause 113 deals with the increase in the loss of benefit period — or “one strike”, as it is sometimes known — from four weeks to 13 weeks, and introduces the first offence three-year benefit sanction in serious fraud cases. Again, the comments made are twofold: first, that it is disproportionate, and secondly, that it could lead to financial hardship for some people. I think that those comments were made particularly in relation to the three-year figure for a first offence.
4986. The point that we would make on this is that we have observed a distinction, up to now, between error and fraud. Fraud is intentional, and the penalties apply to that behaviour. This is about taking

- it to another level — not only fraud, but serious fraud.
4987. The Bill sets out the definition of how “seriousness” might be interpreted in the application of this issue: for example, someone who commits an offence which results in 12 months’ imprisonment by the courts; or someone who commits some sort of ID fraud, or where the money involved exceeds £50,000 or where the fraud has gone on for a long period, say two years or more. So, the Bill sets out what “seriousness” means. It is the distinction that we would make; a response that we would make to that sort of behaviour, which amounts to criminality. The end decision is whether three years’ loss or withdrawal of benefit is the right response to that sort of behaviour. We would say that we want to deter people from all frauds and, most particularly, from serious frauds, where money can get into extremes.
4988. The issue of hardship is dealt with in all of the loss-of-benefit regulations, whereby, it does not apply to some benefits such as state pension. As regards some of the means-tested, low-income-type benefits, loss of benefits applies only as a 40% reduction, or 20% reduction in some other cases. It is not a full withdrawal. Full withdrawal only applies to the rebating benefits such as jobseeker’s allowance. However, in saying that, there are also provisions in place whereby one can seek financial hardship assistance if it is needed.
4989. Those are the points that I will make in relation to this matter. The key point is that this is about serious fraud in the benefit system, which takes that kind of message one step further.
4990. The Chairperson: OK.
4991. Mr McConnell: I will move on to clause 114, which deals with the increase in the current “two strikes”, or loss of benefit from 13 weeks to 26 weeks. Some of the points made before relate to loss of benefit generally. Also, it was thought that people should have access to independent advice before they could be subject to that sort of penalty.
4992. The point I will make, whether it be one strike, two strikes or any penalty in relation to fraud, is that the fraud process is completely transparent, in which we may allege such behaviour and the courts are there to make decisions where there is any doubt about guilt. So, there is advice available to people to discuss all that. The point was made earlier that, if someone does not choose to go to court but takes the administrative penalty, time should be built in for them to seek advice on whether he should do that. We always say that loss of benefit should follow a fraud offence. The fraud process carries the safeguard that there is an opportunity to seek advice before you admit to fraud or go through the court process. So, advice is built into that. It is there already.
4993. Mr F McCann: I have been accused, over the past couple of months, of picking on bank robbers as examples in some of these things. Here is another scenario. A guy gets done for £600 million worth of fraud and gets three years in jail.
4994. The Chairperson: It was, Conrad, not you. [Laughter.]
4995. Mr F McCann: He gets out of jail, and if he goes to the dole office, he would be able to get the dole.
4996. Mr McConnell: Yes. I think this goes back to the key point that I made before, about some of these other penalties. The whole theme of all this, in some respects, is to put people off committing fraud at all. The whole aim is to get fraud out of our system and to keep the system secure and safe, and to try to deter people from such behaviour. That is ultimately what I would say.
4997. Mr Brady: I suppose that this is like saying that the Welfare Reform Bill is a good piece of legislation if it can get fraud out of the system. Part of the difficulty that we have with the double whammy, or “three strikes and you are out” thing, is that it impacts on the - family. If someone makes a conscious decision to continually commit fraud or alleged fraud, that is his decision. However, the sanctions affect the people with him, who may have had absolutely no input into that. Therein lies the difficulty. The Law Centre suggests that it be left to the justice system, which seems appropriate. However, in this case, people who have committed fraud and been charged are getting a double whammy, which is grossly unfair in that sense, because it impacts on their dependants, etc.

4998. As Fra says, if someone is accused of a £600 million fraud, is sentenced, and then gets out, he has been dealt with by the justice system. There is fraud, and there is fraud. I do not think that you can differentiate between someone committing financial fraud, and someone committing social security fraud. The justice system deals with them, presumably, in an equitable way. However, this is making a distinction. That is where it is unfair.
4999. It is reasonable enough argument.
5000. Mr McConnell: The only point that I will make to that is that the courts will be made aware that if they find a person guilty, that person would then be subject to this provision. The court can take that into account when deciding what penalty to impose for the offence.
5001. The Chairperson: Fair enough. Thank you.
5002. Mr McConnell: Finally, on the fraud elements, there is removal of cautions. The clause takes away cautions as a means of dealing with benefit fraud and leaves only two options: taking the administrative penalty, which is the internal way of dealing with fraud, or the court process. The intention behind this is to bring home the seriousness of fraud. There will be clear knowledge that anyone intent on committing fraud and found to have committed it faces one of two paths. There will be some sort of internal administrative penalty, or the court process. There will be an outcome to that. You will face a penalty of some sort, having committed the offence.
- That is why the proposal is to take away cautions as a means of dealing with fraud.
5003. The Chairperson: OK. The Department is obviously maintaining that argument. All right, members?
5004. You are glaring at me, Fra.
5005. Mr F McCann: I glare at you all the time, Alex.
5006. The Chairperson: OK. I thank Conrad and his colleagues for being here morning. I appreciate that this morning's meeting has gone on a bit longer. Thank you for your patience, as well as your attendance and your responses on those particular clauses. Thank you very much.
5007. Mr McConnell: Thank you.
5008. The Chairperson: OK, members. Moving on then —
5009. Mr Michael Pollock (Department for Social Development): I am sorry, Chair, the Department has some outstanding matters such as social problems and discretionary elements.
5010. The Chairperson: Oh, I see. Sorry, my apologies.
5011. Mr Pollock: Jane wants to say a couple of wee words on that.
5012. The Chairperson: Forgive me; I had an element of gate fever there.
5013. Ms Jane Corderoy (Department for Social Development): The Committee has looked at clauses 70 to 73, which deal with the abolition of the social fund. A few weeks ago, members heard from my colleague Angela Clarke on the proposals for the new scheme because it sits outside social security. I think that she would have told you today that, as you know, a Government amendment to introduce a new discretionary scheme is to be proposed at Consideration Stage. That will provide for a broad power to enable payment to be made and provide support under the new scheme. The Department will establish that and it will be delivered by the Social Security Agency.

5014. In relation to our stuff, the Sure Start maternity grants, cold weather payments, funeral payments and the winter fuel payments will not be included in that. They will be retained and are not being done away with. The majority of the stakeholder comments that you have heard concern the new scheme, and Leonora is with us to talk you through them.
5015. Ms Leonora McLaughlin (Department for Social Development): I guess that what we have here are stakeholders providing evidence in a vacuum. They see in the Bill that there is the potential to repeal crisis loans and community care grants, but there is no content relating to the new scheme. If you are happy, I will pick up on common themes in the evidence, and you can come back to me if you think that we have missed anything.
5016. In relation to budget allocation for the new scheme and the issue of ring-fencing, as you may recall from our briefing a few weeks ago, we have a broad indication of next year's budget for the new scheme. We have also had agreement from the Executive to ring-fence that for an interim period, which we interpret as extending to the end of this spending review period. Some organisations were seeking assurance that that ring-fencing would extend through to the implementation of universal credit, but we are simply not able to give that assurance now. As I said, the Executive have given the Department interim approval to establish a scheme and to ring-fence the money that is to be transferred across from the Treasury for that period.
5017. Nevertheless, as I said on 11 October, we are in a much better financial position with the budget for the new scheme than we felt we might have been. We know that the Treasury will not impose a 10% reduction on transferred funding; that we are not going to be liable to a potential 3.5% annual subsidy on outstanding loan balances; and that, in addition to the transferred funding, we have secured recoveries from legacy crisis loans to fund the new scheme.
- We have additional customer groups to whom we are opening up access to the replacement scheme. However, at the same time, we are looking at broadly £29 million now, with the caveat that the final figures are yet to be confirmed.
5018. I apologise; I obviously have a project manager for the new scheme, who is responsible for its development. I can touch on some of the policy issues here, but it is not my domain. I am happy to come back to the Committee if such assurances are necessary. The role of the social protection fund is — 5019. The Chairperson: Sorry, Leonora; Fra wants to come in.
5020. Mr F McCann: I know from one of the presentations to the Committee, and the Minister touched on this, that the scope of people who can apply for what were crisis loans is to be widened.
5021. Ms L McLaughlin: Yes.
5022. Mr F McCann: Is there any estimation of how much that will cost? With a £29 million budget, you may find yourself quickly under pressure, even in the present system. Has the yearly cost of adding claimants been estimated? I know that that may be difficult to do —
5023. Ms L McLaughlin: It is difficult. The social fund is a well-established scheme, so it is relatively easy to predict annual expenditure and demand. You are right to say that we are widening the scheme. The intention is that eligibility for the new scheme will be based on income rather than qualifying benefit. So, working customers on low incomes will be entitled to apply, as will customers in contributing benefits, who are excluded at the minute. Our difficulty is we know broadly the sort of catchment we would have for those customer groups but we do not know what proportion of those customers will apply.
5024. On the other side, there are restrictions in the new scheme over and above what we do for the social fund at the minute, which would mean that, potentially, the number of applications from existing

- social fund customers will reduce. For example, we are proposing that we lower the maximum social fund debt threshold from £1,500 to £1,000 under the new scheme. That is in response to feedback that customers are having difficulty managing their financial commitments and the levels of debt they already have. We know that that will have a downward pressure. We estimate that 21% of customers have social fund debt above £1,000.
5025. Mr Brady: People tend to use the social fund as a top-up system. When you are reducing the debt, will that involve reducing the weekly amount deducted? In my experience, the trend has been that the more you owe, the more the Department will try to get back in a shorter time. However, if your debt is reduced from, say, £1,500 to £1,000, it would seem reasonable that less would be taken back because, again, we are back to the whole subsistence level issue.
5026. Ms L McLaughlin: As I say, there was a strong strand of feedback around debt and issues with existing debt coming through the phase 1 research that we did at the very early stage of the project. I suppose we are looking at a number of measures. The reduction of the maximum debt would also help customers to repay, so, yes, we are developing proposals —
5027. Mr Brady: A reduction in the maximum amount, possibly?
5028. Ms L McLaughlin: One thing we are looking at is the duration of the debt. We will try to recover in a shorter period, so instead of spinning it out to two years, we will look at 52 weeks, for example, where that is possible. The amount that the customer will be able to borrow will be proportionate to that and based on their ability to recover.
5029. Mr Brady: If you are going to have a period of 52 weeks in which the debt has to be repaid rather than two years, people need to have that explained to them so they understand that they may get more deducted because they have to pay it back in a shorter time. Part of the difficulty with the social fund for a lot of people is getting a loan and not realising the implications. With pay day loans, the money is there, great — but what happens over weeks or months?
5030. Ms L McLaughlin: That is it. There are issues with the existing scheme that we will hope to learn from and develop proposals to remedy. As I said, there are a number of things —
5031. Mr Brady: I do not want to break your train of thought but another important point is that social fund staff are long-term and experienced. It would seem to be reasonable that they will be retained in any new scheme. Customers are familiar with them and they know how the system works, albeit it is a new system. However, that is important because that experience is invaluable. Of the people I deal with, two of them, at least, in Armagh have been there since 1988, since the social fund was established.
5032. Ms L McLaughlin: I confirm, not to interrupt, and I think Northern Ireland is in a much better position than some of the devolved administrations in that we have delivery capacity and staff on the ground. The intention is that we will re-use those social fund staff on the ground at the minute to deliver the new scheme and harness all that expertise.
5033. Mr Brady: Some of them are near retirement age, it has to be said.
5034. Ms L McLaughlin: We will start to develop our succession plans.
5035. The Chairperson: We wish them well.
5036. Ms L McLaughlin: I have scant comment on the social protection fund except to indicate that the Department is looking at a range of things: how the Department contributes overall to, for example, the financial capability strategy, and the effort will be to try to join up proposals. We are developing the scheme closely with policy colleagues and now have the overarching policy that this scheme sits within.

5037. Another theme emerging from the evidence of a couple of organisations is the provision for a second-tier review facility to allow customers who have exhausted the review process within the Department to go to an independent organisation in the way that they would go to the Office of the Social Fund Commissioner now. The Department has made the commitment that that facility will be available for the new scheme. We are looking at options for where it might sit, which is a bit more difficult than making the commitment, but there will be second-tier review. The provision for that is in the draft regulations.
5038. Mr Brady: There is going to be specialist advice. Under the old single payments, going back many years, there was a specialist circumstances officer, who was the person designated in the office to deal with the cases of people who found it very difficult to manage. That was not done in a patronising way; it was done in a practical way. Most people at the time accepted that. Is that the intention of the specialist advice? In the past, that person would have been a visiting officer who was designated to deal with particular types of cases and would have developed a rapport and relationship with the claimant.
5039. One of the measures in the pilot is the provision of goods. I have difficulty with that, not so much with the practical nature of it, but because, going back many years, it was exploited, and not by the customer in my opinion or experience, but by some of the retailers. We have all heard tales, and I have anecdotal evidence of people getting a £500 giro for goods, even though they would have rather had the money, going into a shop and somebody giving them £300 and taking the giro. That is the sort of thing that we need to be aware of. People will say, "Well, that didn't happen", but it did. It opens the avenue for people to exploit the vulnerable, and it is something that needs to be addressed.
5041. First, the intention is that the specialist advice will be delivered internally by the agency within the scope of the discretionary support scheme as it stands or the decision-maker's role. We will be asking decision-makers to be vigilant for opportunities to offer assistance to customers, whether that is on debt and money management or an underlying issue. Where there are early warning signs, some of the evidence suggests that we can pick up on them and offer assistance. Obviously, that will not be mandated in any shape or form: we will be offering the customer the opportunity. The intention is that decision-makers will be well acquainted with both statutory and voluntary and community advice services that are operational in their areas. We will be seeking to foster close links with those sorts of services and to offer those organisations an opportunity to refer customers to us. So, it is kind of a two-way arrangement.
5042. In relation to the goods pilot, we sought to provide assurance to the Committee previously that it will be a very low-key, small-scale pilot. That is simply because the stakeholders in the research indicated that they would be receptive to that kind of service, not as an alternative to cash payments but along with cash payments. We will obviously be very careful about how we establish that scheme.
5043. There are two reasons for doing it. We got evidence from customers, who were brutally honest in their focus groups and said that they apply for things that they do not need because they know that they are more likely to get an award. That is not to say that there is not an underlying issue of some other kind that causes them to do that. We also know from organisations that deliver this kind of service that, because of the bulk quantities involved, they benefit from a discount from a national supplier, for example. That is the sort of service that we are looking to put in place, not something with individual local retailers.
5044. Mr Brady: You have a list of priorities in the social fund. Clothing was mentioned - in the Assembly, which I found astonishing. People were saying that without the social fund, people would be deprived of clothes for their children. Clothes is the lowest priority and has been since 1988, so I did not see that as a huge issue. However, there are priority items, such as cookers, beds, mattresses, bed clothes and that type of thing. Are there any plans to revise the priorities? It seems to me that it is something that needs to be looked at again, particularly in relation to clothing. People, through illness or having to diet, may lose weight. There are people on special diets who require refrigerated foods and possibly medicines.

5045. Ms L McLaughlin: The aim is that customer circumstances will be taken into account irrespective of — 5046. Mr Brady: I am asking you to rewrite the whole thing. It is not the intention.
5047. Ms L McLaughlin: Oh no, we are not far away. Our issue will be that this is a cash-limited service, and there will always be the necessity to prioritise in terms of regulations and guidance but even within months where you have more demand than you had anticipated and a pressure on your budget. However, I will be happy to take those comments on board.
5048. Mr Durkan: You spoke earlier about how widening the criteria for applications for the social fund would increase pressure. I imagine that it will also be increased by more people becoming eligible through job losses, etc. My question is more a technical one, and it is around eligibility or accessibility. In a household, can a claim or application be made by the nominated person for universal credit (UC)?
5049. Ms L McLaughlin: We are mindful of the direction of travel for universal credit, but, at the minute, the proposal for discretionary support is that the application will be an applicant, and we will take into consideration income for the applicant and their spouse or partner. So, we are not looking at a household as such.
5050. Mr Durkan: The applicant might not necessarily be the nominated person to receive universal credit.
5051. Ms L McLaughlin: I may need to come back to you on that. We are delivering the new scheme in April, so I would need to talk to some universal credit colleagues to see what the implications are, because we will be in for a while before universal credit hits.
5052. The Chairperson: That is helpful, Leonora, thank you.
5053. Ms L McLaughlin: We have covered the absence of legislation to cover the discretionary support. Regulations are being developed and will very shortly go for solicitors' scrutiny. The intention is to come back to the Committee in January with those regulations.
5054. There were a couple of specific queries. One was in relation to housing and rent in advance, and the other was in relation to customers potentially in a crisis because of domestic violence. Just to confirm, while we do not have provision for those groups specifically, they would fit within the eligibility criteria, and our aim will be to provide assistance for those customer groups in the same way as we do through the community care grants system at the minute.
5055. There is a range of different eligibility criteria. In order to safeguard the fund and make sure that we are targeting resources at the people who really need it, one of the criteria is the availability of another source of meeting need. For example, colleagues have pointed out that there is provision in the existing budgeting loan provision for rent in advance. So, as long as customers have no other way of meeting their needs, we will cover rent.
5056. The Chairperson: OK. Thank you.
5057. Ms L McLaughlin: I will move on to the consideration of debt. There was a suggestion from one of the stakeholders that support should be available to families without any consideration of debt that they may have accrued. That would run contrary to the feedback that

- we are getting from the research, where the indication is that we strongly need to take account of levels of existing debt. Under the scheme, we will take account of debt that customers have for the existing social fund system, for example, because that is a demand. They are making a repayment for that, and that needs to be taken into account.
5058. Finally, in respect of access channels, the feedback from the research is that it is very important that this service would continue to be delivered on a face-to-face basis, specifically for loans and needs that have to be met urgently for living expenses or where there is a crisis that needs to be reacted to very quickly. That is the case. We will continue to deliver from the agency's network of local offices. There will be a telephone service, but that is a secondary access channel. We intend that to be used by customers who have mobility issues and find it difficult to attend their local office or for working customers or new customer groups who do not habitually use the agency's offices.
5059. Mr Brady: In terms of the phone aspect, in Newry, the social fund moved to Armagh some years ago, and people who apply for crisis loans have to get in touch with Armagh. They can go into Newry, but then they are put in touch with Armagh. There is a difficulty in accessing the social fund in Armagh. It may well be the same in other offices. In my recent experience, a lot of people on benefit have pay-as-you-go mobile phones. I know of one case, a few weeks ago, when a woman trying to contact the local office had to top up her phone with £20 and it cost her £17. That is an area that needs to be addressed, whether that is by having more landlines, a local office getting in touch with the social fund or by having some provision for people to use their mobile phones. Access is an ongoing problem.
5060. Ms L McLaughlin: I am not familiar with specific issues in Armagh, and we are straying into quite low operational arrangements, which are still to be finalised. There are two types of social fund call. The first is from someone who is simply making an enquiry about an application, in which case we expect that customer to ring the office. Where a customer needs to make a claim, there will be a system. We are conscious that, even on a landline, that could be a lengthy call, and particularly on a mobile, so the arrangement will be that a member of staff will phone those customers back and the cost will then be for the Department.
5061. The Chairperson: OK; thank you for that.
5062. Ms L McLaughlin: That is all that I wanted to cover as a result of the evidence. Is there anything else that members would like to pick up on?
5063. Mr Brady: It is good that the social fund is being retained in the Department, because you have the infrastructure there. It is an opportunity to be innovative and actually improve the system. During the consultation period, I spoke to the company that was doing the consultation, and the feeling from stakeholders who were interviewed was that it was an opportunity to be innovative and do something while retaining the fabric to do something even better and more beneficial, because, ultimately, it has to be more beneficial to the customer.
5064. Ms L McLaughlin: The fact that it is a non-parity project means that there is a recognition in the Department that it is an opportunity for us to meet the needs of our own customers.
5065. Mr Brady: Plus the fact that the 10% is not going.
5066. Ms L McLaughlin: Our timescales for the implementation of this are very tight. When we briefed you last time, we were quite open that what we deliver in April is the start of a process. We will work with stakeholders and the Committee, but it is likely that that service will need further refinement.
5067. The Chairperson: OK, Leonora, thank you for that.

5068. Mr Pollock: Moving on, Chair, the Committee had some questions that it wanted clarification on. I appreciate that we have not been away for terribly long, so we have not got answers to all those questions yet, but we have in a few areas. Jane, do you want to kick off, because you have other commitments?
5069. Ms Corderoy: No, I have missed that anyway. I do not any more. I am too late. The Minister will not forgive me, but there you go.
5070. Mr Pollock: We will just go by clause then.
5071. Ms Martina Campbell (Department for Social Development): As Michael has said, we understood that we were picking up on questions outstanding from Tuesday. We have not got a response for you yet for most of them. However, I can answer some of them.
5072. As regards the payments, claims will automatically be paid monthly to the nominated person unless they satisfy exceptional circumstances, which are yet to be defined. The Minister stated on 22 October that he intends to consult on what “exceptional circumstances” means. We understand that the agency is organising an event in the Long Gallery for 15 November, which this Committee will be invited to, to kick off that consultation.
5074. Only the working-age member of a mixed-age couple will be required to sign the claimant commitment. The person over state pension age will not. If the member over state pension age is entitled to contributory pension in their own right, they will continue to receive that, and that pension will be taken into account as unearned income under universal credit. Existing mixed-age couples will move to universal credit and be given transitional protection as long as their circumstances remain the same.
5075. We talked about the fact that, under state pension credit, there is no limit or the limit is higher for capital costs. I have some figures from the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP). It is in its universal credit briefing note number three, which is on its website. I will send it to the Committee, but the key fact from that briefing note, which refers to the GB position, is that one in three pensioner households have capital in excess of £16,000 as compared to working-age customers, 13% of whom have savings in excess of that. The average capital held by a working-age customer is £300. By setting the cut-off at £16,000, the Government believe that they are striking the right balance between protecting people with modest savings and placing responsibility for their own support on those with substantial capital.
5076. The capital rules have increased in income support from £8,000 in 2006 to £16,000, and the proposed threshold is in line with those increases. Mixed-age couples in receipt of tax credits at the minute with capital over £16,000 — as you know, there is no limit on the amount of capital a tax credit customer can hold — will transfer on to universal credit and get transitional protection for as long as their circumstances remain the same. According to DWP, 52% of claimants — I am not sure from the briefing note whether it means all age claimants — in receipt of tax credits with savings over £16,000 earn over £40,000 per annum and a further 30% earn over £50,000 per annum.
5077. As regards changing the capital limits, DWP estimates that the difference between setting a cut-off at £25,000

- compared with £16,000 would be £60 million per annum. I said that I thought that it was around £50 million. Removing the capital rule altogether would cost £500 million per annum.
5078. As regards sanctions and hardships for mixed-age couples, sanctions will apply only to the working-age member. If the working-age member is sanctioned, there will clearly be an impact on the household budget, and they will be able to apply for a hardship payment. The aim is that that would be recovered in 12 equal installments. I will give the Committee an example. I have used an example of a single jobseeker, and the sanction amount that applies to a couple is slightly lower, but it will give you the gist of it. If a single jobseeker gets sanctioned, their award is reduced by £65 a week. If they applied for a weekly hardship payment, they would get 60% of the amount of their sanction, which is £39. If the sanction was for three weeks, the total amount would be £117. Dividing that by 12 gives you £9.75 a month, which is what they would pay it back as. That works out at roughly £2.25 a week. That is an example of how the hardship payment and the recovery would work.
5079. I confirm that underoccupancy for mixed-age couples does not apply where one or both members are over state pension age. If one member of the couple reaches state pension age, they are entitled to claim contributory pension in their own right.
5080. I said that I thought that DWP was considering temporary absence. I need to write to you about that; I do not have that information to hand.
5081. If I just cover my bits, Michael will do his.
5082. The Chairperson: We will hold it there, Martina, because members have a couple of questions.
5083. Mr Brady: On the capital cut-off of £16,000, essentially, what it means now is that if someone is 1p over, that is it gone. I presume that, with DWP, we are talking about Britain.
5084. Ms M Campbell: Yes. I think so.
5085. Mr Brady: The savings of people of working age is approximately £300. We live in a much lower-wage economy. This is part of the whole difficulty; there are different circumstances. The number of people who you and I know who earn £30,000, £40,000 or £50,000 — apart from senior civil servants, of course —
5086. Ms M Campbell: Not us, anyway.
5087. Mr Brady: I was not suggesting that it was. On a serious point, those figures are predicated on the south-east of England.
5088. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
5089. Mr Brady: It really does not bear any resemblance to here.
5090. Ms M Campbell: I have asked our statisticians to try to get us some figures. I think that those figures were taken from the family resources survey.
5091. Mr Brady: Figures for here would be helpful.
5092. Ms M Campbell: We probably have some figures. However, the problem with getting the Northern Ireland figures on that is that the sample is so low. Our statisticians will not release figures when the confidence level is below a certain amount.
5093. Mr Brady: Maybe that highlights the issue.
5094. I have another point. On the one hand, you have a Government telling people to save and to be frugal and all of that. However, this will be a disincentive for older people to save; £16,000 really is not that much for people who are going to have to top up their income by dipping into it or whatever. It is going to be a disincentive, because people are going to limit what they save. It does not make sense.
5095. Ms M Campbell: I appreciate the point that there are two sets of rules.
5096. Mr Brady: It is contradictory to the policy principle.

5097. Ms M Campbell: However, for the person who is over the £16,000 but not by much, when the regulations come to you, you will see that the definition of “deprivation of capital” is being widened to the claimant’s advantage.
5098. Mr Brady: Spend and enjoy.
5099. Mr Pollock: It is to allow you to settle debts and things like that.
5100. Ms M Campbell: It will allow you to pay off debt, which it does not do at the moment.
5101. Mr Brady: That is beneficial. The other day, I made a point about passported benefits. Some people on pension credit, because there was no outer limit, may have qualified even though the tariff was for a small amount, which then brought them into line with rates and all of that.
5102. Ms M Campbell: I am checking that point about underlying entitlement for you.
5103. Mr Pollock: I want to make a point about the £40,000 to £50,000 thing. The upside for Northern Ireland is that, although there might not be many people earning that, the benefit rates for universal credit are predicated on the national median range, which is beneficial because those rates are higher than the Northern Ireland median.
5104. Mr Brady: Well, if we accept that benefit rates are high, I suppose that that is a contradiction in terms.
5105. The Chairperson: We are moving into debate. We are not at that point yet.
5106. Ms M Campbell: On Tuesday, there was a question about 16- and 17-year olds. Under the current system, there is provision for 16- and 17-year olds to get a discretionary hardship payment under jobseeker’s allowance. This applied to young people who are 16 or 17 and are registered on a training scheme but have not yet got a place. It also applied to children leaving care. Even though, under the leaving care order, DHSS is supposed to look after those children, there were exceptions where they could get a discretionary hardship payment. As I understand it, under universal credit, those two categories of people are out and are not entitled to anything, and neither will their parents be entitled to claim for them. I asked DWP for clarification, but I was not satisfied with its reply. I sent a further clarification request, and I am waiting for a response, which I hope to receive today. That is the position on that.
5107. The Chairperson: Have you finished on that one?
5108. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
5109. The Chairperson: I neglected to bring Mark in on a previous point.
5110. Mr Durkan: I am sorry, Martina. I want to take you back to under-occupancies. You said that you were reconfirming that if one member of a mixed-age couple was of pensionable age, they would be exempt.
5111. Ms M Campbell: I said that before. I just meant that I was confirming what I had said, which was that if one member of a mixed-age couple is over pension age, they are exempt from the underoccupancy.
5112. Mr Durkan: I had not heard that before. That is good. Thank you.
5113. Ms M Campbell: OK. We have talked about capital costs already. I was to clarify about the entitlement waiting days. I will come back in writing on that, because we are still arguing that point out.
5114. Mr Brady: That was about the small amount under seven days.
5115. Ms M Campbell: Yes. It is more to do with the fact that universal credit relies on a monthly assessment period. I think that the intent of that clause is that they would not consider an assessment period for less than seven days. However, I want to get that absolutely crystal clear, and I will come back in writing on that.
5116. Mr Brady: That tied in with the passported benefits as well.

5117. Ms M Campbell: Yes. I am also checking the underlying entitlement, because that is a very good point; there is nearly a double whammy there.
5118. There was something about the severe disability premium for children.
5119. Mr Brady: It was being reduced.
5120. Ms M Campbell: Again, we will get back to you in writing on all these points. The severe disability premium is being removed for adults. Obviously, anyone currently in receipt of that will get transitional protection as long as their circumstances last. It is intended that the severe disability premium be abolished as part of the simplification process. There have been serious problems with the administration of that premium over the years, and there are significant questions as to its rationale and whether it is targeted at the right group of people. Aligning the rates and making sure that the proper payments go to the right people are part of the issue. At present, the severe disability premium overlaps with social care provision.
5121. That is more or less what I want to say on the issue. I will provide you with details on the difference between the premium for children under tax credits and under universal credit.
5122. Mr Brady: You said that there are questions on whether the severe disability premium is being targeted at the right people. I would not agree with that for a moment, because there is a very clear avenue to claim. People fill in an IS10. If someone is found not to be living alone, that is fraud. It is incumbent on — 5123. Ms M Campbell: It is a different mechanism.
5124. Mr Brady: Nor do I accept that it is overlapping with social care. I am going by my own experience. Levels of social care either are or are not provided. The whole idea and policy intention of the severe disability premium was to enhance the quality of life for people with specific disabilities. People have to be getting middle or high care for the disability. That is being abolished with no reasonable rationale.
5125. Ms M Campbell: The coalition Government believe that there is a clear rationale, and, obviously, the increased earnings disregard for disabled people is supposed to offset that. I take your point.
5126. Mr Brady: I do not think that it will make a huge deal of difference to the coalition Government, whatever you say, but I think that the point is worth making. I know that you had no input into this, but we are dealing with facts rather than opinions, and, unfortunately, you said something with which I totally disagree, and I wanted to put that on the record.
5127. Ms M Campbell: I take your point.
5128. I also said that, as far as I was aware, a DWP review was ongoing, and I undertook to provide you with some clarification.
5129. There are eight or nine bullet points on underoccupancy in the Committee Clerk's paper on issues for consideration. We are trying to cost those for you and give you numbers. They concerned such issues as deferment, general implementation and people being exempted.
5130. We will try to get you the possible numbers and costs that will be impacted by the support for mortgage interest (SMI) and the zero earnings rule. However, I can confirm that, once people take up any job, their support for mortgage interest will cease. Under the current rules, there is extended entitlement to housing benefit or SMI for four weeks after people take up a job, but that will not be the position in universal credit. Again, we will try to get you some costs and numbers. The rationale will always be that there are higher earning disregards in universal credit, and evidence proves that people will do their utmost to protect their home, and those who can pay should pay.
5131. Mr Brady: Of course people will do their utmost to protect their home. They - will make sure that they do not take a part-time job that will stop their support for mortgage interest. That is common sense. You wonder where the policy intent went there.

5132. Ms M Campbell: Yes. We talked a little about supported housing. I confirmed for you that housing costs for people in supported housing would be outside universal credit. DWP Ministers announced that on 17 September. We are still trying to work through the impact of that in Northern Ireland. As far as I know, supported housing costs are paid by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and are demand-led. We think that underoccupancy and shared room rates would not apply to those people, but we will confirm that for you. We will also try to get some costs and numbers. Supported housing represents 5% of the housing benefit caseload, which is roughly 8,000 cases.
5133. We have already talked about —
5134. Mr Brady: Sorry, Martina; I do not mean to interrupt you all of the time.
5135. Ms M Campbell: No, I am sorry. I keep forgetting to look up.
5136. Mr Brady: I want to ask you about supported housing. Paula and I also sit on the Health Committee. One of the planks of Transforming Your Care is to maintain people in the community. You mentioned 8,000 cases. Presumably, the projected figure would be much higher when houses start to be built that are suitable for supported housing. That will be an important issue. Perhaps, there needs to be — 5137. Ms M Campbell: I do not really know enough about it. However, I think that, in most of those cases, people in supported housing are in one-bedroom flats.
5138. Mr Brady: However, we are again talking about displaced costs. If people do not get proper support through supported housing, they will go back into residential care or hospital, which costs a lot more. That is one issue about displaced costs that another Department will have to pick up. In a sense, it is not a sensible approach.
5139. Ms M Campbell: Again, it is about joined-up government and our good friend common sense.
5140. Mr Brady: While we are working towards it here, it seems that it is more disjointed in Britain.
5141. Ms M Campbell: In the longer term, DWP plans to localise supported housing. Obviously, we would want to consider very carefully whether that is appropriate here.
5142. Mr Brady: In England, in particular, there is an existing infrastructure that is ready to deal with housing, social services, and so on. We do not have that.
5143. Ms M Campbell: That is why I would suggest that it is probably not appropriate for us. However, localisation takes the matter out of the social security area.
5144. I think that that is all. I will come back with further information on that and will take Mr Brady's points on board.
5145. An issue was raised about power of attorney. If I understand what Mr Copeland was saying and picked him up correctly, it concerns someone with power of attorney having a vested interest in not signing the claimant commitment. I really did not understand the point. If such a person did not sign the claimant commitment, he or she would not get any money. His or her vested interest in the power of attorney would presumably be money-driven. Perhaps Mr Copeland could clarify that for me.
5146. The Chairperson: If Michael wants to come back on that, he can do so.
5147. Ms M Campbell: I think that the Law Centre raised the issue of work-focused interviews being reintroduced. I said that I believed that DWP was conducting a review, and I undertook to come back with further information. We were expecting a response from DWP last week. I think that it is supposed to - make a decision by 2 November, so we are following that up.

5148. I will write to the Committee about the time limit for someone taking up employment after being deemed fit for work and the definitions in regulations.
5149. In clause 19, there was an issue around childcare, lone parents with children under the age of five, and lead carers. I gave you some figures and said that the intention is to continue the current operational flexibility, which is that lone parents with a child under the age of five will be subject only to a work-focused interview, which might be only one interview a year. Similarly, couples will be able to nominate a lead carer and restrict that carer's availability to fit around their child's school hours.
5150. I will write to you and set out our position on EU migrants.
5151. There was an issue about the definition of domestic violence. On Tuesday, I confirmed that the definition will replicate that in the jobseeker's allowance regulations that were recently passed by the Assembly and the Committee. That satisfies that query. I also confirmed that the definition of hate crime refers to violence in the home, which is taken to mean any attacks from an ethnic or any other perspective, but I will confirm that for you.
5152. We note that a number of stakeholders have suggested a statutory right to provide advice. We also note that advice services estimate that there will be a 30% increase in their workload. As far as I understand it, the agency is in discussions with colleagues in the voluntary and community unit, and the Department already provides more than £5 million to advice services. Again, we will come back to you in writing with a firm position on that.
5153. In terms of sanctions —
5154. Mr Pollock: We need facts and figures on the matter. We are working on that, and we hope to come back to you before next Tuesday.
5155. Ms M Campbell: This morning, Conrad provided clarification on the double-whammy effect. An issue was also raised about claimants who have dual entitlement to employment and support allowance (ESA) and universal credit being sanctioned under UC. A question was asked: if there were insufficient funds, would we deduct from those people's ESA award? We believe that the position is that we can deduct only from the UC element, but we are getting clarification.
5156. We take the point about separated couples living in the same house and from which member of the couple the underoccupancy rate will be deducted. We are working on that.
5157. Mr Pollock: Procedures are in place for interviews to determine if, for example, you and Fra were living in the same house —
5158. Mr F McCann: God forbid.
5159. Mr Pollock: We would ask you some questions.
5160. Mr Brady: That would be over-occupancy. It is quite a difficult issue. In fraud terms, it is the same as people who are being accused of living together as a couple, which has always been contentious. I want to put on record that the £5 million spent on advice services is money very well spent, and it is still not enough.
5161. Mr F McCann: He should have declared an interest in that.
5162. Ms M Campbell: When and how will claimants be advised that they are affected by the benefit cap? In England, as soon as the Act was passed, DWP undertook an exercise and wrote out to affected claimants, approximately a year in advance. We are seeking confirmation from the agency on its position and whether it will do any work with claimants to give them a year's notice. However, it is proposed that the benefit cap will come in from April 2013, so they will not have a year.

5163. Mr Pollock: There is a communications plan for universal credit and welfare reform in general. I spoke to housing division colleagues this morning about under-occupancy, for example, and they intend to write out to those whom they believe would be affected to offer advice and services. The same applies to any of these issues: a plan is in place, which we will share with you. Tommy and agency colleagues have probably outlined that already.
5164. Mr Brady: If parity were to be maintained, and people in Britain got a year's notice, should people here not get a year's notice? Perhaps you should put universal credit back to facilitate that. We hear a lot about parity, and it seems unfair, without being too facetious about it. However, it is a valid point.
5165. Mr Pollock: We are already a year behind.
5166. Mr Brady: Yes, but we are told all the time that parity is paramount and that we cannot interfere with parity.
5167. Ms M Campbell: I have not mentioned it yet. I have been very good.
5168. Mr Brady: I know, but I am trying to keep you in line.
5169. Ms M Campbell: My last point — actually, it is Michael's point — is about state pension credit and the definition of carers. Is the definition of "substantial and regular caring" — the 35 hours — changing? No, it is not. That finishes all my points.
5170. Mr Brady: Is it still 35 hours?
5171. Ms M Campbell: It is still 35 hours. Again, we will confirm in writing.
5172. Mr Pollock: Martina was on a roll there, so she covered most of my points as well, for which I am very grateful.
5173. I just want to mention the ESA youth provision, in which facts and figures are again involved. Somebody mentioned 390,000; we are checking that and will come back to you in writing.
5174. I will flesh out what we were saying about underoccupancy. There is an exemption. There was some concern about couples in which one partner is over the pension age and another is under, and whether they would be exempt. The Department has — 5175. Mr F McCann: Would the younger person also be exempt?
5176. Mr Pollock: Yes; the couple would be exempt from the underoccupancy rule. The Department is working with the Housing Executive to establish an advice service to try to look at that in tandem with identifying the number of households and the people involved. It is looking at the categories of exemptions and trying to offer options that individuals might want to consider.
5177. There is a mention of ESA in clause 53, which deals with time-limiting. A check is in place to ascertain whether an individual is placed in the correct group, and whether that is a support group or a work-related activity group. Again, that is a procedural issue, and we will come back to you in writing. That is all that I have to say at the minute.
5178. Ms Corderoy: Members were concerned about the recovery of benefit payments. We have just had some guidance material on that. I can clarify that a waiver is considered when there is reasonable evidence available that the recovery of an overpayment would be detrimental to the health and/or welfare of the debtor or his or her family, or that recovery would not be in the public interest. Apparently, there are particular criteria that would satisfy us to make any decision to waive recovery if an overpayment were made. Maurice mentioned the health issue yesterday. However, if a payment is below a certain limit and is deemed non-recoverable from a customer, the debt is automatically written off.
5179. Mr Brady: For once, may I just give praise where praise is due. In my recent experience, particularly when overpayments have arisen with older people and have caused trauma and anxiety, the Department has been fine and got above that. We criticise a lot, so it is important to make those points. I have had about five or six recent cases in which the Department was willing, and it saves people an awful lot of hassle.

5180. Ms M Campbell: Especially with older people. Thank you. We will pass that on.

5181. The Chairperson: Thank you, Martina, Maurice and Michael, for your support of the Committee's work this morning.

8 November 2012

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Alex Maskey (Chairperson)
 Mr Mickey Brady (Deputy Chairperson)
 Ms Paula Bradley
 Ms Pam Brown
 Mr Gregory Campbell
 Mr Sammy Douglas
 Mr Mark Durkan
 Mr Fra McCann
 Mr David McClarty

5182. The Chairperson: Members will recall that we debated Standing Order 35 some weeks ago. The Committee divided four in favour and four against, so no decision was taken. Standing Order 35 will provide for the establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee to ensure the conformity of equality requirements in a broad sense.
5183. Mr Brady: I propose that Standing Order 35 be considered again.
5184. Mr Campbell: I am trying to get my head round the rationale for that. Are we voting on it again because there was an undetermined outcome last time?
5185. The Chairperson: No decision was taken last time, so it is within the gift of members to put it forward as a proposal again. As no decision was taken, there is no decision to rescind. It is competent to put it forward. Members, including me and others, are still concerned about provisions of the Bill and its overall content and direction. That is in light of evidence that was presented to the Committee from a range of stakeholders. The Bill is complex, and, to some people, contentious. People have their own views on it, but there has been a varying degree of opposition, and concerns have been expressed about the Bill. Some members felt that they wanted to table the debate again about the establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee. I remind members that, as was expressed on the previous occasion, its purpose was to establish an Ad Hoc Committee to do a short, time-limited and discrete piece of work on this. We had advice from the Assembly officials that it could not be run in parallel with the Committee. This has never been done by the Assembly before, and I imagine that the Assembly has the right to make the decision. For me, it is within the gift of the Assembly to do whatever we want, but that is another discussion. You heard the formal advice; I am giving you my opinion.
5186. Mr Campbell: My query is on the procedural process, Chairman. At the conclusion of the previous vote, I asked what happens now, given that it was a four/four split and that you did not have a casting vote. I remember that you or the Committee Clerk said that it just falls. Obviously, we will not know until the outcome of this vote, but if there were a repeat, would we then be faced with a possibility of it falling again to be tabled at a subsequent meeting?
5187. The Chairperson: Technically, it would be up to members to put any proposal that they want. We are at a fairly advanced stage of the business. My support for such a move would be in the context of whether we can get it done and whether it is worth doing. All that I am saying is that I support it for now; that does not mean that I will support it next week.
5188. Mr Campbell: It is to try to get the procedural proposition. Our vote was a four/four split. The response, after a query by me, was that the proposition then fell. It now appears to be on the table again. We can take a vote, and that will certainly answer it, but if that does not sort it — if it is a re-run of the previous time — do we, it having fallen twice, have the potential for a third run?
5189. The Chairperson: Technically, yes, we could. However, I am not sure that that is anyone's intention, although I - cannot read somebody else's mind. If no decision is taken, the Committee can have that discussion again, but I am not sure that that is anyone's intent.

5190. Mr McClarty: Chairman, could you outline just why this vote is being put out to form an Ad Hoc Committee? What would its purpose be?
5191. The Chairperson: I would support such a motion, and I made this point a few weeks ago, only if it were a time-bound and discrete piece of work. It is not intended by any stretch to supplant the work of the Committee, which has a formal statutory obligation. On behalf of the Committee, I have made it clear, publicly and privately, that the Committee will give maximum scrutiny to the Bill, given its nature and the interest expressed in it by a wide range of organisations and sectors. We have made it clear that we will give the Bill full and robust scrutiny, and I am satisfied that we are doing that. This Committee will complete that task.
5192. I support the proposal to establish an Ad Hoc Committee on the evidence that we have heard from the Human Rights Commission, the Law Centre, and all the various mental health organisations and charities. They made compelling arguments, and I am not prepared to go forward on a Bill that I am not satisfied in my own mind is compliant with a wide range of rights and entitlements. I want to satisfy the many organisations that came here — and myself — that we are doing our job.
5193. If the vote is successful and agreed by the Committee, an Ad Hoc Committee will be established. My support for it is basically on the clear premise that it is a short-term piece of work. My assumption is that it will require two or three meetings of an Ad Hoc Committee because it does not have to talk to all those organisations. It will talk to the legal people and to the two commissions and report to the Assembly in short order.
5194. Mr McClarty: How do you envisage the make-up of an Ad Hoc Committee?
5195. The Chairperson: The Assembly will determine that. An Ad Hoc Committee would have members from outside this Committee, so we would not be doing it. In a sense, it is a belt-and-braces exercise. I presume that all Committees established by the Assembly are populated by d'Hondt, which will mean a proportionate Committee. It is a discrete piece of work; it is not an overhaul of all the provisions of the Bill. Specific concerns were raised by credible organisations; they are not people who would be out on the streets every day of the week. The organisations that I heard here made compelling arguments, and I want to make sure that I am doing my job.
5196. Whatever the work of the Ad Hoc Committee, it will come back to this Committee and we will take it on board. However, there is no intention, either on my part or my colleagues', for this to be a delaying tactic. This is not the reasoned amendment. The reasoned amendment was a deferral for negotiation; it fell and is over and done with. This is a discrete piece of work, and I believe, and am certainly advocating, that we would be well advised to make sure that we cover all the bases on this one because of the complexity and the contentious nature of the Bill.
5197. Mr Campbell: On the timing, Chairman, I think that the Minister made clear, as did the departmental officials, the exceptionally tight timescale. As you outlined in response to David, if the Committee was minded to proceed down that route, I presume the very earliest that the Assembly could debate the matter and decide would be next Monday or Tuesday, or would it be the following week?
5198. The Chairperson: I am sorry, Gregory, I do not want to interrupt your flow, but there is a timeline in your information folder.
5199. Mr Campbell: That would be Monday week, which would be eight days before we had intended to have our conclusions forwarded to the Assembly. I do not know how long an Ad Hoc Committee would take to deliberate, although I appreciate that a timeline is there. Given the difficulties that we have already faced and the complexities of the arguments that will undoubtedly be put and have already been put on previous occasions in other jurisdictions, I find it, as I said several weeks ago, exceptionally difficult to establish how we will keep within the time frame. It is exceptionally unrealistic.

5200. Mr Brady: This is not introduced to supplant, as is stated, the work of the Committee. It starts with the premise that when the debate was held initially a couple of weeks ago, every party expressed discontent with the Bill. You voted against it in the House of Commons, as did your party's Members of Parliament. The stakeholders have expressed a great deal of concern about the Bill. It is the most wide-ranging Bill on social welfare since 1948, so it is important that all aspects of it are covered.
5201. With Standing Order 35, an Ad Hoc Committee could be established to do a forensic analysis of human rights and equality issues that have been raised about the Bill. It is not my intention to reintroduce this ad infinitum. A conclusion was not reached last time; it was almost stalemate. It will give people the opportunity to have another look at it. The Bill is wide-ranging and will affect the lives of my constituents, yours and everybody else's, and those people need to realise that we have covered all the angles of equality and human rights and how that will impact on the most vulnerable in our society because that is the vast majority of people who will be affected. That is my considered opinion. It is not a ploy to delay necessarily. At the end of our scrutiny, we have to be able to say that we have covered all the angles so that people cannot say, "You should have done this or that." Ultimately, it is up to the Assembly to decide, and an Ad Hoc Committee would give it the opportunity to do that. It is not mischievous; that is not the intention. I want to put that on the record. It is for the right reasons, from my point of view.

5202. Mr F McCann: The difference between the first vote and the second is that all the groups have explained their positions, and in each of them there was an opinion against various aspects of the Bill for different reasons. I give guarantees to anybody whom I meet outside that I will give the fullest possible scrutiny to the Bill. This is just an extension of that, and I remind people that the Chair has actively worked to ensure that we keep within the timeline. It is within the Committee's power to ask for an extension to the Bill, but you have added the work to the Committee, and everybody here has abided by that. I think that we should go to a vote.
5203. The Committee Clerk: Can I point something out to the Committee? The Ad Hoc Committee would have a statutory 30-working day period unless it is constrained if a motion is agreed by the Committee to go to the Assembly. The motion might be, for example, to establish an Ad Hoc Committee in conformity with equality requirements and observance of human rights and report by 15 November or 23 November, or whatever date you consider. The Committee can place no constraints on how an Ad Hoc Committee carried out its work. It could decide to speak to a whole range of organisations as well. Moreover, the procedural advice that we have — I know that there is some debate over this — is that the work of this Committee would have to stop. That is what the Clerk Assistant has indicated. We can reflect on that, but the procedural advice has not changed. I am just letting members know that.
5204. Just on the position of the vote, we still have the wording from the previous motion, but, just for procedural purposes, we need a proposer of a motion to establish an Ad Hoc Committee, and a seconder; and then we can read the more formal wording of such a motion.

5205. Mr Durkan: Having heard the evidence, I think that the need for this piece of work is even more glaring now than it was when it was first proposed. It is important that we utilise everything at our disposal to ensure the fullest and most thorough scrutiny of the Bill as possible.

5206. As regards the Committee Clerk's statement on the need for the Committee to stop, I look at the forward work plan and see an extensive piece of work coming up on the Business Improvement Districts Bill. Does it mean that the Committee itself has to stop work or that the Committee's work on the Welfare Reform Bill must stop?

5207. The Committee Clerk: The scrutiny of the Bill must stop.

5208. Mr Durkan: Therefore, we could bring forward some of the work on the Business Improvement Districts Bill in the interim?

5209. The Committee Clerk: That is certainly possible. It is only the work of the Committee that relates to the Welfare Reform Bill that would stop. So, for example, the earliest date that the motion could be considered by the Assembly would be 19 November. Assuming that the motion is passed on 20 November, the work of the Committee on the scrutiny of the Bill would have to stop. However, that is on the assumption that the Committee wants to refer just to equality issues — if you put it like that — and not the entire work of the Committee on the Bill. Subsequently, this Committee would have six working days exactly to scrutinise the Bill when it comes back to it.

5210. Mr Campbell: The Committee Clerk made an important point about the Committee's scrutinising role in relation to welfare reform, and then about the other important issues. However, that work has to stop for the duration of any Ad Hoc Committee. Effectively, we will be voting now on the establishment of a Committee whose work and outcome we cannot determine; the Ad Hoc Committee will determine that. The duration of the Ad Hoc Committee we cannot determine. We know how long it can go for: 30 days. However, there has been no resolution from the Assembly to shorten that. I am not accusing anyone of using a delaying tactic. This is not a case of "Let us, at no risk, comprehensively analyse this through an Ad Hoc Committee, and there has been no risk taken or expended by claimants or others." The Department has made it clear that there is a risk, and that is what we are being asked to vote on.

5211. Mickey Brady made the point about opposition at Westminster. That is absolutely right, and there is a potential in the next few weeks for the issue to be raised again. My party intends to raise it. We welcome any assistance from people who have not gone to Westminster to try to get changes to the Bill. They may want to come and help us again; they absented themselves last time. We have to do what we have to do in the Committee here. The point that I making is that we are going to vote, and it would probably be better to take a vote, but there is not a zero-cost option. It is not a case of "Let us do whatever we can, go to the nth degree to analyse it and get the Ad Hoc Committee — and there is no risk attached to doing that."

5212. If that were the case, I would certainly vote for it. However, the Committee and the Minister have been clear that there is a risk. Therefore, for us, the question is whether we take that risk, not knowing the outcome or the duration, but knowing that this Committee cannot do anything to further examine or scrutinise the Bill in the time allotted for the duration of the Ad Hoc Committee. We would almost certainly be into February by the time we recommenced the scrutiny of the Bill, not knowing what the outcome of the Ad Hoc Committee would be.

5213. The Chairperson: I will just finish off a couple of points. From my party's point of view, the reasoned amendment debate was about a deferral of the Bill. Like colleagues, I made it clear that it was not about having an open-ended,

- long-term deferral, nor was it about delay; it was about trying to get people's shoulder to the wheel to negotiate what we thought could have been a better deal.
5214. That proposal was not supported in the Assembly. This is an entirely different piece of work. In my view, the only basis on which we are proposing it and being prepared to support it is in pursuance of full scrutiny. Speaking as the Chairperson, there is no question but that the Committee will be able to stand over the fact that we have provided absolutely robust scrutiny and will continue to do so until we finish our job.
5215. I am confident, speaking on behalf of every member of the Committee, that by the time we finish our report, we will be able to demonstrate fully to everyone who has concerns that we left no stone unturned in scrutinising the Bill to the best of our ability. Members have given their time and worked through the recent recess, and, I presume, if needs be, we will work through the next recess for a few days.
5216. We are at an advanced stage of our Committee Stage scrutiny; we have had our stakeholders in, we had a full discussion on this yesterday, and we have another scheduled for today. I am convinced that we could finish the Committee's work in a few days. That is what we have realistically left to us.
5217. Mr Campbell: That is this Committee, Chairperson.
5218. The Chairperson: Yes, but for me, whether that is strung out over another couple of weeks or an additional three or four weeks is not the most important thing. There are a set number of days left that we need to apply ourselves to this. I believe that, if needs be, we can condense the time frame within which all this done, making the point that establishing an Ad Hoc Committee does not take away one iota from the absolute responsibility that we have, and which we are, in my view, shouldering well, to make sure that there is full scrutiny of the Bill.
5219. I have heard evidence from witnesses, I have read the evidence of the Joint Committee at Westminster, and I have heard the evidence that people have presented here. I believe that it would be unwise to proceed unless we get a discrete discussion on the compliance issues, after which a report will be brought back here.
5220. This is not a delaying tactic; it is intended to get this done ASAP. If we can have that discrete, dedicated report back on our table, we can put it into our deliberations, which will be complete in a number of days. Whether it is completed by 27 November, it will require a number of days for us to do that.
5221. It is not our intention that any delay should be caused by the establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee. My party's point of view is that if an Ad Hoc Committee is established, we will participate in it. There is no intention to do anything other than to get that piece of work done as quickly as possible. It would not be widespread; we would not be going out to stakeholders again. It would be about speaking to two or three stakeholders and advisers; that would be the height of it. It is about doing an important, dedicated and discrete piece of work with which to come back to the Committee. That is the only reason that we are supporting it.
5222. Mr Durkan: Should a motion be tabled in the Assembly, we will stipulate a time frame reduced from 30 days.
5223. The Chairperson: If people want support for it, they would have to make that position known clearly to the other parties. Obviously, parties may or may not be convinced of supporting it on the basis that it is not an open-ended thing and that we have to get this job of work done as quickly as possible.
5224. Mr Douglas: The Human Rights Commission had some serious questions, as did many others. The Minister assured us in the House that the Bill was human rights compliant. I asked their representatives whether they had a copy, and they said no. When

- I asked whether they had requested a copy, they said no. I also heard this morning — I think that Gregory said it, as did Tara Caul from the Assembly's Legal Services — that the Speaker was assured about that.
5225. I am concerned that even though our Committee has worked very well to date and we have had a consensus on most things, I think that this has the potential to undermine that good working relationship. At the end of the day, right is right and wrong is wrong. You do what is right. The longer this goes on, the more it will undermine that good working relationship. Chair, I think you have done very well; you have been very independent. [Interruption.] Does the member want me to give way?
5226. Mr F McCann: I am just saying —
5227. The Chairperson: Let Sammy finish.
5228. Mr Douglas: As we heard this morning, this is an enabling Bill. The Legal Services representative told us this morning that, at this time, she is assured, and she assured us, that this is human rights compliant. As Gregory said, the Speaker is assured, the Minister is assured and, having listened to Tara Caul this morning, I am assured.
5229. The Bible says:
"for such a time as this."
 We were happy with the first phase of this. She said that, when we complete the work, it will be scrutinised. Is that right, Kevin? She said that it would be gone through from a legal point of view. The Minister will also be assured by whomever he gets legal advice from.
5230. The Committee Clerk: The senior legal adviser said that this is an enabling Bill and that it has to be compliant with human rights for it to be competent. The Speaker has been reassured of that. Once the regulations come forward, they will also have to be scrutinised to ensure that they are compliant. The Department cannot bring forward regulations that are not compliant with the UN Convention on Human Rights, etc, as you mentioned.
5231. Mr Douglas: I know that Gregory talked about the cost. Is there a financial cost for this? If you were to bring in legal expertise, who would pay for that? How much would it cost? Have we worked that out?
5232. The Chairperson: We have not been given any cost. The arguments around the cost to the social fund, and so on, were in the context of a reasoned amendment discussion, and that could defer the Bill for a number of months. That is not the intention; it is far from it. This is a discrete piece of work to be done ASAP. If I were on the Ad Hoc Committee, I would be telling the two commissions to come back in here to go through all of that. I would be putting them through their paces on the arguments that they made. Both of them sat in this room and told us that — 5233. Mr Douglas: Are we talking about solicitors and barristers? Is that the sort of people we are talking about?
5234. The Chairperson: I am saying that, if I was on the Ad Hoc Committee, I would be talking to Legal Services. They are the people who are here at our disposal; it is their responsibility. The commissions that have the statutory responsibility for this matter raised very serious concerns. I specifically asked the Equality Commission, for example, "Of all the assurances that you have been given, can you give me one example of one thing that has been met?" The answer was no. I am going to cover my responsibility by making sure that I take those two organisations back through their paces again and go through the concerns that have been raised and, if needs be, talk to the Department again.
5235. If I was on that Committee, I would be asking them to come into this room and to hammer it out together. For me, it seems easy to do. The fact that it has not been done sounds alarm bells, and that is why I am supporting this. It is a short-term, dedicated piece of work. It is not, by any stretch of the imagination, designed to delay. I am sitting here as the Chairperson. You are right; I endeavour to do my job as Chairperson professionally and impartially. I want to be able to stand up in the Chamber and say, hand on heart, that we did our job on this, regardless of what the outcome is. I am satisfied that we will be able to do that, regardless of whether the motion is agreed. We will do it, because we will take the Bill through its paces, and rightly so, because of the contentious nature.

5236. Mr Campbell: I think we should take a vote, Chairman.

5237. The Chairperson: If members are content, we will take a vote on the motion. Mickey Brady and Fra McCann are the proposer and the seconder.

5238. If members wish to abstain, they may declare an abstention.

5239. The Question is, That under Standing Order 35(2)(b), the Committee recommends that the Welfare Reform Bill be referred to an Ad Hoc Committee on conformity with equality requirements.

Question put.

The Committee divided:

Ayes 5; Noes 4.

AYES

Mr Brady, Mr Durkan, Mr F McCann, Mr Maskey, Mr McClarty.

NOES

Mr Campbell, Mr Douglas, Ms Brown, Ms P Bradley.

Question accordingly agreed to.

5240. Mr Campbell: On the outworking of that, I take it that that is now referred to the plenary session. Obviously, the Business Committee will have to decide how that is handled.

5241. The Committee Clerk: I will make one further point on that. The restriction on the time limit for that particular Committee may be an issue. The Committee has agreed that it should be established. The Committee will consider the time in which that Ad Hoc Committee should report. If a simple motion goes like that to the Business Office, then that Ad Hoc Committee will have, in effect, 30 working days, unless the motion that is placed before the House is that the Ad Hoc Committee reports by a certain date. I have given examples of the standard 30 working days and 15 days just to give a broad indication of when that Committee would have to report by. However, if this Committee wants to shorten that time period to five working days, for example, it is entirely up to the Committee to propose that, and that motion will be debated in the House.

5242. Mr Campbell: When is that likely to be?

5243. The Committee Clerk: I refer members to the timeline that I indicated, based on the Committee agreeing the motion today. Those first four dates. If the Committee agrees the motion today, the motion will be referred to the Business Committee for scheduling on 13 November. The earliest date that the motion could be considered by the Assembly is 19 November.

5244. Mr Campbell: That is the earliest date?

5245. The Committee Clerk: Yes. Then, on 20 November, assuming that the motion is passed by the Assembly, the motion before the House would be that the Committee has agreed to refer the Welfare Reform Bill to the Ad Hoc Committee on conformity of equality requirements, etc, and that that Committee reports by such-and-such a date.

5246. Mr Campbell: Chairman, now we are in even deeper waters, because 19 November is the earliest date, and there is an assumption, which is the only assumption the Committee Clerk can make, that the motion is passed that the Ad Hoc Committee be set up, and then that this Committee's work on the Welfare Reform Bill ceases for the duration of that time, whatever that

- might be. What happens if that motion is not passed?
5247. The Chairperson: We will go back to our work again.
5248. Mr Campbell: But between now and then?
5249. The Committee Clerk: Between now and then, the Committee continues its work —
5250. The Chairperson: We continue our work from now. This is not a motion passed anywhere, so we are still in work, if you know what I mean. We have to take some more evidence on the Welfare Reform Bill, particularly in relation to fraud, for example. Officials are here, and, notwithstanding the vote that was passed a moment ago, we will start that session in a couple of minutes. So, we will continue our work until and if the motion is passed in the Assembly. What I would like to do, if members would consider it, is go to the Speaker on behalf of the Committee, because the timeline that we are dealing with can, I personally believe, be truncated. That is the timeline in front of us, so it may not be. From the point of view of supporting the motion, our party colleagues will go to the Speaker to see how quickly it can be done. I believe that it can be truncated. I accept that when it is returned to us as a Committee, there will be no delay at our end of it. In other words, if we need to take a couple of longer days to finish our work, we will do that. I am speaking with the indulgence of the members, but the evidence to date has been that members have made their time available to do that work. We are very well advanced in our deliberations, so I would like to be able to return to the Speaker's office on the time frame.
5251. The Committee Clerk: I will explain it just one more time. This is a motion that is going to the Assembly. If members want to take time to consider what date would be more appropriate, they have to remember that amendments could be made to the motion in the House in order to put a date in subsequently for debate. So, the motion that will go to the Business Office will be that an Ad Hoc Committee on conformity with equality relations, etc, be established. Then, a subsequent amendment will be put down after Consideration Stage to say that the Committee is to report by whatever date a member — whichever member — feels is more appropriate.
5252. The Chairperson: We will do that.
5253. Mr Douglas: May I just check something, Chair? You talked about extra days. In the past, there was agreement around the table that we would commit as much time as it takes. The only thing is that all of us have been pushing work commitments back to December. So can we get some sort of projected timeline and cost details as soon as possible? I am still not quite sure who will actually pay for this if there is a cost. Where will that come from?
5254. The Chairperson: At this moment in time, the Committee has agreed a motion, which will go to the Business Committee, and so on and so forth. I am committing to go to the Office of the Speaker, and I am asking party colleagues to do so too just to clarify how this can be processed. Whether the motion is eventually passed or is amended, the consensus around the table, even from those who do not support the motion, is that it should be dealt with as quickly as possible. That is the clear consensus, and it is certainly the intention. Subject to when we get that information, we will obviously revise our time frame. Certainly, I am making a personal commitment to get this back on track again as quickly as we can. It is a dedicated area of work, and there are literally only a number of working days left to deal with it, be that before or after the work of an Ad Hoc Committee. So it is a finite process. From my point of view, I just want to assure members that there is no intention to prolong the agony any longer than necessary, because we all have to pick up our work schedules and the rest of it.
5255. Mr Durkan: I just want to back you up on that, Chair. When you compare the

- 15-day timeline and our forward work plan, you see that we are effectively going to lose three sessions on the Welfare Reform Bill.
5256. The Committee Clerk: The clause-by-clause stage of the Committee's work is to conclude on, I think, 20 November. We can see from the timeline that the earliest date on which the motion can be considered by the Assembly is 19 November. There is every possibility, of course, that the Committee will have concluded that work by that stage. If successful, the Bill will be referred to an Ad Hoc Committee on 20 November. So Mr Durkan is right: there will be a small number of days left for the Committee to consider this, but by that point, it will have concluded almost all its deliberations. It will then consider the Bill clause by clause — Patricia may correct me if I am wrong — in the context of the report by the Ad Hoc Committee. The Assembly will consider the Ad Hoc Committee report, and then the Committee will consider it and whether it has implications for its considerations to date.
5257. Mr Campbell: Following on from what Mark said, that minor slippage is dependent on the 15-working-day period and on the Assembly debating and then agreeing to the motion at the earliest possible opportunity. Those are three fairly significant suppositions to bring us to a small timeline, and we do not yet know the cost of this.
5258. The Chairperson: They are. However, as I pointed out earlier, for what it is worth, everybody, even those who do not support the motion, wants to get this done ASAP, and I presume that that will be reflected in the Business Committee. Yes, it is an assumption, but it is an informed one in so far as we know that everybody wants to get this done.
5259. Mr Douglas: Apologies if you have already answered this question, which relates to David's one. What will the make-up of the Ad Hoc Committee be?
5260. The Chairperson: It will be established by the Assembly under the normal rules.
5261. Mr Douglas: Will it include members of this Committee?
5262. The Chairperson: No, I do not think so. That probably is not advisable.
5263. Mr Campbell: It would be better if that was not the case.
5264. The Chairperson: I thought the general view was that it would be a better if a group of members, external to this Committee, would look at it. It is a discrete piece of work. Members, thanks for that.
5265. Sammy, I take your earlier point about the potentially divisive nature of some of this stuff. However, I think that the Committee has very diligently —
5266. Mr Douglas: As least we have reached a decision. We may not agree with it, but that is clear anyway.
5267. The Chairperson: We want to continue on the basis of maximising consensus around the table.

13 November 2012

5268. The Chairperson: We will now continue our deliberations on the Welfare Reform Bill. We started to look at what the key issues may be for the Committee. We are not doing the clause-by-clause consideration today, but we need to follow on from the discussion that we started the other day, which was about identifying the key issues.

5269. The Committee Clerk prepared an issues paper, which members have in front of them. We will continue to use that as a framework for identifying the Committee's key issues of concern, which we started to detail the other day. I want to make it very clear that members are totally free to suggest any other issues for consideration. This document is not the end of it, obviously; it is just a best guide.

5270. Mr Copeland: I have a question about the meeting of 16 October 2012. It has already been said that this is a Northern Ireland Bill, yet the paper that we have that covers the meeting on that date quite clearly answers the question that I asked about Creutzfeldt–Jakob disease (CJD) and how it relates to clause 35.

However, it also discounts payments to those who were tragically injured in the 2005 London bombings. If this is indeed a Northern Ireland Executive Bill, why does it refer to how the regulations will cover the London bombings but not any of the bombings that we unfortunately suffered?

5271. Holders of the Victoria Cross and George Cross are also mentioned in that answer. I would be curious to know whether the joint and several principle applies to holders of the George Cross. In other words, where multiple awards have been given to those who served in a particular organisation or unit, I would like to know whether the joint and several principle applies to the ownership of the George Cross for the purposes of the benefit.

5272. Ms Martina Campbell (Department for Social Development): I do not know the answer to that, so I will have to come back to you on it.

5273. Mr Copeland: I know that this is a Northern Ireland Executive Bill, but it just looks to me as though that provision has been lifted straight out of regulation 68(2) of the draft Universal Credit Regulations. Having gone through what we have gone through, I think that a substantial basis of our difficulty with some of these proposals is that the Bill is patently not a piece of Northern Ireland legislation, even though it is coming through the Executive. If some consideration could quite rightly be given to those who suffered in the 2005 London bombings, I would have thought that some should also be given to some of those who suffered in similar incidents here. Thank you for that, Chair.

5274. The Chairperson: Not at all, Michael. The paper that the Committee Clerk provided contains the key issues that were raised in oral and written submissions to the Committee. Members can, of course, add to that anything that they wish as we go through it. Are people happy enough for us to continue working our way through that paper and to confirm or otherwise whether these are, indeed, the key issues for the Committee?

5275. We intend to work our way through this paper and identify whether we are happy enough with it now or whether we want to add anything. The paper begins with Part 1 of the Bill, which deals with universal credit (UC). The first issue is the frequency of payment. I want to get some indication of the way that you want to deal with the process. Obviously, we are at the point where we want to indicate what we would like the Department to do on some of this material. In other words, at this stage of the game, everybody around the table is agreed that there is an issue with the frequency of payment. So, do we want the Department to, for example, come back to us and say that it is prepared to undertake to work on that? The Department is likely to tell you that the Minister is launching a consultation on the issues in Part 1 of the Bill on Thursday night and that everything is subject to that. I am stressing that we have a Bill in front of us, so we have to go back to what we actually have.

5276. You might want to ask the Department various things. The purpose of this session is for us to start working our way through the Bill. Do we agree that the issues in the paper need to be addressed? Do members have anything else that they want to include? We can work through the paper, and, once we have completed that, we can go back to things that members want to raise but that are not in this document. For example, do we agree that more frequent payments should be made? The purpose of today's session is to identify the issue and to ask the Department whether it is prepared to deal with it and come back to us on how it intends to do so. On the basis of our garnering that information, we will then go through the Bill clause by clause. We will then have to make decisions that nobody else will take for us.

5277. Mr Brady: We have been told that there may be concessions, if you like, or flexibility on the frequency of payment and recipient of payment. However, it seems that we will be getting regulations and guidelines that we have not seen. Can we not have written into the Bill specifically what we decide is the best way forward on the frequency of payment and the recipient of payment, whether that is the main carer or whatever? Where the frequency of payment is concerned, people should have choice. I think that that needs to be fairly clear in the Bill, as opposed to being affected by some nebulous guidelines that may come down the line. Somebody in a local office can decide whether somebody is vulnerable or in need of more frequent payments, and so forth. That should be written into the Bill as a choice for the person concerned. I think that that is the sort of thing that we should be looking at.

5278. If we do not, the Department is going to tell us, "This will all be in the guidelines and the regulations." We do not know that yet, and we need to be sure. The point that you have made frequently, Chair, is that we can deal only with what is in front of us, not with what may come down the line in the form of a guideline or regulation or whatever. I just wanted to mention that so that we can focus on that kind of area initially when we are talking about universal credit.

5279. The Chairperson: On the frequency of payment and the recipient of payment, there were different views from stakeholders on how you might split payments, for example, and whether payments should be made on a weekly or fortnightly basis. The common theme of agreement was that that would be the default position, in the same way that the direct payments will be made to landlords. I want frequency and split payments to be the default position. That is the common ground, whatever the precise detail of who the recipient might be, such as the main carer or whoever else. If we are thinking about a way forward, that is a clue to the - arguments that stakeholders have been making.

5280. Mr F McCann: A number of aspects of the Bill stand out that people have tapped into with concern. One is split payments and how they will deal with weekly or fortnightly difficulties. The other issue is who the money is paid to, such as the main carer in the house. The Minister has dealt with that. Those three issues seem to sit together to form people's main complaints and problems. It would be good if we could get an agreement around the table that that is the course of action that we will push for.
5281. Mr Douglas: I agree with Mickey. One person's flexibility is another's dogma. However, the documentation says very clearly that there will be flexibilities. I think that it was Martina who mentioned a number of weeks ago that, even if we get guidelines that we are happy enough with, in practice, it might work out that we need additional guidelines. That will then mean that we can come back to this at some stage. Is that not right? I think that the situation with all these clauses is that there will be an opportunity for us to come back to them if they are not working. I can imagine people coming into my office and saying, "You said that there would be flexibilities, but there is no flexibility whatsoever." They could have a good case.
5282. I think that it will be very difficult to have guidelines that will cover everything. However, we definitely need some flexibility, which the Minister has agreed to. So, I certainly support Mickey on this point.
5283. Mr Copeland: I just want to express some sympathy for Mickey's view. Knowing what you are agreeing to, deciding on or talking about in the absence of the regulations is like playing snooker with a bit of rope. There will be a policy intent behind most of these clauses. Is there a single policy intent for the whole Bill or is there a policy intent for each clause? Is there a difference between the policy intent for GB and that for here, or is the policy intent the same?
5284. Ms M Campbell: Right. The overall policy intent of the Bill is, obviously, to make work pay and to make the system fairer and simpler.
5285. Mr Copeland: I understand that.
5286. Ms M Campbell: Those are all our overarching objectives. Each clause, obviously, has a policy rationale. However, they all interlink with the aim of meeting the overarching policy objectives. The original aim behind having the whole issue of monthly payments and direct payments to landlords and all those things in the Bill was to get people used to the world of work and to how people in work manage their money.
5287. We also have to remember that we are going to have a new set of claimants as a result of this who are working and used to managing their money. We will make it the default position for everyone, with the exception of direct payments, which is the position, to automatically get their payments paid to the landlord unless they opt out. However, if you start to chip away at different elements, you will undermine the original policy intent. The Minister has listened to people and to members of this Committee, and he listened to what was said at the debate. He has secured flexibilities on monthly payments and split payments, as well as direct payments to landlords.
5288. Mr Michael Pollock (Department for Social Development): Part of the rationale for the delay in the introduction of universal credit is to allow the IT functionality to deliver on those elements.
5289. Mr Copeland: I understand all that. What I am asking is whether there is a document somewhere that explains the policy intent behind the Bill and the individual clauses.
5290. Mr Pollock: The explanatory and financial memorandum is probably the easiest.

5291. Mr Copeland: The explanatory and financial memorandum? Is that as far as it goes? Are there any differences between the explanatory and financial memorandum that is attached to the Northern Ireland Executive's Welfare Reform Bill and the one that is attached to the GB Act?
5292. Ms M Campbell: There is not much difference. However, I have said consistently throughout my evidence sessions that we can put some of the issues that members are concerned about into the explanatory and financial memorandum rather than on the face of the Bill. That is because putting them into the face of the Bill will, in many circumstances, restrict others who do not need that type of flexibility.
5293. We are on record as saying that there is provision in the Bill for split payments. I think that that is in clause 99. I accept that members have not seen the claims and payments regulations yet, but there is provision in them for payments to be made more frequently. The Minister has committed to consulting on exceptional circumstances that would lead to people availing themselves of the flexibility of either split payments or more frequent payments. Members have been invited to that consultation, which starts this Thursday. Those circumstances will be defined in consultation with stakeholders.
5294. Mr Brady: Obviously, one of the policy intents is to make work pay. However, one of the other policy intents is to cut benefits. They have said frequently that the system is costing too much, and the Bill is their excuse for introducing cuts.
5295. Ms M Campbell: We see it as delivering efficiency savings and making the system fair to the taxpayer.
5296. Mr Brady: With respect, you are not here to justify welfare reform. You are not a policymaker. The Bill has been made by a British Government that have a particular intent, which is to cut benefits. In an ideal world, everybody would love to be working. I have no doubt about that. However, we are in the deepest recession in living memory. To try to justify the Bill by saying that it is designed to get people back to work does not make sense. They are cutting £18 billion off the social security budget. That is the policy intent.
5297. Part of the policy intent is, of course, to get people back to work. We all agree with that. However, do not sell the Bill as an altruistic measure that the British Government have introduced to help people. The Bill will affect the most vulnerable in our society, and we cannot get away from that, whatever way we dress it up.
5298. Mr Pollock: With respect, there is a wider policy intent that stems from the fact that the present social security system is not sustainable. We have an ageing demographic, probably more so in Northern Ireland than elsewhere.
5299. Mr Brady: With respect, Michael, they are not saying the same thing about Trident, and they are prepared to spend £100 billion on that. I do not want to get into policy discussions, but it is very difficult to justify what is in the Bill. We know that there is an ageing demographic, and there is a duty of care on the state to look after people as they get older. The state should not shove them to one side and say, "We are not going to look after you, because we have other priorities." It is a matter of priorities. We all agree that we should help people to get back to work. That is not an issue.
5300. Mr Pollock: The balance for the taxpayer is part of that policy intention.
5301. Mr Brady: We are taxpayers as well. We are all entitled to our views as taxpayers. However, that is another issue.
5302. The Chairperson: We are dealing with a government Bill, and people will agree or otherwise with the intent of its measures as they see fit. There is no point in exploring that any further because it is a political argument. We have a Bill to deal with.
5303. Mr Douglas: Going back to the policy intent, I think that Martina is right. We all agree that the system needs to be much more efficient, particularly for those who are receiving benefits or making benefit applications. I heard John Kyle from the PUP say recently that, as a doctor, the best thing that he could do for some people who come into his surgery would be to give them a job. I know that there is an imbalance between the number of people who are unemployed and the number of jobs that are available. I suggest that, as we go through this, our policy intent should be that we have compassion for the most vulnerable. It would be so easy for the perception to be that we are railroading this through on behalf of the Tory Government. There is little compassion in some of what has been handed down from Westminster, so I think that the most vulnerable in our community should be one of the overriding factors as we look through the Bill.

5304. The Chairperson: This is it. In fairness to all members of the Committee, everybody has stated that on record. I have listened to the Minister, and I have spoken to David Freud. Both of them are categorical that although they will be looking at flexibilities, it will not be the norm to do so. So, we will have to prove a point. That brings me back to the first concern I had about the Bill, going back a year ago, when Paula and I did a NICVA panel. One thing jumped out at me, and I am going to give quite a basic example. A man and woman are in a partnership in which the woman is often the recipient of abuse. That person is going to be expected, as was the case years ago, to go along and argue that there are special circumstances in her case. I think that this is disgraceful, personally speaking. It is a very socially and politically regressive step in the Bill, and I am not supporting it.
5305. Is the Department prepared to look at split payments and the recipients of payments as being the default position? This is similar to the situation in which landlords are going to be paid directly. In my view, the landlord is now being facilitated because payments will be made directly to him. No landlord is going to lose out as a result of this. However, a person in a potentially abusive relationship will have to go along and fight their case. We reversed that situation 40 years ago. We are going back to it, and I do not want that to be the case.

5306. Such a default position would not cost any money. The Government already agreed with the Minister for Social Development that they will look at the nature and types of flexibilities. In fact, implementation of universal credit has been put off for six months to facilitate that. I do not see why there cannot be a default mechanism. I want this to be the default mechanism, and then people can opt out of it if they wish to do so. It is very regressive and changing it is not going to cost any money. It has already been agreed that the IT can facilitate it. Why not just go ahead and do it? If we can sort things out for the landlords, why can we not sort things out for people in a potentially abusive relationship? For me, it is quite simple. That is my opinion.
5307. Mr F McCann: Obviously, we argue every day about the drive for efficiency in all Departments. However, there is a big difference between driving efficiency in Departments and driving efficiency in a benefits system that pays people at subsistence level, which would automatically mean a reduction in the amount of money they have to live on and bring them well below the poverty line. That is the point I am making.
5308. Martina, as far as fortnightly payments are concerned, there is no comparison between people on benefits and a person who was in a good job and who has lost that job. You would be able to manage a monthly payment if you were getting a good wage, but when you are getting £220 a month, there is a huge difference in trying to manage that amount of money. There are people who will not be able to do so. In their minds, they can do so only on a weekly or fortnightly basis. Monthly payments will lead to serious difficulties.

5309. Ms M Campbell: I accept all those points. That is why the Minister secured the flexibilities that, in those circumstances, people will be able to avail themselves of a more frequent payment, namely a fortnightly payment.
5310. Mr F McCann: However, concerns have been raised about the other flexibilities. We have not seen anything from Freud to really say that people will be able to tap into fortnightly payments “under certain circumstances”, which were, I think, the words that the Minister used. This needs to be clarified because it could mean many things to many different people.
5311. Ms M Campbell: That is why, on Thursday night, the Minister is kicking off the consultation to see what those circumstances should be.
5312. Mr Brady: The difficulty with flexibilities is that — and going back to what Sammy said — it is all a matter of opinion unless they are actually enshrined in the Bill. If there were to be a different Minister next week, he could come out with a totally different view. However, if the flexibilities were enshrined in legislation, things could not be done in some arbitrary fashion in the future.
5313. In many ways, this is not fair on staff because they have to make very pertinent decisions at the right time, whereas, if this was in the Bill and then in the regulations, staff could quote them. It was not that long ago, in the 1970s, when I worked in the Civil Service. They kept the legislation locked in a drawer, and you had to go and look at the wee bits. It was like the ‘Book of Kells’, and I am surprised they did not keep it under glass. Things have moved on, but, as Alex said, a lot of the Bill is regressive. We need to move on from that. If flexibilities were enshrined in legislation, people could say that they are in the legislation and that, therefore, this is the way that it is going to be. I think that this is important.
5314. Ms M Campbell: I take on board all the comments, Chair. I will bring those back and try to get a definitive position for you before the clause-by-clause scrutiny.
5315. The Chairperson: Thank you, Martina. I would like the Department to tell us whether it is willing to embrace split payments, and so on. The precise detail can be dealt with by way of the wider consultation, but I would like clarification on whether the Department is prepared to embrace the concept of split payments being the default position.
5316. Direct payments will be made to landlords as the agreed default position. For the life of me, I cannot understand why any Department, Minister or Government would say: “We are going to sort out the landlords, but we are not going to sort out, as the default position, someone who could be in a possibly abusive relationship.” To my mind, the basic problem is that the person in a potentially abusive situation will have to go along and argue their case. That was confirmed to me by David Freud. I am sorry, but I am not supporting this. That is another discussion, but I would like the Department to get back to us. Everybody seems to agree that they want this issue resolved. It will not cost any money. It is a policy decision, and the computers can fix it. I would like the Department to tell me whether it is prepared to deal with the frequency and recipients of payments — whatever about the precise detail — and that that will be the default position. I believe I know what the answer will be, but I have to wait until I get that answer. Then, I will make a judgement, when I am going through the clause-by-clause scrutiny.
5317. Ms M Campbell: Can I just clarify what you mean when you say default position? My understanding of what you mean by default is that everyone will automatically get a fortnightly payment and a split payment unless they opt out.
5318. The Chairperson: That is what I mean, and it would not cost any money. The fact is that if two people are making a claim, there should be a split payment facility, which should be the norm unless they opt to say no. It will be the same as the situation in which a person’s

- rent support will now go directly to the landlord. That is the default position in that situation unless people decide to take the money and pay the landlord themselves. It is their choice, but they are protected from day one.
5319. Everybody made the argument that people will go into debt. How do you stop them going into debt? You do so by paying the money directly to the landlord. Somebody could be being abused. How do you stop that? My position is that you give them the money, and then they will not be financially dependent on anybody else. If people want to choose to get their money jointly, that is fine; that is their choice. For me, it is very regressive. If somebody has to go and make an exceptional circumstances argument.
5320. Ms M Campbell: I just wanted to clarify that. Thank you.
5321. The Chairperson: I appreciate that, Martina. I know the difficulty of what we are dealing with, but that seems to be the mind of the Committee so far, and certainly that of all the key stakeholders who presented to us.
5322. Mr Douglas: Perhaps Martina could check whether there are any implications for the IT system if we go to the new default position.
5323. Ms M Campbell: Yes, there are.
5324. Mr Douglas: Will there be a cost?
5325. Ms M Campbell: There is a potential cost. That is what we are trying to bottom out in all that.
5326. Mr Pollock: There would probably be a transaction cost. Instead of one payment, there would be two. There would be some cost.
5327. The Chairperson: That brings us back to the business case. I ask that you come back to us, in the round, on that.
5328. I remind members who came in late that we are working through the paper presented, now dated Tuesday 13 November. Essentially, we are going through the bit on the way forward, which tries to encapsulate the arguments put to the Committee by the range of stakeholders. It is not a definitive list. Therefore, as we work our way through it, members are free to raise any issue not included in the paper.
5329. Are members content that we have dealt with the frequency and recipient of payment issues and that we await a response from the Department?
- Members indicated assent.*
5330. The Chairperson: For members who were not here at the start, we are at the point of going through the list to determine the Committee's mind on the issues, and then asking the Department to come back and tell us what its deal would be. Subject to the answers we get, we will commence clause-by-clause consideration. If I remember correctly, there was an issue about whether housing payment would be paid in arrears. The issue we were looking at was whether the trigger would be set at six weeks' arrears, as it currently is, or eight weeks.
5331. Ms M Campbell: It is set at six weeks, but the issue has been overtaken by events, with the default position now being that claimants have to opt out.
5332. The Chairperson: OK, so it is not a problem.
5333. Mr F McCann: On a point of clarification, housing associations said that if you are paid six weeks in arrears, then by the time they send out word to you that you are in arrears, you can actually end up being eight or 10 weeks in arrears. One thing that the voluntary housing sector said was that many people are often three months away from eviction. This near enough kick-starts a court case. Is there any way that the period can be reduced?
5334. I think that, at one stage, the period was four weeks' arrears. I know that the Housing Executive, if someone were four weeks in arrears, automatically took them off the transfer list if they had applied for a transfer. It usually sent a letter telling people that they had been - removed from the list because they were four weeks in arrears. Someone from the Housing Executive should sit down with people, explain that they have fallen into six weeks of arrears and ask whether there is anything that they can do to help.

5335. Ms M Campbell: As I have said already, the vast majority of claimants are not going to be in that position because their payments will be going directly to their landlords. You are talking about a small minority of claimants who will opt out and receive the payment directly.
5336. We already have a flexibility by virtue of the fact that when the IT system was being built, we negotiated that the current position should remain; that once the claimant hits six weeks' of arrears, payment automatically defaults to the landlord. Reducing the period further would require another intervention in the IT system, which would have a knock-on effect in two aspects: first, there is the time involved in trying to get this into place; and, secondly, there is the cost of developing the IT functionality for a number of cases that, in all likelihood, is going to be very small. I accept what stakeholders and the Committee are saying; that people are three months away from eviction. However, we feel that, by virtue of the flexibility that the Minister has secured, this will be a very small issue.
5337. Mr Pollock: The six-week trigger here is a lot tighter than it is in the rest of the UK. It is eight weeks over there before anybody has defaulted.
5338. Mr F McCann: I appreciate that, but some landlords would be at your door after four weeks if you had not paid, and many would tell you to get out. It was a point of clarification. It will have an impact on people because of the six weeks extending to 10 weeks or 12 weeks. Obviously, you are saying that — 5339. Mr Pollock: It is an automatic default after six weeks.
5340. The Chairperson: There was an issue with clause 2 about who is making the claim. If it is a joint claim, and one person does not sign the commitment, the entire claim falls. I think that you, Martina, said last week that there is no fallback position. I think that everybody was taken aback by that. I presume that the mind of the Committee is that this cannot be an acceptable position.
5341. Mr Brady: I think that Martina said that there would be a cooling-off period of four weeks but that, during that period, people would not get paid.
5342. Ms M Campbell: That is right.
5343. Mr Brady: If a couple have a family, and one of them, for whatever reason, decides not to sign, there has to be a position in which the person who does sign gets — not rewarded, necessarily — their benefit for being willing to do so. If the other person, for whatever reason, decides not to sign, I am not sure why that should impact on the person who is willing to stay within the rules and regulations.
5344. It seems grossly unfair. The person may have a good reason for not signing or they may have no reason whatsoever; they might just throw the head up. There are people like that, and we have all met them. They are out there. It seems grossly unfair. It has to be addressed. Sammy talked about compassion. This is showing a distinct lack of compassion. People may have no control over the situation.
5345. Ms P Bradley: I agree fully with Mickey on this matter. Members of the Health Committee talk about duty of care when they discuss many things. It is a big thing in the Health Committee and in 'Transforming Your Care' and things such as that. Where is our duty of care here, especially for vulnerable children? If the scenario were that the male partner did not sign, for whatever reason, the female and the children are left. We are showing no duty of care whatsoever. Part of government's role is to do that. We need to look at that a bit more strenuously.
5346. The Chairperson: Martina, I do not know whether you have been able to put

- any more thought into this issue since last week or whether the Department's position remains the same. You are hearing that the Committee wants you to reflect on this position because it is not content with it.
5347. Ms M Campbell: We will take this back and look at it. I cannot give you an answer now.
5348. The Chairperson: Fair enough.
5349. Ms M Campbell: It would be breaking parity — that is the first time that I have used that word.
5350. Mr F McCann: The first of many.
5351. The Chairperson: It is one of those issues that does not appear to have a price tag on it.
5352. Ms P Bradley: There is no financial implication because had the person signed it, they would have been claiming it anyway. There is not a knock-on effect.
5353. Mr Brady: If people are paid at a lesser rate, such as for one person with children, for instance, the Department would be saving money.
5354. Ms M Campbell: That is how it is in the current system.
5355. The Chairperson: Thank you. We will move on to what is called third-party verification. A number of organisations have raised issues.
5356. Ms M Campbell: Yes. We are actively considering the issue. We take the point fully. The Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) is doing some work with the Post Office to see whether we can find a way round it. It is under active consideration. I cannot give you a definitive position and I am unlikely to be able to do so before you come to the end of your report. However, I reassure you that it is a live issue.
5357. Mr Brady: This ties in with what you said last week. With universal credit, if there are 10 pieces of information, they wait until the last piece is in before they pay you. Your claim does not date from the date on which you make it, it starts on the date on which your last piece of information slots in.
5358. Ms M Campbell: The claim starts from the minute you push the button and submit it. You can go in and out over three days to complete the form if you wish, but your claim does not start from day 1, when you start filling it in; it starts from day 3 when you push the button.
5359. Mr Brady: If it takes a month for the last piece of information, you will start getting paid only from —
5360. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
5361. Mr Brady: The difficulty is with homeless people particularly, because they are vulnerable by nature of their circumstances. They may not have access to any information because of their particular circumstances. That is why third-party verification is so important.
5362. Ms M Campbell: I am not sure about this — Maurice may be able to help me out — but they may get a payment on account, which is like the old crisis loan.
5363. Mr Maurice Byrne (Department for Social Development): There is the facility to pay short-term advances.
5364. Mr Brady: Is that discretionary?
5365. Mr M Byrne: Yes. They look at the possible entitlement, and, from that, if the person is in need, they will decide how much can be paid in advance of the entitlement being decided.
5366. Ms M Campbell: Is that around clause 100?
5367. Mr M Byrne: Yes.
5368. Mr Brady: What you are saying is that there is a facility to — 5369. Ms M Campbell: Yes, just the same as there is now.
5370. Mr Pollock: The current provisions will be carried forward.
5371. Ms P Bradley: You have probably just answered this question; it follows

- on from what Mickey said. There are various reasons why people have to leave their home. One of the big ones is because of domestic abuse. When people leave because of domestic abuse, they do not necessarily think that they must lift this and that because they will need them for whenever they present themselves at the office. You have answered the question for me: there are certain circumstances in which things will be taken into account when people do not have documentation. They will be highly unlikely to get that documentation within any time frame.
5372. Ms M Campbell: The explanatory and financial memorandum, starting at paragraph 480, sets out the circumstances. Payments on account are recoverable. Paragraph 482 mentions a payment on account made in additional circumstances. It provides for where a claimant is in need — for example, where benefit has been claimed but the first payday has not been reached or where a claimant is receiving benefit but encounters difficulty in budgeting between benefit payments. That issue is probably covered well enough.
5373. The Chairperson: Are members happy with that?
5374. Members indicated assent.
5375. The Chairperson: Last week, we sought more clarification on the entitlement of mixed-age couples to universal credit. That is in clauses 3 and 4. Do members want any more clarification on that issue or are you content with what you have heard?
5376. Members indicated assent.
5377. The Chairperson: We move to temporary absences, which is point 8 in the table.
5378. Ms M Campbell: I was to come back to you, which I will, on that issue. I said that DWP was considering it, but we are doing so and are liaising with the IT people. There has been what we are calling a realignment of the periods of absence between all the benefits. As I understand it, there is no change, and
- the only change will be for people who are getting tax credits, housing benefit and income-based benefits. I think that the rules are the same, but I will give you a definitive position on that.
5379. The Chairperson: OK, Martina. Thank you for that.
5380. We will move on to the issue of 16- and 17-year-olds. I am looking for some clarification on that. NIACRO suggested an amendment. Have you have been able to consider it?
5381. Ms M Campbell: Yes, we have confirmed with DWP the issues about both cases of hardship payments for 16- and 17-year-olds. The first is where people have signed on for training but have not got a place, and the second is where they are coming out of care and, for whatever reason, the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS) is not sufficient to meet their needs. In the current system, there is provision for them to claim a hardship payment under jobseekers' allowance (JSA). That provision has been removed, and it is partly to do with the whole government intent that people under 18 should be in education or training. Do we have figures on the number of 16- and 17-year-olds on JSA?
5382. Mr Pollock: We just have the figures for employment and support allowance (ESA).
5383. Ms M Campbell: I cannot give the Committee any more information on that. We are exploring with colleagues whether those people are able to apply for the new discretionary scheme, and we have not got an answer back on that. If they are not able to apply for the new discretionary scheme, they are out under the current legislation.
5384. The Chairperson: The issue was raised by organisations such as NIACRO. It talked about the definition of "receiving education".
5385. Mr Brady: Under the current system, child benefit is a controlling benefit. So, if parents are getting child benefit, they are responsible for the child for whatever reason, but, in cases such as

- this, nobody is claiming any benefit for that person. Surely, this again goes back to Paula's point that there is a duty of care to those children. At the moment, if you are estranged from the family home —
5386. Ms M Campbell: That will carry forward.
5387. Mr Brady: That would need to be one of the things—
5388. Ms Campbell: That is in the legislation.
5389. Mr Brady: — that would need to be addressed. Otherwise —
5390. Ms M Campbell: These are two matters that are — 5391. Mr Brady: Too specific?
5392. Ms M Campbell: — over and above. The exceptions are for cases of estrangement, lone parenthood or things such as that, where those rules are carried forward. This is particular to these two sets of cases.
5393. Mr Brady: It seems, again, unfair to single out two specific cohorts of youngsters who will be penalised through no fault of their own. They are probably in the position of waiting for a placement but not being paid. They will have absolutely no control over that placement.
5394. Ms M Campbell: Yes; I accept that point.
5395. Mr Brady: They must be included. I cannot see how they can be excluded. Surely, there are human rights and equality issues involved.
5396. The Chairperson: I presume that Martina is restating the Department's decision.
5397. Ms M Campbell: I am trying to see whether they will get in under the discretionary scheme. If that works, it should take care of that point.
5398. The Chairperson: OK, fair enough. Members seem happy enough that we have explored that clause, so we will move on to clause 5, "Financial conditions". I think that this is to do with the cap.
5399. Ms M Campbell: Yes; I have got figures for you on that. This clause would affect older people. Last week, I gave you figures based on the DWP briefing note. I told the Committee that to move the capital limit from £16,000 to £25,000 would cost £60 million and £500 million or something. We cannot yet give you figures for that. However, based on the 'Family Resources Survey' 2008-09, approximately 15% of benefit units with one or more persons over pension age had capital of more than £16,000. Although 7% of working age units had capital of over £16,000, the average working age household has capital of £7,100. I talked last week about the DWP figures for tax credit claimants. Again, based on the family resources data for 2008-09, 45% of tax credit claimants with capital in excess of £16,000 had earnings of over £40,000 per annum. A further 21% earned £50,000 or more. The majority of the 3,958 mixed-age couples 3,620 had capital of less than £6,000; 263 had capital between £6,000 and £16,000; 36 had capital of between £16,000 and £25,000; and 39 had more than £25,000 in capital. However, not all of those will be impacted because existing state pension credit claims by the younger person in a mixed-age couple will continue unless they work and have to make a claim for universal credit, in which case they will transfer over.
5400. Mr Brady: I raised the point about the passported benefits.
5401. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
5402. Mr Brady: Are the figures that you have for us from — 5403. Ms M Campbell: Northern Ireland.
5404. Mr Brady: You know the thing about £40,000 and £50,000 earnings
5405. Ms M Campbell: Yes, that applied to Northern Ireland.
5406. Mr Brady: How many people did that apply to here?
5407. Ms M Campbell: Of tax credit claimants, 45% had in excess of £16,000 capital,

- as had a further 21% with earnings of over £50,000. That must be all the MLAs.
5408. Mr Brady: Not if you are a Sinn Féin MLA that is for sure; industrial wage and all that.
5409. Ms M Campbell: Ah —
5410. Mr Brady: Yes; believe it or not.
5411. Mr McClarty: Take that up with Sinn Féin and not us.
5412. Ms M Campbell: I diverted you, sorry. [Laughter.]
5413. The Chairperson: That is not in the Bill; you are right.
5414. Mr Brady: It is a point that we do not make often enough, but that is another issue. My point is about what happens if you are 1p over. One of the suggested amendments is that it should not apply to people over 60.
5415. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
5416. Mr Brady: Obviously, working age people —
5417. Ms M Campbell: We cannot give you the cost for that bit. I think that the cost of that in GB is somewhere in the region of £60 million.
5418. Mr Brady: That kind of figure would not be relevant here.
5419. Ms M Campbell: No, it would be much smaller here. Obviously, you would be talking about a smaller cohort.
5420. Mr Brady: However, it has a big impact because of the loss of passported benefits, etc. That is my point.
5421. Ms M Campbell: Again, I would say that the new capital provisions are slightly more advantageous to claimants in that the definition of what is reasonable in deprivation of capital is wider.
5422. Mr Brady: It is a bit like quiz questions: they are easy if you know the answer. Savings are fine if you have them, but lots of people simply do not. It will be neither advantageous nor disadvantageous to them. Those who have sacrificed and saved and go 1p over the £16,000 will not just suffer monetarily but will lose out on all the other passported benefits.
5423. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
5424. Mr Brady: That is my point.
5425. The Chairperson: So, you may come back with a bit more information on that.
5426. Moving on, there were a couple of issues on the restrictions on entitlement. There was a specific issue about six days and three days and the general issue about whether the regulations intend to go further than the current exclusions under income support, JSA and ESA.
5427. Ms M Campbell: Again, I will need to write to you to set that out. However, as I understand the position, there will be three waiting days as is the case in the current system. As there will be a monthly assessment period under universal credit, if the amount payable is for less than seven days, we will not pay it. The cost of administering that would, in all likelihood, exceed the amount of money the claimant is entitled to. The idea is that they should have wages that would tide them over. That is the theory.
5428. Mr Brady: Again, the issue was about the passporting of benefits.
5429. Ms M Campbell: Yes. I am checking that out. I think that that underlying entitlement will still be there, but I will try to get that resolved for you.
5430. The Chairperson: Do you have anything further on clause 7, which deals with the basis of awards? There was a previous question from the Committee.
5431. Ms M Campbell: I think that that goes back to the monthly payments and the whole issue of the banking products that we were sourcing for people. All those issues were about frequency and split payments. I think that we have covered that.
5432. The Chairperson: OK; fair enough.
5433. Mr F McCann: I am a bit confused about what the banking products actually are

- and how it will work in practice. Do you have any information that would allow us to see how it will work in practice? I have raised this a couple of times in the Committee; people are unsure about what it actually means.
5434. Ms M Campbell: I think that I came back to you and told you that DWP had issued what it calls a prior information notice, which is like an invitation to tender, on — 5435. Mr F McCann: I thought that you were going to say a D notice for putting any information out to begin with.
5436. Ms M Campbell: I cannot remember the date offhand, but it is in your responses. That notice set out DWP's request to financial institutions, including credit unions and the Post Office, to come up with products. DWP's suggestion is that there should be what are termed jam jar accounts. That is where the money goes into a claimant's bank account and immediately fires off into — it is like direct debits, really. The money would automatically go into an account to pay the landlord, utility companies, mortgage providers or whatever else.
5437. Mr F McCann: Forgive me, but it is a bit baffling. Given the amount of money, people will continuously be in arrears. Is the response from DWP? Have people been asked locally? Are we dealing with local credit unions and financial institutions? What response —
5438. Ms M Campbell: We are hooked into that. All the Northern Ireland banks are members of the British Bankers' Association, with, I think, the exception of one of the Irish banks.
5439. Mr F McCann: My understanding is that they have totally rejected any connection with facilitating this because of the costs involved.
5440. Ms M Campbell: There will be costs attached to it. The invitation to tender has not yet closed, so we do not know. That discussion is still — 5441. Mr F McCann: Do you expect a late rush?
5442. Ms M Campbell: It is still a live issue. The Department is also working with colleagues in the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment on the financial capability strategy, which is a Programme for Government commitment. As part of the service that we can provide to customers, we are looking at giving them advice and helping them with budgeting and how to manage their money.
5443. Mr Brady: Presumably, there will be a charge involved when benefits are paid through the banks in whatever way they are paid.
5444. Ms M Campbell: To the Department?
5445. Mr Brady: The question is whether it will be levied on the Department or the person. The population in the North, in British terms, is about 3%. So, the bigger banks would not see that as a huge way of — 5446. Ms M Campbell: Yes; chicken feed.
5447. Mr Brady: I cannot imagine them rushing to tender for something that may not be that profitable for them.
5448. Ms M Campbell: Yes, but if, for example, Danske Bank, which owns Northern Bank, gets the contract in England, that product will be available in all their branches for all social security customers. I do not think that it is a question of a bank in Northern Ireland not participating. They are all members of that association.
5449. Mr Brady: I suppose that it goes back to the issue of the charges.
5450. Ms M Campbell: That issue is being looked at.
5451. Mr Pollock: It would be a guaranteed income stream for the banks, in the same way that if you make default payments to landlords, you guarantee their —
5452. Mr Brady: If you follow the logic of people getting paid monthly, they are more likely to go into arrears and have overdrafts and will be charged even more.

5453. Ms M Campbell: I think that one of the conditions would be that they would not be allowed an overdraft. The accounts will be a bit like the Post Office accounts that exist at the moment and are very limited in their functions. As the accounts will have automatic direct debits — let us call them that — claimants will not get into arrears with their —
5454. Mr Brady: My point, I suppose, is that banks make a lot of money out of bank charges. If you and I are overdrawn, we pay for that. One example of charging relates to the use of ATM cards. Some banks do not charge you if you are in credit, but if you go 1p overdrawn, you are charged for all your transactions. That is how they make money.
5455. Ms M Campbell: Yes, but the whole point of the system will be that safeguards will be built in. A claimant will not be able to go overdrawn. As is the case now with the Post Office account, they will be able to withdraw only what they have in their account.
5456. Mr Brady: It makes the argument even more for fortnightly payments.
5457. The Chairperson: With respect, we do not have the arrangements in front of us.
5458. Mr F McCann: That is the important thing; we need to know what the arrangements are.
5459. The Chairperson: We are getting into speculation and all the rest of it. To be honest with you, I do not think that we can usefully explore that much further.
5460. Mr F McCann: Chair, the general point is about managing the single person's allocation for benefit. I am not sure whether it is at £63 a week, but how do you actually manage that £240 a month? How will that money being put in the bank benefit a person or teach them how to deal with working out the money that they get? How is that going to work? Even if there was a bank charge against it, you already have paid a subsistence level. You are throwing people deeply into — 5461. The Chairperson: The point was made about the frequency of payments, the ability or non-ability to budget and the policy intent. That was dealt with earlier. We do not have the banking promises, as they are nicely called, in front of us.
5462. Mr F McCann: Can we get any information that is there?
5463. The Chairperson: OK. At this stage of the game, we are still dealing with speculation. At best, it could be described as a work in progress.
5464. Mr F McCann: If we wait until the tenders are won, we have no opportunity or possibility to include anything like that, from our perspective, in the Bill.
5465. The Chairperson: We can specify that we want to have a view on that, if members are happy enough. OK, Fra?
5466. Mr F McCann: Yes, certainly.
5467. The Chairperson: We move now to the calculation of awards. This dealt with a range of issues, including the notion around EU workers, if I remember correctly.
5468. Ms M Campbell: I said that I was going to write to you on that to try to explain it further because I seem to get myself in knots here.
5469. The Chairperson: A number of issues were raised, and I am trying to look quickly at some of them. Citizens Advice, for example, talked about statutory sick pay, maternity pay, and so on.
5470. Ms M Campbell: Those are treated as earnings.
5471. The Chairperson: Are members happy to move on?
Members indicated assent.
5472. The Chairperson: Clause 10 deals with the responsibility for children and young people. There was a suggested amendment, which was to insert:
“Such additional amount to be paid at a higher rate, a middle rate or a lower rate. The middle rate shall be no less than two-thirds of the higher rate as may be prescribed. The lower rate shall be no less than one third of the higher rate”.

5473. I think that that came from Disability Action; I am not sure, but it was a suggested amendment. Has the Department been able to look at that?
5474. Ms M Campbell: Under universal credit, support for children will be provided in the form of a child element. That will replace child tax credit and be paid in addition to child benefit. The child element in universal credit will comprise two rates, unlike tax credits, which pay the same rate for each child, irrespective of the number in the family. That is the norm for all children. So, there will be one rate for the first or only child and a reduced rate for second and subsequent children.
5475. The maximum amount of universal credit is to include an addition to the child element, which will be called a disabled child addition. That is similar to the current disability premiums under child tax credits. There will be two rates — lower and higher. The lower rate will be awarded for a child who receives any rate of either component of disability living allowance, apart from the highest rate of the care component. The higher rate will be awarded for a child who receives the highest rate of the care component. That, I understand, is the same position that exists in the tax credits.
5476. I think that the issue is about the actual amount of the payment. The policy thrust of this is that it is intended that there will be greater support for most severely disabled children. Payments for disabled children and adults will be aligned, because, between 2003 and 2010, the uprating of child payments increased at a faster rate than it did for adults.
5477. I told you that this was under review. There are 5,360 families receiving the severely disabled child element in child tax credit and 5,710 disabled children getting the severely disabled child element. Under universal credit, a non-disabled child would receive £3,180 a year, based on the current published rates, which may be subject to change in the autumn statement. A disabled child would receive £4,580 a year, and a severely disabled child would receive £7,200, which is double the amount that a non-disabled child would receive. There is going to be a phasing-in period for the higher rate for severely disabled children. I think that they are saying that it will be increased over time.
5478. That is all I can say on that. Again, I will put it in writing.
5479. The Chairperson: Thank you for that, Martina. Members have heard that, but the Committee will receive it formally in writing. Are members happy enough?
- Members indicated assent.*
5480. The Chairperson: We move now to clause 11, which relates to housing costs. This is also relevant to clause 69. We touched on this issue earlier, when we were talking about the direct payments to landlords. The key issues raised are noted in your paper. I do not want to rehearse them. We need to discuss the proposals with regard to deciding on the Committee’s way forward, on the back of the information that we had. It is more acute now, following the Minister’s statement of the past couple of days.
5481. Ms M Campbell: I can tell you very little on the bullet points that are listed. The Housing Executive has advised us on the proposal to defer general implementation of the clause — the first bullet point. The underoccupation figure for the social sector is estimated at 32,500 households. Given average current rent levels, that figure is estimated to equate to approximately £17.3 million per annum. That does not take account of any potential rent increases or provision of discretionary housing payments. It has undertaken some kind of a pathfinder analysis, which has identified that less than 10% of tenants affected would be willing to move to a smaller property.
5482. Information is not held on the other bullet points in your paper, so the Housing Executive cannot get any - information on that. As regards exempt separated parents who share caring responsibilities, it says that it cannot identify those impacted from the current housing benefit information, but pathfinder analysis has identified that approximately 9% of underoccupying households required an additional room to facilitate excess children. That comes with a heavy caveat. It also reckoned that less than 1% of underoccupying households required an additional bedroom to facilitate foster care arrangements, but that also comes with a heavy caveat.

5483. I told you last week that DWP had just made an announcement on supported accommodation. We have written to the Minister about the way that DWP is going. Supported accommodation is outside UC, and DWP's intention is that it will be localised. We had a discussion with Mr Brady about whether that applies in Northern Ireland. All of that, and whether it should be localised here, needs to be explored.
5484. I can tell you that there are 8,239 claimants in receipt of housing benefit for supported accommodation, which equates to £30 million.
5485. That is all that I can tell you on those bullet points.
5486. Mr F McCann: I have a couple of points. One of the relevant things being dealt with this morning was the Minister's stuff at the weekend. It puts back the information that we require. You said that that would not be until after Thursday night. Also, the Minister discussed the whole question of underoccupancy before some other things were happening.
5487. It still throws into question the whole issue of deferring the likes of underoccupancy because, first, there is not enough accommodation to deal with people. Secondly, the legacy of the conflict here will have an added impact, and I wonder whether that was taken into consideration.
5488. The Minister touched on something yesterday during Question Time in relation to room size. I have raised this a number of times; it is about the size of a box room.
5489. Ms M Campbell: I think that it is 40 square feet.
5490. Mr F McCann: What is that?
5491. Mr Copeland: It is four feet by 10 feet.
5492. Mr F McCann: I thought that he said yesterday that they would look at whether that would be designated as a cupboard or a large storeroom rather than as a bedroom. That would have a knock-on effect for many people, especially those who live in older Housing Executive and housing association houses that have those types of rooms. He said that during Question Time yesterday.
5493. Ms M Campbell: Colleagues in housing division are carrying out two or three pieces of research on this.
5494. Mr F McCann: Mickey said that you have to sleep diagonally in those rooms.
5496. All the issues to do with the Troubles, such as segregated housing and the lack of suitable housing for people who would be deemed to be underoccupying, are exercising people's minds at the minute.
5497. Mr F McCann: Do you see the point, Michael? It is said that 32,500 people will be affected. The figures that we have show that only 300 or 350 units will be built over the next two years to facilitate people. There is a huge gap between what is being provided and what is required.
5498. Mr Pollock: We have come back to you on some figures. Before you get to the - clause-by-clause consideration, so that you can take an informed decision, we want to give you the rounded picture on the numbers of people, on the fact of whether we will not count a box room or a 10 feet by four feet or a five feet by eight feet space as a bedroom, on exemptions for people of mixed age, and those types of things. We should also put into the mix all the other work that is going on as regards the advice that is available to people who would potentially be affected by all this.

5499. Mr F McCann: There is just one other thing, which fell outside the remit of supported housing. I had asked a question about houses that were adapted, where the person may have need of a special adaptation and where their family has moved on and they live alone or with a partner in a three-bedroom house. Would there be an exemption there?
5500. Ms M Campbell: That is in the whole consideration. Obviously, our good friend, common sense, should prevail, because the money spent on adapting that house —
5501. Mr Pollock: And the money that it would cost to provide suitable accommodation somewhere else —
5502. Ms M Campbell: — should cancel each other out.
5503. Mr F McCann: You and I know that unless it is down in black and white in the Bill, anything could happen.
5504. The other issue, which I raised this morning, is the discretionary payments. The Minister talks about them a lot and says that we have increased discretionary payments to cover the cost of the change. However, it is a short-term solution to a long-term problem. We need to point out to people that the measure may not go beyond six months. I thought that it was two sets of 13 weeks, with one at full-rate and the other at 80%. I was told last week or the week before that it is a six-month thing.
5505. Mr Pollock: It can be six months. As you say, it is discretionary. There can be an application for a further discretionary payment, which would be looked favourably on, as there is some money specifically carved out to identify — 5506. Mr F McCann: It is £6.9 million to deal with those already affected by the shared-room allowance and the 32,500 people who will be affected — [Inaudible.] It is not a big amount of money.
5507. Mr Pollock: It is pro rata but it is available in GB.
5508. Mr F McCann: All I am really saying is that it is a short-term thing. It is discretionary. At the minute, it is allocated at the discretion of the heads of housing benefit in different areas. It needs to be pointed out to people that it is not the saviour because all you are really doing is putting the problem off for six months.
5509. The Chairperson: The Housing Executive was referred to earlier. Its representatives made it very clear to the Committee that if people who were deemed to be over-occupying a house presented themselves asking for alternative accommodation, they would not be able to facilitate that. They also said that they were very anxious about a scenario in which people who had lost money towards their rent could be forced into non-payment and then face eviction. They were very concerned about the prospect of evicting people who did not have the “wherewithal” — that was the term they used — to pay their rent. You then get into the nonsense of people being forced into a position where they cannot afford to keep a roof over their head.
5510. The Department has said that people will make sure that they pay their rent and have a roof over their head. However, the Housing Executive paints a dire picture in which we could be faced with forcing people from their homes as a result of the Bill’s provisions. That goes back to Sammy Douglas’s point earlier. I noticed last night that the Spanish Government have put a two-year

- moratorium on evicting any family from their home.
5511. Mr F McCann: They have an agreement with the banks, too.
5512. The Chairperson: A general concern has been expressed by the Committee routinely on this issue. I re-emphasise that that concern was presented to us by the Housing Executive officials, who are the people with the facts and figures in front of them.
5513. Mr Brady: Michael, you were talking about going back and looking at box rooms and all of that. Presumably, if any decisions are made on that, they will become part of the Bill rather than some discretionary guideline.
5514. Mr Pollock: Decisions on what?
5515. Mr Brady: You were saying that you are going to look at the size of the rooms and decide whether they are box rooms.
5516. Mr Pollock: That would not be in the Bill. It would be in regulations and guidance on the outworkings of the policy intent.
5517. Mr Brady: The policy intent is to move people to smaller houses, if they are available.
5518. Mr Pollock: The policy intent, allegedly, is to ensure that people on benefits are faced with the same sorts of decisions as people on low incomes.
5519. Mr Brady: One of the ways of doing that would be to properly control the private-rented sector, where landlords can charge whatever they want.
5520. Mr Pollock: That is the other side of the coin insofar as that criterion already applies in the private-rented sector; it is the social-rented sector that we are talking about.
5521. Mr Brady: That is one of the issues that people will have to deal with. If the only alternative accommodation is in the private-rented sector, you are back to the same vicious circle.
5522. Mr Pollock: Due to the spiralling costs of housing benefit, not just in Northern Ireland but UK-wide, one of the policy intents was to influence private sector landlords to try to push rents down.
5523. Mr Brady: The example used was that of a three-bedroom terraced house in London, for which the landlord was charging the local authority £2,000 a week. That was given as an example of why housing benefit is so expensive, but it does not apply here.
5524. Mr Pollock: It does not apply here, granted. However, by the same token, when it comes to the number of bedrooms, the size of accommodation, and so on, some of the thresholds that have been applied in previous housing benefit regulations have had little or no impact in Northern Ireland simply because our rents are decidedly lower than elsewhere.
5525. Mr Brady: Therefore, the policy intent should not really apply here.
5526. Mr Pollock: Why?
5527. Mr F McCann: Picking up on the point that Mickey raised, you are saying that rents are lower here and comparable to rents in the north of England. The figures used for justifying this are predicated on the rents in the south-east of England, which are high. However, everybody who applies for and gets housing benefit has to top up their benefits to pay a landlord, and that point should not be lost. Sometimes, that can be £80 a month coming from someone's benefits to make sure that they have a roof over their head. People on housing benefit are already paying a top-up.
5528. When Mickey was talking, I had a vision — look, Mickey is jumping back. You mentioned people looking at the size of rooms, five by 10, or four by 12, or whatever. If you go into a box room, there will be only a single bed, because you cannot fit in anything else. How do they work out the proper size of a room for people to sleep in? Some rooms may have two people sleeping in them. I cannot work out how they decide whether the size of a room is adequate for people to sleep in it. Do they go into a room and fit furniture into it?

5529. Mr Pollock: The size of the room is fairly straightforward; it is whatever size it is. The size will determine whether the room is designated as a box room.
5530. Mr F McCann: How do you decide that a room is a box room?
5531. Mr Pollock: If it is decided that a box room is room that is 40 square feet or less, every room that is 40 square feet or less is a box room.
5532. The Chairperson: The size for a box room has been set.
5533. Mr F McCann: I am baffled as to how they come up with that. It was obviously done by people who do not live in houses with box rooms.
5534. The Chairperson: You said that when you looked at Mickey, you had vision; I thought that you were going to say that you had had a nightmare.
5535. There were a couple of other issues in respect of housing, namely the shared accommodation rate, support for mortgage interest, housing cost run-ons/extended payments. There are a couple of key issues there, and they are part of the housing cost part of the Bill. After we have addressed those issues, we will adjourn for lunch.
5536. Mr Douglas: I want to clarify a few things about the so-called bedroom tax. You mentioned the moratorium in Spain, Chairman, which has come about as a result of two people who were going to be evicted taking their own lives.
5537. The Northern Ireland Federation of Housing Associations talked about a two-year freeze. However, at its conference last week, its representatives talked about six months, so they have reduced it. Perhaps Martina or some of the team could give us an update on discretionary payments. I know that there is some work on that. Finally, as I mentioned earlier, I was told that implementation of the clause will happen on the same day right across the United Kingdom and that that was one of the biggest problems. As someone said, a switch goes on, so everybody goes on to the new legislation. Is that the case?
5538. Mr Pollock: Yes, for the application of the underoccupancy provisions in clause 69. That is tied into the IT solution that we are talking about.
5539. Mr Douglas: What about discretionary payments?
5540. Mr Pollock: In what sense? Discretionary house payments or — 5541. Mr Douglas: Yes, for underoccupancy. Will people get help through discretionary payments? I think that it was for six months, but there was talk that that could be extended. Has there been any work on that?
5542. Ms M Campbell: Discretionary payments are now —
5543. Mr Pollock: There are two. There is a new discretionary [Inaudible.] scheme, which is separate from this. Discretionary house payments can last for six months, but there can be further application. Again, that will be looked at. As I mentioned earlier, some money was earmarked specifically to address some of the impacts of underoccupancy.
5544. Mr F McCann: All of that is predicated on the assumption that there will still be money in the budget to deal with this. The indications are that that will not be the case.
5545. Ms M Campbell: As we understand it, the discretionary housing payment budget has not been exhausted for quite some years.
5546. Mr F McCann: That is because it has not been hit by 32,500 people.
5547. The Chairperson: Does support for mortgage interest affect people who may take part-time work? Will they be excluded? The final one is about housing costs and run-ons.
5548. Ms M Campbell: I confirmed for you last week that anyone who does part-time work will lose their support for mortgage interest (SMI). That is the position. The policy rationale for that is that because of the earnings disregard and the taper, they will theoretically have more money from their earnings and they can direct that towards their support for mortgage interest. I have some figures for you. At the moment, there are 5,560 claims in income support, getting an average of £27·66 support for mortgage interest. In jobseeker's allowance, there are 1,850, getting an average of £38·77, and in pension credit, there are 5,000 people getting £14·35. Obviously, the pension credit support will continue. It does not apply to those people but only to UC claimants. I just did a very crude calculation and I apologise as maths is not my forte. With 5,560 income support people getting an average of £27·66, I make that £15,378·96.

5549. The Chairperson: No.
5550. Ms M Campbell: Is that wrong?
5551. Mr Pollock: We will do them again.
5552. Ms M Campbell: I did say that maths was not my best point.
5553. Mr Pollock: Thirty times 5,500 is [Inaudible.]
5554. Ms M Campbell: OK, we will come back after lunch with those figures, because obviously my maths is not to be trusted.
5555. The Chairperson: It would be OK to go home to you a fiver short in your wages.
5556. Ms M Campbell: My apologies for that. That is all that I have on SMI. I again confirmed that there is no provision for extended payments. That is because when somebody starts work, the earnings disregards and the taper should mean that they do not need that additional protection because they will be keeping all their wages.
5557. The Chairperson: OK. I think that you have already dealt with the issue of exempted accommodation in respect of supported housing.
5558. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
5559. The Chairperson: Are members content?

Members indicated assent.

The sitting was suspended at 12.10 pm.

On resuming —

5560. The Chairperson: Welcome back, and thanks again to everyone. I ask everyone to switch off all electronic devices, including telephones. It is important to remind people that we are very tight for time. It is not going to happen today, but we need to move on as quickly as possible to the clause-by-clause consideration. That is on the presumption that there are likely to be a number of amendments, so we need to allow the Bill Office and the system here to turn around a report for us for completion by 27 November. That simply means that any information that we need from the Department will be sent as soon as possible. Therefore, we have to work with what we can get. Where did we leave off?
5561. Ms M Campbell: We left off with support for mortgage interest and my counting. Following my learned colleagues' takeover of the calculator at lunchtime, I can confirm that my decimal point was in the wrong place. I told you that there were 5,560 income support cases, and the average support was £27·66. That equates to £153,789·60, as opposed to £15,000, which I told you. Jobseeker's had 1,850 cases at an average of £38·77. That equates to £71,724·50. Pension credit is not really relevant in this situation, but there are 5,000 cases at £14·35, which equates to £71,750·00. I should also have said that DWP is not due to finalise the policy on support for mortgage interest until January.
5562. Mr Pollock: That is taking into consideration the waiting period for that.
5563. The Chairperson: What do you mean by the waiting period?
5564. Mr Pollock: It predates me in this post, but about two or three years ago, people had to wait for 39 weeks before they qualified for support for mortgage interest. That was reduced to 13 weeks because of the property slump and the economic downturn. That is an interim

- provision that would lapse in January if it were not extended.
5565. The Chairperson: Thanks for that.
5566. Ms M Campbell: That is all that I have for you. On SMI extended payments, I have confirmed that there will be no provision under the current legislation for extended payments. We have covered exempted accommodation.
5567. Mr F McCann: I have read that people on income-based jobseeker's allowance will not be able to apply for help with mortgage payments. Is that right? Is it that they cannot go onto it or that it will stop after two years? What will happen to it?
5568. Mr Pollock: That does not ring a bell.
5569. Mr F McCann: We will come back to it.
5570. Ms M Campbell: We will see whether we can get anything on that. Perhaps it is to do with the waiting time.
5571. Mr Pollock: During the passage of the Welfare Reform Act in GB, there was a debate about only providing SMI assistance for a [Inaudible.] but I think that that was dropped.
5572. Mr F McCann: It may have been in England, when people were on income-based jobseeker's allowance but were not eligible to apply for housing costs for mortgage payments. I do not know whether it applied here. I think that it may have come up in evidence from one of the groups.
5573. Ms M Campbell: We will have a look at that. We are not aware of it, but we will check
5574. The Chairperson: We move on to clause 12.
5575. Ms M Campbell: Clause 12 is about the removal of the severe disability premium, which we have discussed already. I said that I will write to you setting that out and, hopefully, provide a little more clarification.
5576. The Chairperson: You know that the Equality Commission suggested an amendment.
5577. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
5578. The Chairperson: So you will address that. We move on to clause 14.
5579. Ms Campbell: This was about a situation in which one member of a couple did not sign the claimant commitment, so I have made that clear. There is no claim.
5580. The Chairperson: We move on to clause 16.
5581. Ms M Campbell: I am sorry; there are two other comments about material being considered within the work-focused interview. That is relevant and reasonable, and it is implicit. We have said repeatedly that the claimant commitment will be drawn up in consultation with the claimant and will take into account their particular needs and circumstances.
5582. Mr Pollock: That is the same for the claimant commitment for jobseeker's allowance and under employment and support allowance. The same issues were raised in later clauses — clause 45 and, I think, clause 52 or 53.
5583. The Chairperson: Thank you for that. Are we happy enough to move on?
5584. Ms M Campbell: The Law Centre raised an issue about the need to reintroduce the work-focused health-related assessment. I told you that DWP was considering that issue. It is connected to the suspension of the work-focused interview under ESA. I will come back to you on that. We are waiting for confirmation from DWP on what the position on that is likely to be. However, we expect that before you conclude your deliberations.
5585. The Chairperson: Thank you. Clause 17.
5586. Ms M Campbell: With regard to the work search requirement, I totally take the point that the way in which an adviser will police — for want of a better word — that will be problematic, but the intention, at the moment, is that if claimants are deemed to be available for work 20 hours or 35 hours a week, they are supposed to be spending the same amount of time looking for work.

5587. If there are no questions, I will move on to the work availability requirement. Again, I told you that I would come back to you on that from the regulations, and I have to do that. Therefore, I cannot really add anything there.
5588. The Chairperson: OK. Thank you.
5589. Ms M Campbell: We move on to the issue about the claimant being responsible for a child under the age of one and under the age of five. I explained that there is no change to that position. That is an operational flexibility that we are carrying forward, that lone parents will obviously be able to restrict their hours, and the main carer will be able to restrict their hours; they are available until a child is 13 years of age. Lone parents, however, have to be available for only a work-focused interview.
5590. The Chairperson: Are you on clause 20 now, Martina?
5591. Ms M Campbell: Yes. This is a comment from Disability Action that the regulations must ensure that disabled people are given the appropriate support. The claimant commitment will be drafted in consultation with claimants and reflect their particular needs and circumstances.
5592. Clause 21 —
5593. The Chairperson: Clause 22.
5594. Ms M Campbell: Sorry, clause 22.
5595. The Chairperson: We sought legal advice on that with regard to paragraph 7 of schedule 1.
5596. Ms M Campbell: That is the EU workers again.
5597. The Chairperson: Yes, the EU workers stuff. Are you still going to come back to us on that?
5598. Ms M Campbell: Yes, I am. Clause 23 refers to work-related requirements in consultation with a claimant. [Inaudible.]
5599. The Chairperson: I wonder whether that would be more suited for the guidance as opposed to [Inaudible.]
5600. Ms M Campbell: It would be my advice that it is in the guidance. It is implicit that the claimant commitment has to be drawn up in consultation with a claimant.
5601. The Chairperson: Clause 24, then.
5602. Ms M Campbell: Yes, that was the domestic abuse issue. I confirmed that that term covers emotional, psychological and financial abuse. It is the same as in the current jobseeker's, so I think that that point is covered. We note the comment that 13 weeks is considered too short for any disregard in relation to work-related requirements. Again, that can be considered within the claimant commitment. There will be a change that includes violence in the home, which we are taking to cover hate crime.
5603. Mr F McCann: Will it clearly state that, in case it is misunderstood by office staff? When staff deal with various people, they could look at an issue differently unless it is stated clearly.
5604. Ms M Campbell: Yes. It does not specify that in the regulations. We have not heard back yet from DWP. We got it from a stakeholder website. I can come back and clarify.
5605. Mr Durkan: Violence in the home?
5606. Ms M Campbell: The issue is rehousing. If, for example, a house has been attacked in a hate crime, the residents should fall under that because it comes under the definition of violence in the home.
5607. Mr Durkan: So, in a similar way to the earlier suggestion on the same clause, would it cover abuse in the home?
5608. The Chairperson: The Department's paper gives five definitions of domestic violence, listed as a, b, c, d and e.
5609. Ms M Campbell: Again, this will all be done in regulations. I am seeking clarification from DWP, and I will try to get back to you this week with a firm decision.
5610. The Chairperson: Next is clause 25.

5611. Ms M Campbell: Clause 25 is on compliance. Stakeholders recommend a case-by-case approach in ensuring compliance. We would have a case-by-case approach.
5612. The Chairperson: Fair enough, happy enough. Next is clause 26.
5613. Ms M Campbell: Clause 26 is on sanctions. People who have been sanctioned will be able to claim a hardship payment. That will be recoverable. Last week, Conrad spoke to you about the double whammy. Can you remember whether he has come back with anything further on that?
5614. Mr Pollock: Nothing definitive.
5615. Ms M Campbell: We do not have anything further on that. We did say that five working days is not long enough for people to provide evidence. That is generally accepted, but it is only a guideline, and in practice we will obviously, within [Inaudible.] whatever is reasonable.
5616. Mr F McCann: Yesterday morning, I phoned to make an appointment with my doctor and was told that it would be 10 or 11 days. That comes into play for producing medical evidence. Sometimes, when you ask a doctor for a letter, there is a cost attached. That also has an impact.
5617. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
5618. Mr F McCann: Will that be taken into consideration? Sometimes five working days would not be long enough.
5619. Ms M Campbell: Yes. We have all experienced that when we phone a GP. That is a reasonable reason why someone cannot comply with the five days. It is back to our good friend common sense and good cause — sorry, good reason. I have to get with the programme.
5620. The Chairperson: Martina, the Welfare Reform Group proposed an amendment around sanctions. I suppose that the key issue around sanctions is that some people believe that they are disproportionate, too long, and so on.
- The Welfare Reform Group proposed an amendment on that. Have you had a chance to look at that and think about it?
5621. Ms M Campbell: We are trying to get figures on the number of people sanctioned at the moment, and, as I understand it, this issue is about people being sanctioned when they do not have childcare. I have told you that there are existing protections for lone parents of children under the age of five and main carers being able to restrict their availability around school hours. That is still there. When somebody does not have access to childcare, we are saying that that is acceptable as good reason. I do not know that that needs to be in the Bill. I think that it is better in the guidance; that is the position. We said that we became aware only last week that there was a blip in one office where some people were sanctioned, but we are investigating that. It is in the guidance that a lack of childcare is an acceptable cause.
5622. Mr Pollock: One of the main things that came across when Conrad spoke to you about fraud and sanctions was that the sanctions regime is not meant to be punitive. It is meant to be a deterrent. When we were last here, I think that I mentioned that, irrespective of the reform agenda, the sanctions regime was not deemed to be effective as it set out to be. So the sanctions in the Bill are set at a level that is designed to be much more of a deterrent or to prevent people from committing benefit fraud. That said, we do not see cases that involve client error or genuine mistakes as being sanctionable. That is not the reason for the sanctions regime. The sanctions regime is for repeated offences when people do not comply with their commitments under whatever benefit entitlement they claim.
5623. Mr F McCann: We opposed a past batch of sanctions when they first came in. How can anybody say that they are not punitive? The very fact that people are being sanctioned and are losing their benefit is a punishment.

5624. Mr Pollock: They are not intended to be punitive.
5625. Mr F McCann: That is what they are. Let us not get into a debate about that.
5626. There will obviously be a serious increase in the length of time that sanctions last. Was any analysis done the last time on the impact of the sanctions to bring you to the conclusion that those did not work and that you need additional sanctions to punish people?
5627. Mr Pollock: Conrad is probably better placed to speak on the detail of that sort of thing. The levels of sanctions are regularly looked at and reported on. There is something in the Bill that says that we will lay a report in the Assembly. That is in there too. The agency itself goes behind the broad number and looks at the number who are repeat offenders, and so on.
5628. Mr F McCann: The Committee is of a mind to table an amendment that the present sanction regime remain and that we do not go ahead with the additional sanctions. First, I take it that the Department will not support that. Secondly, will there be any cost attached to this? Thirdly, we constantly talk about people being sanctioned and repeat offenders. Can we get exact figures for the number of people who have been reported, the number who have been sanctioned and the number of repeat offenders? That would certainly give us a good outline.
5629. Ms M Campbell: We have asked for those figures.
5630. Mr F McCann: I think that the sanctions came in three years ago. If we could get figures for each of the past three years, that would certainly allow us to look at how those people have been dealt with and how many have been affected.
5631. Mr Pollock: It will give you a more informed position. As Martina says, we have asked for those figures. Again, I think that Conrad mentioned some headline figures for the loss due to fraud and error when he was here last week providing evidence. So all that should give you a better insight into where we are coming from.
5632. Mr F McCann: He might have given us that, but we did not agree with it.
5633. The Chairperson: I suppose that if we are being told that fraud, for example, has been going down — that is a good story — it is reasonable for us to say that if you are going to put a more severe sanctions regime in place, we would like to satisfy ourselves that if the previous sanctions regime did not work, at least it would be good to know how many people were sanctioned.
5634. How do you make the assessment that if sanctions do not really work, they should be made worse? How will they work? If fraud is going down, the number of people being sanctioned must be relatively small. The evidence that is being given to us is that a lot of those people may fall into particular vulnerable categories, and they are going to have this very severe sanctions regime imposed on them.
5635. On the one hand, you are saying that sanctions do not really work, so we have to put these very strong deterrents in place. However, if they do not work, give us some evidence to say that they do not work. Fraud is going down, so something is working.
5636. Mr F McCann: I want to make a point about the existing sanctions regime. There is a difference between those who have been reported for sanction and those who have actually been sanctioned. I asked questions about that a year ago. Thousands of people were reported for sanction but were not actually sanctioned. [Inaudible.]
5637. The Chairperson: OK. [Inaudible.]
5638. Ms M Campbell: Do you wish to look at clause 27, “Other sanctions”?
5639. The Chairperson: [Inaudible.] I think that we can move to clause 28, unless you feel that there is a need to give us some more information. [Inaudible.]
5640. Ms M Campbell: No. I have nothing further to say about that. That was

- just about travel time to the South of Ireland. We confirmed that it is limited to Northern Ireland.
5641. The Chairperson: This is about recoverable —
5642. Ms M Campbell: Oh yes, this is about a hardship fund. There is no such hardship fund. It is demand-led. I should also point out that claimants who are in the vulnerable group, which will be defined in regulations, will not be required to repay a hardship payment, but others will.
5643. That is about all that I wanted to say about that. That point was about a fear that this was like the social fund at the moment — that it is cash-limited and depends on people paying back. It is not; it is demand-led.
5644. The Chairperson: All right. Shall we move on to clause 29?
5645. Ms M Campbell: Clause 29 deals with Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) functions. I think that we have answered that.
5646. The Chairperson: OK. We will move on to clause 30.
5647. Ms M Campbell: The concerns around clause 30 are a fear about the privatisation of a public service and the personal independence payment (PIP). I want to point out that this clause refers only to privatisation of the functions that are currently carried out by DEL on training and employment programmes. It does not relate in any way to PIP.
5648. Mr F McCann: Has a decision been made? I sit on the Committee for Employment and Learning, which has been told that there will be a big privatisation of the contracting-out of services. I take it that you are saying that a decision has been made to contract out some of the DEL services that affect training.
5649. Ms M Campbell: No. It just gives the Department the right to do that. There are training providers in place already.
5650. Mr F McCann: That goes through various job schemes or training schemes.
5651. Ms M Campbell: Yes. It is those programmes, so that facility can still — 5652. Mr F McCann: The Department still retains the core of the scheme.
5653. Ms M Campbell: Yes. That would still be the intention — that the Department would retain the core schemes but would contract out some of the services.
5654. Mr F McCann: This goes back to a question that Mark asked earlier. If it is contracted out, will that affect jobs? One of the questions that I asked about ESA and the migration of people across is this: is DEL fit for purpose to deal with the expected huge number of people who will be brought across, especially those with mental illness and severe disability?
5655. Ms M Campbell: You would probably need to see the DEL business case.
5656. Mr F McCann: It will be a bit difficult getting an answer out of DEL.
5657. Ms M Campbell: We accept that DEL could not provide all the programmes that are necessary to meet demand and that it has to contract out some of those functions.
5658. The Chairperson: The Human Rights Commission suggested to the Committee that we put in a clause to make sure that private contractors adhere to human rights provisions.
5659. Ms M Campbell: I will write to you to confirm this but, as I understand it, although the function is contracted out, the claimant will have the same rights as if the Department were carrying it out. Therefore, any issue that they have about their human rights is with the Department rather than the provider. The contracted providers will not be making any decisions on sanctions or anything like that. They are merely performing training or employment programmes. They are not making any decisions. That still rests with the Department.

5660. The Chairperson: OK; thank you for that. Clause 31 goes back to the capital rules, which we have covered.
5661. Ms M Campbell: Clause 32 is consequential. There are two issues here: passported benefits and — 5662. The Chairperson: The older claimant in a couple.
5663. Ms M Campbell: — the older claimant.
5664. I will deal first with the mixed-age couple. If the older person who has reached state pension age is entitled to a contributory pension, he or she can still claim that, and it is taken into account as unearned income. If the older person is entitled to be means-tested, he or she falls under the universal credit programme.
5665. I told you that the agency is chairing a cross-departmental group to look at passported benefits. I told you that the issue of deciding criteria for receipt of passported benefits lies with the individual Departments. I also told you that the Executive subcommittee is looking at passported benefits. Ultimately, in most cases, decisions will rest with the Executive because it will cut across. I imagine that it will come under paragraph 2.4 of the ministerial code. Have I answered that for you?
5666. The Chairperson: I think so.
5667. Mr F McCann: This question may have been answered earlier. It relates to the younger person in the relationship who is still claiming benefit. Is the older person still eligible for sanctions because his or her claim is directly tied into it?
5668. Ms M Campbell: No; the older person is not subject to any work conditionality at all. The sanction will apply only to the younger person.
5669. The Chairperson: Your paper states that the member of the couple who has attained the qualifying age for state pension credit may not receive state pension credit if the other member of the couple has not attained that qualifying age.
5670. Ms M Campbell: The issue there is the difference in money. The point that I think Age NI made is that there may be a difference in the amount that the mixed-age couple receive under universal credit as opposed to state pension credit, which has slightly higher rates. The policy intent is that the younger person will be working and that the higher earnings disregards — the taper, and so on — will make up for it. However, on the face of it, people will possibly have lower incomes than they would if they were claiming state pension credit.
5671. I will say that existing couples will continue on state pension credit. They will not be affected unless the person decides to take up a job and claims universal credit. That is the only way in which they can get into universal credit.
5672. The Chairperson: As someone mentioned last week, that could mean that there are two sets. Is there also a transitional arrangement?
5673. Ms M Campbell: Yes. They will stay on state pension credit until — 5674. The Chairperson: Until they change their claim and are into that new system. So, you would have two similar types of people on different levels of money. It seems unfair that the senior partner ends up disadvantaged because he or she is helping a younger partner. It is like saying that separating would make you better off.
5675. Mr F McCann: It is also wide open for fraud. People will sit down, look at it, and say, “I might get £40 or £50 more if I do not claim as a married person.” It throws up all sorts of possibilities in that regard.
5676. Ms M Campbell: It does.
5677. The Chairperson: Clause 33.
5678. Ms M Campbell: Clause 33. Citizens Advice made the point that the cash top-up will be eroded by inflation unless it is index-linked. I explained last week that the only thing that people will lose is their transitional protection. If they - get £100 under the current benefits but are entitled to only £80 under universal credit, they will continue to get £100, but that £100 will not be uprated. They will get it on a marked-time basis. All benefits are being uprated by the consumer price index as opposed to the retail price index, as the Government think that that reflects inflation better.

5679. Clause 34, “Abolition of benefits”: the points were about child tax and restoring the 10%, which I think we have covered.
5680. We move to clause 37, which is migration. We have told you that there will be a migration strategy. It has not been finalised and is still under discussion. Migration regulations will be brought forward to the Committee. I am not sure what more I can say on that.
5681. The Chairperson: Clause 38 then.
5682. Ms M Campbell: The point in the paper is noted. I have said that DWP is reviewing the work capability assessments. There was an issue about giving medical records primacy. They will be considered along with other evidence. The point about “and/or” relates more to the regulations. I will confirm whether it is either physical or mental or both.
5683. The Chairperson: OK; fair enough. Thank you for that.
5684. Ms M Campbell: Clause 40 concerns couples who choose to live together, the test of co-habiting in the current system will presumably be carried forward. There was an issue about whether underoccupancy applied and to which of the couples the underoccupancy reduction would apply. We are still trying to bottom that out. I suppose that the first answer is that it is for whoever’s name is on the tenancy, but if the tenancy is in joint names, we are not sure how that will work in practice.
5685. The Chairperson: Let us turn to clause 42 then.
5686. Mr G Campbell: I am sorry, but, just on that issue, I understand that if it is a joint tenancy, you are still working out what will happen. However, if it were a couple and the tenancy was in a single name, as a result of which a perceived disbenefit was being accrued, what would happen if an attempt was made to change the tenancy? Would account be taken of the circumstances in deciding whether the tenancy could be changed?
5687. Ms M Campbell: I am sorry. Did you say joint tenancy?
5688. Mr G Campbell: No. If the tenancy was in the name of one person, and then — 5689. Ms M Campbell: Yes. What happens if a couple about to get hit with the underoccupancy penalty changes the tenancy to the two names has to be bottomed out. I think that that is one of the — 5690. Mr G Campbell: Imponderables?
5691. Ms M Campbell: The known unknowns, yes.
5692. The Chairperson: Try to ponder on it quickly before we get to the clause-by-clause consideration, if you do not mind.
5693. Ms M Campbell: The clause on pilot schemes is about making sure that Northern Ireland is included and taking account of our circumstances, and so on. We agreed that Northern Ireland will feed into any pilot schemes, and we will undertake to consider whether it is appropriate to have our own pilot schemes. However, any pilot schemes will need regulations, which will need to come before the Committee.
5694. Mr F McCann: Does that mean that if, after all this, we decided that we wanted to run a pilot scheme, you could do that within the confines of the Bill?
5695. Ms M Campbell: A pilot scheme has to meet three conditions, which I cannot remember off the top of my head. As long as it meets the policy objectives outlined in the explanatory memorandum, it can be run. I have found the conditions. A pilot scheme is: “to test whether the regulations would:

Make universal credit simpler to understand or administer;

Help people to remain in work, obtain work or increase their pay or hours; or Affect the behaviour of claimants or others.”

5696. So if the pilot scheme satisfied those conditions, in theory, that is what clause 42 allows us to do. Then, obviously, you are into the whole question of whether a pilot scheme is viable in terms of cost.
5697. Mr F McCann: Obviously, cost comes into everything. We have already identified, during a number of these meetings, that many factors and features of life in the North are completely different from other regions. Every one of them has its own twists. However, pilot schemes have been run in England that bear no relation to what life is like here. So would it not be better to run our own pilot scheme? If, for talk's sake, that was the road that we wanted to go down, could you suspend the Bill until such time as the pilot scheme was running?
5698. Ms M Campbell: No, because you need the Bill to have been passed to give you the power to run the pilot scheme.
5699. Mr F McCann: How will it run in England?
5700. Ms M Campbell: In England, the Act was passed in March.
5701. The Chairperson: I think that the general point has been made that, to look at, review, manage and decide policy, etc, we need a baseline. Members are saying that a whole range of pilot schemes have been run, none of which have been run here, and yet all our work here is extrapolated from them. Their point is that, surely, at some point, it must be reasonable for the Department, given its size and the fact that we have NISRA, and so on, to run some bespoke pilot projects here. Why not? I think that that is a reasonable question, and we have had no answer to it.
5702. Ms M Campbell: What I am saying is that you can have a pilot scheme here when the Bill is in place and gives you the power to do that.
5703. The Chairperson: Every single Department throughout government runs pilot schemes routinely. Are you saying that the Department for Social Development (DSD) is the only Department that does not? No matter what I have managed to get done over the years, it has always been predicated on the basis of a pilot scheme.
5704. Ms M Campbell: The agency is running pilot schemes on the payment of benefits: the simple payment card, PayPoint, and so on, so that is already happening under its current powers. However, if you want to run a pilot scheme on universal credit, you will have to get the Bill and the regulations through before you have the statutory authority to do that.
5705. The Chairperson: I am a bit confused. I am just making a general point on pay schemes, such as the pay-as-you-go scheme for oil. As most elected representatives will know, when trying to shift a policy or get a Department to do something, that Department may not be able to do it by way of a generalised policy, but it will agree to run a pilot scheme. So it can do what it has been asked but under the guise of a pilot scheme. It seems to me that government here often runs on the basis of pilot schemes, which might be fair enough. It is a learning exercise, but we are trying to establish the general principle that, surely to God, we can run pilot schemes here.
5706. Mr Pollock: Most Departments have generic powers that allow them to run pilot schemes in a particular area. The impacts of this Bill are so wide that it is difficult to envisage a particular pilot scheme that would make a difference. DWP has run some pilot schemes, and we are trying to find out what it learned from those. The particular reference in clause 42 is to how to make universal credit work better as it moves on. That is what the pilot schemes relate to.
5707. Mr F McCann: It is certainly not working better for the benefit of people.

5708. A precedent set in DSD goes back to the local housing allowance. A pilot scheme was run to establish whether the scheme would have a negative impact on people. Let us move the scenario on. If the Bill goes through, regulations are passed and we decide that we want to have a pilot scheme, which then shows that the Bill is detrimental to people here because of all the issues that we have raised, where would that leave you?
5709. Ms M Campbell: The Minister would have to make the decision and come forward with a proposal for a pilot scheme.
5710. Mr F McCann: To change the Bill?
5711. Ms M Campbell: No, not to change the Bill. The Bill must be in place to get the power.
5712. Mr F McCann: I have moved on from there. If everything has been passed and a pilot scheme proves that we were correct in raising all our issues and concerns because the Bill was having a seriously detrimental impact on constituents, what powers would we have to rectify that?
5713. Mr Pollock: Basically, you will be in the same position as you are now. If you say that you do not like underoccupancy, for example, you can decide either to break parity, which will cost x amount, or the Executive as a whole can put in place other programmes to mitigate any adverse impacts. Those, however, are decisions for the Executive table. What you are talking about here is in the context of the social security system. If you approve the Bill as it is, those provisions stand. However, if you decide on mitigating actions that would impact on the rest of the Departments, you would have to get Executive colleagues around the table to tell DEL, the Department of the Environment and the Department of Education to do certain things. That is where you change things.
5714. The Chairperson: We can have a debate on that, but the two pillars in this debate in the past year have been flexibilities at the front end and mitigation at the back end. At the front end, we have been told by David Freud and others that we can get all those flexibilities because of our difficult, different circumstances. At the back end, mitigation is to try to pick up things that cannot be changed in the Bill. Our starting point is to get flexibilities in the Bill, not to have to resort to mitigation, if you understand what I mean, Michael. Our task is to try to get the Bill changed so that the burden does not fall either on the more vulnerable people in this community or on the block grant. We were told, “Do not worry, you will get flexibilities in the Bill”, but we have not seen too many so far. Those are the decisions that we will face shortly.
5715. We have exhausted that issue for now, so we will move on to clause 43.
5716. Ms M Campbell: Clause 43 is about applying different levels of support for housing costs in different areas of Northern Ireland. That is the same as the position now in that the local housing allowances rates apply. It will just carry that forward into UC.
5717. The Chairperson: Clause 44 is the timetable for the regulation. Are members happy enough to move on?
Members indicated assent.
5718. Clause 45 is the first clause in Part 2, working-age benefits.
5719. Mr Pollock: That is over to me, Chair. Clause 45 relates particularly to the claimant commitment for jobseeker’s allowance. We went over that ground pretty comprehensively this morning when discussing the claimant commitment for universal credit, and I mentioned the claimant commitment later under employment and support allowance. Are you happy enough with that?
5720. The Chairperson: Some union representatives were concerned about the use of the phrase “or such other person”. Their concern is outlined at point 48(ii) in our paper.
5721. Mr Pollock: They are concerned about contracting out.
5722. The Chairperson: Is there a particular problem with that?

5723. Mr Pollock: There are no immediate plans, as far as we are aware. Martina mentioned earlier that DEL has training providers, but they are employed and contracted purely to deliver particular programmes and job schemes on the ground. The primary responsibility still rests with DEL.
5724. The Chairperson: Do you think that the phrase “or such other person” does not imply what the unions are fearful of?
5725. Ms M Campbell: The decision on whether to apply a sanction still rests with the decision-maker in DSD, not with DEL. That will remain the case.
5726. Mr Brady: Michael, you said that there are no immediate plans. I accept that the decision rests with the decision-maker in the Department at the moment. However, we were told in 2007 — forgive me for being sceptical — that privatisation was not an issue. Yet privatisation happened within a relatively short time. So although the decision-maker may be in and part of the Department now, who is to say that, in a year or so, the decision will not lie with a private contractor? Medical support services were in-house and, suddenly, we have the likes of Atos. Civil servants should be wary.
5727. Mr Pollock: Civil servants are wary. You are talking about office jobs in jobs and benefits. Yes, we are conscious of that as an issue.
5728. Mr Brady: I am not being facetious, but you sometimes need to be more than conscious of it, because much of this is geared towards making the transfer to privatisation that much easier, particularly in relation to the whole IT concept and people going online. Let us be honest: people with good IT experience processing claims online would not have to have the experience that very good Social Security Agency staff already have. We need to be very careful about that, from all our points of view.
5729. Mr Pollock: The line that we have consistently taken when discussing this with the Committee is that DEL and the Social Security Agency do not have any immediate plans. I cannot quantify “immediate”, as I do not have a crystal ball, but they do not have any plans to change from face-to-face situations in which claimants interface with jobs and benefits staff and their particular circumstances are taken into consideration.

5730. Mr Brady: The Bill refers to a remote interface.
5731. Mr Pollock: Yes.
5733. Mr Pollock: I know what you are saying, Mickey. Again, all I can tell you is that the policy intent is to future-proof the legislation to facilitate people. Nowadays, lots of people want to access claim forms remotely. My kids rarely go anywhere: everything is done remotely, whether applying for jobs or accessing whatever information. That is what that type of future-proofing is about in the benefits system here.
5734. Mr Brady: I do not want to draw this out, but my point is that I have no problem with experienced staff dealing with people. My difficulty is with the parachuting in of people who have no knowledge of the situation. We now see the outworkings of that in the work capability assessment, in which the parachuting in of such people has caused and continues to cause problems. This is an enabling Bill. If it is built into the Bill that there is a possibility — even, if you will excuse the pun, a remote one — the difficulty is that it could happen. That is my problem. It could happen in six months or two months, and therein lies the difficulty. We are talking about staff in local offices who need reassurance on this because they have a difficult enough job as it is.
5735. Mr Pollock: I understand, Mickey. It is a point well made, and it is very relevant - to us as civil servants. You appreciated the assurance that we gave you last week, which was that the same type of people would be dealing with the social fund. Again, that is as much as we can give you at this time.

5736. Mr Brady: The point that I am making is this: therein lies the need to build in safeguards. That is what the unions are talking about, and rightly so.
5737. The Chairperson: The concern that some of us have is with the phrase “or such other person”. Is that future-proofing or providing for privatisation further down the track? If that is implicit, why does someone not make it explicit? If they want to privatise it, why not come and tell us that they are going to do that and that it is a policy intent? If that is what they support, why should they be afraid to tell us? If people are concerned about creeping privatisation and feel that they may be walked into that, they may want to take that bit out of the Bill.
5738. Ms Jane Corderoy (Department for Social Development): It is worth saying that it is stated specifically that it is by regulations, so we would have to come back to the Committee anyway if there was any intent to privatise.
5739. The Chairperson: Yes, but it is still provided for, so any regulations will be governed by what was provided for in the primary legislation.
5740. The other wee point on clause 45 came from Citizens Advice. You may have dealt with it earlier by saying that claimant commitments are done in consultation with the claimant, but people are obviously looking for these things to be highlighted more explicitly.
5741. Mr Pollock: Clause 46 allows interviews to be conducted remotely. Again, the assurance that we have at present is that we are not aware of any intention to do that at any time in the future, but it is a future-proofing issue. Some employers, for example, may want to be able to interview people from a remote location.
5742. The Chairperson: OK. Clause 47.
5743. Mr Pollock: Clause 47 deals with sanctions. We had a fair run over that ground this morning. Is there anything else on that?
5744. The Chairperson: No.
5745. Mr Brady: As an aside, Chair, would it be possible to get some in-house research on the current sanctions regime and what is being proposed? A sanctions regime is in place at the moment, which is quite — 5746. Ms M Campbell: We have that, and we will get it to you.
5747. The Chairperson: Thank you.
5748. Mr Pollock: There was nothing on clause 48 or clause 49.
5749. There was a stakeholder comment on clause 50, which relates to responsibilities for jobseeker’s allowance. I do not have that information this afternoon, Chair, but I do not envisage a marked difference between the current responsibilities for jobseeker’s allowance and what is envisaged under the new regime. Clause 50 replaces provisions that relate to the responsibilities that jobseekers must meet and the imposition of sanctions. Again, the sanctions regime and the claimant commitment all hang together. In that sense, it will bring a bit of clarity to the system in so far as the individual or claimant will know what is expected of them under a particular benefit and what the outcome would be if they did not comply with that.
5750. The Chairperson: OK.
5751. Mr Pollock: Clause 51 relates to the ESA dual entitlement. Last week, a member wanted to know what sanction would apply to people entitled to ESA and universal credit. We now have some clarity on that. Basically, they would be subject to the conditionality of universal credit. Invariably, that would be beneficial to them, because they would be subject to losing only the amount of the universal credit award, and their ESA would not be touched.
5752. The Chairperson: OK.

5753. Mr Pollock: Clause 52 deals with the period of entitlement. This is time-limiting for ESA. I mentioned last week the amounts that attach to this. The costs of not implementing this clause would be pretty hefty. In 2013-14, it would cost £36.5 million; in 2014-15, it would cost £51 million; and, in 2015-16, it would cost £62.2 million. That condition is already in place in GB. Although those are significant amounts, it is also a parity issue — apologies for using that word — in so far as it relates to the conditionality under which people receive their benefit. Therefore, if I am in Newcastle upon Tyne as opposed to Newcastle, County Down, I can receive my ESA for 365 days. However, if I am in Newcastle, County Down and the Executive decide to do something different, I can receive it ad infinitum or at least for a longer period. It relates pretty closely to the conditionality of the benefit, and it is an issue that would cause some consternation because of the amounts involved in non-implementation and basic changes in client conditionality.
5754. The Chairperson: Fair enough, message understood.
5755. Mr Pollock: Clause 53 deals with further entitlement after time-limiting. Again, I do not have the particular document, but we did come back to you on how individuals would qualify for a further period of ESA. It is tied into the 12 weeks.
5756. The Chairperson: OK.
5757. Mr Pollock: Clause 54 relates to ESA and the youth condition. There were some questions about the amounts involved and whether the £390,000 saving was net of displacement costs. We received some confirmation that that was the case. We also received some information on the numbers, but we are trying to bottom those out. We will come back to you formally on the number of 16- to 24-year-olds who will be affected by it, but the figures that I have show that 695 ESA live load customers below the age of 20 and 2,977 customers aged between 20 and 24 will be affected. There is still some work to be done on who is on what in the ESA youth contribution, but we will come back to you when we get it all figured out.
5758. Mr Brady: The young people who will be affected and who no longer qualify for youth incapacity will be placed in the larger unemployment pool. In my experience, most of those youngsters have learning disabilities, and some will have quite severe learning disabilities. As part of the migration, a decision will be made on what a person may or may not be capable of doing. Will their particular disabilities be factored into their claimant commitment, as will be the case in all claimant commitments? I am not necessarily asking for special attention, but the fact that their condition qualified them for a benefit from the age of 16 — the old severe disablement allowance — needs to be factored in and addressed, perhaps even more so. Everyone's needs should be addressed, but a lot of those kids may not be able to articulate their needs because of their condition.
5759. Ms M Campbell: They will still be able to claim income-related benefit. We expect that almost all of them will transfer to that.
5760. Mr Pollock: That is the case. Their personal circumstances will certainly have to be taken into account.
5761. The Chairperson: Does that also cover clause 55, Michael? Did we move between the two?
5762. Mr Pollock: Yes.
5763. We provided some information on the work experience requirement in clause 56. I do not think that I have anything else on that at the moment.
5764. Clause 57 introduces hardship payments for the ESA regime. Previously, those were not available. In most cases, hardship payments will not be recoverable.
5765. Clause 58 deals with claimant responsibilities and commitments for employment and support allowance. We have nothing new to add on that.

- The Law Centre mentioned that the new claimant responsibilities will not be introduced until the introduction of universal credit, etc. However, there is a process through which many of the working-age benefits are being aligned to facilitate the introduction of universal credit in that respect.
5766. Mr Brady: I have a question on the work experience issue in clause 56. Essentially, it deals with work experience and placements for sick and disabled people who are declared fit to move towards work. That clause will permit officials to make people who are sick and disabled do work experience as a condition of their benefit. On one hand, they say that people are not necessarily capable of work; on the other hand, they say that they will put them in a situation in which they have to move towards work even if they have a particular condition. Is that right?
5767. Mr Pollock: No, I do not think so, Mickey. Whether an individual is placed in that category and whether they are required to undergo work experience will depend on their condition. As mentioned earlier, the individual's circumstances will be taken into account.
5768. Mr Brady: I suppose that what I am saying is that some of those people will be identified as being too sick to work, but they may be expected to attend placements and move towards work. It seems to be a contradiction in terms.
5769. Mr Pollock: I do not get —
5770. Mr Brady: Perhaps we can draw that out at a later stage.
5771. The Chairperson: Fair enough. Michael, I think that you were moving on to clause 58. The Committee is concerned about sanctions coming into play earlier than the introduction of universal credit.
5772. Mr Pollock: We are working closely with DEL on interviews and other aspects of the work programme. It stands to reason that we would not commence any of the sanctions attached to particular aspects of the work programme if we did not have that provision in Northern Ireland. They would not be introduced until the provision is in place.
5773. The Chairperson: OK. We will move on to clause 59.
5774. Mr Pollock: Clause 59 relates to lone parents —
5775. Mr F McCann: Are you saying that you are working towards a time frame for the introduction of universal credit? Is there any indication whether any of the high-level sanctions will come in now, next year or the year after? Has a decision been made on when the sanctions will be brought in?
5776. Mr Pollock: I do not think that we have anything definitive on the commencement of those particular provisions, Fra.
5777. Ms M Campbell: I think that it is covered in the table that we gave the Committee on the regulations. However, I will check again.
5778. Mr F McCann: It is just a concern. Those who work in the Department may have the best intentions. However, people are looking towards universal credit, and, perhaps as a result of a mishap or something with the way in which a benefit has been paid, they may receive a letter saying that they will be sanctioned for one year or three years. I take it that there will be pre-publicity and that people will be informed that the sanctions are about to come in and about how they will be hit.
5779. Mr Pollock: I think that I mentioned previously that the sanctions regime was being reviewed, irrespective of universal credit and the reform agenda. I envisage that the sanctions will probably be in place before the introduction of universal credit. However, I will have to come back to you on the exact timing.
5780. Mr F McCann: It is important that people know when this punitive measure will come into play.
5781. Mr Pollock: It is a deterrent.
5782. The Chairperson: All right. We are now on clause 59.

5783. Mr Pollock: The Department predicts that the change in lone-parent conditionality will save £11.73 million in 2012-14. I do not have a specific answer at the moment, Chair. I will come back to you on that.
5784. Mr Brady: I want to ask about parental flexibilities. One of the big issues in all of this is the distinct lack of childcare — certainly formal childcare. Eventually, the age of the child will go down to one. If I am right, we will move from “good cause” to “good reason” —
5785. Ms M Campbell: It all means the same.
5786. Mr Brady: Presumably, the flexibilities that we are talking about would have to be built in around that. Otherwise, an arbitrary decision could be made by the person who is doing the interview, who may think that he or she knows more about childcare provision in the area than the person can access. There are all sorts of issues around that.
5787. Mr Pollock: As Martina has said on more than one occasion, childcare is deemed to be a good reason for not taking up a particular job or training opportunity. There are other provisions that allow lone parents to restrict their availability to school hours or when childcare is available. Ministers are discussing the whole issue of childcare and the provision of adequate and affordable childcare to address the differential between here and other parts of the UK. Therefore, mitigating action against some of the adverse impacts of welfare reform is being taken.
5788. Mr Brady: Knowledge about childcare in a particular area is an issue. Childcare varies from area to area, even in the North. One of the issues is that somebody interviewing a lone parent may have childcare responsibilities and think, “Well, if I can do it.” Therefore, knowledge tends to become more subjective sometimes. Having something in a local office that clearly outlines what is available in an area is important. To my knowledge, that has not been a feature to date.
5790. Mr Brady: I just wanted to make that point because it has not really been addressed properly. In some areas, there is not great childcare provision, but it may be better than the provision in others.
5791. Ms M Campbell: According to DHSSPS, a lot of childminders have come off the register because they have no children to mind. We obviously view that as an opportunity for people to start up their own business.
5792. Mr Brady: Years ago, I was involved in going out with the trust to try to encourage people to become registered childminders.
5793. Ms M Campbell: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development has done a whole big thing on that as well.
5794. Mr Brady: It is a very prescriptive procedure. That needs to be addressed properly.
5795. Ms M Campbell: That is in the childcare strategy work of the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister.
5796. Mr Brady: Child protection is paramount, but there is still room for manoeuvre.
5797. Ms Campbell: That is a big issue, but all the different parts of the Executive are working together on mitigation. That is a good point, and we have been working with colleagues to address it.
5798. Mr Brady: I am glad that I came up with one good point for you today.
5799. Ms M Campbell: You always make good points, Mickey.

5800. The Chairperson: Do not encourage him.
5801. Members, we have a wee bit of information from the Department in front of us on clause 60, so you do not need to deal with that unless you want to, Michael.
5802. Mr Pollock: OK.
5803. The Chairperson: If members are happy enough, we will move on to clauses 61, 62 and 63. The Law Centre and NICEM commented on clause 63 in their submissions. They are opposed to some of those clauses.
5804. Is that still the EU? We kind of dealt with that this morning, so are members happy enough to move on? We have dealt with that, but we will obviously come back to it formally.
- Members indicated assent.*
5805. The Chairperson: We will move on to clauses 64 to 68.
5806. Ms Corderoy: Clauses 64 to 68 are technical amendments relating to industrial injuries. They remove unequal treatment and extend, simplify and rationalise existing schemes for those under 18 and for trainees. We had a couple of queries, but we answered those last week.
5807. The Chairperson: That is fair enough.
5808. Mr Pollock: Clause 69 deals with housing benefit changes, which we spent quite a bit of time on this morning when discussing underoccupancy and the consumer price index uprating. As I mentioned, you asked for some figures, and we have provided them. However, I think that we need to put the position to you formally so that you get as full a picture as possible of what everybody is doing.
5809. The Chairperson: Thank you for that.
5810. Ms Corderoy: Clauses 70 to 73 are to do with getting rid of the previous social fund. Last Thursday, you heard from Leonora McLaughlin about the plans for the discretionary scheme. She went through most of the questions that were in the table.
5811. The Chairperson: I thought that we may have had something in our tabled items, but we do not. Fair enough.
5812. Clause 74 is titled “State pension credit: carers”.
5813. Ms M Campbell: I did confirm that. That is not changing.
5814. The Chairperson: We dealt with clause 75 earlier. A number of recommendations were made on clause 76, so there is a bit of discussion to be had on that. We had a number of recommendations from stakeholders, including a recommendation that the severest cases be dealt by a paper exercise, as it was described. There was also a suggestion to amend clause 80 to change the required waiting condition.
5815. Ms Corderoy: On the first clause that you mention, it is the legislation’s intention that the severest cases will be dealt with by a paper exercise. Legislation allows for that in exceptional circumstances.
5816. Last week, we said that, in clause 80, the limit of three months and six months has already been changed as a result of consultation. It aligns with the definition of “long-term disability”.
5817. Mr Brady: How will it be determined what are the severest cases? Will it be based on medical evidence? There are degrees of severity. Sometimes the decision can be subjective rather than objective. Will there be anything there to suggest that there is medical evidence from a GP or a consultant, or from a person’s medical history. A lot of the people who will be moving over from disability living allowance (DLA) to PIP have long-term chronic conditions. In many cases, they will have progressive conditions that could get worse within the month. I am thinking of rheumatoid arthritis and such conditions. There could be people with multiple sclerosis who are in remission only to see their condition change very quickly. People with motor neurone disease can get

- worse. There are many such conditions. Sarcoidosis has been mentioned in the past. You could have one good week out of four. It is a very severe condition.
5818. Mr Pollock: The medical evidence will be one aspect of the overall consideration. Jane, do you want to comment?
5819. Ms Corderoy: My operational colleague, Mickey Kelly, is not present today. However, I can come back to you on that. Fluctuating circumstances are dealt with elsewhere in the legislation.
5820. Mr Brady: To extend that point slightly, if it is going to be a paper exercise, it seems logical that the best available medical evidence should be there. I do not dispute that other factors may be considered. If someone has a long-term, chronically severe condition, medical evidence will be there, and it will be long-term medical evidence, probably going back many years and possibly containing a prognosis.
5821. Mr Pollock: It is down to our good old common sense again, Mickey.
5822. Mr Brady: Sometimes it is not so common.
5823. Mr Copeland: Under the existing benefit, there is a mechanism called “special rules”. It applies to people who are facing end of life within a set time frame. Will that be replicated?
5824. Ms Corderoy: Yes.
5825. Mr Copeland: Are there any changes to the timescales and the criteria that have to be satisfied?
5826. Mr Pollock: I do not think so. There is something about cancer sufferers.
5827. Ms Corderoy: Bits of DLA are tried and tested on how to take forward the same rules, so the same rules apply on terminal illness.
5828. Mr F McCann: One of the groups raised the point that DWP has proposed that, after four weeks, DLA or PIP should not be paid to people who have travelled abroad. Does that take in pensioners and older people, quite a few of whom, mainly for health reasons, go away for a month or two in the winter? This will restrict their doing that.
5829. Mr M Byrne: The plans at the minute are that PIP will not apply to pensioners. PIP will apply only to people of working age.
5830. Mr F McCann: I did say older people, too.
5831. Ms M Campbell: Over 50s, say?
5832. Mr F McCann: I have not quite said that, but it will not affect people of pensionable age?
5833. Mr M Byrne: It will not affect people over 64. PIP will apply to 16- to 64-year-olds.
5834. Mr Brady: On that point, it really depends on defining what “medical treatment” is. Many people with arthritis go abroad for the sun. Is that, in the broadest sense, medical treatment? I suppose that it comes down to semantics.
5835. Mr M Byrne: I think that it would have to be medical treatment that has been recommended rather than just — 5836. Mr Brady: Your doctor may tell you that it would be a great health benefit if you could to Santa Ponsa for two months or whatever.
5837. Ms M Campbell: We are all going to go to your doctor. [Laughter.]
5838. Mr Brady: I was thinking of somebody else’s.
5839. Mr F McCann: I think that Jane was working her way through a number of other issues when she got sidetracked.
5840. Ms Corderoy: We clarified last week that clause 86, which contains the comment about people being held on remand and subsequently being released or people having their convictions quashed, is not about presumption of guilt or innocence but to prevent there being double provision and to ensure that their medical care is met while they are in prison or wherever.
5841. The Chairperson: Then there is the issue of statutory access to

- independent advice. It says “mandatory” here, but it was really to make provision for access to independent advice to be put on a statutory footing.
5842. Ms M Campbell: Apart from the fact that making independent advice statutory could prove expensive, it would be problematic. How would you determine that the increase in cases was directly related? However, the Department is discussing with the voluntary and community sector what that sector’s role will be in the implementation of welfare reform.
5843. Ms Corderoy: As Maurice said, people of 65 or of pensionable age who are in receipt of PIP should continue to get it, and that is the case.
5844. The next point was that current rules allow people who come off DLA to reclaim the benefit within two years if they need it again, but the plan is to limit that to one year under PIP. We said last week that if the Committee feels strongly about that, we can look at it. We can go —
5845. Mr F McCann: I was thinking of Mickey when I raised that point.
5846. Ms Corderoy: There is another question related to clause 86, and it is to do with people who are on remand. Again, it is about over-provision and avoiding paying from the public purse twice.
5847. Last week, we also dealt with the recommendation to bring the mobility component for adults into line with that extended for children. The 84 days relates to disabled children and is linked to child benefit. I do not get any sense that there is any interest in changing that.
5848. Under clause 88, a report of the assessment must be laid before the Assembly within two years. Last week, my colleague from the agency said that time was needed for PIP to be bed down and for lessons to be learned as we look at the number of people going through it. We also said that we would be willing to take on some of the other suggestions from stakeholders about involving disabled people and organisations in that, and that would need to be in the legislation.
5849. Clarification on cross-border issues is there. We said that the social security entitlement of people in the EU is determined in accordance with European legislation. EC regulation 883/2004 co-ordinates member states’ social security schemes. The competent state for the award of sickness benefits is determined in accordance with the regulation, and is normally based on the European Economic Area state where the person is insured, regardless of which state in which that person resides. We are told that it is exportable if a person moves across the border. That was a particular issue that the Committee raised. We will ensure that we get clarification that that is the case.
5850. We were able to confirm the final point about the definition of a “care home”. Those in sheltered accommodation or supported housing come under the normal rules and entitlement. Proposed rules mirror those for the DLA care component. Particular concerns were raised about supported housing, but people affected will continue to get the PIP component.
5851. The Chairperson: Are members content with that?
Members indicated assent.
5852. The Chairperson: We move now to clause 95.
5853. Mr Pollock: Clause 95 relates to the benefit cap. The latest figures that we have show that 620 households in Northern Ireland would be affected by the benefit cap. We have provided the Committee with some information on the exemptions proposed under the legislation. A lot of it is to do with the vulnerable categories, which we have talked about today. We are doing some more work on the finance that is being attached to the introduction of the benefit cap and what would be saved from there. We should have that for you very shortly.

5854. Mr F McCann: When the cap comes in, it will obviously be an amalgamation of quite a number of benefits. I think that something like 30 benefits are being pulled together. Would the Department consider listing in the Bill all the benefits that will and will not be affected by the benefit cap?
5855. Ms M Campbell: That is in regulations.
5856. Mr Pollock: There is a list of what is to be included and what is not. Perhaps, for the sake of stakeholder engagement, it would be an idea for the Department to have something. I am sure that Tommy's people and the communications people have in mind something that will be available to customers to tell them that if they are getting DLA, attendance allowance or carer's allowance, for instance, it will not be included in their overall benefit cap.
5857. Ms M Campbell: The list is on the NI Direct website. Receipt of work and tax credits, DLA, PIP — when it comes in — attendance allowance, the support component of ESA, industrial injuries, and equivalent war disablement pensions and payments under the armed forces compensation scheme, war widow and war widower's pensions automatically exempts people. From memory, we gave a figure for households that came under the benefit cap at something like 13,000, but when you weed those out, the people in receipt of the exclusion benefits brought it down to 620.
5858. Mr F McCann: There are very few people who will know that there are 30 benefits out there. Most people would not know what they are. Can we have that recorded in the Bill? Can we have a list of the benefits that are going to be amalgamated into universal credit?
5859. Ms M Campbell: I am with you now.
5860. Mr Pollock: It is in there now, Fra. We are told what universal credit is going to replace.
5861. Mr F McCann: It would take you three months to find them all. It would be a good idea to have a list of those benefits that are going to be amalgamated and those that are not. I think it would simplify the thing. If people want to see it, they will see it there.
5862. Mr Pollock: I understand, but it will not be benefit claimants who will be reading this.
5863. Mr F McCann: That is like saying to Mark Durkan this morning, "Now you should read the business case", yet there are 20,000 pages in it or something like that.
5864. Mr Brady: One of the stakeholders proposed that carer's allowance, widow's and bereavement benefits and contributory-based ESA be added to the list of benefits exempted. It seems to me that it would be a great opportunity to make carer's allowance a stand-alone benefit going into all of this, because it should have been from the beginning. I say that because it is so related to DLA or attendance allowance.
5865. Ms M Campbell: Carer's allowance?
5866. Mr Brady: Yes. If you are on benefit, carer's allowance is taken in against your benefit. It is taken in as income. It should never have been, because DLA is not taken in as income and neither is attendance allowance. There was always the argument that carer's allowance should be a stand-alone benefit, because a carer is caring, irrespective of whether he or she is working. That is the point that I am making. It was resisted because of the obvious financial implications. Carers in the North save the Government £4 billion a year. What would happen if all the carers decided that they were not going to do it any more. I am sure that they will not, but it is an opportunity. There had been suggestions about such benefits as bereavement benefit, for instance, but it seems to me that carer's allowance is an obvious benefit to be exempt.
5867. Mr M Byrne: Carer's allowance is an income-replacement benefit. It is there to help people who cannot work full-time.

5868. Mr Brady: With respect, Maurice, that is what we were told. I would never accept that it is an income-replacement benefit. If you were working for 35 hours a week for an income of £1.24 an hour, and that is an income-replacement, you are being short-changed.
5869. Mr M Byrne: People in receipt of carer's allowance can still work.
5870. Mr Brady: They can earn only £100, so they are restricted.
5871. Mr M Byrne: They are not able to work full-time or to work to their full potential, so that is a benefit to compensate for that.
5872. Mr Brady: I cannot accept that argument. Sorry.
5873. Mr F McCann: I think that you said that 620 big families would be affected. At one of the meetings, you also said that 13,500 would be affected, because they are in receipt of DLA and that they could be impacted on by the changes from DLA to PIP.
5874. Mr Pollock: They are exempt.
5875. Mr F McCann: They are exempt at present but will that 13,500 still be exempt when the changes come in?
5876. Mr Pollock: Yes, they will still be exempt. They are in the categories that will be exempt.
5877. The Chairperson: The question that you were asked related to the headline figure of the benefit cap and the 13,000 that Martina said would be affected.
5878. Ms M Campbell: It is 13,300.
5879. The Chairperson: When you take out all the proposed exemptions, you take that down to 620.
5880. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
5881. Mr Copeland: I interpreted the question differently. There are 13,000 people, many of whom may be exempt because they are on DLA. Let us say that 25% of those do not transfer satisfactorily from DLA to PIP, so that figure could be 3,000 people instead of 600. That is the potentiality.
5882. Mr F McCann: That is the point that I am making.
5883. Mr G Campbell: I have a query on what its presentation will be when it ultimately rolls out. Your presentation about the cap of £500 a week is well-rehearsed. The rationale for it is that it is approximately the average GB wage.
5884. Ms M Campbell: It is not our average wage. The point about the figure used in the cap is that it is the GB median wage, which is an advantage to Northern Ireland claimants, because the median wage in Northern Ireland is lower, as you know.
5885. Mr G Campbell: Yes, I know that. From a presentational point of view, particularly when part of the rationale is to make it more productive for people to work, is it not true to say that if you had an identical couple, one of whom was on benefit at or close to the maximum cap of £500 a week, and another couple in work, the couple in work would have to earn an awful lot more than £500 a week to be the same as the recipient of the benefit, in net terms? Would it not be better to say that the cap of £500 is equivalent to a couple who would have to earn £30,000 a year, or whatever it is?
5886. Ms M Campbell: I think, from memory, that the figures are £26,000 to £32,000.
5887. Mr Pollock: That is £26,000 net and £32,000 or £33,000 gross.
5888. Mr G Campbell: Yes, but when you use the term "equates to", the working person will say, "Forget about the 'equates to'. That is what I have to earn to get what the person who is on benefit can get under the cap. The 'equates to' is out of the question. That is what I have to earn in wages. I have to work to earn up to £32,000 per year to get the same as someone in identical circumstances to me can get in benefit, and the cap cuts in then." Just for presentation, maybe, at that point, you could say something else rather than - just say it is the equivalent of £500 per week.

5889. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
5890. Mr Brady: I suppose that that is the argument that Freud was using in the House of Lords.
5891. The Chairperson: Let us not have an argument about propagandising or promoting the Bill. Let us deal with the clauses of the Bill.
5892. Mr Brady: Sorry; it is about the point about the gross figure as opposed to the net figure. In fact, the figure that he gave was £35,000. I just want to clarify that.
5893. My question is on the transfer. Are we any closer to finding out who will get the contract for the PIP assessments? We have been told several times that we are near that magic contract.
5894. Mr M Byrne: I have not heard anything further on that.
5895. Ms Corderoy: No. We hope, Mickey, that it will be soon enough, within the next month or so, but we will let you know as soon as we know.
5896. Mr Douglas: I have two points. Someone told me that there were six people in for the contract. Is that right?
- I come back to a point that Fra made. It is a more general question and may be better left to the end. He talked about listing all these benefits in or out. We have talked before about the importance of communication. There is a lot of fear out there at the moment. What are we doing about that? For example, we talked earlier about underoccupancy. In discussions that I have had with people, I have heard their fears that this is going to happen next week and that everyone will be put out of their home. We definitely need to do something. Some people think it will happen next week.
5897. The Chairperson: Our dilemma at the moment is that we are simply processing a Bill. Until the Bill completes its passage, theoretically, you cannot say what the outcome will be.
- So, we are in a bit of a dilemma. There is nothing I can really do at this moment to assuage the fears of a lot of people. I am getting it every day of the week, like everyone else around the table. There is little I can do to assuage people.
5898. Arguably, if a lot of the submissions had been more widely publicised, there would be a lot more concern out there. We had the likes of the Housing Executive telling us that if all the people deemed to be within the remit of this new Bill and living in inappropriate accommodation presented themselves for appropriate accommodation, it could not meet that need. It expects that if the proposed Bill goes through as it is before us, more people will be more likely to face the prospect of being unable to pay the rent and losing their home. It is quite concerned about that in its evidence 5899. Those are the concerns. I do not know what we can do, as a Committee, to assuage them. I am not even sure what the Department can do because it is proposing the Bill.
5900. Ms M Campbell: What we could do is ask the Social Security Agency's communications people to talk to you.
5901. Mr Pollock: The agency has a wider communications strategy in place. A lot of that will kick off immediately the Bill goes through the Assembly. However, it is predicated on the legislative process, and the agency does not want to prejudice that, I suppose.
5902. Mr Douglas: Some of us had a chat over lunchtime. If you look at the 'The Independent on Sunday', you can see that it shows that there are clearly major problems at the moment. I had another look at it, and it relates to the whole IT system. If half of it is true, it will put the whole process back another year or 18 months. The longer this goes on, the more the rumour-mongers will get to work and the more people will talk. I understand that it is a very difficult situation. As Martina says, it might be an idea to chat with that part of the Department.

5903. The Chairperson: We can certainly do that. There is no difficulty about that at all. I am just sounding a wee note of caution. The Department and the agency will have their communication strategies, but I do not want to subscribe to a communication strategy that is propagandising for something. It is difficult. We have told people who have made arguments to the Committee over the past year to make their case and to be evidence-based if they can be. Some of the outworkings of the Bill will be very challenging and difficult enough for a lot of people. You do not need to elaborate on that or make it sound worse; the outcome might be difficult enough. That is obviously in the minds of all the parties that have opposed elements of the Bill until now. We could have a discussion about communication, but you will be limited in what you can do. Although there is an argument that says, “The Bill is a good thing; it is about simplification and being fair to the taxpayer”, there are counterarguments that say, “Yes, but an awful lot of vulnerable people are going to fall foul of the Bill.” How do you square that circle? I am not so sure, but, yes, we can have a discussion on communications with the relevant agencies.
5904. Mr F McCann: There is a valid point in what Sammy said. There seems to be indications that there are serious problems, whether they are to do with computers or other aspects. However, we are pushing ahead. When we are finished, we will go into the Assembly and vote on the Bill. If it passes and they get more and more problems over there, where does it leave us?
5905. The Chairperson: We have to deal with the Bill in front of us and bring those judgements to bear. When we come to the clause-by-clause scrutiny, which will start very shortly, we will have to make our judgement on the Bill based on the information that we have received from stakeholders and with the Department. That is the process that we have been involved in during the Committee Stage. The first phase was to satisfy ourselves that we know every provision of the Bill and what it was intended to do, and all the rest of that. There was a lot of discussion, and people teased out what things might mean. We have done that. We then had stakeholder evidence sessions, and now we have reverted to talking to the Department. That is what we are working on. We clarified what the Bill is supposed to be about, and we took evidence. Now, having had the benefit of that evidence, we are taking that evidence up with the Department again to clarify aspects of it and to tease out some of the arguments. The phase that we are now in is that we are asking the Department whether it will be able to take on board some of the concerns. We have already addressed some, and we are going to come back to others. When that is completed in a day or a couple of days, we will do the clause-by-clause scrutiny. We will have to make our judgements based on what we believe the Bill to be and what our views on all that are. We will have to make our decisions on that. People have already expressed their concerns; they are worried about the impact of the Bill. It is in our hands to make decisions on the Bill. That is all that we can do, Fra.
5906. Mr G Campbell: We are aware of the media hype over the weekend. Is any information being fed from DWP about the scale and nature of the problems that are being encountered, and, more importantly, about what impact they may or may not have on us?
5907. Ms M Campbell: You would have to ask the agency. It is closer to the IT; it handles all the communications. We, obviously, are in touch with policy colleagues about the regulations, but the agency handles the specifics around the IT.
5908. Mr Pollock: There does not seem to be any hiatus in bringing forward the regulations arising from the Bill that passed there in March.
5909. Mr Douglas: Let me just quote ‘The Independent on Sunday’:
“The programme’s director, Malcolm Whitehouse, and the DWP’s head of IT, Steve

- Dover, last week announced they would be leaving the department.”*
5910. Those are two key people. It also states:
- “The senior civil servant on the project was described as being ‘on extended sick leave’.”*
5911. It just shows you —
5912. The Chairperson: I am going to be the director general of the BBC. That is not true, by the way.
5913. Mr Douglas: I know that that is in the paper, but those are facts and figures. They are definitely big difficulties. The longer that this goes on, the more of a mire we get into. That is particularly the case for elderly people, who will wonder what is going to happen and what is not.
5914. The Chairperson: It is a point well made. Obviously, we will have to bear all that in mind when making our decisions on the Bill. That is the dilemma that we will face. Thank you for that.
5915. The issue in clause 96 was around the ability to appeal the decision if you felt that it was wrong.
5916. Mr Pollock: I think that we have come back to you on that. Basically, the only aspect that you cannot appeal is the right to apply the benefit cap. Everything else would be appealable.
5917. The Chairperson: Good enough. We move on to clause 97.
5918. Ms Corderoy: I think that the issues with clause 97 and clause 99 were dealt with this morning. We spoke about clause 98, which was just verification of the type of organisations that you could get information from.
5919. Clause 100 deals with payment on account. We clarified last week that that is not to do with the social fund replacement and that that would be an additional Government amendment.
5920. Clause 101 deals with the mandatory reconsideration before appeal. With regard to the third bullet point at paragraph 77 of the paper, the Department would appreciate it if the Committee could let us know which bit of the time limits you are talking about so that we can make sure that we are answering the right query.
5921. The Chairperson: It is the 42-day time period.
5922. Mr Brady: May I just clarify a point? Does that mean that you have 42 days within which to appeal or that the Department will deal with it within 42 days?
5923. Mr M Byrne: We are not aware that there is a proposal to introduce a 42-day time limit.
5924. Mr Brady: It is 28 days at the moment.
5925. Mr M Byrne: Twenty-eight days for the Department to deal with — 5926. Mr Brady: No, for a person to appeal —
5927. Mr M Byrne: Yes; that appeal time limit remains at 28 days.
5928. Mr Brady: So the 42 days would then —
5929. Mr M Byrne: We are not aware that there has been talk about 42 days.
5930. Mr Brady: I am just wondering how enforceable that would be, considering the number of appeals you are going to get.
5931. Mr M Byrne: You are under the impression that that 42 days is for the Department to handle the appeal.
5932. Mr Brady: It is ambiguous. It does not really say. It says:
- “A time limit should be applied to the Department to ensure an appeal is dealt with in a timely fashion. [The Department of Work and Pensions and HMRC are both considering a 42 day time period in Britain.]”*
5933. Mr M Byrne: I know that, under the appeal regime across the water, when the appeals were taken over by the Ministry of Justice, it tried to impose a 28-day time limit on DWP to get submissions to it within 28 days of the date on which the appeal was lodged. I think that there was opposition to that, in that DWP could not have met that timescale. As far as I am aware, the current rules state that the response to the appeal should be provided within

- such time as may be reasonable. As far as I am aware, there are operational targets and whatnot in place that require that submissions should be provided to the appeal tribunal within a certain time. However, once it goes to the appeal tribunal, it is up to the appeal tribunal to decide how long or how many sittings it hears. There is no time limit for it to get the appeal heard. So, I do not know just how workable a time limit would be in the process of getting an appeal lodged and then cleared. There are too many variable factors involved.
5934. Mr Brady: There are operational difficulties, too, because sometimes appeals require a departmental officer to be there. At one stage, the appeals people were actually sending out subpoenas to the Department to have an officer at every appeal. It did not work. The only reason I am raising that issue is that it throws up the inherent difficulties in trying to get appeals through in a reasonable time. The difficulty in this case is that, under this legislation, there will be so many more appeals than there are already.
5935. Mr M Byrne: The whole idea of clause 101 is to reduce the number of appeals going to the appeals tribunal. Hopefully, they will get the decisions right in the first instance.
5936. Mr Brady: Room 101 might be more appropriate.
5937. The Chairperson: The issue was raised by the Law Centre specifically.
5938. Mr M Byrne: I suppose it has an interest in trying to get the appeals heard as quickly as possible. At the minute, we are not aware that there is going to be a time limit for it.
5939. The Chairperson: Fair enough. Did we skip clause 99?
5940. Ms M Campbell: That was covered this morning under the payments to joint claimants.
5941. The Chairperson: Clause 102 was about data protection.
5942. Ms Corderoy: It makes it easier to include in regulations provision for electronic communications in relation to claims to benefit, notification regarding claims to benefit and notification regarding change of circumstances, rather than us having to go through a separate order under the Electronic Communications Act (Northern Ireland) 2001.
5943. The Chairperson: The main concern was about data protection, is that right?
5944. Mr M Byrne: I do not think that it is anything to do with data protection. It is not to do with the electronic sharing of information between Departments or anything like that. It is just a simplification measure to allow the Department to make provision in regulations for electronic communication as regards making claims and changes of circumstances. Currently, that has to be done by an order under the Electronic Communications Act, whereas, under the new regulations for universal credit, we can include in the claims and payments regulations all the provisions for claims and payments, including electronic communications.
5945. The Chairperson: People were just concerned about security, that was all.
5946. Mr M Byrne: As far as I am aware, there have been electronic claims since 2006, and I am not aware that any issues have been raised with the Department over the security of information given in that way.
5947. The Chairperson: That is fine.
5948. We will move to clause 103, which is about recovery of benefit payments.
5949. Ms Corderoy: The issue that the Committee raised last week was to do with whether the recovery of benefit overpayments would be detrimental to the claimant. We came back with some information that, where reasonable evidence is available that the recovery of an overpayment would be detrimental to the health and/or welfare of the debtor and/or their family, particular criteria would need to be satisfied in order to waive recovery of the overpayment.

5950. Mr F McCann: How is that determined?
5951. Ms Corderoy: It is in guidance. There are different rules for different aspects depending on whether you are on contribution-based benefit or means-tested benefit. At the moment, there is a set limit on what is considered a small overpayment, and that is deemed to be non-recoverable. At the moment, the guidance says that an amount of less than £65 will not be pursued. I think that if a claimant were getting more than £65 and there was a difference in what they get under universal credit, they would probably notice that amount early on. You were concerned about the welfare considerations and that it may push somebody into further debt.
5952. Mr Brady: The point was made that, historically, there have been more recovered overpayments here than in Britain. That kind of skews the parity angle, and the difficulty is that, under this, even if the person is not responsible for the overpayment, they are still penalised because the Department has made a mistake and has overpaid them. The argument that people should know when they are getting more does not wash because, in my experience over the years, as I said last week and as I continue to say, people think that the Department knows what it is doing. They think that if they get extra money, they must be entitled to it because those people are almost infallible. I did qualify that.
5953. The Chairperson: OK. I admire your confidence.
5954. Happy enough to move on to clause 105?
5955. Ms Corderoy: There was no comment on clause 104.
5956. Mr Pollock: Clauses 105 to 115 are about fraud.
5957. Mr Brady: There is a 40% maximum for deductions from earnings. Will the level of earnings be taken into account? We have a low-wage economy here as opposed to what might exist in Britain.
5958. Mr M Byrne: As in any case where recovery is being pursued, all the circumstances of the case will be taken into account before the level of recovery is determined. If the person will be faced with greater hardship, a lower deduction would probably be more appropriate.
5959. Mr Brady: The 40% figure is there to be used, and the Department can use it if it so desires.
5960. Mr M Byrne: I think that the 40% figure is only for fraud cases where there has been proven fraud. The maximum in the other cases is, I think, 25%.
5961. Mr Brady: It is still a fair bit.
5962. Mr M Byrne: It is still a fair bit, but that is the maximum. It is not necessarily the automatic deduction.
5963. The Chairperson: OK. Let us go back to the fraud section.
5964. Mr Pollock: Conrad is best placed to speak to this issue. He has provided some clarification, which he spoke about last week. Basically, the Department's duty is to protect public funds and recover overpayments and social fund loans. That is right, and it should be able to do so over an extended period. Again, he pointed out that there could be higher repayment rates, which would enable the debt to be recovered sooner.
5965. There were no particular comments on clauses 106, 107 and 109. There was a comment on clause 110 in relation to the penalties for fraud. Conrad pointed out last week that the claimant still has the choice to go to court rather than accept the penalty. The amount involved — the £350 or 50% of the overpayment, an increase on the current 30% — is deemed reasonable in the circumstances.
5966. The Chairperson: I presume that there is no change in the Department's thinking around the penalty. It will be on top of the recovery. Is that right? That was a concern that members had. It is a bit of a double whammy.

5967. Mr F McCann: In what circumstances would the maximum penalty of £2,000 apply?
5968. Mr Pollock: I imagine that it would be in extreme cases.
5969. Mr F McCann: Can you give me an example?
5970. Mr Pollock: I cannot because it is not my particular area of expertise. However, as an ex-auditor, I have to say that it would be proportionate to the amount of fraud.
5971. The Chairperson: Conrad may have mentioned a figure last week, but we can check that.
5972. Mr Pollock: We can check to see whether we can give you an example, but, as I said, I envisage that it would be an extreme case, maybe involving organised fraud or whatever.
5973. The Chairperson: Clause 111?
5974. Mr Pollock: Clause 111 relates to the cooling-off period. We are trying to get the balance right by reducing the period during which the customer can withdraw their agreement to pay the penalty from 28 days to 14 days so that the process is a wee bit more streamlined. Withdrawal means that the penalty need not be paid but also that the Department's agreement not to prosecute will no longer apply. These penalties can only be offered where there are sufficient grounds to bring proceedings. Acceptance is on the basis that, by agreeing to pay the penalty, there would be no prosecution. The offer of a penalty must be accepted in writing, and, once accepted, the additional cooling-off period applies, during which time the person can reconsider their decision to accept the penalty and seek further independent legal advice. We believe that 14 days is sufficient time for the claimant to seek any advice. Customers retain the right to seek independent legal advice and to participate in face-to-face interviews where the penalty is offered.
5975. The Chairperson: The issue was that if you wanted to see a solicitor, you might not get one within 14 days. Again, Conrad dealt with that, but I am trying to recall the specifics and whether there is discretion to allow a longer period. I think that he said yes.
5976. Ms M Campbell: I think that he did say yes.
5977. The Chairperson: I think he did but maybe I will stand corrected.
5978. Mr Brady: It goes back to that whole issue of failure to disclose, and there is a valid argument that if you do not know something, you cannot disclose it. There has been a long-running argument about misrepresentation because you can misrepresent something, but it is more difficult to disclose something that you do not know. People will be penalised for that.
5979. Mr Pollock: Penalised, yes, but I think Conrad was trying to bring out the fact that most fraud proceedings are not about genuine mistakes. This is not about genuine mistakes.
5980. Mr Brady: The point is that there are genuine mistakes, and we need to cover all aspects. If somebody is committing fraud, it is their problem if the issue is resolved through a court case or whatever. I know from dealing with people over the years that a lot of people were done for failure to disclose when they simply did not know that the issue was relevant or pertinent to their benefit. They could not disclose something that they did not know. I know what you are saying about somebody going out to commit fraud, but there are a lot of people who do not.
5981. Mr Pollock: Hopefully, the likes of the claimant commitment and claimants' responsibilities being spelled out a wee bit more clearly will help in that regard.
5982. Mr F McCann: I raised this with Conrad because I have dealt with a number of cases where people were asked whether they had read the information on the back of the form; the small print that outlines what people have to do when

- claiming benefit. You and I know that the vast majority of people do not read it. As a matter of fact, there may be serious literacy or other problems. If they fall into that category, they are being penalised, as Mickey said, for something that they have no knowledge of at all.
5983. Mr Brady: The classic example of that was the old order book, where you were supposed to read the yellow pages every time. If everybody had done that, it would have taken you a week to get your money because there would have been a queue in Newry, down Hill Street and round the corner. That is the illogic of this.
5984. The Chairperson: OK, fair enough. The issue with clause 111 was the number of days being reduced to 14 and whether you would accept a prosecution. We have been advised that if someone is not able to make that decision within 14 days, discretion is available to them. We just need to make sure we can confirm that.
5985. Mr Pollock: We will come back definitively on that. Again, if they can show they have a good reason as to why they could not get legal advice within that period, I am sure that would be taken into consideration.
5986. The Chairperson: We will have to decide on that in a few days, so we need to have that confirmed.
5987. Mr Douglas: Will that be in the guidelines? I think it was the Northern Ireland Association for Mental Health that talked about people who are under stress and leaving letters lying in the hall for weeks on end because they cannot face opening them. We will be looking at those vulnerable people as well. Will there be a list of those types of vulnerable people, Michael?
5988. Mr Pollock: I have not seen the way the regulations will be shaped, but, yes, there would be consideration of particular circumstances if there were mental health issues or whatever. That would be taken into consideration.
5989. The Chairperson: OK, thank you. Clause 112.
5990. Mr Pollock: Clause 112 deals with civil penalties for incorrect statements and failures to disclose information. The penalty is £50. It is what it is, and I think Conrad outlined the detail behind that. It is for claimants who negligently make incorrect statements or who fail, without reasonable excuse or good reason, to disclose information about their claim. That is where the face-to-face relationship with the Department comes into play in the individual circumstances and what is deemed as reasonable.
5991. Mr Brady: The housing groups have an issue about a third party providing documentation or information. Would the third party that gives information on behalf of the homeless person be subject to the penalty? Or, would that revert to the vulnerable person who was not in a position to do that?
5992. Mr Pollock: The penalty can be imposed only upon the individual who makes the claim.
5993. Mr Brady: I see, and, again, they would not have provided the information. The information would have been provided on their behalf, which goes back to not being able to disclose something that you do not know. It is a technical issue that could affect a number of people. If it is accepted that a third party can give that information, the person whose information it is may not be aware of the particulars of the information given. That may need to be addressed. Perhaps you will look at that.
5994. Mr Pollock: I think that we mentioned this morning that we are trying to bottom out the third-party verification.
5995. Mr Brady: That is just an additional thing to consider.
5996. Ms M Campbell: Another element of it, yes. Good cause would probably come in there, too, but we need to bottom that out.

5997. The Chairperson: We are now into clauses 113 and 114, about which the issue is, again, disproportionate approach. The Committee was generally concerned about the question of sanctions being disproportionate, but we have touched on that already. Unless you can offer any more, I think that the Department is wedded to the idea of this sanctions regime.
5998. Mr Pollock: There were concerns about the three-year sanction and that offences subject to such a sanction would be listed in regulations and be linked to trigger points. Those trigger points are clearly defined in the Bill and include an overpayment of at least £50,000; a custodial sentence of at least one year; or being found by a court to have committed an offence over a period of at least two years. Those are additional safeguards to ensure that a three-year loss-of-benefit sanction is not applied for anything other than something that is considered to be serious benefit or tax credit fraud offence. Full withdrawal does not apply to all benefits. Some benefits are subject to partial withdrawal, and there is also access to hardship payments, where appropriate.
5999. I am not speaking on behalf of Conrad, but what he tried to say last week about that aspect of the sanctions regime was that these are serious offences. A lengthy court process is gone through in any event to prove fraud. Cases such as these are at the serious end of the spectrum, where time in prison is imposed and/or which involve the loss of £50,000 or more.
6000. Mr Brady: Cautions are being taken away, presumably because more severe sanctions than that are to be imposed. Is there not a case for retaining cautions for what may be considered minor misdemeanours? A caution is cost-neutral in the sense that you take somebody into the office and give them a verbal warning of what they have done and should not repeat or whatever. It seems to be that, otherwise, another more expensive process may be undertaken.
6001. Mr Pollock: I do not know the details of that, Mickey. Conrad covered it when he was here last week. Is there something further?
6002. Mr Brady: On the minor, innocuous stuff, could the person involved be given a verbal caution rather than have it taken any further? Essentially, the Bill does away with cautions altogether. Therefore, an informed decision about whether to take the case further, either in processing the civil penalty or taking the person to court, has to be made. I am trying to make the point that the administration of that may prove more expensive.
6003. Mr Pollock: I was here and heard the rationale, but, for the life of me I cannot recall it. I thought that we had clarified that with you at the time.
6004. Mr Brady: Maybe, we are just getting to that stage where memory lapses are becoming more frequent.
6005. Mr Pollock: OK; we will come back to answer that definitively.
6006. Mr Brady: I have to say that I include myself in that.
6007. The Chairperson: We move on to clause 116.
6008. Mr Pollock: Clauses 116 to 120 are in relation to information sharing.
6009. The Chairperson: You were going to check about the argument from housing associations that they should be included on the list as a relevant body.
6010. Mr Pollock: Ordinarily, it is public bodies that share information and are facilitated by data-sharing clauses, particularly because of security information where you are dealing with personal information. Therefore, I do not envisage that housing associations would need the level of data sharing on personal information that is envisaged in these clauses. Obviously, communication channels with housing associations, the Housing Executive and bodies that provide services to or information on the housing sector are vital. Quite a bit of work is ongoing to - ensure that that is all in place. Other than that, I do not have anything to say.

6011. The Chairperson: I thought that we had agreed last week that we would ask the housing associations why they are saying that they expressly need this.
6012. Mr Pollock: I hold my hands up; I did not have the chance to speak to anyone about that.
6013. The Chairperson: It would help us if someone were to come back to us on that. I know that you already dealt with it there, Michael.
6014. Mr Durkan: What disadvantages might there be to the Department of sharing the information? There are already people with whom this information is shared.
6015. Mr Pollock: Information sharing is governed by data protection legislation. When we are opening data-sharing gateways, we will be looking to ensure that the rights of the individual are protected. If, for example, the Department of Education were to look for information on benefits to passport a family or an individual onto a particular benefit, it would only have access to that snapshot of the benefit databases, so there are protections in there.
6016. Ms M Campbell: There are also costs attached to providing gateways.
6017. The Chairperson: No one sought any specific information on clauses 118 to 120, so we move to clause 121, which deals with supporting maintenance. This is around the consultation on separated families.
6018. Ms Corderoy: We have received the Committee's response as well. We are in the middle of analysing those responses, and we will be putting the Northern Ireland issues that were raised on that to DWP. I do not think that any particular points were raised on that. As we have said before, the issue of fees is still being explored here. It is not in relation to this Bill but in relation to the 2008 Act. The Committee raised two specific queries, and I hope that you received the response to those this week.
6019. The Chairperson: No.
6020. Ms Corderoy: It should have issued last week. It was to do with the cross-border issue of a non-resident parent who is living in another jurisdiction and on the issue that Mr Copeland raised about directors' drawings.
6021. The Chairperson: We do not seem to have received it yet, Jane.
6022. Ms Corderoy: We can chase that. Maybe it will come tomorrow or something. Those queries were separate to this legislation. They were general issues related to child maintenance. I do not know whether there were any issues related to these clauses.
6023. Mr Brady: I have a question on clause 122. Currently, a parent with care can ask the Department to be involved in the collection of the money. That is being taken away. The Department is suggesting that there should be an arrangement for the non-resident parent to make a direct agreement. My difficulty with that, because I have come across cases in the past, is about how that will be enforced. If the Department is involved, there is almost a statutory obligation on the person, and arrears will be allowed to run, unfortunately in many cases, for quite a while, but at least there was an input. Now, with this voluntary arrangement, the non-resident parent can just get away for a long time without paying. What redress, then, does the parent with care have to try to get that money back?
6024. Mr M Byrne: The whole intention behind the new child maintenance scheme is to try to encourage — 6025. Mr Brady: I am not arguing with that principle. The reality is that people are going to see it as a way of getting out of paying maintenance.
6026. Mr M Byrne: No. As soon as a voluntary arrangement breaks down, the parent with care is quite at liberty to come to the Department to seek collection.

6027. Mr Brady: Can they do that after the first week? They may be told that the payment is just late.
6028. Mr M Byrne: It may be that just one payment has been missed. If the parent with care has evidence that the agreement has broken down and payments are not forthcoming — 6029. Mr Brady: It is really to tighten up on that.
6030. Mr M Byrne: — they will be able to apply for the money to be collected through the statutory scheme.
6031. Mr Brady: That needs to be done fairly quickly because even one or two weeks can make a huge difference.
6032. The Chairperson: OK. There are a number of clauses still to deal with. Some issues were raised in relation to clause 123.
6033. Mr Brady: I think that that was about using the system and moving in and out of work in order to get a lower assessment of income.
6034. Mr M Byrne: Clause 123 provides for an indicative maintenance calculation. It does not bind anyone in any way. An indicative calculation that is made today will be based on the circumstances as at today as to what might be expected to be paid, but if the circumstances change in six months' time, they can come back and — 6035. Mr Brady: I understand that, but it gives an advantage, if that is the right word, to the non-resident parent to move in and out of situations where, on the day, they can produce evidence that they are earning a certain amount but on the following day, they could be earning twice as much. That is the point that I am making.
6036. Mr M Byrne: I suppose that if both parties are not happy with the indicative calculation, they can always come for a formal calculation, which will be based on income —
6037. Mr Brady: I accept the point, but it is all about people taking responsibility for their obligations. Unfortunately, human nature being what it is, a lot of people do not. This gives them the opportunity to abuse the system.
6038. Mr M Byrne: I suppose that there is the possibility for abuse anywhere in the system.
6039. The Chairperson: I suppose what you are saying, Maurice, is that if someone declares today that their earnings are at a certain level, a calculation is made on that basis, but if on the following day their earnings are increased, there would be a further calculation.
6040. Mr M Byrne: They could come back and ask for another one, but I do not know just how often a person would ask for an indicative calculation just to see, if they went through the system, how much they would be expected to pay so that they can come to some sort of agreement between themselves to pay a reasonable amount.
6041. Mr Brady: To finish, the point that I was making is that it is more advantageous to the non-resident parent than to the parent with care.
6042. Mr M Byrne: I appreciate what you are saying.
6043. The Chairperson: OK, fair enough. We will move on to clause 124; I am sorry, clause 125.
6044. Ms Corderoy: To clarify, clause 125 is not about introducing fees. It is about specifying where there would be a waiver for fees and that if fees were to be introduced, there would be a review within two and a half years. Again, however, no decision has been taken to introduce that here.
6045. We could probably reassure some of the stakeholders who commented on this issue that there are no plans to privatise the child maintenance service. I do not know where that impression came from.
6046. Mr Brady: There are no plans at the moment.
6047. Mr F McCann: There are no immediate plans.

6048. Ms Corderoy: There are no immediate plans.
6049. Mr Brady: That is almost becoming a mantra.
6050. The Chairperson: There was another issue around the 30-month period.
6051. Ms Corderoy: The review, yes. That is included in the consultation document that the Committee responded to. The period of 30 months is not up for review in the consultation. It is just in respect of what should be looked at as part of that review and what sort of issues should be raised.
6052. The only comment from stakeholders about clause 126 was positive; NIPSA welcomed that. This is where parents who are declared bankrupt still have to meet the debt owed on their child maintenance.
6053. The Chairperson: Fair enough. Are members happy enough with that? There were no comments on clauses 127, 128 or 129. Are members happy enough with clause 129? It is the one where there was a wee bit of argument about jurisdiction, the Secretary of State and stuff like that.
6054. Clause 130 concerns any shortfall in the public expenditure for an interim period of two years in relation to the rate relief scheme. It relates to subordinate legislation, and that will be subject to normal scrutiny. I take it that you have no further information on that?
6055. Ms Corderoy: The information that we have is that the Executive have agreed to preserve the existing entitlements for up to two years and fund any shortfall out of public expenditure for an interim two-year period.
6056. The Chairperson: OK; fair enough. There were no comments on clauses 131, 132, 133 or 134. Is there anything that you want to add?
6057. Mr Durkan: I will just go back to clause 130 on the rate relief schemes. The Department told the Committee:
- “The Executive has agreed to preserve the existing entitlements for up to two years and fund any shortfall out of public expenditure for an interim period. That provision will provide the legislative cover for that holding operation, but it will also provide for any new rate support scheme that may emerge beyond then.”*
6058. When you say that it will also provide for any new rate support scheme, does that mean that it will provide the legislative cover or that it will fund any shortfall?
6059. Mr Pollock: It is just the cover.
6060. The Chairperson: A couple of points were raised about schedule 1, one of which was from Citizens Advice.
6061. Ms M Campbell: We covered that earlier. Those will be treated as earnings.
6062. The Chairperson: Are Members happy enough with this so far? You will be very pleased to know that we have covered it all.
6063. As I said this morning, it is important for members to note that the document was provided by the Committee Clerk on the basis of all the written and oral submissions received and the points raised by members. It is very important that people do not see it as a definitive document. If you wake up after your supper tonight and realise that there was something that you did not raise, you can raise it in the morning. The document is a best guess. It is very good and efficient, and I want to thank the Committee Clerk for it. However, it is not definitive. There may be issues that members want to raise, and you are totally and utterly free to do that. If it is not in this document, feel free to raise it.
6064. Mr Brady: I thought that the Committee Clerk was going update the document for tomorrow.
6065. The Chairperson: I am reminding members because I do not want them to say tomorrow, next week or next month that they did not get a chance to raise something. If you have any issues of concern with the Bill that are not contained in the paper presented by Kevin, this is your chance to raise them, whatever they might be. Sammy, it is just important that you say this to your colleagues as well. I am concerned that people think that this is what we are working on exclusively. I do not want any omissions by default. I am making that very clear to members. We will be back here tomorrow morning.

6066. Mr Douglas: Chair, is there any word from the Business Committee? It is meeting today.
6067. The Chairperson: I have not heard anything. I am very diligent about keeping my phone switched off. I have not received any text messages. I think that the debate is scheduled for Monday.
6068. I thank the witnesses for the full day's work today and for helping us in our deliberations once again.
6069. Ms M Campbell: Will we be starting formal clause-by-clause consideration tomorrow?
6070. The Chairperson: I want members to reflect on whether there is anything else in the Bill that is not covered in the paper that they need to pursue in the way that we have done today. Tomorrow morning, we will start with any further points of information that you can provide us with. We will take any outstanding information as early in the deliberations as we can.
6071. Members, please reflect on it overnight, and if there are any issues that you have not been able to raise today, raise them tomorrow morning. We will start tomorrow's meeting with any further information that is available to us and any outstanding issues that are not contained in the paper. Following that — at whatever time that might be — we will start the clause-by-clause consideration of the Bill.
6072. Ms M Campbell: Okey-doke; thank you.
6073. The Chairperson: Thank you very much.

14 November 2012

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Alex Maskey (Chairperson)
 Mr Mickey Brady (Deputy Chairperson)
 Ms Paula Bradley
 Ms Pam Brown
 Mr Gregory Campbell
 Mrs Judith Cochrane
 Mr Michael Copeland
 Mr Sammy Douglas
 Mr Mark Durkan
 Mr Fra McCann
 Mr David McClarty

Witnesses:

Ms Martina Campbell Department for Social Development
 Mr Mickey Kelly
 Mr Conrad McConnell
 Mr Michael Pollock

6074. The Chairperson: I formally welcome everybody to the meeting as we resume our scrutiny of the Welfare Reform Bill. I remind members, and urge everyone in the room, to switch off all telephones and other electronic devices. I remind people that this particular room is the worst for interference from phones. You heard the presentation from the Hansard people telling us that there is very bad reception in here, so will people switch off their phones, please? I ask members to declare any interest relevant to the agenda today. If nothing is to be declared, we will move on. There are no apologies and nothing under Chairperson's business, so we are straight into the Welfare Reform Bill.

6075. There are a couple of procedural positions to remind ourselves of today. Today's meeting is for the Committee to try to establish a clear position on each of the key issues considered at yesterday's meeting and, in fact, throughout the Committee Stage of the Bill and to decide how it wishes to proceed on those. Having decided on how it wishes to proceed, the Committee will then forward those issues to the Department and ask the Department whether it is willing to make the changes as requested by the Committee. On receipt of the Department's responses — for example, the Department may refuse to amend a particular clause as requested by the Committee — the Committee can then decide how it wishes to proceed. For example, the Committee may lay down its own amendment, seek assurances from the Minister or include any recommendations in its report.

6076. The papers you have in front of you today are the issues paper based on yesterday's discussion, which also includes a range of general options open to us; the Committee Clerk's original issues paper; the report by the Examiner of Statutory Rules on the delegated powers memorandum; and the Bill itself. The Committee Clerk has prepared a summary of the issues discussed yesterday, which you have in front of you, identifying, as best he can, where the Committee may wish to consider further action. Again, those may or may not be relevant to the Committee, or members may want to take action on other parts of the Bill in addition to those. It is entirely in the hands of members. I stress that the paper presented by the Committee Clerk is a best guess of where the Committee is at, but that does not mean that it is not open to any member to raise any other issue that is not referred to in the papers you have in front of you. It is entirely open to every member to raise any issue in the Bill for discussion or amendment. We will start off today using the Committee Clerk's paper just to inform ourselves of where we left off yesterday.

6077. Quite a number of officials are kindly here this morning. I thank them for being here. The purpose of their attendance is to help us if we need any further assistance as we go through the Bill. Obviously, the Department is not involved in the discussions. Those are entirely and exclusively a matter for the Committee. I thank the Department for being here in such numbers and seniority. I am not sure how often we might have to avail ourselves of your information. Hopefully, it will not be that much.

6078. Mr F McCann: They are ganging up.

6079. The Chairperson: There are more of you than there are of us.

6080. I propose that we work through the issues in the paper that the Committee Clerk has tabled this morning. That picks up from where we were yesterday. I suggest that we work our way through particular clauses today. There may well be some amendments that people want to put forward that will be easily agreed unanimously — there may be no contention — but there may be others that require a little bit more thought from members or to which members have direct opposition. Notwithstanding any of that, I suggest that, as has been done quite a few times before, if someone wants to put an amendment forward, we can discuss it. If there is direct opposition, people might want to push that to a vote, but I recommend that, if people want to table amendments, they can table them and discuss them, and we can seek information from the Clerk of Bills over the next couple of days on whether or not they are actually competent. That is without prejudice to how members would eventually vote on the amendment that is formally tabled.

6081. In other words, if someone has an amendment that they want to put forward, let them do so and have a discussion around that with the rest of the members. Then, let us seek from the Clerk of Bills information on whether that amendment would be competent if formally put to the meeting. It is without prejudice to anyone's eventual voting on it. That allows people to fully explore that. We do not have any extra days, so we have a tight time frame to work through, but we are still within our time to table amendments, discuss them, check them for competency and then formally vote on them, if that is what people want to do. So, I am asking for people's indulgence, if you like. If there is an issue that they are not entirely sure about, at least let us go and check for competency. There may not be that many of those, if any. I am just giving that as general guidance this morning.

6082. OK. So are members happy enough to start? The way we left it yesterday was that the Department will get back to us on some issues, but I am presuming — in fact, I have been advised — that we do not have any updates at this moment in time. I did not really expect there to be any for obvious reasons; it was only yesterday that we were here. So, for the record, I just wanted to say that there are no further updates from the Department at this stage. We will get those updates at a later stage in the next few days.

6083. I reminded members yesterday that the issues paper presented by the Committee Clerk was not necessarily definitive. So, do members want to raise any issues at this point that were not included in that paper? If not, are we happy to move on to the paper in front of us today?

6084. Mr Brady: There are some amendments that I want members to discuss without those necessarily going to any sort of formalised vote or anything like that. I think that we need to bear in mind that the Standing Order issue will come up on Monday, hopefully, and depending on what happens there, the Ad Hoc Committee may have some bearing on any decisions, suggestions or anything else that comes out of today. So it is really about throwing out some suggested amendments for members to discuss. I think that there is consensus on the issues in the legislation that are causing members problems.

6085. The Chairperson: I take that on board. That will obviously be on members' minds. However, for the record, we have to work on the basis that we are at scrutiny stage and, therefore, have to complete our work programme within the time frame envisaged, with the report finalised and forwarded by 27 November. There are a number of factors for members to bear in mind, not least the consultation on universal credit, David Freud's intervention, and so on and so forth. Members will have all those issues in mind. That is why I am saying that members should feel free to raise any issue of concern today by tabling an amendment. As I said, if there is any contention, it does not have to be voted on today, but it needs to be checked for competency. That is the way I want to proceed today.

6086. Mr F McCann: I just want to make a point about today's proceedings. You said that members may table amendments, but that does not take away from our right to table amendments from a party perspective. I just want to put that on the record, because we fell once before when this was brought up and we were accused of not dealing with it through the Committee.
6087. The Chairperson: It is the Committee's responsibility to fully scrutinise the Bill in the here and now. We can seek to amend it in any way that members feel is necessary. Ultimately, any amendments will be voted on. I remind members that the Committee has a number of options open to it. It can table amendments and then either agree to those or not. It can also provide a narrative to the Assembly, with recommendations, observations and suggestions. The Committee may not necessarily feel that amendments are necessary or appropriate for some issues, but I imagine that there will be unanimous support for amendments on a whole range of issues. Let us work our way through that. Those are the options. Members can table amendments, go for direct opposition, introduce new clauses or provide a narrative with recommendations. We have all those options, so members should not feel in any way inhibited.
6088. That is why I am asking for the Committee's indulgence in that — this has been done before and it is good practice — if members table amendments and we are all agreed on those amendments, let us just agree them and put them forward for competency checks, and so on and so forth. However, if there are amendments that members are not 100% sure of, we will let those amendments be tabled so that we can have a discussion about them, and then we will send them away for competency checks, and so on and so forth. Such amendments will then be brought back here, and members will vote on them, if they are tabled. All that will be done without prejudice to members' ultimate voting intentions. Members should feel free — in fact, it is your job — to seek to change the Bill. There is no point, in six months' time, saying, "I could have tabled an amendment". I certainly want to make sure that nobody in the Committee stands accused of not putting their points forward here. Everybody around this table promised that they would give full, maximum and robust scrutiny to the Bill. They have done that so far. That will continue to be the case, because we, as a Committee, need to be able to stand over the work that we have done so far. That is our job, and we are doing it professionally. We will be judged against that.

6089. If members are happy that that is the general approach that should be taken, we will move on. It will be important that members put forward amendments, if they have them. They can have them recorded and checked.
6090. I will take members through the papers. One details the issues that the Committee may wish to consider in the context of possible changes to the Bill. The first item in the issues paper is clause 2, which is in respect of claims. The main approach that was discussed by the Committee was that applicants should have the choice. In other words, the default position should be a fortnightly payment, and in the case of joint applications, there should be the choice to receive a split payment. There are a number of issues around the recipient and the nature of who the recipient might be. If I remember correctly, the discussions around this revealed that some of it could be a split payment. It does not have to be, but it could be down to the recipient and what category of person the recipient might be, and whether it is a main carer or whatever. Again, there are a number of issues around the claims.

6091. Mr Brady: As regards frequency of payment, the Minister stated:

“the IT system functionality will be developed to enable the computer system, where necessary, to split the payment between the two parties in the household and, again where necessary, to make two smaller payments a month rather than the single full monthly payment. In the majority of cases, there will be a single monthly payment to each household in receipt of universal credit, but these payment flexibilities will allow for different payment arrangements where necessary, not least where vulnerable customers will find budgeting difficult. With that in mind, I have tasked my officials to develop and consult public representatives and voluntary sector representatives on a set of guidelines for determining the circumstances when the universal credit payment should be split or made on a twice-monthly basis.”

6092. We should not rely on guidelines. We do not know what may or may not be in the guidelines or regulations. I suggest that it needs to be written into the Bill. The guidelines or regulations can then adhere to that, but it needs to be part of the Bill. A lot of the stakeholders talked about various issues around the regularity of payments, including the issues of the main carer, the second earner and the split payments, particularly in cases in which there is the potential for domestic violence. I throw that out to get people’s views on it. Obviously, there is a default position. If people want to be paid monthly, there should be a choice. That needs to be part of the Bill as opposed to some nebulous idea that it may be in the guidelines.

6093. If you are going to talk about vulnerability and who does or does not need more or less frequent payments, it very much comes down to subjective decisions that are made by front line social security officers as opposed to being able to follow actual legislation. That is important. I do not think that it is contentious. They have talked about the banking systems that are undeveloped. If the wherewithal is in the IT system, why do you need to rely on some untried system that they have been talking about or that they may or may not talk about? It seems to be unnecessary. Are there any views on that?

6094. The Chairperson: OK. Patricia, I just want your guidance on some of this, if you are happy to do that.

6095. Mr G Campbell: I am unclear about what is meant by the reference in clause 2 about the choice of fortnightly payment and then the default position. Is the amendment suggesting that the default position is fortnightly?

6096. The Chairperson: I think so because that would mirror the views of most of the stakeholders.

6097. Mr G Campbell: Would that mean that for what I presume would be the bulk of claimants who would simply want things to remain as they are and would not be proactive in trying to change them, that they would, upon commencement of the new system, be recipients on a fortnightly basis unless they chose otherwise? Is that the effect of this?

6098. The Chairperson: I presume that that would be the outworking, yes.

6099. Mr G Campbell: Right, and for them to want to change, they would have to say, “No, I prefer to have it monthly”?

6100. The Chairperson: Yes.

6101. Mr G Campbell: Just so we are clear.

6102. The Chairperson: In the same way, Gregory, that the Department’s initial view was that people would get their rent paid to them. That was a change, and the flexibility was agreed that the rent would be paid directly to the landlord. That is the default position; you can opt out of it.

6103. Mr G Campbell: For me, there are two issues. One is the choice of the claimant, which would be met in that, although because the default position is fortnightly, I think that would mean, human nature being what it is, that most people would just have the default position because most people do not proactively ask for change if they have been accustomed to a particular system for a long time, rather than the default position being monthly unless they chose fortnightly.

6104. Cost is another issue. What would the greater cost be if the default position is the one that is likely to pertain for most claimants? I have no figures, but I assume that only a minority of people would proactively say no. What is the cost implication of that as opposed to the reverse being the case? I presume that the Department will tell us in due course.
6105. The Chairperson: I think that the Department said yesterday that there would be a handling charge or something of that nature. One thing that will guide me in this is that there will be some things that I would like to see being done, whether in this Bill or in something else. So, if that is what I want to see done, I will try to secure that. Of course, when the Committee completes its report and puts it to the Assembly, that report is not binding on the Assembly or the Department, as you know. In the course of debate, the Minister or the Department may say that that is all very well but that it will cost x number of pounds, and that, therefore, it is prohibitive. You will get arguments about whether the amendments are appropriate, costly or involve parity. I presume that all those issues will come into the debate. It will then be up to all Members and all parties in the Assembly to vote according to the outworkings of those discussions.
6106. What will guide me is that some things we will eventually be told cost x number of pounds. When I looked at the issue of the handling charge a while ago, the figures that you would be talking about across the whole of the North would be less than some regions in England, Scotland and Wales. The exceptions in, say, the north-west of England would be larger than the whole cohort here. Therefore, if it is accepted over there that it will cost more than the whole budget here would be for the handling of it, I do not think that that is a credible argument. However, that is my opinion. The figures will be presented to us in the debate by the Minister and Department accordingly. I expect that there will be a lot of twists and turns in those arguments. At present, my approach is that if I want something changed, I will try to get it changed. I may have to be convinced in the course of arguments that that is not sustainable or cannot be delivered. You have to make your choices eventually.
6107. Mr Durkan: I am sympathetic to the suggestion or proposal — it is perhaps just a suggestion — but you mentioned the very point that I was going to mention about the cost per transaction. Gregory raised concerns that we do not have figures in front of us — [Inaudible.] — based on them. It was discussed for long enough yesterday whether we should have those figures in front of us at this stage.
6108. The Chairperson: We should be clear that if we put forward ideas, suggestions, proposals and amendments, the Department will say whether it will endorse them and why it will not. You will then vote on it on the basis of that information.
6109. Mr Douglas: I asked the question yesterday of how much it will cost to change the whole IT system. From what I know, the Department was saying that it is very much about encouraging people to go on to a monthly payment if they want to go into work. Is there any evidence that if people get monthly payments, it will help them when they get a job? They would probably be paid monthly anyway.
6110. Mr Brady: Iain Duncan Smith spoke in the Houses of Parliament — I am sure that Gregory heard him — and his rationale was that if people get paid monthly, they will get used to being paid a monthly salary. The difficulty is that we have a low-wage economy where many people are paid weekly or fortnightly because they are paid the minimum wage.

6111. The Minister said that the IT system functionality will be developed to enable the computer system, where necessary, to split the payment between the two parties in the household and, where necessary, to make two smaller payments a month rather than the single full monthly payment. That will be an integral part of the IT system, and you would presume that if that is effective and fit for purpose, you press a button and you are either paid monthly or fortnightly. I do not think that it will be a huge cost. In the context of England, Scotland, Wales and the North, that is 3% of the population. Therefore, you would imagine, to follow on from what the Chairperson said, that the cost will be greater in, for instance, the north-east of England where there will be divergence and, presumably, people will ask for fortnightly payments. The IT system has the functionality. Sammy asked yesterday about the difficulties. We will need time to sort this out, but if it is sorted out properly, I am not sure why it should be a problem.

6112. Mr G Campbell: I am not hard and fast on this other than if the cost proves to be prohibitive. However, I want to pick up the point that Sammy made. I take Iain Duncan Smith's rationale that when people are preparing to get into work, you would like to think that the welfare benefit payment system would allow them to make that transition more smoothly by giving them their benefit payments monthly and allowing them to move into work and get their pay monthly. Where a large cadre of people, whether it is because of their geographical disposition or because of their age profile, is unlikely to get permanent employment, that is probably less of a relevant consideration. However, for somebody who is 23 and is temporarily unemployed but hoping to get employment, it may become more of a consideration. I am not hard and fast. The issue is about the default position. Should it be monthly, which will help people who may or who are likely to get into work, or should it be fortnightly, which would facilitate those who are unlikely to get into monthly paid employment and have become accustomed to more frequent payments?

6113. The Chairperson: There is a proposition on the table that we look at an amendment to make that the default position. Is that right, Mickey?

6114. Mr Brady: Yes.

6115. The Chairperson: I do not hear any other people, and my sense of the Committee's discussions until now is that most people broadly agree with that. That is my clear sense, and nobody is indicating to the contrary. Patricia, does that help you to design the amendment or to check it for competency?

6116. The Clerk of Bills: Yes. You might want to consider letting the Department know that that is your idea and see whether it has any concerns. If I am reading this correctly, you had suggested that there would be a choice of fortnightly payments, which would mean that a person could decide or be given an option one way or the other. However, you now seem to be moving to the point that everyone would move to a fortnightly payment unless you opt otherwise. Is that correct?

6117. The Chairperson: Mickey is making that argument.

6118. Mr Brady: Patricia, could I add that universal credit would be payable monthly or twice monthly as requested by the claimant?

6119. The Clerk of Bills: Are you suggesting that the choice should be written into an amendment?

6120. Mr Brady: Yes.

6121. Ms P Bradley: For the likes of tax credits that choice is there already.

6122. Mr Brady: Yes.

6123. Mr Douglas: That is a good point.

6124. Ms P Bradley: I agree with the twice monthly payments because when we read it, it seemed that you would only get that sort of payment in exceptional circumstances. If that had not been the case, we would not have gone on about it so much. Again, put it to the Minister and let him come back to us.
6125. The part about the split payments is a must. That is in the same clause that you were talking about. It definitely has to be put in to protect the vulnerable and children.
6126. The Chairperson: Is it the mind of the Committee that we move forward on the basis of what Mickey has suggested, subject to there being a competent amendment and the Minister's response? Are members content that that is how we proceed?
6127. Members indicated assent.
6128. The Clerk of Bills: I will summarise that and draft something for members that will provide a choice of payment and an ability to have split payments if you so wish.
6129. Ms P Bradley: With a joint application?
6130. The Clerk of Bills: Yes.
6131. The Chairperson: There was an issue about the recipient and the main carer. I am trying to think of the precise details, but a range of organisations raised that issue. They did not all raise the same point, but some sectors argued about the recipient. That might even be on a joint application if you know what I mean. Some of those things are related, but they are not all tied together.
6132. Ms P Bradley: The point about the joint application needs to be a little more steadfast. Those in abusive relationships will have no choice about who gets the money. We need to look at that a bit more and what we say on it needs to be a bit more steadfast. As many of the witnesses said, the person with the main responsibility of care should be the one who gets the — I do not know; I think we need to be a bit more — [Inaudible.]
6133. The Chairperson: I think that that was quite strongly put by all — 6134. Ms P Bradley: If it is left as the payment going to the household in which there is an abusive relationship, you can rest assured that the abuser, whether the male or the female, will take control of the money. It could be either/or.
6135. The Chairperson: That was quite universally put.
6136. Mr Copeland: I want to make sure that I am reading this correctly. Where a joint application is made, they will be able to choose to receive a split payment. Does that mean that they, as individuals, can choose to have a monthly or a fortnightly payment? Do you follow what I mean? In other words, if the payment is split and one person in a couple says that they want it fortnightly and the other wants it monthly, will that option be available?
6137. The Chairperson: You might have to look at that as a consequence. That may or may not happen. I do not know.
6138. Mr Copeland: Complications.
6139. Ms P Bradley: You are already complicating things.
6140. Mr Copeland: I know of people who have to make mortgage payments and who may like to do it like that. I was asked to ask that question.
6141. The Committee Clerk: I just want to clarify that there are at least two distinct issues here. The first is that the default position will be that there will be fortnightly payments. The second is the split payments. Perhaps the view of the Committee might be to make that the default position as well so that when a joint application is made the payment will be split.
6142. The Chairperson: There are three related issues regarding claims. There is the frequency issue, which we have dealt with; there is the option for split payments; and there is the option as to who the money goes to in the first instance in a joint application, and people have, largely, argued for the main carer. That is the point that you were - making, Paula. Therefore, there are three issues, and we have dealt with the first one, which is the frequency. We are now on to the question of split payments. If I remember correctly, people have agreed that there should be the option for split payments. However, there is also the third issue, which is about the main carer being the recipient in a joint application. Is that right?

6143. Mr Brady: We have some suggestions on that, Chair, as well.
6144. Ms P Bradley: I would say so, Chair.
6145. Mr Brady: This is one that I prepared earlier.
6146. The Chairperson: Just one second, Mickey.
6147. The Clerk of Bills: With regard to the recipient option, if you were moving towards a potential amendment, there would need to be some discussion about how you would define “preferred recipient”. To refer to our discussion last week, there are other options for the Committee to raise a concern, make a recommendation or seek an assurance from the Minister as well as an amendment. It may be that you want to have a discussion about other options that you feel are suitable in certain circumstances.
6148. The Committee Clerk: At the risk of too many cooks spoiling the broth, it is on the back page of the issues paper and is referred to as general approaches that the Committee can take. That lays them out in broad terms.
6149. The Clerk of Bills: Members can do more than one of those or they may have a mixture. For example, you might decide that you want potential amendments on the frequency and the split payment in relation to the recipient. You may want the Department to do more work on that and it may be suitable for a recommendation, if that was the way that you were moving.
6150. The Chairperson: As I said earlier, we have a number of options. At present, we are going through two or three, and
- we seem to have agreed on the first two. We have to see whether those amendments are competent and what the Department’s responsibility will be.
6151. Mr Brady: My point deals with gender equality and personal wealth, as some stakeholders talked a lot about that. It is where one or both members are in paid employment with the payment being made to the main carer or second earner. With regard to the split payments, members will be coupled separately in cases where both members are not in paid employment, but the payment will be split on an equal basis — or words to that effect. That is dealing with the split payment and dealing with the main carer and second earner, which is usually the woman.
6152. The Chairperson: Obviously, those are options.
6153. Ms P Bradley: I wanted to talk about what we were saying before Mickey came in there. Would it be a better idea for us to go through all of this today and decide between us what we would like to see changed and then look at it after that to see what we would want to be in an amendment or in a recommendation? We could just look at the changes first. Would it be easier to work it that way rather than trying to pick something and say that we are doing that?
6154. The Chairperson: If I read the Committee, it seems that people have agreed on the need for greater frequency as a choice; they have agreed split payments as a choice; and it seems that we are now agreeing on the main carer or a similar format as being the recipient in a joint application. There may be other issues. It seems that there are those three areas of agreement. As I said earlier, Patricia will look at those over the next day or two for competence and for amendments, and the Department will give us its formal response. Then we will formally vote on whether you want those amendments.
6155. Ms P Bradley: That is better.
6156. The Chairperson: In a way, that is what you were saying, Paula.

6157. Mr G Campbell: Chairman, the issues set out on the back page are very helpful. It is set out in bullet points and covers the issues fairly comprehensively: you can put forward an amendment, written clarification, etc. However, if we went through the issues and then came back and categorised each — if we are definitive about a series of them and we want to put forward amendments, then we do that. If another series of them requires further elaboration, they will fall under a separate category, and so forth, rather than dissecting each individually and going through a navel-gazing exercise in each sector to see where they fit. That may help us to progress the clause-by-clause consideration.
6158. The Chairperson: Sorry, Gregory, I do not totally follow that. I am working on the basis that we consider clause 2, which is around the claims, and then move to clause 4. For example, three issues came up in the first section around clause 2, and people have agreed that that is what they want to go to, and the Department may, for whatever reason, say no or yes. In theory, the Department could say next week that it can embrace two of those but not the third. It will then be up to members to formalise and vote on the proposed amendments.
6160. The Chairperson: OK, let us try to work on that basis. Members have the papers.
6161. The Clerk of Bills: Admissibility has been mentioned a couple of times. Ultimately, the question of admissibility is for the Speaker to decide. We will draft proposed amendments and advise the Committee on whether there is concern about admissibility. The Bill in general is very widely scoped. Therefore, some of the admissibility criteria will relate to whether your proposed amendments are relevant. The fact that the Bill is so widely scoped will make the admissibility criteria a bit easier. I will advise you on that as time goes on. I am looking for you to indicate areas where you are leaning towards submitting an amendment, just to give me as much policy framework as you can so that I can come back with something on it.
6162. The Chairperson: Based on the latter part of our discussion, we will work through the paper before us. As Gregory suggested, where people put forward amendments, you will consider whether we need an amendment, whether we need more information, whether the Department might embrace our concerns or whether it is sufficient that the Committee deals with it by way of a recommendation to the Assembly. We will work through the paper, but the paper is not exhaustive and people need to be mindful that we will return to anything that they are interested in when we complete this exercise. Are members content that we have dealt with clause 2 on the claims elements?
6163. Members indicated assent.
6164. The Chairperson: Clause 4 is “Basic conditions”. There was a fair bit of discussion around the fact that a claim would fall completely if one person in a joint claim failed to sign a commitment within a specified time-framed cooling-off period. I recollect that the Committee’s view, which I share, was that that was not acceptable. That is one of the issues. Do members have a view on that?
6165. Mr Brady: Yes. We have been told that if one of the couple does not agree to sign, there could be a four-week

- cooling-off period during which no money is paid. Would it not be possible for the willing signatory to make an application as a single claimant and have responsibility for housing costs and children tied to them and not the other person? There is a cooling-off period, but you have to assume that if someone, for whatever reason, is unwilling to sign it initially, it would be brought forward by the Department. Four weeks seems grossly unfair on the person who is willing to sign the claimant commitment and fall into line with the requirements that are set by the Department.
6166. The Chairperson: In the evidence that we received, people were generally, if not universally, of the view that it would be very unfair to penalise a claimant who was compliant with the commitment for someone else's failure. Are members agreed that the Committee does not think that that is fair and that we want that rectified?
- Members indicated assent.*
6167. Mr Brady: I do not want to be seen to be dictating the pace, but this is something that I have gone through and thought about. It is predicated on issues that stakeholders have discussed with the Committee. It is not out of kilter with what has already been discussed by the Committee and, indeed, brought to the table by stakeholders.
6168. The Chairperson: In fairness —
6169. Mr Brady: It is inherently unfair to penalise someone who is willing to do something.
6170. The Chairperson: The Committee agrees; you can rest your case. In fairness, the Committee has deliberated thoroughly on these matters, and members have made their positions clear. It will boil down to how many amendments people want to make and what recommendations they want to make on a mixture of any or all of the bullet points on the back page.
6171. Members and stakeholders were keen that third-party verification be available.
6172. Ms P Bradley: I am definitely for that. At present, your social worker or whoever else can verify who you are. As we said yesterday, there are many cases where people have had to leave their house without all the documentation that they need.
6173. The Chairperson: Are members content to agree that?
- Members indicated assent.*
6174. The Chairperson: The third point is the concern about 16- and 17-year-olds coming out of care. People are looking to see whether they can be added to the list of specified groups.
6175. Ms P Bradley: Yesterday, the Department spoke about those coming out of care. Until what age does the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety have to look after someone coming out of care? What is its cut-off age? Is it 18?
6176. Mr Brady: It was 18.
6177. The Chairperson: It is 18, I think.
6178. Ms P Bradley: Up until the cut off, the Department of Health is the one that financially supports you if you are coming out of care; it is not the Department for Social Development.
6179. Mr Brady: There may be other 16- and 17-year-olds, and if those kids have signed up for schemes but have not yet got a placement, it is unfair that provision is not made for them. It may not apply to many people. Recently, I had an issue in my constituency where social services in conjunction with a housing association will have a number of flats that children can move into and move on. It will be well staffed and looked after. There are kids who are estranged from the family home for whatever reason and who do not come under that category.
6180. Ms P Bradley: They will be under the health service.
6181. Mr Brady: It is incumbent on all of us to have a safety net for all those vulnerable

- people who have a statutory obligation to be looked after.
6182. Ms P Bradley: I agree. There are many young people who are not academic. We see the figures for children leaving school at 16, some of whom cannot read and write for various reasons. It could be through dyslexia, for example, and we need to protect those young people as well. In an ideal world, we want everyone to stay on at school until they are 18. However, that does not happen.
6183. The Chairperson: Fair enough. I am getting the impression that there is general agreement on this.
6184. Mr F McCann: This year, it was announced in the Assembly that 36,000 young people left school with no GCSEs.
6185. The Chairperson: Under clause 4, “Basic conditions”, the Committee has three points of concern. Are members content that they want the Bill amended to reflect those concerns?
- Members indicated assent.*
6186. The Chairperson: Clause 6 relates to restrictions on entitlement. People are concerned about the prescribed period for which payment will not be made, which is that such a prescribed period may not exceed seven days. If I remember correctly, that also related to the underlying entitlements and passported benefits. If I am wrong about that, I am sure that I will be corrected. Does anyone have a specific recommendation or amendment on that?
6187. Mr Brady: People would not get paid in under seven days, so there was going to be an issue around passported benefits. That is bound to be a problem. That concern was expressed by a number of stakeholders and members.
6188. The Chairperson: Is there a remedy or proposal?
6189. Mr Brady: I am not sure, but it needs to be looked at. Perhaps there could be some discussion around the issue.
6190. The Chairperson: Members had shared concerns about entitlement. Do you want to reflect on that or ask the Department to come back and clarify?
6191. Mr F McCann: Mickey has laboured the concern for a considerable time that 10p could knock somebody out of passported benefits. We probably need clarification on that. Martina touched on that yesterday during one of the discussions.
6192. The Chairperson: Martina, are you in a position to elaborate on that?
6193. Mr Michael Pollock (Department for Social Development): We can clarify that although there may be no payment, the entitlement would persist. That would preserve entitlement to passported benefits. That may give you some assurance.
6194. The Chairperson: Thanks for that.
6195. Members will have heard that there is some assurance there, which is part of our guidance as to how we might deal with the issue. We have an assurance. People may want to test that at some point. You have dealt with that by way of an assurance from the Department. I remind members that they can table an amendment in Committee or in the Assembly. That option is still open.
6196. Mr Douglas: Chair, we have been through all this stuff before. I am struggling to recall what my notes were at the time and what the issues were. Is it possible to get the Bill folder? There are so many things that it is hard to remember what the issues were.
6197. The Chairperson: The large Bill folder is available if any members want to see it. Members should feel free to ask if they are not sure about something. This is an important part of your statutory responsibility in the Assembly, so make sure that you follow up any concerns. If members are happy enough, we will move on to clause 10, which is the issue of responsibility for children and young people.

6198. There is some concern about the possible loss of the disability element of tax credit. The Department has indicated that for those in receipt of it, the higher earnings disregard and the taper should make up any reduction in income as a result of the change. However, new claimants will not be able to avail themselves of it.
6199. Mr F McCann: Some concern was voiced yesterday that people who are currently on it will be entitled to it, but there will be a difference for people who go on it. Any change in circumstances for those already in receipt of benefit will knock them out of the benefit. I think that I raised that issue a couple of weeks ago. So it is not as straightforward as it states in the paper. Any change of circumstances at all will be seen as those people coming out of that benefit, so it will eventually have an impact on the vast majority of people coming through, and there will, therefore, be a reduction in the amount of money that they receive.
6200. The Chairperson: I suppose that that could be new claimants or new claims by different claimants. It is more appropriate to state that. That is a consequence, Fra, and you have rightly drawn attention to it. Michael Copeland, were you looking in?
6201. Mr Copeland: No.
6202. The Chairperson: You have some of the concerns in front of you. Are there any suggestions, proposals, suggested amendments or considerations that you want the Department to take on board?
6203. Mr F McCann: For clarification, how many people will be affected by it immediately, and how many people will be protected in the short term?
6204. The Chairperson: I presume that the people “protected”, as you describe it, Fra, will only be those who are currently receiving it, but they are protected only until they make a new claim.
6205. Mr F McCann: It is short term.
6206. The Chairperson: They are protected as long as their claim does not change.
6207. Mr F McCann: How many people will be affected by it?
6208. The Chairperson: I presume all of them at some point.
6209. Mr F McCann: Of course. I am asking for a figure.
6210. The Chairperson: Do we have figures?
6211. Ms Martina Campbell (Department for Social Development): I think that I gave you figures yesterday on the number of disabled tax credit claimants who are in receipt of the disability premium. I do not think that I gave you figures, and I do not have them with me, on the number of people currently getting the disability premium within income support, for example. We would have to request that from the agency.
6212. Mr F McCann: Thanks very much.
6213. Mr Brady: The change will mean the difference between about £58 and £27. It is a fair amount of money, and it needs to be addressed in more detail. The figures on the number of people affected will be important. It is over £20 a week. The rationale is to spread the money out more evenly, but if a child has a disability, he or she has a disability. The purpose of the severe disability premium is to enhance the quality of such children's lives. Essentially, you are lessening that by taking away a sum of money.
6214. The Chairperson: How do we want to proceed? We have a number of options. We can table an amendment, a statement of concern or make a recommendation. We could do a number of things. We should remind ourselves that, as Gregory pointed out earlier, we have a number of options at every stage of the way.
6215. Mr Copeland: We need to establish the cost before we can do anything. That will be a repeating theme throughout, because we do not have the information to take the decisions.

6217. Clause 11 deals with housing. The key issue, again, was underoccupancy. There was concern that if people take a part-time job, they would lose the support for mortgage interest. The Department outlined that that would be to do with earnings disregards, tapers, and so on. There is also an issue around the definition of a “room”. The policy intent was outlined by the Department. I was very struck by the Housing Executive’s presentation to the Committee, but [Inaudible.]
6218. Mr Copeland: There are also issues around people who have had their homes adapted by the provision of a disabled bedroom, which leaves a bedroom free. It is rather unjust to ask them to pay a levy on the free bedroom. Again, it comes down to cost.
6219. The Chairperson: There are options, although, later this month, there will be an intervention from David Freud, so people might want to take that into consideration. I spoke to the Minister about the issue. I was concerned by his recent assertion that he would not change this, because it seemed to fly in the face of meeting with David Freud and looking for flexibilities. I am sure that they are still looking for flexibilities. Again, take that into account. Does anyone have an amendment to propose?
6220. Mr Brady: The straightforward option would be to remove the underoccupancy provision. The Minister talked about Freud coming over to assess the impact, but he has already pre-empted the outcome of that visit with the information he gave to a correspondent last Friday.
6221. One of the big issues with underoccupancy here has been the lack of suitable alternative accommodation. It would not be going too far to introduce words such as “unless suitable alternative accommodation is available” in the Bill. The Housing Executive made a very good point that if the measure were introduced in the morning, it would not be able to implement it.
6222. Another issue is the nature of housing in the North in general and particularly in places such as north Belfast. In normal circumstances, it would be considered that there is suitable alternative accommodation in north Belfast. However, we do not have normal circumstances, and that is part of the difficulty. That is why there cannot be a one-size-fits-all provision. The housing situation in the south-east or north-east of England has no particular bearing on the housing situation here. That has to be borne in mind.
6223. Mr G Campbell: From what I can see, under point 5, we are seeking a response, although the Department has been fairly clear. This is a key issue, and I agree with the point that has been made. If push came to shove and this was implemented next week, there would be a serious issue with the practical outworking of the policy in that the housing providers would not be able to provide accommodation because there is not the practical availability of suitable property.
6224. We need something from the Department. Receipt of that, and whatever Lord Freud elaborates on, should take us to the point at which we have to make a definitive decision on how we try to remedy it. As it stands, it will be exceptionally difficult to implement.
6225. The Chairperson: From all the discussion so far in Committee, I take it that most people do not like the idea of underoccupancy for the reasons that you outlined, Gregory. People do not see it as fair or practical and think that it will have serious repercussions. Therefore, at this stage, the Committee does not support that provision. As a result of David Freud’s intervention, the Executive may come up with something or the Department may embrace something. However, the Committee needs to state its mind on the provision. I am taking it that the Committee does not like the underoccupancy provision in the Bill.

6226. Mr Durkan: There are huge practical problems that people have outlined not only today but many times previously. There will be massive financial implications in implementing the policy. It is worth establishing the cost of not proceeding with the underoccupancy provision so that it can be compared with the cost of proceeding with it. That is important when so many people will be made homeless as a result. In addition to the massive financial cost, there will be a societal cost.
6227. The Chairperson: That is the displacement cost that was referred to.
6228. Mr Brady: There are a number of options, one of which is to not introduce it at all. The second option deals with the problem of having no suitable alternatives. If you are going to introduce something about there being no suitable alternative accommodation available, you will have to write in something to reflect the particular circumstances that prevail in the North. That would have to define the criteria for suitable alternative accommodation. You have to take into account the existing housing strategy; the legacy of segregation; the right of people with disabilities to independent living, which has already been talked about with regard to adaptations; people's informal caring responsibilities; and the impact on family life. In many cases, with this legislation, you may be talking about displaced costs. You will be talking about people possibly being made homeless. There will be an impact on health, so costs will shift to other areas.
6229. There are other options, such as underoccupancy that allows one spare room without the loss-of-housing-benefit penalty or the exclusion of box rooms. I know that the Department talked about 4 feet by 10 feet, which is 40 square feet. There are issues that may open up that discussion. In some cases, people would end up sleeping diagonally in some of those small rooms. I think that the Department had originally talked about 6 feet by 10 feet, which is 60 square feet. Certainly, the most up-to-date size that we have is 40 square feet.
6230. Mr Pollock: It is 40 square feet.
6231. Mr Brady: So the size of a box room has been reduced. Those are just suggestions, Chair.
6232. Mr F McCann: I want to follow on from that. Mickey has covered some of the issues. The clause on underoccupancy highlights the fact that people do not understand the way in which housing operates here. There are a couple of issues. The number of people who will be affected is 32,500. Over the next two years, only [Inaudible.] units will be built to accommodate that. Since its introduction, around 12,000 people have already been affected by the shared room allowance, which taps into the discretionary payment fund. So people who are in private rented accommodation tap into the discretionary payment fund. Even the increase, if you have 32,500 people, is certainly not enough, but it is short term. So you will be picking that up.
6233. When people from the housing associations were here as witnesses, they said that although they oppose it, they still have to get money. That was in terms of evictions. At some stage, there could be large-scale evictions. In the survey that was conducted in Portadown and Lurgan, the vast majority of people said that they would not move. You will end up with direct confrontation between tenants and housing providers. It throws up all sorts of difficulties. All that needs to be taken into consideration.
6234. Mr Douglas: On Monday, in response to your question, Chair, the Minister said:
"Delaying this change will directly cost the Northern Ireland Executive up to £9 million."
6235. It is interesting. My main point is that he went on to say:
"I will be happy to discuss with the Committee a range of measures that we will bring forward that make sure we can address this and mitigate the difficulty without the burden of a further £9 million on the Executive."
6236. I am sure that the Committee to which he refers is us. He is saying that he would be willing to discuss that. I

- wonder whether there is an opportunity. I know that time is running on for some of the issues. It would be good to have an eyeball-to-eyeball discussion with the Minister on some of those issues. The Department has done a good job. It would be very helpful if we could get the Minister to discuss some of the key issues. Have you suggested it?
6237. The Chairperson: I will tell you what I was going to suggest. A number of members have already raised the issue of underoccupancy and the impact that it is likely to have. The shared view in the Committee seems to be that members do not like it. They are very concerned about it. They share concerns that have already been raised by key stakeholders. We would prefer that that underoccupancy provision was not in the Bill. So, as I say, we are getting into those kinds of arguments. You can see that where a number of those issues are raised, there is broad agreement. There is no real opposition to any of them. So on that issue — I will bring in Gregory in a wee second — people around the table seem to be saying universally that they do not like it. They want the Department and/or the Minister to deal with it. How they deal with it is — 6238. Mr Douglas: Chair, I do not think that there will be broad agreement on all those matters. We are not quite sure what the implications are, even at this stage. However, there are certainly broad concerns, particularly on that issue. As I think that I said yesterday, that is the main issue that people have been asking me about, whether it has been in my constituency office or up here.
6239. The Chairperson: The only option that we have, in that regard, is to make clear our opposition to it. It is then up to the Minister or the Department to come back with a response. You have outlined some of that, Gregory.
6240. Mr G Campbell: It is a general point, Chair. We are coming around to the issue that is the elephant in the room. I think that there will be a broad consensus on what we would like to happen and the changes that we want in the Bill, but when it comes down to it, there will be issues — whether it is underoccupancy or a series of other things — on which the Department will say, “Yes, we can do that, and if we do it, here is the cost.” Sammy quoted what the Minister said.
6241. At that point, every one of us can say that that is still our position. However, the man sitting down there has to take a decision. He is the man who says, “If I do what the Committee wants, I have to go and find £x million.” We can all say that we think that it is right that he should do it, but he has to go and get the money from somewhere. That is the bottom line. Whatever we do, there are consequences, alternatives, choices and costs. I am more than happy to go along to try to get a consensus to make what is, initially, a partly unacceptable Bill more acceptable, but at the end of it, a hard choice has to be made, and we cannot duck it.
6242. The Chairperson: You are spot on. The process of working here is that we are saying what we are unhappy with, or what we want to see done. Obviously, there may be competency or admissibility issues, as the Clerk of Bills has described it. The Department and/or the Minister will come back and say, “Yes, that is a very good idea, but it will cost too much” or “It cannot be done.”
6243. Equally, it is also up to the Minister to seek to get that flexibility. Some of it may not cost money. He may have a conversation with Mr Freud and get one of those flexibilities that he said he would grant. So it is conceivable.
6244. The Committee needs to state clearly what it is for and what it is against. We may eventually have to take decisions, which will undoubtedly involve hard choices. You are absolutely right on that, but the Committee needs to have a view on what it wants to do and what it wants to see happening. I take it that, at the moment, members are opposed to the current provisions on underoccupancy. That is what we are stating. So it is up to them to convince us otherwise. We will then take a formal decision on it,

- whether it means opposing that clause or whatever the precise mechanism might be. Subject to the response we receive, we will return to clause 11 formally. Is that fair enough?
6245. The Clerk of Bills: It might be helpful if the Department can clarify that voting against the clause refers to clause 11. There is no reference that I can see to “underoccupancy”. So I assume — 6246. Mr Pollock: It is clause 69.
6247. The Clerk of Bills: I was looking at clause 11 [Inaudible.] regulations.
6248. Mr Pollock: Clause 11 deals with housing costs.
6249. The Chairperson: Will whoever is going to address that come to the table to facilitate Hansard? We are not picking up the sound. I am sorry, it is not your fault. The sound in the room is not good.
6250. Mr Pollock: Clause 11 deals with housing costs under universal credit. The clause that introduces underoccupancy is clause 69.
6251. The Chairperson: Are you happy enough with that, Patricia? Thank you for that, Michael.
6252. Mr F McCann: I want to make a short point. I accept Gregory’s point and what you have said. We need to work towards agreeing flexibilities that allow us to deal with the issue. We also need to work out the consequences of our accepting the Bill. We could be dealing with large-scale evictions. A figure of £18 million has been quoted as the cost; Sammy quoted £9 million. However, if that is the consequence of saving people from being evicted, we must pick up the bill. We need to find the money.
6253. The Chairperson: I do not contradict that for a second, Fra. At the moment, the Committee has made it clear that it is against that provision because of the impact that it will have.
6254. Mr F McCann: Gregory has said that there is a cost consequence. You can look at the cost consequence both ways. The cost of our not dealing with that and its leading to evictions or serious problems may be a cost that we want to bear.
6255. The Chairperson: That is right, but it is subject to the response that we receive.
6256. Mr F McCann: I appreciate that.
6257. The Chairperson: Ultimately, those are the considerations on which you will have to base your vote. Is that fair enough?
6258. Mr Douglas: During this process, people have come to us and suggested things that have an attached cost. At some stage, it would be good to know the overall cost of some of the things that we want to implement, never mind clause 69.
6259. The Chairperson: The second point is about support for mortgage interest. That concern was fairly widely debated. The concerns included people taking part-time work that may exclude them from mortgage interest support. The Department argued that that would be catered for by way of earnings disregards and a taper. Do members have a view, recommendation or proposal?
6260. Mr Brady: Mortgage interest support has already caused problems for people when it kicked in about a year ago. This element of the Bill will cause increasing problems. We have seen the results of that. It was mentioned yesterday that Spain has stopped evictions for two years because of the number of people being affected. I have no doubt that if this provision is introduced, it will cause more problems. It is being suggested that if people get a job, at least their housing costs would carry on for at least four weeks or whatever.
6261. The difficulty is that if people get any type of work, their mortgage interest support stops, and they are also expected to look for a better-paid job. We all know that mortgages do not simply stop. They carry on, so people are not able to say to a building society or bank, “I will be OK in two, four or six weeks’ time or in a couple of months.” A - building society or bank will look for their money relentlessly. For many people, a mortgage can end up being a millstone around their neck, and therein lies the difficulty. A building society or bank will usually give people about three months, but if people are not in a position to keep up their payments, they are in serious trouble.

6262. Mr Douglas: Was it part of the problem that if someone takes a part-time job for even 10 hours a week, he or she would lose their mortgage interest support?
6263. The Chairperson: The Department said that that is offset by earnings disregard and tapers. I am simply repeating what the Department said. However, you are right; it is about part-time work.
6264. Mr Douglas: We can talk about the current situation, but we do not know how economic conditions will change over the months and years. More people could lose their jobs.
6265. Mr Brady: We have talked about this issue for ages and, with respect, I am not sure that even the departmental officials know what tapers are all about. Nobody seems to be clear. We talk about earnings disregards, which is fairly easy to understand, but tapers will depend on how many hours people are working, how much they are earning, and so on. Apparently, you go in one end bad and come out the other end glowing. I am not sure of the concept of tapers, which is an important part of mortgage interest support. We are being told that if you go in one end on benefits or part-time work, you will come out the other end much better off. That is what universal credit is being sold on. I am not sure how that works in practice.
6266. The Chairperson: I am trying to reflect accurately the views of the Committee overall. My understanding is that the comments expressed by the Committee show that we are concerned. I have not heard any contrary arguments to that. The policy intent is to encourage people to go to work. If people take a part-time job, they will lose their mortgage interest support. However, the Department said that that is offset by earnings disregards and the taper. Why do we not ask the Department to come back in the next few days and tell us more about the taper and earnings disregards and how they will actually work?
6267. Mr G Campbell: That is under point 5.
6268. The Chairperson: The Committee is concerned about the implications of this. We do not like it and so want to make sure that it is addressed. We are told that it can be addressed by the taper and the earnings disregards. So let us have that fully explored. Is that fair enough?
6269. Mr F McCann: I asked the Department yesterday to come back to us about people entitled to income-based jobseeker's allowance who will lose all mortgage help.
6270. Mr Douglas: Chair, may I just check something that I am not quite sure about? We also talk about the potential for a review. Can we include that as part of the whole process in case there is a major change in the economic climate? Greece going belly-up, for example, would put pressure on all of us.
6271. The Chairperson: There is obviously the whole question of monitoring, and so forth, that will have to be dealt with in the Bill. We can also make it clear that the Committee's view is that all of this needs to be reviewed. We will come back to that at the end of this more mechanistic approach, if members are happy enough with doing that.
6272. I am working off the issues paper that we have in front of us. The definition of a box room has already been discussed. There is concern about what a box room is, how it is defined and how that impacts on underoccupancy. I take it that people have expressed their concerns and that they will be in the mix of our discussions.
6273. If that is OK, we will move to clause 12, "Other particular needs or circumstances". The removal of severe disability payment has raised concern.

- Are there any views or representations on that?
6274. Mr Brady: People have expressed concern about the severe disability premium being removed.
6275. The Chairperson: Will members speak up?
6276. Mr Brady: The severe disability premium was to enhance the quality of life for those with severe disability, and taking it away makes it more difficult for them to manage. Much the same as disability living allowance (DLA), which will become the personal independence payment (PIP), it is there to give people a better quality of life by enabling them to pay for things that they could not normally afford. Again, the severe disability premium is specifically for people who live alone or with another disabled person, and its removal is a matter of concern.
6277. Mr G Campbell: That will be under point 6, then, Chairman.
6278. The Chairperson: OK, the suggestion is that we will deal with that by way of point 6, which is an expression of our concern. If members are happy with that, we will move on.
6279. Clause 26 deals with higher-level sanctions. Three points of concern are highlighted in the paper, but members may want to raise others. There is a general concern about whether these sanctions are disproportionate. There is a specific concern about the fact that a convicted person's prison sentence will be coupled with a three-year sanction. Then there is the concern that the five days allowed to present "good reason" is not long enough. That concern was presented to us by a range of stakeholders who suggested that the time allowed should be more like 15 days. If I remember correctly, the Department said that it may accept that and, where good cause was proven, it would have some discretion. However, I am not 100% sure on that.
6280. Mr Brady: The difficulty with the sanctions proposed in the Bill is how draconian they are. There is compelling evidence from various organisations' research that sanctions do not act as a deterrent to somebody who wants to commit social security fraud on the scale that these sanctions will presumably try to stop.
6281. The question was asked yesterday about doing some sort of comparison of the current sanctions regime with the proposed one. Perhaps that needs to be done. We need to know what effect sanctions actually have, because in my experience over years of dealing with people on benefits, sanctions did not really have much effect. Organisations have done research that indicates that they are not a deterrent.
6282. Mr Copeland: It is also important to note that, under the current regime, fraud is coming down, which is to be welcomed. I would be keen to know the differences foreseen or implied in changing the regime.
6283. The Chairperson: Quite a number of stakeholders, if not all, raised the issue of the higher level of sanctions being disproportionate. Some argued that, obviously, some people are wilful but that there are many others who would be classified as vulnerable in some way or other, and it is they who are more likely to fall foul of these rules.
6284. Mr F McCann: It was said yesterday and again today that we await information from the Department on the amount of people who have been sanctioned. It is my understanding that there are two different methods of sanction. People can be reported by the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) to the Department for sanction, and a decision-maker or supervisor will look at that and decide whether a sanction should be applied. I take it that that is the way that it works. That will give you the information that you need to make a decision on whether this is even necessary.
6285. The Chairperson: Well, members asked the Department yesterday to come back with information about the current sanctions regime, how it might change

- and what they think the differences might be.
6286. Mr G Campbell: I was going to suggest that, under point 3, we seek correspondence from the Minister about the severity of the sanctions to see whether there is the possibility of a variation.
6287. Mr Pollock: As Fra said, we are gathering information. We have some, but it is only about the failure to attend cases. We can provide that to the Committee Clerk for your information, but we will try to come back with more. You were asking for information over a three-year period.
6288. Mr F McCann: That would give us a complete picture. We are being asked to make a decision here. There was a debate in the Assembly three years ago, and it was agreed to bring in sanctions. Complete information should give us a breakdown of the number of people whom it was proposed to sanction and those who have been sanctioned over a period. That should give us an idea of how sanctions have worked.
6289. Mr Pollock: I should say that there will be qualifications on some of the information. When you talked about DEL referring people, as we explained yesterday, ultimately, the decision on the sanctions should be for the decision-maker in the Social Security Agency. For long enough, a lot of people were not being referred to the decision-maker, and DEL was taking the decisions itself, effectively. So there will be a qualification on some of the figures that we provide, but we can explain that to you at the time.
6290. Mr F McCann: I remember an answer to a question that I raised with the then Minister, which indicated that, even over a short period, thousands of people had been reported by DEL for sanction but only about a third were actually sanctioned. It would probably be easy enough to get that information because there seems to be a fairly close working relationship at that level between DEL and the Department for Social Development.
6291. Mr Pollock: I am looking at figures for “failure to attend” cases from March to August this year. There are totals of, for example, fortnightly job search reviews not attended, non-attendance at a work-focused interview and non-participation in a work-focused interview. A total of 5,407 people could have been sanctioned; a sanction was imposed on a total of 1,717. Those are the sorts of figures, but, as I say, I would rather you looked at the information in its entirety.
6292. Mr F McCann: I appreciate that.
6293. The Chairperson: In general, there is a serious concern about the proportionality of the sanctions. We will get that information back from you, Michael, and thank you for that. However, there is a proposal that we write to the Minister to ask him directly whether he is prepared to look at variations in the sanctions regime. Is that the proposal? We will wait for the information. That is, in a sense, two responses.
6294. Mr Brady: Initially, when the sanctions were introduced in the previous mandate, we were told that they would not be used that often, but the figures indicated that they were. The difficulty is that, once enshrined in legislation, they can be used. There is no empirical evidence that sanctions work.
6295. Mr Douglas: We also discussed the increase in mental health issues in Northern Ireland, particularly people who have depression and others with learning difficulties. The Department said that, where that is the case, it would be flexible and sensitive. That is in the mix.
6296. Mr Copeland: The guidance, or standard operating procedures, that the decision-makers apply will colour my view. I have experience of two or three such cases. Two cases were of people whose stated condition was agoraphobia, which meant that they could not come out of the house. Both were sanctioned before their cases were reconsidered.

Generally, the cases that I deal with are not of people who just could not be bothered attending; they either cannot be contacted or are not capable of understanding the importance of attending. After intervention, the system has righted itself, but my concern is about what happens to those folk in the period between an unsound decision being made and subsequently being rectified. I am concerned about what people have to do to keep the wolf from the door, for want of a better phrase. The guidance will be of massive significance to me, because the decision-maker is merely applying a set of circumstances to the guidance and giving an opinion based on both. It is important that everything is seen in context.

6297. The Chairperson: You make a fair point, but it is important to remind ourselves that this is an enabling Bill. Rightly, therefore, people are paying due attention to the fact that whatever goes through in the Bill will enable a lot of other things. Some of those things may be addressed by way of regulation and guidance, and it is important that we consider all that in the round. Sammy Douglas made that point a minute ago. My thinking on this is governed by the fact that it is an enabling Bill. If I am supporting the clause, I am aware that it will enable certain things to happen at a later point. So I will need to satisfy myself that what I am enabling will be appropriate and fair. Are members happy enough that we have dealt with that?
6298. We will move to clause 38, which is about the capability for work or work-related activity. All members had a major concern about the primacy of medical evidence in assessing people. That is a fundamental issue. I do not think that I am wrong in saying that we have had a lot of discussion on Atos. Concerns have been outlined about that process and how a similar situation might arise when moving from DLA to PIP. It has certainly been an area of focused discussion between the Committee and a wide range of stakeholders.
6299. Mr Brady: People are being assessed because they have a particular condition. Let us take the migration from incapacity benefit to jobseeker's allowance. People were on that benefit because of a medical condition. The condition may be long term, chronic or short term. If the medical evidence is available to the decision-maker, it seems common sense that they can use that to make an informed decision. At the moment, we have a tick-box exercise carried out by somebody who really does not know the person.
6300. People should be assessed by a health professional who has the competence to assess their physical and mental capabilities. I am sure that all members are hearing stories about this in their constituencies. Lord Morrow mentioned one case in which somebody was either blind in one eye or had lost an eye. I have had people coming into my office wearing medical aids given to them by Musgrave Park Hospital, and the nurse who did the tick-box exercise did not know what those aids were or their purpose. The assessor needs to be competent.
6301. The primacy of medical evidence would circumvent a lot of the problems that people experience. If you have good enough medical evidence, it makes it easier for the decision-maker to come to an informed decision. There has to be some process put in place. If you attend a consultant, that is in your GP records, all of which are now computerised. I found that when I was representing people at appeals, there was a particular code that the doctor can press on the computer that prints out the consultants' reports. That makes the information much easier to access. There is no huge logistical exercise involved. It is common sense, and it would not cost anything.
6302. The Chairperson: Getting to the nub of this and trying to summarise, I think that there seems to have been universal concern about the need for medical evidence to have primacy in assessments. Is that a fair reflection of what people are arguing? That needs

- to be written as a formal amendment or recommendation. It is up to the Committee to decide that. We have laboured the point with the Department. I have never received satisfaction that medical evidence will have primacy. That seems to be the mind of the Committee.
6303. On that basis, we move on to clause 42, which concerns pilot schemes. Yesterday, we discussed at length the need to have pilot schemes here. If I remember correctly, Martina, you made the point that if the Bill is enacted, you will be able to have bespoke pilot schemes here. I think that the concern was expressed by members that the Bill was predicated on a range of pilot schemes, none of which was conducted here.
6304. Mr Brady: In the initial stages of welfare reform, back in 2007-08, pilot schemes were introduced in Oxfordshire, Manchester and a few other places in England. Alex Easton, who sat on the Committee at that time, asked why there was not one here. If you are talking about parity, which is comparing like with like, we should have been entitled to one here. No valid reason was given for not introducing a pilot scheme here. Most of the pilot schemes have been in the south-east of England and were predicated on very expensive rental costs, different types of housing, and so on. It goes back to the whole argument about the prevailing conditions here being somewhat different — in many cases, very different — from there. Why did we not have a pilot scheme?
6305. The Chairperson: Point 6 allows us to express our concerns about that. That has been done. I presume that we want to make sure that pilot schemes are run here as part of any future policy deliberations.
6306. Mr Brady: Yes, but if the Bill is enacted and pilot schemes come along later, it does not matter what conclusions they come to because it is a fait accompli. We are now going through the Bill and there has been no pilot scheme here, but we can express our concern. If, as we are told, the Bill is predicated on what happened in the south-east of England and other places, it does not reflect the circumstances that prevail here.
6307. The Chairperson: I do not disagree with a word that you are saying, and I do not think that anybody else does either, but we have to deal with the Bill that is front of us. I am simply saying that there is an option to express serious concerns about that, and members seem prepared to do so. However, we also have to reflect on whether we need to make it very clear that, for any future policy decisions, pilot schemes need to be done here. That would mean requiring proper evidence from here, whatever the policy issue.
6308. The Committee Clerk: The Committee could express its concerns that Northern Ireland has not been included in pilot schemes to date, and it could make a recommendation that any future pilot schemes include Northern Ireland.
6309. Mr F McCann: [Inaudible.] It does not reflect the conditions here in the way that it reflects conditions in parts of England. When Martina was speaking yesterday, I picked up that it was like putting the cart before the horse. Martina did not say that, but I am saying that. We could end up with a Bill going through and then having the option of running a pilot scheme. It is a bit crazy.
6310. The Chairperson: I am not saying that we will run a pilot scheme. This is not an issue of passing the Bill and then running a pilot scheme based on the Bill. What I am saying is that, unfortunately, no pilot scheme was run before this Bill was produced and tabled here. We are universally agreed that that should never have happened. We are not happy with that at all, and we will express our concerns. We are also saying that, in any future policy deliberations, there need to be bespoke pilot schemes here.
6311. Mr G Campbell: I am happy enough with the thrust of that, although maybe we need to add the words “where appropriate”. It might be the case that there is some future policy decision for which we do not require a pilot. I would have thought that, on most occasions, we probably will want a pilot, and, on this occasion, we are concerned that there was no pilot scheme. I cannot think of the circumstances, but there might be some policy decision that obviously needs to be made and so does not require a pilot scheme. I am content, as long as we do not insist that, on each and every occasion on which a policy decision is to be taken because it has been implemented in GB, we must have a pilot scheme. Where appropriate, we should have one, and we should have had one on this occasion.

6312. Mr Copeland: Forgive my lack of knowledge, but when we see the regulations, can we state that there should have been a pilot scheme?
6313. Mr F McCann: That is what Martina was saying.
6314. Mr Copeland: The answer is yes, then.
6315. Ms M Campbell: As Fra said, you cannot have a pilot scheme until the primary legislation is in place. Not only do you need the primary legislation, you need the regulations in place to enable you to have a pilot scheme. When the regulations come forward, any pilot scheme must satisfy the three conditions outlined, the first two of which are about making the process simpler or changing behaviour. I have forgotten the third one, but all the conditions are in the Bill. Any pilot scheme would have to tick all those boxes. When the regulations come forward, you will have an opportunity to have an input into any proposal for a pilot scheme.
6316. Mr Brady: On that point, Martina, as far as I am aware, most pilot schemes are to test systems or schemes. What you are saying is that, as the primary legislation and regulations have to be in place, it is a fait accompli. So what we would really be doing is a review of how it will work, not a pilot scheme to see how it might work. That is my point. You are simply telling us about the pilot schemes that have been carried out. However, Gregory's point is valid enough.

We would not look for a pilot scheme for everything. The difficulty here is that the Bill is life-changing because this reform is the biggest change since 1948. Yet, here in the North, people seem to be expected just to put up with whatever comes across, without any particular reference being made to the prevailing circumstances here. We have been discussing it so much that everybody is fully aware of the difficulties and differences that exist and persist here, and therein lies the problem. Really, you are talking about a review of how it might work, and if some particular area of the legislation is not working, we might tweak it, but there will be no fundamental changes made if the Bill goes through in its present form. That is the difficulty. It is really a review to see how it works. For instance, with the likes of underoccupancy, I think that it is worth including in the legislation the fact that there should be a review within a very short time to see whether it is impacting on vulnerable people because those are the people whom we are trying to protect in all this.

6317. Ms M Campbell: As I said, there are conditions, two of which are to make universal credit simpler to understand or administer; or where a scheme is likely to promote people remaining in work or help people to obtain work. The review and evaluation of policies is a normal part of policymaking, and I do not know whether we need, necessarily, to have that in the Bill. I do not agree with you that a pilot scheme under this would be merely a review. Generally, a pilot scheme introduces an innovative scheme.
6318. Mr Brady: On that point, the Housing Executive told us that it is running the pathway scheme in the Lurgan/Craigavon area. From what it says, that is to find out the possible impact of underoccupancy, etc. However, that pilot scheme may come up with the finding that it will not work in that area. Presumably, that would then be fed into any discussion on the introduction of underoccupancy.

6319. Ms M Campbell: Yes, and that would be reflected in the regulations where appropriate.
6320. Mr Brady: Yes, that is the point. We do not know what will be in the regulations or the guidance. The Chair has said constantly that we are dealing with what is in front of us, which is what is in the Bill. If we take underoccupancy as it is in the Bill now, there is no doubt that it will cause huge problems for people. Therefore, irrespective of the outcome of the pilot scheme in the Craigavon area, that will not necessarily reflect what may happen in the rest of the North. Of course, there should be a review, but it is implicit that the criteria and the context of any review should be part of the Bill because it needs to be very specific in dealing with particular issues that the Bill will introduce, particularly underoccupancy. I do not think that you can get away from that. A review could be very wide-ranging. In the context of the Bill, any review, particularly with regard to sanctions, underoccupancy and the transfer from DLA to PIP, has to be very specific in its terms of reference. That is the point that I am making.
6321. The Chairperson: I agree with the notion that we need to have pilot schemes available to us here, and I accept entirely the notion that that should be where it is appropriate. We are not insisting that, on every day of the week, there must a bespoke pilot scheme on every issue. Personally, I think that the terms of reference for the three conditions are too prescriptive. They basically say, "Here is the very limited scope within which you will review." By their very nature, pilot schemes are about innovation and looking at something new and fresh. I have never heard of a pilot scheme being prescribed in this way. In my thinking, that runs completely counter to the concept of pilot schemes. Members appear to be of the view that they want to have pilot schemes available where they are appropriate. I think that the terms of reference for the three conditions are too prescriptive. I do not hear any counterargument to that. So we are telling the Department that we are not happy with the prescriptive nature of the three conditions.
6322. We move on to clause 45. It is 12.00 noon, and I am in the hands of the Committee. Do you want to break now for an hour for lunch and return at 1.00 pm? Are members happy with that?
6323. Mr G Campbell: It is either that or a large dose of headache tablets.
6324. The Chairperson: In the afternoon session, I suggest to members that when a member makes an argument or a suggestion about an amendment, see that there is no opposition to it. They do not need to elaborate on the argument.
- Committee suspended.*

On resuming —

6325. The Chairperson: Folks, thank you for attending the meeting this afternoon. We are resuming our scrutiny of the Welfare Reform Bill. We adjourned the meeting at clause 42, so we will resume on clause 45. Clause 45 deals with the claimant commitment for jobseeker's allowance. An issue was raised about the insertion of:

"such other person as may be designated".

6326. Does anyone have anything to add to that or a query to raise?

6327. Mr Brady: It really should reflect both sides in a way. Can it not be that the claimant commitment be prepared by an employment officer in consultation with the claimant? Otherwise, it will be a unilateral and kind of arbitrary condition. Clause 45 states:

"such other person as may be designated for that purpose".

6328. That could be anyone. It could be someone who is walking past at the time.

6329. The Chairperson: What are you suggesting? Are you not happy about that?

6330. Mr Brady: Other members will want to comment, but a concern was raised by stakeholders and Committee members.

6331. The Chairperson: OK. We have a suggested approach to it. Clause 45(2) refers to that. Is it that people were afraid that this was opening the door to privatisation?

6332. Mr Brady: Yes.

6333. The Chairperson: People were concerned about that, and although the Department advised us that it had no immediate plans — I think that that was the term used — that did not rule out future plans. I am not saying that the Department was suggesting that either. Given that this is enabling legislation, members are concerned by that phrase and do not like its inclusion. That is the issue.

6334. Mr Brady: The point was made that that happened in the past, and there is no doubt that it opens the door to it happening again.

6335. The Chairperson: Therefore, do we want to get formal clarification that this is not about privatisation? If it is about privatisation, people may want to propose that that phrase be deleted.

6336. Mr Brady: This is not a criticism, but all that the officials could say was that there are no immediate plans. That could change next week. It could change tomorrow. Another issue is that officials' — civil servant — jobs are potentially being put at risk, and I am sure that the unions have already addressed that. It just seems that it is opening the door.

6337. The Chairperson: We have options. Do we want to seek an assurance from the Minister and the Department that this is not about enabling privatisation? That seems to be the concern shared by members and stakeholders. Is that what we want to do? Then, subject to the response —

6338. Mr Brady: Yes.

6339. Mr F McCann: The Human Rights Commission wants clause 30 amended to protect against that by requiring contracted private and voluntary sector providers to comply with the Human Rights Act 1998. Therefore, a number of amendments have been suggested.

6340. The Chairperson: Are members happy enough to proceed on the basis that we want assurances that this is not enabling privatisation?

6341. Mr Douglas: Chair, do we need any legal advice? I have made a note that the unions opposed the insertion of "or such other person", because the provision suggests non-public service workers might assume that role.

6342. The Chairperson: We could tell the Department that we are concerned about this and that we do not want to enable privatisation. Therefore, can we get assurances that that is not what this is about? I am working on the basis that the Department told us that there were no immediate plans, but, in fairness to the officials, it could not go any further than that. Are we happy enough?

Members indicated assent.

6343. The Chairperson: We move to clause 52, which deals with people's entitlement to contributory allowance after a period of one year. Members seemed distinctly concerned about that. What do you want to do about it?
6344. Mr Brady: There will be a cost involved. It is purely a cost-saving exercise. The same thing happened in 1996. Where previously people had got unemployment benefit for 312 days, it went down to six months with the introduction of jobseeker's allowance. That means that if the partner of a person — at the end of that person's contributory entitlement — is working a specified number of hours or more, the claimant will not get any benefits. It is an immediate cutback on benefit. That is where the difficulty lies.
6345. Some stakeholders and Committee members asked what happens to all the money that is saved. Where does it go? Does it go back into the social security system or elsewhere? People who have paid contributions for 30 years may unfortunately fall sick or something and get only a year's benefit, irrespective of what they have paid.
6346. The Chairperson: I do not think that an answer has been provided on that one. My assumption is that there is no pot of money sitting somewhere for benefit; it is demand-led.
6347. Mr Brady: The point was made that when she was in power in 1986, Thatcher put the national insurance fund into the red because the money was used to subsidise private pension schemes for the better-off, if you like. Therefore, there may be an element of that. Again, I accept that that is a different issue from the one that we are dealing with.
6348. The Chairperson: It is.
6349. Mr Douglas: If we oppose the clause or seek to amend the time period, will there be a cost? If so, what will it be?
6350. Mr Brady: There will be a cost.
6351. Ms P Bradley: There will be a massive cost.
6352. The Chairperson: We are told that there will be a cost, but we first need to take a view on whether it is or is not a good idea. If our sense is that it is a bad idea, we can say so and let the Department tell us the cost.
6353. Ms P Bradley: Another point to make on this clause — I am getting a bit lost with all these at the minute — concerns when people are notified of the changes. In mainland UK, people have been given a much longer run-in period than we will be giving people when the changes come into force. Was that not one of the issues around this as well? Furthermore, there is the bit to do with contributory employment and support allowance (ESA) for people who have been working and find themselves out of work. Those people are being treated in the same way as someone who has never worked. Those are two of the things that were highlighted.
6354. The Chairperson: There are two particular concerns. The third one is about where the money went to. The priority for us, I suppose, at the minute is to work out what will happen through this provision.
6355. Mr Brady: I do not think that the Department is in any position to tell us where the money goes. The points that Paula raises are more relevant.
6356. The Chairperson: How do we want to deal with that? There is a menu of options on the back page of the issues paper.
6357. Ms P Bradley: We need to find out what the financial implications are for the people being notified. I think it rather unfair that we are slightly different, in that respect, from the rest of the UK, where people were given a longer period of notification than our people will get. There will be financial implications no matter what, so we need to know what they are.

6358. The Chairperson: There is a table somewhere in the explanatory memorandum. Is it right to say that members are not happy with the provision whereby people lose their contributory benefit after 12 months? Subject to costs, that may determine how the Committee wishes to vote on the clause when we do clause-by-clause scrutiny.
6359. Ms P Bradley: For me, that issue is slightly muddier. It is not as black and white as some of the other clauses about which I feel very strongly. However, there are some issues that need to be clarified before I can come to any decision on clause 52.
6360. The Chairperson: OK. Therefore, the two points on which we want the Department to come back on formally are the lead-in time for this if the clause becomes law and the provision itself, as well as the associated costs. Is that fair enough?
6361. Mr F McCann: I do not mean to prolong this debate. We know that the entitlement period will last for a year. You said that people who have paid contributions for 30 years will be affected. Is there any way in which we can be given a couple of scenarios that set out how much this will impact on people financially? We are asking what the cost will be to the Assembly. However, what will be the cost to people who have worked all those years? Is there a possibility that those scenarios can be painted? For example, can we have for a family, someone claiming who has two children or a single person?
6362. The Chairperson: Are members happy enough that we ask for that?
- Members indicated assent.*
6363. The Chairperson: Let us move on clause 54, which deals with conditions relating to youth. Our concern here is that stakeholders generally oppose the abolition of ESA, but the Department has stated that almost 97% will move to income-based ESA. It is unlikely that new claimants will qualify for income-based ESA.
6364. You have heard evidence from a range of stakeholders and may now need to familiarise yourselves for a moment or two. Take the time to do that.
6365. Mr Brady: It might help to find out how many of those young people will be affected. The Department talks about 97%, but it is incumbent on us to take into account the people who will not be safeguarded. I think that the figure mentioned was £390,000. On the face of it, that is not an awful lot, but these are young people who may have quite severe learning disabilities, and the whole purpose of the old severe disablement allowance and then youth incapacity benefit was to safeguard those young people and ensure that they had an independent income from the age of severe disablement allowance, which was 16. It was accepted that they had long-term, ongoing problems that might never be resolved.
6366. The other difficulty that I have is that once they move into income support-based ESA, they are then into a pool. Once the enabling legislation is in place, and possibly regulations and guidelines, which may lead to other things, they may all be subsumed into a particular direction of work that is not there or schemes that may not be of benefit to them. That needs to be addressed.
6367. The Chairperson: OK. Mickey, so you want the figures for the 3%?
6368. Mr Brady: If that is possible.
6369. The Chairperson: Or not so much the figures as the impact.
6370. Mr Douglas: Do we not already have those figures?
6371. The Chairperson: We were told that 97% would be exempt.
6372. Mr Brady: We got the financial figure: £390,000. I am not sure of the actual numbers.
6373. Mr Pollock: We had some figures for ESA youth, which is for ages 16 to 20, and another figure for a cohort of 20- to 24-year-olds. We are trying to see whether we can discern from that the - population in receipt of contributory ESA youth that would be affected. Mickey mentioned the £390,000, which is the cost per annum. I do not know whether we have a figure for the actual number of claimants who will be affected.

6374. Mr F McCann: This is just a point of clarification. If 90% are moving across, surely, after a year, they will lose the benefit anyway.
6375. Mr Pollock: We think that 97% will move across to income-based ESA.
6376. Mr F McCann: With the new rules that are coming in, that will last for only a year, so —
6377. Mr Pollock: That would be income-based, Fra, as opposed to the contributory.
6378. Mr Brady: If the 95% are on income-based ESA, I presume that they and other people on income-based ESA who have particular medical problems will be reassessed. The point about disability allowance and youth incapacity was that it was accepted that those youngsters would never be able to work in the normal sense, so it was almost an indefinite award that carried on. It was accepted that if you had a particular condition, it was not going to go away. If those people are subsumed into that kind of a pool and reassessed, it may point them in directions in which they are not able to go.
6379. Mr Pollock: It is 97%, but if it is envisaged that they have a condition such as you say, I surmise that they would still be assessed.
6380. Mr Brady: It brings us back to the point that was raised this morning about the primacy of medical evidence. Obviously, their condition is based on a particular physical or psychological condition. It goes back to how effective or informed the decision-maker is on the evidence that is available.
6381. Mr Pollock: Absolutely. In all the evidence that we have presented, we have asserted that medical evidence should be given due weight and that cognisance should be taken of it.
6382. Mr Brady: Condemning people to a life on benefits is another issue. In a lot of cases, people do not have that choice. You are saying that medical evidence should be considered in conjunction with other factors. The point that I am making is that in the current system — I presume that this will carry through if it is not changed by Atos — you have somebody who ticks a box, and then the decision-maker gets that report and bases his or her decision on that. In my experience and, I am sure, in the experience of other people, the decision-maker does not have ready access to the full medical picture. In a lot of cases, it is only at appeal that the medical evidence is presented. I have had people coming in whose appeal did not even go ahead once that medical evidence was presented. At that point, it was accepted that the medical evidence was of such benefit that the appeal did not have to go any further. The point about the primacy of medical evidence is that decision-makers have all that in front of them and they make a decision. It is not just a tick-box exercise. In fairness, the anecdotal evidence that I am getting back is that the majority of people who carry out those assessments are not interested, not particularly well-informed about the condition and do not really care. That is the reality.
6383. Mr Pollock: We have discussed the assessment process and the primacy of medical evidence. It is one of a range of factors. Certainly, given the sorts of conditions that we are talking about, it is a very important one. The decision should, in any case, be reasonable. If it is based on a serious health condition, you would expect that to be taken into consideration by the decision-makers.
6384. Mr Brady: I will give just one small example —

6385. The Chairperson: OK, but we do not want to be — 6386. Mr Brady: I do not want to drag this out, but this is an important point. I have heard of cases of people who are diagnosed with MS and who are in remission and doing reasonably well. They go for one of those tests. They still have the condition, which is progressive. One question they are being asked is how far they can walk. If they say they can walk 100 yds or 50 yds, which is a relatively short distance, they are then asked how far they could go in a wheelchair. Those are people who are doing their best to make sure that they do not end up in a wheelchair. That is the type of thing that is happening. There should be proper medical evidence.
6387. The Chairperson: Thanks, Michael.
6388. OK, just to recap on how we will deal with this clause; do we want to get the information on how it will impact on people?
6389. Mr Brady: I think Michael said they had some information but not definitive information.
6390. The Chairperson: OK, so we will wait for that. Is that what we are saying? Fair enough, then.
6391. We will move on to the personal independence payment. A couple of issues were raised about clause 86 and the issue of people in prison and people being out of the jurisdiction. People had some issues about the various components of allowances, and people in prison would be deemed to be having those paid for. So, it is an issue of duplication of public money. I think that is what the Department outlined. Does anybody have a view on that?
6392. Mr F McCann: I raised this yesterday. I just cannot understand why allowances would be stopped for people, especially elderly people, who have to leave the jurisdiction for health purposes because they have underlying problems. That could probably run to thousands of people. In Spain, they pay yearly to send their pensioners to the coast. I cannot understand why that measure is being brought in. It has to affect the health of thousands of pensioners.
6393. The Chairperson: The issue was that some stakeholders and even other organisations argued that there needs to be a longer period for that, however long that may be. Am I right in saying that the current period is four weeks?
6394. Mr Brady: I think that officials mentioned yesterday that it depends on whether you are undergoing medical treatment. The argument could be that you have arthritis and you went abroad to alleviate your condition. Is that medical treatment or otherwise? If your doctor recommended it, it could, in a very loose fashion, be termed as medical treatment. It is a dialectic argument, I suppose.
6395. The Chairperson: OK, do you want to ask for precise clarification on that? The Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) stated that entitlement would end after four weeks abroad, except if the absence was for medical treatment, when the period of absence can be extended to a maximum of 26 weeks. So, we want to clarify what “treatment” means.
6396. Mr F McCann: How do you define “treatment”?
6397. The Chairperson: OK, are members happy enough with that?
- Members indicated assent.*
6398. The Chairperson: No members have raised any issues about the prisoners’ daily living component.
6399. Clause 88 is entitled “Report to the Assembly”. I think, Sammy, you were one of the people who had an issue with this, which was about reporting back to the Assembly at an earlier date than that which is proposed in the Bill. The Department reflected that it would take a couple of years before you would be able to have any qualitative judgements, but that does not mean to say that you might not still want to have a report earlier. If people are concerned about the outworking of this, why not go earlier rather than later?

6400. Mr Brady: If you wait two or three years to review or assess a system and it is a bad system, the damage will have been done for a lot of people. Even if you change it, it may not alleviate the problems that those people have had in those two or three years. It is contentious legislation anyhow, which is all the more reason why it should be reviewed or assessed after a much shorter period than two or three years. Presumably, if you wait two or three years, people will say that the system is already here and nothing can be done about it. The difficulty is that the Bill is so wide-ranging and is going to have an impact on so many people, particularly vulnerable people, that damage could be done in a relatively short period, especially when it comes to underoccupancy and all the other issues that we have been talking about.
6401. The Chairperson: Well, there was a proposed amendment. I am just trying to track where that amendment came from. It proposed that a report should be produced within one year and then two years after that. Are members content that they would prefer that option?
- Members indicated assent.*
6402. The Chairperson: That is the recommendation of the Committee.
6403. Mr Douglas: I want to go back to Mickey's point. If, as part of the implementation of this legislation, one or two major issues arise that cannot wait for even a year, will there be an opportunity to review or amend it somewhere along the line? I am sure that we are not going to get it all right. As I said yesterday, there was a report in 'The Independent on Sunday' about the planning of the IT systems. It said that it could be another 18 months before the issue is resolved. The Government obviously did not foresee all the problems that they were going to have. If there is a major issue, is there some way of addressing it?

6404. Mr Mickey Kelly (Department for Social Development): As I said in the previous meeting, there are two issues. Mickey was talking about the first one, as were you, which is the outworkings of how the providers do the thing. There is another issue about the assessment criteria, which are part of it. In the previous meeting, I explained that it will take a bit of time for the assessment criteria to bed down and to get enough people through the system to give a qualitative analysis of what is happening. In addition, in line with what the Department for Work and Pensions is planning — we use the same assessment criteria as it does — if we do an earlier review, we will probably not be able to make any significant, Northern Ireland-specific changes to the assessment criteria until DWP has completed its study. That is what happened with the Harrington report and all those things as well. However, the agency will work through the performance management system that will be in place for the provider, which is a different issue about how the work is being done as opposed to what the criteria are. However, the timing of a formal review of the system will be a matter for the Committee.
6405. The Chairperson: OK. Thanks for that.
6406. Obviously, there is a suggestion that we go for a period of one year. The Bill specifies two years, but we are saying that we want a review after one year. The issue is of such importance that whatever information is available after a year should be made available. On the further point that you made, where people see evidence that there is a problem with any legislation, never mind this Bill, or any policy that a Department pursues, you would expect that there would be a facility to deal with it immediately.
6407. You expressed a general concern around monitoring and reviewing. Whatever about particular provisions in the Bill, we need to return to that by way of one of the bullet points. We need to put on the record our general view of that and that we may want to address it in - specific clauses. We will return to that at the end, before our final report is completed. That has been a recurring theme from you, Sammy, and others as well.

6408. Whenever the Harrington report is mentioned to me, it is like a virtual report in my mind. I have never seen Mr Harrington, but I have heard about him quite often. We were due to meet him here but he never turned up. He was on the sick. [Laughter.] I do not know whether he was on contributory contributions or not.
6409. Mr F McCann: I think that he wants to know whether his benefits were stopped after a year.
6410. Mr Douglas: Was he working abroad?
6411. The Chairperson: It does not warm my heart, I have to say.
6412. We move on to clause 103, which is about the recovery of benefit payments. Concern was raised that claimants might have to pay back quite large overpayments that were given to them as a result of departmental error.
6413. Mr Brady: It is inherently unfair. The argument that the Department and the officials have used is that people should know that they are getting more benefit. My point was that people assume, rightly or wrongly, that the Department knows what it is doing. People may think that it is a windfall or a bonus — I am not being funny when I say that. In my experience over the years, when people receive extra money, they do not necessarily question it. The difference now, of course, is that rather than getting a giro, the money goes into their bank account, and people do not always check their bank or Post Office accounts regularly. When you were getting only £60 a week and you got a giro for £200, you thought, “Great”, but you might have assumed that it was an error. However, if it goes into a Post Office or bank account, you may not come to that conclusion, and it might be three or four weeks before you notice. Most people who receive their benefit into a Post Office account look at it on a fairly regular basis. However, people who have bank accounts may live on overdrafts, so it is not always obvious. A person may be penalised because of someone else’s mistake, and we have the statistics to show that customer error and departmental error are ahead of fraud. That is the reality.
6414. The Chairperson: We looked at what type of claimant might be exempt from some of this and whether people would have access to hardship payments, and so on. There are quite a lot of issues around that.
6415. Mr Brady: The problem is that hardship payments are recoverable from your benefit. So, it is a short-term solution but a long-term problem. If you get the money deducted from your benefit, you get a double whammy, because they are deducting your overpayment and then they are deducting a hardship payment. It will discourage people from going for hardship payments, so they will be even worse off than they were in the first place. I do not think that it is unreasonable to suggest that.
6416. The Chairperson: People had varying degrees of concern about the inherent unfairness of the type and principle of recovery.
6418. The Chairperson: Conrad, do you want to come forward and say something? I want the situation clarified. I do not want to have any awkwardness or embarrassment in the room. The departmental officials are sitting in what - is described as the Public Gallery, as opposed to sitting at the table, and that is because the Department does not want to be, and should not be, included in the Committee's deliberations. However, departmental officials are here to help us and to provide any additional clarification and information that we might need to help us. We do not want to put the Department in the invidious position of being at the table and contributing to the debate, because this debate is between Committee members. I want to make sure that everybody understands that. There is no slight intended.

6419. Mr Douglas: I think that Conrad said that there would be circumstances when you would not chase an overpayment. In those situations, would there be guidelines?
6420. Mr Conrad McConnell (Department for Social Development): I was here last week talking about penalties. That is a slightly different issue, I suppose, from guidance on whether to pursue an overpayment.
6421. Mr Douglas: Maybe it was somebody else who said that.
6422. Mr McConnell: The policy intent behind this is not in doubt, in the sense that it is to recover money from people on the basis that the money should not have gone to them in the first place. That is the basic policy intent. I was keen to help there because you asked about the figures and the level of the problem. I can maybe help out with the figures for loss. Overpayments due to staff error in the agency are about £13 million per year. That compares with £19 million for fraud and £7 million for customer error. I just wanted to clarify that. That is the scale of the loss through staff error, where money has gone to someone who should not have got it, albeit that it was a departmental fault.
6423. The Chairperson: The level of staff error is almost double the level of customer error.
6424. Mr McConnell: It is. It is £7 million for customers, £13 million for staff and £19 million for fraud. If we add the figure for customer behaviour to the figure for fraud, we get about £26 million, against the figure for staff error, which is £13 million. So, customer loss through error or fraud is double the loss through staff error.
6425. The Chairperson: The claimant behaviour is better than the staff behaviour, or efficiency, for want of a better word.
6426. Mr McConnell: It means that the loss through customer behaviour is double the loss through staff mistake.
6427. Mr Brady: In fairness, staff in Social Security Agency offices are under extreme pressure, and they are under-resourced. In fairness to them, they are dealing with people. The issue that I am raising is not about the level of staff efficiency because I think that they do extremely well in the circumstances in which they are forced to work. The difficulty is that I do not think that that should then be passed on to the customer through no fault of their own. In fairness, people do not have a wide-ranging knowledge of benefits. If they had, I, as a welfare rights worker, would have been out of work for 30 years. You have to take all that into account.
6428. Somebody made the point that an overpayment of under £65 may not be recoverable or may not be pursued. There may be some way of looking at that figure and making it more acceptable. Maybe the Department could look at that and come back with a comment.
6429. The Chairperson: There were issues around the level of recovery and the maximum amount of recovery. I accept that, in some cases, there are justifiable and understandable reasons for error; an error is a mistake. However, it highlights to me the fact that I do not know when there has ever been a benefit take-up campaign or initiative by the Department that has not resulted in people getting more money, so there is a considerable amount of error in the first instance. I am just making the point, although it is a slightly different issue.

6430. Is there consensus in the Committee that there is an inherent unfairness in this? Is that what you are saying? Would you like that to be addressed by the Department more formally?

6431. Mr Durkan: I fully sympathise and agree with the points that Mickey made, particularly around claimants maybe not detecting that they have been overpaid or even that they have received too much money in error. However, there might be difficulties in legislating for that if you were to say that claimants should not be required to pay back an overpayment. Suppose that someone, through some crazy mistake, got £10,000 that they were not supposed to get —

6432. Mr Brady: I think it is a contradiction to say that people on benefits get too much money anyway, but that is another issue.

6433. The Chairperson: You mentioned the figure, and Conrad dealt with it last week. There is an issue around the £65. You are talking about a reasonable amount being the trigger for recovery. Is that what people are saying? It is unfair to generalise at that level. If someone were to get a substantial amount of money, they would certainly know that that is money that they should not have received or were not entitled to under the circumstances. There is an issue around the reasonable level at which that would be triggered. Is that fair enough, Conrad? Thank you.

So, for the record, members are concerned about that issue. They want the Department to review the level at which recovery would be triggered. Is that fair enough?

Members indicated assent.

6434. The Chairperson: We now move to clause 109, “Penalty in respect of benefit fraud not resulting in overpayment”. People would be penalised for intended fraud even though no fraud actually occurred and no financial benefits accrued. Basically, the question was this: how can you penalise someone if they intend to do something but do not actually do it?

6435. Mr F McCann: Is that a fine on thought?

6436. Mr Brady: The £350 is an arbitrary figure. It may not be proportionate to the amount that may or may not have been involved. Also, even if someone in particular circumstances were taken to court, that may not be the extent of the fine. They would be paying more, and then, of course, they may have other benefit deductions. We are talking about proportion and it being proportionate to the degree of alleged fraud or whatever that may be. We are looking into crystal balls and deciding that somebody may commit fraud. I am not sure how that works.

6437. The Chairperson: In a way, you are rolling clause 109 and clause 110 together.

6438. Mr Brady: They are inextricably linked.

6439. The Chairperson: OK, but they are two clauses. Clause 109 is in respect of benefit fraud not resulting in any overpayment, and clause 110 deals with overpayment and recovery, the fines that are attached to that and the maximum amount. They are linked, but they are different clauses. Does anyone have a particular view on clause 109, such as that it penalises somebody for something that has not been done even though they intended to do it? It is an important stand-alone clause.

6440. Mr Brady: Is there a cost involved if it were not imposed?

6441. The Chairperson: I think that some people had wanted the retention of access to a caution. Am I right? People were making the case for a caution as opposed to a penalty because you have not actually benefited from your alleged or intended fraud. Is the Committee looking at it from that point of view?

6442. Mr F McCann: Are we saying that we would prefer a caution?

6443. The Chairperson: Obviously, there are cautions in clause 115, but if I remember correctly, people were arguing that you are going to fine or penalise

- someone for intended fraud even though they did not benefit from it. That is clause 109, and clause 110 obviously comes next.
6444. Conrad, you might have another comment on that. I am concerned about putting you in an invidious position, but maybe you want to shed a bit of light on it.
6445. Mr McConnell: I have nothing really to say about the suggestion. I go back to the points that I made last week about the policy intent. I know that applying figures to this is difficult because no actual loss is incurred. I go back to some of the figures that I mentioned last week around what happens if we do not catch someone attempting to commit fraud and they then go on to commit fraud. Fraud, on average, can go up to maybe £4,000 per case. In some extreme cases, there can be £50,000 fraud. If we do not catch fraud at the outset, it can turn into something very serious, with lots of money involved. I simply point out that the average level of fraud is about £4,000 per case. Perhaps that helps the Committee in thinking about the £350 and whether that is proportionate.
6446. Mr Brady: If you are talking about £50,000, you are talking about fairly hard-core fraud.
6447. Mr McConnell: Oh, yes, that is what I said: in an extreme case, it is around £50,000, but the average is around £4,000.
6448. Mr Brady: Was it felt that cautioning people was an option? I know from dealing with people over the years that people were very scared of being taken in to be cautioned. I would have thought that that was fairly effective. That is being done away with now. I am not sure what the rationale is for removing the caution. When people are cautioned, they are taken in and the issue is very clearly explained to them. That goes back to what you said about fraud carrying on if undetected. If people are cautioned and told very clearly about the consequences, they cannot say a year later that they did not know.
- If they continue to prosecute a fraud after having been warned, they have no redress. If someone is cautioned and stops what they are doing, it is an effective deterrent.
6449. Mr McConnell: That maybe takes us into clause 115, “Cautions”, and the whole general point about cautions staying or not staying. I suggest that the internal penalty that we apply as an alternative to a prosecution does something similar to a caution in that it provides the alternative to a court. It deals with your offence as it happened and leaves you clear as to what the intention would be next time round if you were to come back having committed a second offence. So, I would suggest that the internal penalty does some of what the caution already does anyway.
6450. The Chairperson: Thanks, Conrad, for that. I am just stuck. I have a fairly strong view on this. If the Housing Executive has a tenant against whom there are complaints and there is some evidence that the tenant is misbehaving or not honouring their tenancy agreement, the Housing Executive will bring that tenant in and speak to them. It does not penalise them, fine them or put them out of the house. It advises them that they are acting contrary to their tenancy agreement and that there are two or three steps at the end of which, if bad behaviour is not modified, eviction or whatever else will take its course.
6451. In clause 109, we leave ourselves open to what I think is a dubious legal concept. We are saying, “We think that you are intending to defraud us and we will fine you. We have not convicted you of anything or proven anything but we will fine you.” If I thought somebody was trying to defraud the system, I would be calling them in and talking to them. Experience would tell you that most people in those circumstances would fairly quickly moderate their behaviour. I think there would be more evidence to suggest that that would be the way to go. That is my assumption, so I feel uneasy about penalising someone for - something that we have not found them guilty of.

6452. Mr Douglas: Apologies, Conrad, if you have already answered this, but is this clause an expansion rather than a new clause?
6453. Mr McConnell: It is maybe worth adding to what I said last week. There is an important element to this as well. At the minute, we have no option but to prosecute someone for attempted fraud. There is no other means open to us. This clause gives us a second choice — an alternative, another option — so it is on top of what is there at the minute. At the minute, we have no option but court. From that perspective, it gives us and the customer the option of not ending up in court for something they did.
6454. Mr F McCann: I am finding it difficult to work out the definition of attempted fraud.
6455. Mr McConnell: There is a legal definition. I would not be able to — 6456. Mr F McCann: It is near enough a fine for thought.
6457. Mr McConnell: An example would be someone who submits a claim form or provides information to us that if deemed to be true, would entitle them to money in the benefit system but it is not true information; for example, their means are not right or their income has been reduced when it is actually higher in reality or whatever. It is about telling that untruth. It is about the misrepresentation of facts that would entitle you to money if you were believed. That is the attempted fraud. It is attempting to get money to which you are not entitled because you have misrepresented your circumstances.
6458. Mr Brady: The misrepresentation has happened but the overpayment does not because it is nipped in the bud. It comes back to what we were talking about previously: failure to disclose and misrepresentation. The argument is that you cannot disclose something that you do not know, but you can certainly misrepresent something.
6459. Mr McConnell: You can.
6460. The Chairperson: OK. Is there any information on the number of people who are convicted of attempted fraud, Conrad?
6461. Mr McConnell: I do not have that information at the moment. It is not something that we regularly come across. Certainly, at the minute, when anyone goes through the Public Prosecution Service (PPS) and on to the court system, it is for actual overpayment or actual loss. I cannot think of any cases where there has been attempted fraud.
6462. The Chairperson: I asked where the evidence was, and suggested that that was [Inaudible.] as opposed to saying to people, “I think your claim might be wrong there.”
6463. Mr F McCann: I missed the meeting a couple of weeks ago when you were here before, Conrad. In the past, I did quite a number of cases for people, and we went down to your office to meet your officers. By and large, most of the people involved were women in very low-paid jobs, earning 30 quid a week, and they were petrified out of their skins. The relief came at the end. When they went in and got that caution, they were on the verge of nervous breakdowns. You know that yourself; people are petrified. The caution and warning — although they may have been working in low-paid jobs — was enough to frighten them into a situation where the vast majority of them never did it again. So the cautions worked, and there is probably clear evidence that they did.
6464. Most of the information on benefits is provided in a letter of perhaps 16 pages of gobbledygook, which people get through the door to explain what the benefits are and what they have to do. Most people do not read that, and do not read what is on their benefit books. A lot of people may have problems with literacy or have mental health problems. Mickey raised that the last time as well. How do you penalise or punish people who fall into that category? In

- the past, we have been told a number of things, such as, “Do not worry, it will never really happen”. We were told that about sanctions, but thousands and thousands of people have been sanctioned over the past three years.
6465. Mr McConnell: I will go back to my point. We made this point last week as well. We would not seek to prosecute anyone for fraud unless we were satisfied that they had actually committed fraud, and fraud has to be intentional. This is not about mistakes and is certainly, most definitely, not about people who genuinely do not understand something or make a genuine mistake on a form that is hard to read or because they have certain problems that mean that they are unable to tell us things.
6466. I go back to another key point on fraud. Anyone who believes that he has not actually committed fraud may say to the court that he did not act intentionally. Then it is up to the Department and the PPS to make a decision on whether there is sufficient evidence to go to court to say that we are satisfied that the person acted intentionally. Fraud is definitely not about mistakes.
6467. Mr F McCann: Conrad, you are an experienced officer, an official in the Department. Most of the people who you are dealing with do not have the wherewithal to understand or deal with the stuff that you are talking about. That is where the problem lies. You talk about the court end of it. The fact of life is that people will be fined.
6468. The Chairperson: Can I make the point that we are now straying into having a debate with the Department? That is not what we are doing here.
6469. Mr F McCann: I understand. However, I am talking about the consequences of the decision —
6470. The Chairperson: I understand that. I have no problem, and you are right to make that point. I am just saying that we are now engaging Conrad in a debate that he should not be a part of, and I do not mean that disrespectfully.
6471. Mr Brady: I think that the difficulty in this particular legislation is that it is about people who, they think, are going to commit fraud. You either commit it or do not. One cannot speculate. If someone makes a voluntary omission in giving a statement about his circumstances or anything else, if they give the wrong information, it is fraud. That is fraud clear and simple. However, you cannot speculate as to someone's intentions. Someone may have given the wrong information by mistake. So you should have a clear-cut idea of what fraud is, not this kind of nebulous definition of, “We think you might be going to commit fraud because you gave us an incorrect statement.” If that is the case, just charge them with fraud. Do not be saying that you think that they were going to commit fraud.
6472. The Chairperson: There are a couple of things. Obviously, part of the discussion strays into the broader issue of cautions as a tool for the Department, as opposed to it being able only to prosecute. That is the concept of and the argument around clause 115.
6473. Clause 109 is about people being penalised for intended fraud. Intention is subjective. That is a difficult clause for me to support, in so far as I see the way in which other Departments work, and I have referred to the way that the Housing Executive deals with people's tenancy obligations. I imagine that if the Department noticed a discrepancy with a file, it would speak to the claimant and get the matter clarified very quickly. I imagine that the evidence would show that if people were confronted with that and if fraud was intended, it would be stopped fairly quickly.
6474. I am encouraged by the Department's figures, which show that fraud and claimant error is down. Those are positives. Therefore, if I were the Department, I would want to build on that because those are the strands that seem to be working. For me, it is inherently difficult to levy a fine against or penalise somebody for something that they may be thinking about doing but have not actually done. That is - different from actually committing fraud, where you have to take the consequences. On that basis, I am uncomfortable with clause 109.

6475. Mr Douglas: Conrad made a good point. I think we would all agree that it would be better if we could stop people getting to the stage of committing fraud, which, as Conrad said, is, on average, £4,000. Is there any evidence to suggest that the fine, which is a minimum of £350, would deter people from committing fraud any more than a caution? Let us say that we went for a caution, as the Housing Executive does, is there any evidence that that would work as well?
6476. Mr McConnell: Some people view these things differently. A caution goes on a person's record, so some people would view that as a very bad thing, and they would not want a stain on their record — even a caution for benefit fraud.
6477. Mr Douglas: When you say “record”, do you mean a criminal record?
6478. The Chairperson: You are not talking about a criminal caution; you are talking about the Department saying that your claim is wrong, and it is has been noted?
6479. Mr McConnell: Are you suggesting that that could be a formal warning? I am talking about the formal caution as we would recognise it and as I have talked about in this conversation.
6480. The Chairperson: I think that we are talking about the Department speaking directly to the claimant. It is like saying to Mr or Mrs Bloggs, “Let us have a wee look at your claim. Can we clarify that what you have submitted is accurate?” In my experience, that has very quickly rectified the problem.
6481. Mr McConnell: Yes, that is a different thing.
6482. The Chairperson: I think that the evidence would clearly show that that is what works. I said earlier that I am very encouraged that the Department's figures on claimant error and claimant fraud are well down. That should be welcomed and supported.
6483. Mr F McCann: You may find that anybody who was fined £350 or more would have to go out and do the double to pay that off.
6484. The Chairperson: OK. Fair enough. I am trying to get the sense of the Committee. I take it that members are not happy with that clause and would like to see the issue revisited by the Department.
6485. We move on to clause 110, which is about the amount of penalty, where you would have a fine levied against you as well as recovery, and so on. There are two or three points in there. Does anyone want to make any specific recommendations or arguments about that?
6486. Mr Brady: In that particular —
6487. The Chairperson: With regard to clause 110, which deals with recovering money that has been given to a claimant in error. Even if that money was paid to a claimant in error, that money would be recovered, and the claimant would also be levied with a fine. Do people think that that is wrong?
6488. Mr Brady: It is a double whammy.
6489. The Chairperson: Again, that goes back to what we talked about earlier, which was the level of fairness and what might be fair. If a big amount of money was paid to somebody, they would know that it was wrong and that they would have to pay it back. It would be deemed, if it was beyond a certain amount of money, as a slap on the wrist as well as having the money taken off you.
6490. Mr Brady: May I just clarify something, Conrad? Innocent misrepresentation is still — 6491. Mr McConnell: Innocent misrepresentation? Are you referring to civil penalties? We discussed that last week when we were talking about negligence. We used the example of people who did not have a reasonable excuse for not telling us about things, as opposed to an intention of fraudulent

- behaviour, or, on the other end of the scale, a genuine mistake. Yes, that is still there.
6492. Mr Brady: If that is the case, then we are talking about the recovery of the overpayment as opposed to having two penalties. You are going to be penalising somebody. We keep going back to this, and we cannot get away from it. People on benefit are paid at subsistence level, so if you are going to have overpayment recovery of £5 a week, the person will be £5 below subsistence level. If that person then has to pay an additional fine, if you like, that is going to cause particular problems for particular people. That is one of the issues of which we have to be very mindful.
6493. The Chairperson: OK. What is the Committee's view? You are talking about somebody being fined £350 up to a maximum of £2,000.
6494. Mr Brady: Is that not a reason for looking at whether there has actually been an overpayment, where benefit has been lost from the public purse? If it has not, why would you punish somebody, particularly if you have marked their card and they, hopefully, will not do it again?
6495. The Chairperson: Is this in any way addressed by the earlier point about the level of money at which recovery is triggered? Are members asking the Department to revisit that? We will have to make a decision about that.
6496. Mr Brady: I would agree to that.
6497. The Chairperson: OK. That is what we are asking for. Thank you.
6498. Clause 111 is about the period for withdrawal of agreement to pay a penalty. Again, we raised the issue of the cooling-off period being reduced from 28 days to 14 days. If I remember correctly, there might have been some discussion around further discretion on that, about extending it beyond the 14 days where there was a good reason to do so.
6499. Mr McConnell: We said that we would consider that. I have not got an answer for you yet, but our conversation last week was about whether that balance is right. Some members said that the longer period allows claimants time to get better and proper advice. Our view was that we did not want to get in the way of that.
6500. Mr Brady: It is cost-neutral as well.
6501. Mr McConnell: Yes.
6502. The Chairperson: Are members content to move on to clause 115, which deals with the general issue of cautions?
6503. Were members satisfied with the responses from the Department on clause 111, which is that, although the cooling-off period was reduced from 28 days to 14 days, if there is any reasonable reason why the person cannot get that advice or cannot get a solicitor, that is acceptable? How is that dealt with? Will it be in the guidance?
6504. Mr McConnell: Yes.
6505. The Chairperson: So, are members are content with the assurances on that?
Members indicated assent.
6506. The Chairperson: OK. Thank you for that.
6507. Clause 115 deals with cautions. Conrad referred to this clause earlier. Again, members are looking at the option of cautions as opposed to prosecutions. Do you want to revisit the main point, Conrad? This comes into the discussion on three clauses.
6508. Mr McConnell: I will just add that some people will view cautions as a better outcome than the internal administrative penalty, but others will see it as a worse outcome because it goes on your criminal record. For many people, especially those who are thinking about their work and their jobs, the internal administrative penalty is a better outcome because it is not a formal caution and does not go on your record.
6509. I simply make the point that people view these things in different ways. Some people think that one is worse than the other and vice versa, depending on their - circumstances and their view and all of that. So, it is not necessarily that one is worse than the other; it depends on what you think personally.

6510. Mr F McCann: Would you give people the choice of a caution or a fine?
6511. Mr McConnell: No, we would tend to offer people the administrative penalty as a first option for cases at the lower end of the fraud scale. We would offer cautions somewhere in the middle, leading up to prosecution generally for cases over about £2,000, when there would be court proceedings. Going back to the general point, for some people, a caution may be seen as a better result; others may see the penalty as a better result.
6512. Mr F McCann: If there was an offer of a caution or a fine, people might like to take the caution.
6513. Mr McConnell: We would not offer one or the other. We would use guidelines according to the scale of the fraud and take the lower-end fraud cases for the administrative penalty first, offer a caution to the middle cases, and the more serious cases would go to court.
6514. Mr Brady: Just to clarify this, you said that the caution goes onto your criminal record. Surely that means that you will be prosecuted and found guilty.
6515. Mr McConnell: No, no. It is not a conviction.
6516. Mr Brady: Are you saying that the interview under caution, which is now recorded in the office, forms part of a criminal record?
6517. Mr McConnell: A formal caution goes onto someone's criminal record.
6518. Mr Brady: That is only if they already have one?
6519. Mr McConnell: No, a formal caution, which means at the end of your case —
6520. Mr Brady: No, sorry, that is what I want to clarify. You say, "At the end of your case". Presumably that means, as a result of that caution, the Department, particularly the fraud end, has to decide whether it will prosecute you.
6521. Mr McConnell: Yes.
6522. Mr Brady: So, if there is an informal type of caution, which was talked about, the formal caution that you are talking about is an integral part of the whole case against a person. That is the point I am making.
6523. Mr McConnell: Yes.
6524. Mr Brady: So, for that to go onto your record, you then have to be taken to court, found guilty and have a criminal record. Is that the case?
6525. Mr McConnell: No, no. Maybe I should clarify.
6526. Mr Brady: That is what I was wondering.
6527. Mr McConnell: Maybe what was described earlier as the informal caution in the Housing Executive context was about some sort of warning, some sort of, "Don't be doing that again."
6528. Mr Brady: Let me just clarify that. You are taken into the office and interviewed under caution, as happens. You can take someone in with you — I have been to a couple of them — and the fraud officer puts a new tape in and goes through all that, a bit like a police interview.
6529. Mr McConnell: Yes.
6530. Mr Brady: You are saying that that, standing alone, becomes part of a criminal record. Surely that is the beginning, the initial stage of a prosecution? That is the point I am making.
6531. The Chairperson: Yes, I know you explained, but that is not the — 6532. Mr McConnell: There is an interview under caution, and what the word "caution" means at that point is that you are cautioned that you do not have to say anything unless you wish to do so.
6533. Mr Brady: I understand that.
6534. Mr McConnell: That explains your position legally for the purposes of what

- you want to tell us later on, and we may use that in evidence.
6535. Mr Brady: I understand that but what I am saying is —
6536. Mr McConnell: That is interview under caution, which is a very separate thing. Interview under caution happens in a suspected fraud case. At the end of the investigation, which includes the interview and other evidence that we may or may not have, we come a point where we may want to decide what to do with the case.
6537. Mr Brady: If the case is not then progressed to the court, does that caution stand alone as part of that person's criminal record?
6538. Mr McConnell: At that point, —
6539. The Chairperson: Sorry, Conrad, there are three usages of the word "caution" today. One is the caution that we referred to earlier about the Housing Executive bringing in a tenant to tell them that they are under notice. We were suggesting that the Department might consider, basically, giving someone notice that it thinks there is a problem and hopes that it does not happen again. That is an informal caution. The caution that you are referring to is, when you are brought in for an interview, you are told that you are under caution, which is a legal definition. Therefore, anything that you say can be used in evidence. The caution we are talking about here is where, at the end of an investigation into alleged fraud, the Department may find you guilty; you have done it, and the Department will give you a formal legal caution that will be on your record. Is that right?
6540. Mr McConnell: That is it.
6541. Mr Brady: So, it actually goes on as part of a criminal record.
6542. The Chairperson: Yes, at the end, but not the caution that you would have been aware of.
6543. Ms P Bradley: The caution is your penalty.
6544. The Chairperson: When you accompanied a claimant in —
6545. Mr Brady: I just wanted to clarify that.
6546. The Chairperson: Do you want to elaborate on that or are you all right? [Laughter.] You are under caution if you do. [Laughter.]
6547. Mr Brady: I think that we have sorted that one out.
6548. The Chairperson: Now, what do you want to do about it? [Laughter.]
6549. Mr Brady: I think that I will go for the fine. [Laughter.] Fra said that he would help me.
6550. The Chairperson: You would be destitute after that. Are people content?
6551. Ms P Bradley: Our paper details the concern about the removal of cautions, particularly for minor offences. Is our concern about the removal of the caution for minor offences?
6552. The Chairperson: Yes.
6553. Mr F McCann: Is that a caution 1?
6554. The Chairperson: Conrad made the point that there are two ways of looking at this. You have an option for a caution or an administrative penalty. Is that right?
6555. Mr McConnell: That is right.
6556. The Chairperson: In the absence of that, it is prosecution. That is the point that you are making?
6557. Ms P Bradley: Effectively, you are trying to take away the right to a caution, so people are left with only two options instead of three. Surely it would be better to have the third option in. We should not be removing anything.
6558. The Chairperson: That is the view that has been expressed by the members.
6559. Mr Brady: That was very succinctly put.
6560. Ms P Bradley: Can we go now?
6561. The Chairperson: I could have brought you in earlier, Paula. [Laughter.] You are released, Conrad. [Laughter.]

6562. Mr Brady: Under caution, you might have to come back.
6563. Mr McConnell: Thank you.
6564. The Chairperson: I think that Paula's suggestion is that we want the option. That means that we are saying to the Department that we want that to be retained. We are looking for that full embrace.
6565. Mr Douglas: It wants to remove it.
6566. The Chairperson: Yes.
6567. We move on to the report of the Examiner of Statutory Rules on the delegated powers memorandum. The Examiner has recommended that the Committee amendments that would make regulations under those powers — clause 33 and clause 91 — be subject to confirmatory procedure where the supplementary or consequential provision amends, modifies or repeals a statutory provision or at least a provision of Northern Ireland primary legislation. It is really just to give the Assembly more of a say. It is about the way in which the regulations are brought forward. That would also form part of a discussion at the Executive about the overall conduct of a Bill and all the rest of it. It is as much a political decision as anything else. Are members happy enough to endorse that and note it? Basically, it suggests that we need the strongest possible say from the Assembly. We are looking for the Department to agree to that. Are members happy enough?
6568. Members indicated assent.
6569. The Chairperson: I have nothing further on the paper that was very kindly provided by the Committee Clerk earlier. Are there any other matters that members want to raise that were not in the paper? We agreed this morning that we would work through the paper and then return to any matters that members may wish to raise that are not in the paper.
6570. Mr Brady: Clause 44, clause 47 and clause 96 about the benefit cap.
6571. The Chairperson: Sorry, Mickey?
6572. Mr Brady: Clause 44 is about Assembly control. It states:
“Subject to the following provisions of this section, any regulations made under this Part are subject to negative resolution.”
6573. The Chairperson: We have just dealt with that.
6574. Mr Brady: Sorry, but I just wanted to ask whether it can be changed to “affirmative resolution”? Does it have to remain “negative”? Is that something for the Assembly or Executive to debate?
6575. The Chairperson: We covered the point that we wanted the Department to take on board about the report of the Examiner of Statutory Rules. It specified a number of regulations, but I think that, in general, people have agreed that this will be a political discussion, obviously, for the Executive.
6576. Mr Brady: That is what I wanted to check.
6577. The Chairperson: We are asking the Department to look at that. It is really about the Assembly having the maximum authority on the matter. The Department has agreed to take that away and look at it. Martina is nodding her head quite positively. Has that answered your question, Mickey?
6578. Mr Brady: Yes. My other question was about the benefit cap.
6579. The Chairperson: What number is that?
6580. Mr Brady: Clauses 95 and 96.
6581. The Chairperson: OK. Do you want to speak to those two clauses Mickey?
6582. Mr Brady: Clause 95 talks about this:
“Regulations may provide for a benefit cap to be applied to the welfare benefits”
6583. excluding child-related benefit in the calculation. That would be an option, in the case of a single person or couple. Quite a while ago, Mark raised that point. At the end of the day, I think it is also incumbent upon us to be involved in protecting children. Essentially, if you follow that logic, in that kind of situation, the oldest child will be treated better,

- in a sense, than the youngest. We have heard quite a lot about how the cap can be predicated upon the number of children. So if someone chooses to have five or six children, it may impact upon the amount of benefit that they get. That is unfair on the children, who do not necessarily have that choice. If Iain Duncan Smith had been around when I was coming into being, as the youngest of five, I might not be here. That is another way of looking at it. [Laughter.]
6584. The Chairperson: That is an interesting thought.
6585. Mr Brady: It is, and I am sure there is many a one who would agree with Iain Duncan Smith.
6586. It is a form of social engineering. We have heard a lot about this being intended to discourage people from having larger families. Their benefit will be impacted upon because of that. It is something that we need to address. Have people any views? This is an important question.
6587. Mr Durkan: I have been thinking about those very clauses, and I think they need further discussion. There has been a bit of discussion around the benefit cap, with regard to child-related benefits and exemptions. It is important to have that discussion again and see how we can move it forward. However, as regards child-related benefits, I definitely think that the Committee should be looking at that more closely.
6588. Mr Brady: At an earlier stage, the people who would be affected by the cap would be a relatively small number. It might be useful to get some figures on that because they may be very few. We are talking about large families, and, historically, people here have larger families than those in England, Scotland and Wales. Therefore, it comes under the particular circumstances that prevail here. We have heard about the nuclear family, which is 2·4 children. People here tend to have very nuclear families of perhaps 4·8 children. I just want to make that point because it is something that is particularly relevant to the North.
6589. The Chairperson: OK. Have we any suggestions or recommendations?
6590. Mr Brady: One suggestion might be to try to get some detail on the numbers that might be impacted upon by the cap. We have heard a lot of talk about —
6592. We are quite fortunate in Northern Ireland, because this is based upon the English housing rate, so we have come off really quite well here. We worked that out yesterday, and I have written it down here. If you are a couple with children, or a single parent with children, you are in receipt of £2,166.66 a month, which is a heck of a bit more than some of my friends' families, where both parents are working and they have children. So, I think that we will have quite a bit of difficulty in arguing this one. I take it that we are not looking at the single one; it is only the couple or the single parent with children. It affects a small number, albeit it still affects a number, regardless of whether it is only one person.
6593. Mr Brady: It comes back to the duty of care. There are 624, or whatever, families affected, and there are children involved. I think that it is incumbent upon us to give them as much protection as the people who are getting £2,166.
6594. Ms P Bradley: That is what the benefit cap is set at; it is a substantial amount of money. A lot of people who are working and have families are not receiving that amount of money. They are making decisions as to the number of children they have. I do not agree that people should be told how many children they should have; it is up to them how many children they have. Most couples, my friends or people who I know and have been with over the years, would say that they could not afford to have another child or to have three or four children. They would say that they could - only afford to have, and to give the best start in life to, two children, for instance.

6595. Mr Brady: With respect, we are talking about two different things. We are talking about benefits, which are not high. They are subsistence level, by the Government's own admission. We are also talking about the low-wage economy. The report that came out in the week before last stated that a living wage should be £7.20 an hour, but the minimum wage is £6.19. We live in a minimum-wage economy, so it is as much to do with the low wages. I take your argument. People will say, "I am not earning that, and I am working." However, that is not the problem of the people on benefit; it is the problem of the people who are paying the wages. That is a different issue. We are talking about people on benefit. If we were dealing with employment legislation, we would, obviously, be talking about the minimum wage and various other things.
6596. Ms P Bradley: Sorry to cut in again, but if you were earning that amount of money as a salary, which equates to £32,000 a year, or something like that, for a 40-hour week, you would be getting much more than a very good wage.
6597. Mr Brady: How many people do you and I know who are earning that? I do not know many people who are earning that.
6598. Ms P Bradley: Yes, but you can get it on benefits. People are going to look at that and ask what incentive there is to work if they can get that on benefits.
6599. Mr Brady: I understand what you are saying, but if you follow that rationale, we could say that, if someone is earning only £20,000 a year, somebody on benefits should get only £10,000 to give them an incentive to work. That is not the issue. The issue is the benefit system. People get paid a low amount of money on benefits; they do not get a huge amount of money. The difficulty that we have is the low-wage economy. It is as simple as that.
6600. I think we are talking about two different things. We are talking about the perception that is out there of people working and getting only £15,000, while somebody on benefit is getting £20,000. In fairness, I think that that is part of the media/Government propaganda that has been stirred up and suggests that all these people are sitting on benefits and getting huge amounts of money for doing nothing, while Joe Soap is out working his backside off and not getting half of it.
6601. Ms P Bradley: I know that not everybody and not every household receives that amount of benefit a week. In fact, a lot are far off getting that on benefits. However, that equates to a job that receives a salary of £32,000, or whatever, a year. I know what you are saying, Mickey. Yes, we have a low-wage economy here, but even if you bring people up to the average wage of £20,000, it is still £12,000 above that. I know that a social worker is paid £16,000 for the first year after they graduate. They would need to be a postgraduate for seven years before they would get up to £32,000.
6602. Mr Brady: Part of it is the issue around children and saying that people should not have children unless they can afford them. What if somebody is in a reasonably well-paid job, is pregnant and then loses a job very quickly, as has happened. I am sure there are people in FG Wilson or in the Civil Service or in public service who thought that they had a good, secure job. A lot of what we have heard around this legislation is predicated on all of that social engineering and people being told that they can have only x number of children, otherwise the state will not pay them. The state has a duty of care to the children.
6603. Ms P Bradley: I agree with that, and I do not agree with social engineering. It is up to the individual how many children they have.
6604. Mr Brady: I understand that. It is the parent's choice. I am interested in the children's welfare.
6605. The Chairperson: Do you want to say anything else, Paula?
6606. Ms P Bradley: No, it is fine.

6607. The Chairperson: I am not sure that we are going to get agreement on this now. Perhaps members should look back on it, and we will return to it tomorrow. As there are no other issues, we will come back at 10.00 am tomorrow. I thank the departmental officials for being here all day and for their help.

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Alex Maskey (Chairperson)
 Mr Mickey Brady (Deputy Chairperson)
 Ms Paula Bradley
 Mr Mark Durkan
 Mr Fra McCann
 Mr David McClarty

6608. The Chairperson: Members are aware that the Ad Hoc Committee concluded its work recently, and reported to the Assembly yesterday. The report was not approved in the vote, but I think it would be useful if we could take a summary of the report, bearing in mind that this Committee referred it to the Ad Hoc Committee. Paula and Mickey were the only two members of this Committee on the Ad Hoc Committee.

6609. Ms P Bradley: We were the two members who drew the short straw.

6610. The Chairperson: You obviously fell foul of your party for some reason or another. With your indulgence, members, I ask Mickey and Paula to give us their sense of it. We will not go through a formal session, with recommendations and all the rest of that, but it would be appreciated if they gave us a sense of its worth and what it might mean for us.

6611. Mr Brady: Unlike Lord Morrow, I did not think it was a waste of time. It was an interesting Committee; there was a lot of discussion. Obviously, Paula and I had a heads up because, as we are on the Committee for Social Development, we are au fait with welfare reform as you can be. One of the big issues that came out was the lack of a properly completed equality impact assessment (EQIA) on some groups, for instance in respect of sexual orientation and beliefs. Some people felt that that had absolutely nothing to do with benefits, because if you are entitled, you are entitled. However, it was interesting to note that the Equality Commission had done an analysis, and the four groups on which there was no data profile, as part of the EQIA, were the ones that the Equality Commission felt were most likely to be impacted by the changes.

6612. There were a number of recommendations. They related to such issues as who in the household should be paid, and the changed assessment from disability living allowance to the personal independence payment. The benefit cap was discussed. As you can see in the report, there are a number of recommendations on which there was a fair degree of consensus. I think people were aware that it is not straightforward. A lot of the groups who attended, such as the Human Rights Commission, the Equality Commission and the ethnic minorities group, basically said that the devil is in the detail of the regulations. My argument has always been that, because it is enabling legislation, you have to get it right, because the regulations will flow from it.

6613. Confirmatory and affirmative resolution were also discussed at length. The Human Rights Commission recommended that it should be affirmative. Confirmatory means that you have six months after the legislation is laid in which to debate it. Affirmative means that it is debated before it is laid, which seems a sensible way forward — you talk about it before, rather than when it is a fait accompli. That was one issue. One argument put forward was that it should be affirmative resolution only when there is a policy change. The difficulty with that is this: who then decides what a policy is and what a policy change is? There is some discussion to be had around that, but obviously that is contained in the context of the recommendations.

6614. There was a lot of discussion. Some people possibly had one mindset coming into it, and then maybe thought, during the course of the Committee's work, that things were not just as straightforward as they originally thought. It was mentioned yesterday that people came in with a closed mind. I think that, in some cases, they probably did, but maybe changed their mind to some degree during the course of the debates that ensued in the Committee. All in all, it was a useful exercise. Obviously, the Sinn Féin members of the Ad Hoc Committee felt that the Bill would not be compliant. It was said too many times that it might be or might not be. It either is or it is not. In our view, it is not. The regulations will roll out eventually, but it is incumbent on us to get the enabling legislation right, from the start.

6615. Ms P Bradley: Mickey has covered just about everything. From my point of view, I found it very worthwhile. I do not know whether coming at it with my social development hat on made it easier or harder. At times, you maybe knew too much and looked too deeply into things. We did stray quite a bit. We did end up talking about things that were not necessarily to do with human rights and equality. That is maybe where a lot of the recommendations then came from. Mickey is right to say that some people did come into it asking: "Why are we here, and why are we doing this?" However, the more we worked through it, the more everybody found out just how complex it is. We all came to the realisation that this is going to affect every one of us in our constituency offices, and we now have a bit of knowledge behind us as to what the Welfare Reform Bill is about.
6616. From our party's perspective, as you know, we did not find any breaches. That is as far as that goes. However, there was a good, healthy debate around the recommendations. Everything was debated at length and everyone who wanted to had their say. All of us made some sort of adjustments in our thinking along the way to come to those agreements. Sometimes, some of us wanted more and some of us wanted less, but we came to an agreement on most things. I think that that is for the better. Looking at those recommendations will benefit this Committee, albeit a lot of them were ones that we were already looking at. However, they have been reinforced.
6617. From a personal perspective, I found it beneficial. It gave certain clarity on issues and further broadened my knowledge on welfare reform.
6618. Mr Brady: I am having withdrawal symptoms, because I miss arguing with Peter Weir — or debating, I should say.
6619. I compliment Paula on her answer to a very political question from Mark Carruthers last night. He asked whether she disagreed with Lord Morrow that it was a waste of time.
6620. Ms P Bradley: I did not find it a waste of time.
6621. The Chairperson: Everybody speaks for themselves.
6622. Mr F McCann: Are we going to have a Committee hug?
6623. The Chairperson: The fact that 15 recommendations were agreed by the Committee is helpful, even if only to reinforce people's views on some issues.
6624. Ms P Bradley: It is helpful, Chair, that it has broadened it out yet again and made people of aware of just how serious the impact of this will be and the work we need to do to protect people.
6625. The Chairperson: Ultimately, people will come down on particular elements of the Bill from a party perspective, or whatever else. That will decide people's voting patterns or decisions on the clauses and the Bill overall. That is our job as a Committee. However, it is up to every Member, right through to the completion of the Bill, how they vote. That will take its course.
6626. Does anybody else want to raise any issue or ask any questions of the two members who were on the Ad Hoc Committee?

6627. Mr Durkan: I just want to commend the Ad Hoc Committee on its work, not necessarily on the report that finally came forward, but we on this Committee know just how painstaking the process can be. Fair play to you.

would have been made already in the Committee's considerations up to now. I have no doubt that they will find their way into our final report. I urge all members to read that report and take it on board as part of their consideration.

6628. Mr Brady: No fine wine was produced at any stage, irrespective of what was said yesterday.

6629. Ms P Bradley: We needed it at times.

6630. The Chairperson: I add my thanks to the members of the Ad Hoc Committee for the work that they did. It was a busy period, part of which was over recess; it certainly encroached on recess time. It is very important to hear about the work that was done; even to hear the different party political perspectives. There is fairly substantive agreement that the issues are fundamental, very important and will have a lasting impact. Therefore, it is important that we continue our diligence in dealing with this.

6631. Mr F McCann: I attended two meetings of the Ad Hoc Committee when Caitríona could not make it. There was quite a lot of debate in and around the issues. It was obvious, even from the two sessions that I attended, that there was going to be division in the Committee on the way in which things went forward. That does not mean that it was not right to go through the exercise. As elected representatives, we have a duty to protect those most in need in society, and those who elected us. This is probably going to be one of the most damaging pieces of legislation that we have ever faced and are likely ever to face in how people survive in an ever-worsening economy. It was a worthwhile exercise. It is obvious that we have a job of work ahead of us.

6632. The Chairperson: If there are no further comments on that item, we can move on. Although the report has no formal status, per se, because it was not agreed by the Assembly, there is a body of work that people can access. I think that you, Paula, made the point that a number of the recommendations

6633. The Chairperson: The Minister will be here tomorrow morning. We wanted to get the Committee back into harness again and focus our minds on the work that we have to do. We have a Committee Stage extension, and we are committed to trying to deliver our report short of the time of that extension. It is in nobody's interests to delay this any longer than necessary. We are trying to schedule our work programme to facilitate expediting our work on the consideration as best as we possibly can. I will talk about that in a couple of minutes.
6634. We have Michael Pollock and Martina Campbell here. It might be useful to have some commentary on the departmental responses this morning, if you do not mind. We have to hear the Minister's response tomorrow morning, but perhaps you could give us a flavour of the departmental responses. That will allow us to put a wee bit of forethought into tomorrow. I appreciate that you will be very limited in what you can say because, obviously, you have to follow on from what the Minister will say. I am not suggesting that you can go through all of the report — far from it. It is just to get a wee flavour. The Committee needs to serve notice on ourselves that we need to get back into our work again.

6635. Mr Michael Pollock (Department for Social Development): It was as interesting for us as it was for members to see the work of the Ad Hoc Committee. We were there for the debate yesterday. As you say, the Minister is coming along tomorrow. That is on advice from us, in so far as, ordinarily, the process is that the Minister and the Committee reach an agreed position on where the Welfare Reform Bill stands. As you know, there was a schedule of key issues, which the Committee Clerk provided to us. We have gone through it in discussions with you and, reverting to the Department, with various stakeholders, be it operational or in respect of delivery in another part of the Social Security Agency. We wanted to see the issues around delivery that some of the recommendations that the Committee may raise would have for the Department or for the agency. The paper that has been provided in respect of the Minister is a combination of that. As I say, on advice from us, he wants to talk through that with you to try to reach an agreed position. I do not know whether we need to go through anything on the specific issues today. I am sure that we will go through them at length with the Minister tomorrow.
6636. The Chairperson: I appreciate that, Michael. I was not putting you on the spot by asking you to come forward; I know that what you can say is very limited. Members have the responses in front of them. I suggest that members reflect on those today, and we will hear from the Minister tomorrow morning and have our discussion with him. The Minister will be here for about 45 minutes, then he will have to leave.
6637. Ms Martina Campbell (Department for Social Development): We will be available to the Committee after that.

6638. The Chairperson: That frees you up to continue with the discussion.
6639. Mr Pollock: The Minister is genuinely keen to take the Committee's views. There are lots of issues that he can relate to and on which he has already had discussions with the Department for Work and Pensions, and everybody else. Tomorrow is about trying to move that forward to the next stage, because time is moving on in respect of the Bill.
6640. The Chairperson: Thank you for that. Does anyone want to ask Martina or Michael anything?
6641. Mr Brady: I have one question. The paper states that 75% of households have a broadband connection and that many customers and people use the internet regularly for complex transactions. I find that hard to believe. Where did that research come from? There are vast swathes of rural areas that have no broadband connection.
6642. Ms M Campbell: Yes. I am aware of that. We will get that checked for you and tell you tomorrow.
6643. Mr Brady: For context, contact with local offices, or whatever, will be complex, especially in relation to new arrangements.
6644. Ms M Campbell: It will be time consuming; that is for sure. If claimants who do not have access to online facilities communicate by phone, it will be a lengthy process. There will still be the facility for them to go into the office.
6645. Mr Brady: I think most people will avail themselves of that. That is my experience. It comes across as if there will be only 25% to deal with, because 75% have broadband, and that it will be easy-peasy. I do not think that that will be the case.
6646. Mr Pollock: It is a very fickle thing. I know that from moving house a few months ago and trying to get a broadband connection.
6647. Ms M Campbell: That was the bottom of the Mournes.
6648. Mr Pollock: I suppose that it was behind a hill, but that is beside the point. You get promised the earth, but delivery is another thing. I do not think the agency is going to be fully automated for a considerable time. The face-to-face relationship with the claimant is still something that it advocates and pushes forward.
6649. Mr Brady: My constituency is a huge rural hinterland. You cannot even get a phone signal, never mind anything else. We are doing our best. You move in and out of signal. In Newry, there are Wi-Fi hotspots. Some drivers park outside particular coffee shops so that they can get a connection. There is a long way to go.
6650. Mr Pollock: The figures that you are seeing would be unofficial statistics. As Martina said, we would not know exactly where they were sourced, as such. They would not be the official figures.
6651. Mr F McCann: Mickey was actually wondering why all the cars were stopping outside his house. He started to charge people. [Laughter.]
6652. Mr Brady: We tried that. It did not work.
6653. Mr F McCann: Obviously, Mickey is right to raise the issue of 75% broadband connection. There is another issue. I do not know whether any research has been done into it. Although the paper may say, rightly or wrongly, that 75% of people are connected to broadband, a huge number of people have computers in their houses who do not have the capacity to use them. You will probably find that that will add to the serious problems that people will face.
6654. Mr Durkan: The 25% who do not have broadband connection may be among the most vulnerable.
6655. The Chairperson: Will you look into that?
6656. Ms M Campbell: We will source that reference for you for tomorrow.
6657. Mr Pollock: We will if I can get onto the internet.

6658. Ms M Campbell: The agency is piloting a new text service. I will find out about it and get back to you on that as well.
6659. The Chairperson: I suppose that we will just have to leave that at this stage, Michael. Because we have the Minister in tomorrow morning, obviously, we are just having a brief look at the departmental response and how to prepare for that meeting. We will deal with that tomorrow morning when the Minister is here.
6660. Ms M Campbell: You can save all your difficult questions for him.
6661. The Chairperson: Are members happy enough that we leave that item for now?
6662. Members indicated assent.
6663. The Chairperson: Again, people need to read the material in the next day to prepare for tomorrow morning's meeting because it will be an important one for the Committee. Martina and Michael, thanks for your help this morning.
6664. Ms M Campbell: Thank you, Chair.
6665. The Chairperson: That leaves us in a wee bit of a — not an awkward — position. We have slight problem in that the Clerk of Bills was supposed to be here. We wanted her to take members through the amendments and a range of other technical issues that we have to deal with. However, she will not be free until after 11.00 am, so we will, obviously, have to defer that until tomorrow morning. It is important that the Clerk of Bills takes people through where we are at with regard to the Bill and the suggested amendments that people put forward before the Ad Hoc Committee was established. It is very important that she then takes us through the procedure from now and what we have to do by completion of Committee Stage. A fair bit of work will be condensed into the next couple of weeks. That is very clear. We have to wrap this up fairly quickly. I would have preferred for the Clerk of Bills to appear. However, she cannot be free until at least 11.00 am. We will just have to suspend consideration for this morning.
6666. Ms P Bradley: We have plenty of reading to do, Chair.
6667. The Chairperson: I am sure that we all have work to do anyway.
6669. The Chairperson: It would be helpful and important for the Clerk of Bills to explain the legislative procedure, the importance of primary legislation — in this case, enabling legislation — and what you may or may not be in a position to do when we get supplementary legislation or statutory regulations. Simply put, you can vote for or against them when they arrive. That is why people on the Ad Hoc Committee argued that some of those things should be dealt with by way of affirmative resolution as opposed to the confirmatory procedure. There are checks and balances in the legislative process, which the Clerk of Bills will probably explain. Ultimately, members have to make a decision as to whether they believe something is worth supporting or not. We will take as much information as possible on the legal arguments from the Clerk of Bills, who will be here tomorrow morning. She will take members through the legislative process. That will be helpful.

6670. Mr Copeland: I am just curious about what the actual implications are should we accept the Bill and subsequently find that there is something we are not happy about. It is about cause and effect.

6671. The Chairperson: That is fair enough.

6672. Mr F McCann: I think we have got to get through a lot that we are not happy about before we pass the Bill.

6673. Mr Brady: There is obviously the whole issue around whether it is affirmative or confirmatory resolution. If it is affirmative, regulations will be debated before they are made. If it is confirmatory, they will be debated afterwards. That is why it was felt affirmative resolution is important.

6674. Mr Copeland: But would that be done in light of us having accepted the policy intent inculcated in the Bill?

6675. The Chairperson: Legally, you would be advised that if a Bill comes through the Speaker, the Departmental Solicitor's Office, and all the rest of it, it is fit for purpose, so you can vote on it. The issue in your mind is that you might have an idea what the policy intent is, but are not sure how that would work its way out. Those are decisions that you are going to have to make. However, the Clerk of Bills will tell you that if the Bill is cleared by the Speaker and goes through all the processes, it is fit for purpose. That is why the Ad Hoc Committee was set up; some people argued that the Bill may not be compliant with equality requirements, and so on. The report from the Ad Hoc Committee has no formal status here because it was not agreed by the Assembly. We had a brief discussion earlier on that. The report is there. It does not deal with things in the way in which some people might have wanted it to. Nevertheless, there was a debate around that. You will be faced with the situation, as will all Members, of having a Bill in front of you that is legally appropriate. We have to decide whether we support the Bill, or aspects of it. The Clerk of Bills will take you through the legal status of it; in other words, what legally allows a Bill to be on the table for debate and what the consequences are if that Bill is passed. Remember, the Bill could, theoretically, be amended between now and when it is actually finally enacted.

6676. Mr Brady: You make the point about amendments. If amendments were made to the Bill, you would assume that they would be crafted in such a way that the regulations would have to conform to the intended changes. That is maybe a simplistic way of putting it, but it seems to me that there is no point putting forward amendments that are going to have no effect if the regulations do not then conform to your policy intent. That is why the amendments are so important. The Clerk of Bills will give us the detail of what is involved in that.

6677. Mr Copeland: Do the amendments have to be accepted by the Department and, by implication, the Minister?

6678. Mr Brady: By the Assembly, I would imagine.

6679. The Chairperson: Ultimately, the Assembly. David will know that, as a former Deputy Speaker. Part of the process of legislation is that you actually ask for the Department's co-operation. This Committee has already told the Department — unanimously, in fact, which is very good — that it wants the Department and the Minister to take on board certain things that are different from what is in the Bill. The Department may or may not do that. It would be preferable that the Department and Minister do that, because that shows greater consensus and makes the process easier. However, if the Minister and the Department do not agree with something, it is still up to the Assembly to put forward amendments. That happens for every piece of legislation that people seek to amend. It is open to any Member to seek to amend legislation, as a party member, a member of a Committee or an individual Member. Any Member can table any amendment to a Bill. David could give you better clarity on it, but you can seek to change a Bill with or without the Minister's or Department's agreement.

6680. Mr Copeland: Can you put caveats on clauses in the Bill, preventing their enactment until you have seen the regulations coming from them?
6681. Mr McClarty: No.
6682. Mr Brady: A lot has been said about parity. A lot of the changes in the amendments would change the administration of the Bill in a sensible way, you would hope, rather than necessarily impacting on the amount of money. Take, for instance, sanctions. The people on sanctions are still going to get paid anyway. That is the kind of thing we are talking about. There are issues around particular parts of the Bill where finance may come into it, but a lot of the amendments, and certainly the recommendations that the Ad Hoc Committee made, would not necessarily impact on the amount of money that would have to be paid under parity. There is a notion abroad — probably put abroad by government — that if you amend something, it is going to cost you. That is not necessarily the case at all. It is another avenue that needs to be explored in more detail. In many cases, it could be cost neutral. That is important.
6683. The Chairperson: No doubt, we will get into all that. We will ask the Clerk of Bills for as much information as possible. It is a bit unfortunate that we have to end the meeting now, because I would have liked to have got that work done, but there we are.

31 January 2013

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

 Mr Michael Pollock
 Mr Conrad McConnell Social Security Agency

6684. The Deputy Chairperson: I welcome you back and apologise for any delays. I ask people in the Public Gallery and members of the Committee to switch off any electronic devices.

6685. The Minister went through some of the issues this morning. I have some questions, Conrad, that maybe you could address, specifically around cautions, fraud and penalties. First of all, people had questions around clause 115 and cautions. The Committee had talked about the implications of removing that clause because of the issues around cautions. I mentioned a case that was on the radio the other day about some young fellow who applied for a job and had a caution about something to do with stealing a bicycle when he was 11 years old. That was on a criminal record. Obviously, that is something to be avoided. As it stands, I think, you can sign a waiver and have a financial penalty rather than go to prosecution.

6686. Mr Conrad McConnell (Social Security Agency): Yes.

6687. The Deputy Chairperson: That is going to change in the context of welfare reform.

6688. Mr McConnell: At the minute, we have essentially three forms of penalty for fraud. There is the administrative penalty or internal fine. There is an option to pay that internal fine, which is 30% at the minute and will go up to 50% under the changes in the Bill. That is one way of dealing with cases of lower-level fraud. For cases that are slightly more serious but not up to £2,000, perhaps, we would give people the option of the caution, which is a formal caution that avoids you going to court. So, there is the option of paying for some cases, and there is the caution for some other cases. The third option is to recommend prosecution to the Public Prosecution Service, which might then go ahead with a prosecution in court. That is what happens at the minute. What the Bill was saying was that we would take the cautions element out, and there would simply be two forms of penalty for fraud, not three. That was what we were saying originally in the Bill.

6689. The Deputy Chairperson: If the formal caution was to be retained, does that then go on a criminal record?

6690. Mr McConnell: It does. As it does at the minute, it would continue to.

6691. The Deputy Chairperson: Presumably, then, people would maybe consider that it was worth testing a case in court, because it is a double whammy: if you get a formal caution and pay a fixed penalty, you are going to have a criminal record anyhow.

6692. Mr McConnell: You would not have the administrative penalty plus the caution. You would have one or the other. Someone who chooses to take a caution is choosing that as an alternative.

6693. The Deputy Chairperson: So, if you pay the penalty, you do not get a caution?

6694. Mr McConnell: Yes, that is right.

6695. The Deputy Chairperson: You avoid, then, that going onto a criminal record?

6696. Mr McConnell: Yes, although —

6697. The Deputy Chairperson: That is up to only a certain stage.
6698. Mr McConnell: Yes, exactly. We would offer the administrative penalty for cases that we would deem to be slightly less serious. For cases that fall into the middle group, we would offer a caution as an alternative to going to court. It is up to the person to decide whether they want to take that option, in the knowledge that if they accept the caution, it will go onto their record.
6699. The Deputy Chairperson: You do not have to pay an administrative penalty?
6700. Mr McConnell: No, exactly.
6701. The Deputy Chairperson: If you pay the administrative penalty, is there also a period when you lose benefit?
6702. Mr McConnell: Not at the minute.
6703. The Deputy Chairperson: But there may well be.
6704. Mr McConnell: Yes, in future, administrative penalties and cautions will trigger the loss of benefit.
6705. The Deputy Chairperson: So, we are back to a double whammy, really.
6706. Mr McConnell: That is the whole debate around loss of benefit generally in relation to whether it is a deterrent or not.
6707. The Deputy Chairperson: You are being penalised twice.
6708. Mr McConnell: Well —
6709. The Deputy Chairperson: You are going to have to pay an administrative penalty, which, if you are on benefit, you would normally pay out of your benefit, but you are not going to get your benefit. So, you know, I am not sure how that — 6710. Mr McConnell: Yes, although I suppose that it is back to the principle of the loss of benefit regulations. It applies currently whereby if you are found to have committed fraud, you lose benefit for a period.
6711. The Deputy Chairperson: I understand that.
6712. Mr McConnell: It is about increasing that period further, but the principle is there —
6713. The Deputy Chairperson: It is punitive.
6714. Mr McConnell: It is about trying to deter people from —
6715. The Deputy Chairperson: I can understand that, but it is still a double whammy.
6716. Mr Copeland: Will there be a differentiation between deliberate fraud and accidental fraud, and what is the nature of the criminal conviction that will be applied if one or the other is found to be the case for future employment prospects or perhaps for even visiting foreign countries? The reason I ask is quite simple: a chap employed at Belfast City Airport was working quite happily until his Access NI check came back and it was discovered that he had robbed the Chinese restaurant that he had worked in with a water pistol when he was 17. The net proceeds were a Chinese cookery book, and he had no knowledge of Chinese, so it was hardly the crime of the century. However, it was sufficient to indicate that he was not a person who should be employed as a cleaner in an airport, and he lost his job. He also took his own life, which was the other aspect of it.
6717. Mr McConnell: To answer the question: fraud has to be intentional. Whether you deal with the fraud through an administrative penalty, a caution or a prosecution, it has to be a fraud.
6718. Mr Copeland: The discretion exists —
6719. Mr Michael Pollock (Department for Social Development): There is no such thing as unintentional fraud. There are very strict —
6720. Mr Copeland: The outcomes are the same; I understand the legal difference. So, basically, once you get to that stage, you have admitted or have been convicted of illegal activity.

6721. Mr McConnell: It is important to really stress the point that we would not seek to offer someone a penalty for fraud unless we were satisfied that fraud had been committed. The other really important point to make is that if anyone has any doubt as to whether they have committed fraud, they are free to challenge that through the courts. Fraud has to be intentional. This is not about customer error.
6722. Mr Copeland: How long does such a — [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.] — if that is the right word, appear on someone's record for the purposes of Access NI.
6723. Mr McConnell: I would need to find that out for you. It is part of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Order.
6724. Mr Copeland: When is it spent?
6725. Mr McConnell: I would need to find that out.
6726. Mr F McCann: Is there a sliding scale in how long something stays on your record?
6727. Mr McConnell: I am not sure; I will need to check that. That is all part of another Act, which, as far as I know, is the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act. That deals with spent convictions for cautions and other offences and how long they appear on your record. I can certainly find that out for you.
6728. Mr F McCann: I would appreciate that.
6729. If memory serves me right — it usually does not — I think that if someone receives an overpayment, even if they did not realise it, they will be brought to a disciplinary hearing. Tommy O'Reilly said this morning that there was a problem with the system at Christmas and people got overpayments. Under the new regulations, if they receive an overpayment — even if they did not know — would that be classed as fraud?
6730. Mr McConnell: No; fraud has to be intentional. It has to be deliberate behaviour. It would not be possible for someone to find themselves at the wrong end of a fraud case not having known that they had done something wrong. It has to be intentional. If there is any doubt in their mind as to whether they did or did not know what they were doing, the court is the ultimate arbiter of guilt. Error does not come into fraud. It is a completely different thing, and it is dealt with in a very different way that does not involve penalties.
6731. Mr F McCann: If someone gets an overpayment, will they face penalties?
6732. Mr McConnell: Perhaps your question relates to the civil penalty. There is a clause in the Bill that deals with civil penalties. That is a new thing, and the proposal in the Bill is to apply a civil penalty, which would be set in regulation — at the minute, the intention is to set it at £50. That would apply to people who have been negligent in their claim; not necessarily fraudulent, but certainly negligent. That — 6733. Mr F McCann: Will you give me an example of that, Conrad?
6734. Mr McConnell: If someone had an overpayment for something they did not tell us about and said that they simply forgot to tell us, we would deem that to be negligent. In contrast, if someone did not report a change in circumstances that was relevant to their benefit but, perhaps, they had been bereaved or had suffered some trauma that seemed to us to be a reasonable reason why they had not come to us, that would not apply. That is the distinction. The decision would be made by the decision-makers as part of the benefit process.
6735. The Deputy Chairperson: Fra, before you go on, I remind members about their mobile phones. There is some interference, and it is affecting the Hansard recording. Make sure your phones are switched off.
6736. Mr F McCann: Mine is off.
6737. I got it mixed up. That may be because we were discussing it in and around the same period the last time. I want to be clear about this in my mind: if someone is given an overpayment, they do not

- realise it and the office catches on, they will be liable to penalties.
6738. Mr McConnell: Yes, but it all depends on the nature of the non-recognition, if you like, of what went wrong.
6739. Mr F McCann: Let me give you an example. Tommy talked this morning about an error in the computer system. Many people get their money paid into a post office account: it is Christmas and people go out; they do not even know what they have got; they spend it. It is still an overpayment, but under any new legislation, they will be fined because they did not — 6740. Mr Pollock: No; they may have to repay it, Fra, as I understand, but there would not be a penalty attached to that.
6741. Mr F McCann: I understand that.
6742. Mr McConnell: There is no penalty for official error. If the system gets it wrong or we get it wrong, we certainly would not apply a penalty for that; absolutely not. If someone did not tell us something that created the overpayment, and we deemed it to be not fraudulent or intentional but negligent or careless — a failure to take reasonable care — it would attract the civil penalty of £50, which is the new — 6743. Mr F McCann: I suppose that the devil is in the detail.
6744. Mr McConnell: It is down to a judgement of the circumstances and all of that.
6745. The Deputy Chairperson: In the “proposed way forward” under the summary of issues raised about cautions, the Minister said:
- “In the event agreement is made to retain cautions and remove clause 115, then it would in fact make sense to keep clause 109 and amend it to have the power to apply an admin penalty or caution for attempted fraud.”*
6746. Will you clarify that?
6747. Mr McConnell: Certainly; the suggestion previously was that cautions would remain. Clause 115 proposed to take cautions away, so that rather than having
- the three options of dealing with fraud, there would be two, and cautions would not be there anymore. The suggestion was that cautions should stay and that those three options should remain. The Minister has said that, in the event that clause 115 does not go forward and cautions remain as a means of dealing with benefit fraud, it would make sense to have cautions as a means of dealing with attempted benefit fraud as well. Clause 109 deals with the attempted side of things. That is really saying that if you are going to keep three options for actual fraud, keep the same three options for attempted fraud and do not have a system where you have three here and two up there.
6748. The Deputy Chairperson: We have had the discussion before about what constitutes attempted fraud and how the Department quantifies, finds out or lets us know what attempted fraud is.
6749. Mr McConnell: Someone who completes a form to apply for benefit tells us things, in doing so, about their circumstances — their means, income, family, relationships, perhaps illness — so that all the information comes together to allow our people to decide what benefit they are entitled to. It would be attempted fraud for someone to put false information in that form that, if we had not checked, would have led us to pay that person money to which they were not entitled because their circumstances were not as described. The difference between attempted and actual is that we catch it before the money is paid out, but the crime of attempting to claim has still been committed.
6750. The Deputy Chairperson: You get your retaliation in first, so to speak.
6751. Mr McConnell: It is about trying to deter people from giving us false information to try to get benefit that they are not entitled to. It is about trying to deter behaviour that, if not caught, would lead to fraud that could go on for months or years.

6752. The Deputy Chairperson: If cautions were to be retained, would that caution go on the person's record?
6753. Mr McConnell: Yes. The suggestion is that if cautions stay as part of the fraud process, we will want them to stay as part of the attempted fraud process as well. That being the case, whether it was for attempted or actual fraud, a caution would go on your record.
6754. Ms P Bradley: In my opinion, attempted fraud is every bit as bad as actual fraud, because you are going out there with the clear intent to commit fraud. However, a person who attempts fraud will not have received anything from you. They will not have received any money.
6755. Mr McConnell: Yes.
6756. Ms P Bradley: So, looking at the way things are at the minute to do with the fine for low-level and a caution for up to £2,000 and all that, how do you work any of those penalties in for someone who has not received any money? How does that work out? I can understand how it applies when they have received money, but how is it applied where they have not? I know of people who are putting in things like, "No; he doesn't live with me. He lives in another house." I know that that happens. I have seen it. How do you deal with that, though?
6757. Mr McConnell: The detail of that will be in regulations and depend on the severity of the attempt. As you said, we would say that the attempt is every bit as bad as the actual, because they tried to do the same thing but just did not happen to get there. Under the proposals, it could be dealt with through an administrative penalty — that is what clause 109 is about — which allows us to provide an alternative to court for someone who has tried to commit fraud. Under the Bill, such a penalty would be set at a minimum of £350, because there is no actual overpayment. Normally, it is 30%; now, in the Bill, it is set at 50%. There is nothing to apply a percentage to, but the minimum penalty would be £350.
6758. Ms P Bradley: I understand it now. It would be a fine — a penalty. OK.
6759. Mr Durkan: Thank you, Conrad. I want to ask about the differentiation between fraudulence and negligence. I understand fully the approach taken to attempted fraud. The examples that you gave were of someone entering information. Is it the case that if someone enters erroneous information, that constitutes fraudulence, but if they omit information, that is more likely to be seen as negligence, even though the information can be deliberately omitted?
6760. Mr McConnell: I suppose that, in all cases, there is no clear black and white. The behaviours range from people who make genuine errors to those who intentionally set out to commit fraud. All this gives us a range of options to deal with that range of behaviours, from genuine mistakes, where nothing would happen, through to failing to take care and to actual intent to commit fraud.
6761. The Deputy Chairperson: It goes back to the old argument about failure to disclose the misrepresentation. There was a lot of contention around that.
6762. Thanks for that, Conrad. Are there any other issues that you want to raise about your speciality, for want of a better word? [Laughter.]
6763. Mr McConnell: No. I am happy to take questions, if there are any. I am happy to come back to the Committee on the issue of spent convictions.
6764. The Deputy Chairperson: OK, thank you very much.
6765. We will move on. The Minister dealt with some of the issues this morning, but we did not have time to discuss them all and there may be other issues that you want to deal with. We dealt with the issues of payments and underoccupancy. Perhaps you could deal with some of the issues that the Minister did not cover.
6766. Ms Martina Campbell (Department for Social Development): Yes. Do you want

- to start with the claimant commitment, which is dealt with in clause 4?
6767. I think that we are all clear that if, in a joint claim, one member of the couple refuses to sign the claimant commitment, there will be no claim and it will fall. There is no facility for any money to be paid. A short cooling-off period will be allowed, and attempts will be made to get the claimant — the unwilling partner, if you like — to re-engage. For us to do anything different would, obviously, break parity, as a couple here who are in the same circumstances as a couple on the mainland would be treated differently. So, we are not minded to do anything on that.
6768. The Deputy Chairperson: One of the issues raised was that if someone makes, if you like, an informed decision from their point of view not to sign the claimant commitment, that gives them a choice. However, the person who is the partner — the other half of the claim — does not have that choice. I know that you have mentioned the cooling-off period of four weeks.
6769. Human rights was one of the issues that the Ad Hoc Committee looked at. Human rights relates to individuals rather than households. The European Convention on Human Rights says that no one should be made destitute. However, there is the potential for a situation in which someone will have no access to any money at all for four weeks, through no fault of their own. That is one of the issues.
6770. Ms M Campbell: Yes. The Minister fully appreciates that. First, we do not expect there to be a very large volume of such cases. Secondly, the facility exists, as you know, under the current jobseeker's allowance, if both individuals do not sign the agreement, for the willing partner to make a claim in his or her own right. That is being done away with because universal credit is a household benefit and is concerned with taking into account all the income within the household. There could be a situation of an abusive relationship, and the willing partner will be disadvantaged or, to use your word, destitute in some circumstances. However, as long as they remain a couple, they cannot satisfy the household claim element.
6771. The Deputy Chairperson: You said that universal credit deals with the household. The human rights aspect deals with individuals. So, there is an issue there. A scenario could occur where the couple goes in, one of them refuses to sign and they do not get any money. That is four weeks. What will happen if the woman — without being sexist about it — comes back the next day and says, "He is gone, and I want to make a fresh claim"?
6772. Ms M Campbell: That is fine. If they separate, it is no longer a joint claim. If the woman comes in and says that she has called a halt to the relationship but her partner has not moved out because they are in negative equity or whatever, you are then into the process of verifying whether or not — 6773. The Deputy Chairperson: That can take another four weeks.
6774. Ms M Campbell: Hopefully not.
6775. The Deputy Chairperson: I am not being facetious when I say that. There will still be a period where that person is without benefit through no fault of their own. That is at the core of this.
6776. Ms M Campbell: I cannot be definitive about that circumstance; I will have to check. However, if the woman comes in and says that she is now claiming as a single person and taking steps to terminate the relationship, that person, the same as any claimant, will be entitled to make a claim for a discretionary payment — what we know as social fund — or a hardship payment within the universal credit world or a budgeting advance.
6777. The Deputy Chairperson: Before I let Mark in, I have two points on that. When you talk about "taking steps", presumably you mean possibly seeing a solicitor.

6778. Ms M Campbell: It is the same process. The existing guidance on determining whether or not a couple is a couple — that can be a heterosexual couple or a civil partnership couple — will carry forward. It is our good friend common sense again here.
6779. The Deputy Chairperson: Common sense is not so common in my experience.
6780. My other point, before I let Mark in, is about hardship payments. Under universal credit, hardship payments will be recoverable. If that woman has to apply for a hardship payment through no fault of her own and benefit is eventually paid, she will be below subsistence level, again through no fault of her own.
6781. Ms M Campbell: My understanding is that, in human rights law, the threshold to determine destitution is very high, and it is not defined, as I understand it, in the Human Rights Act.
6782. The Deputy Chairperson: With respect, the reason it is not defined is that it is subjective rather than objective.
6783. Ms M Campbell: Absolutely. We would argue that hardship money will be repayable in the same way that social fund is currently repayable out of people's benefit, as will the discretionary payment scheme — I think that that is what it will be called.
6784. Mr Pollock: The entitlement is protected as opposed to the amount.
6785. Mr Durkan: The response states that there will be a cost attached to accepting the amendment. What would that cost be?
6786. Ms M Campbell: As I said, people in Newcastle upon Tyne and in Newcastle, County Down face the same set of circumstances. They might have an abusive partner who is possibly working and does not need to sign the claimant commitment. The only form of control that he has over her is to withhold his consent to the commitment. Therefore, the claim is void. He is OK, because he is getting his wages. He is not dependent on the benefit. A couple may be in those circumstances in Northern Ireland, and the same circumstances exist in England, Scotland or Wales. If we change this provision and allow for a claim to be made by the woman in her own right without them ending the couple element of their relationship, we are treating claimants here more advantageously than our colleagues in England. That is where the cost comes in. There is a cost to the public purse, because that claim would not exist otherwise. Do you see what I mean? Have I not explained that well?
6787. Mr Durkan: It could exist if she said that he is gone.
6788. Ms M Campbell: Yes; but then that clause does not come into play, because she is claiming as a single person anyway.
6789. Mr Durkan: But then that claim would exist.
6790. Ms M Campbell: We are talking about circumstances here and policy intent. The policy intent is that, for couples, the universal credit is paid as a household claim, and that means taking into account all of the circumstances, including earnings or any other income of the couple. In your circumstance, when she comes in and says, "OK, the relationship has irretrievably broken down, and I want to claim as a single person," she is not claiming under that clause as a couple; she is claiming as a single person. However, let us keep on the track that she is still maintaining that she is in a relationship with him. If he is working, for example, and we accepted her claim as a single person, we could not take into account his earnings. He could be earning, for example, £26,000, and we would not be able to take that money into account, because she is saying that she is a single claim, but they are still together for all intents and purposes.
6791. The Deputy Chairperson: Just to clarify that, why would they be making a claim if he was earning £26,000 in the first place?

6792. Ms M Campbell: Because they can still claim universal credit, even up to — 6793. The Deputy Chairperson: But it is more unlikely. We know that universal credit is going in one end and coming out the other, but I imagine that those cases would not be that frequent, would they?
6794. Ms M Campbell: No, but neither, we believe, would these cases here, and it is about protecting the public purse.
6796. Ms M Campbell: But there is still a cost. I cannot determine what the cost is, because we do not know how many claimants are going to be in that situation. However, there will be a cost, and we will be breaking parity with the rest of England, Scotland and Wales.
6797. Ms P Bradley: It just gets more complicated. Martina just made my point. I was going to ask about someone who was suffering abuse, even if it was financial abuse. That is the perfect scenario for the abuser: they can cause the other person in the relationship extreme hardship. That, to me, would be a great worry. However, you have now explained the other side. As we have said before, we know that people are making claims and saying that they are not actually living there, and so on. I have seen it, and I am sure that other people have seen it. We could have people saying that they are in an abusive relationship, but, as you say, you cannot take that into account.
6798. Ms M Campbell: It is a bit like Conrad's point about attempted fraud, fraud, negligence, or whatever.
6799. Ms P Bradley: Exactly. Again, looking at it very cynically, there is an opening for attempted fraud. However, I still cannot get my head round how we could possibly leave vulnerable people, especially if there are children in the relationship, without an income.
6800. The Deputy Chairperson: I did not realise that you were cynical, Paula, until now.
6801. Ms P Bradley: It is from being in your company, Mickey.
6802. It has just got even more complicated. We want to protect the vulnerable in our society, but we do not want to open it up again to abuse.
6803. The Deputy Chairperson: That highlights the need for clarification on these issues.
6804. If nobody else has a question on that issue, we will move on to third-party verification.
6805. Ms M Campbell: I think that we are OK on that. That was a bit of a misunderstanding on behalf of some of the stakeholders. Where a claimant is asked to provide identity verification, the same system as now will hold. Where a claimant does not have access to a bank account, there will be a simple payment card — I think that is what it is called.
6806. The Deputy Chairperson: Simple payment service.
6807. Ms M Campbell: I think that it is similar to the PayPoint system. I do not think there is any issue there.
6808. The Deputy Chairperson: The next issue is 16- and 17-year-olds registered in training but not placed. I have a couple of things to say before other members come in. The paper talks about the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) not being aware of any 16- or 17-year-olds on a waiting list, as such. It is my understanding that child benefit is a qualifying benefit: if a parent wants to claim child tax credit, for instance. We are really talking about children who are in limbo, even in the short term. The logistics of children coming out of care would initially be dealt with by social services, before they may go onto benefits. It does say that if someone is going for a particular course and it is not available, they may be put on another course. That is speculative,

- I suppose; it depends on how many places are available. Someone who is estranged from the family home at that age may be entitled to benefit, because they are one of the exceptions.
6809. Ms M Campbell: Yes, they are special exceptions, as is a care leaver if they have responsibility for a child.
6810. The Deputy Chairperson: And someone who is a lone parent, in those circumstances. We are really taking about a group that is in between; who are not on a course and whose parents are not getting benefit for them. As you know, there is a child benefit exclusion date, which comes in September. People are normally informed about that in April of the year. Unless they say what is happening to that child after the first week in September —
6811. Ms M Campbell: They are cut off, yes.
6812. The Deputy Chairperson: I am wondering what happens in those situations. That is a concern.
6813. Ms M Campbell: In those situations, there will be no claim. We were not able to determine the number of 16- and 17-year-olds who accessed the hardship payments under jobseeker's allowance. However, the total number of hardship payments made was 413.
6814. The Deputy Chairperson: The Minister mentioned the new discretionary support scheme, which may be available in particular circumstances for those leaving care. Those are the kids who are going into the mainstream, if you like. They have come out of care, and social services will have looked after them in a halfway house situation. Is that right? The discretionary support scheme will deal with those who are moving on from that.
6815. Ms M Campbell: It is really NEET category: they are not in education, employment or training, they are not a lone parent and they are not a member of a couple. It should be a small number. Of course, that is where entire Executive responsibility comes in. The whole emphasis, as you know, is on getting kids between the ages of 16 and 18 to either remain in education or go into training. This is part of that.
6816. Mr F McCann: It says that the education maintenance allowance training budget of £40 a week is unique to here. I thought that there was a system in England where young people between 16 and 18 who go into training are paid at a higher rate than that. I remember raising a question about six months ago. I think that £1 billion was set aside for people aged between 16 and 18 to go into employment; I think that people were paid £6 or £7 an hour. I remember raising a question about that here. The Minister for Employment and Learning said that he would bring in something that would pay at £40 a week. I just wonder —
6817. Ms M Campbell: I cannot give you an answer on that, Fra. That is for DEL, but I will see whether it will give me some more information for you.
6818. Mr F McCann: I think that, in England, they were paid minimum wage.
6819. Mr Pollock: Yes. I remember your question, but there was a wee bit of overlap between the work programme that was associated with the social security side of it and some other DEL initiatives.
6820. The Deputy Chairperson: If nobody else has any questions on that, we will move on to restrictions on entitlement, which is clause 6.
6821. Ms M Campbell: This is about passported benefits. It is where the claim is for less than seven days. It would be administratively prohibitive to pay any money that is due, but the claimant would still have an underlying entitlement to any passported benefits, such as dental, eye tests or free school meals, for that week.
6822. The Deputy Chairperson: So if somebody is entitled for six days, they do not get paid, but they may have an underlying entitlement for dental or optical charges, and that kind of thing?

6823. Ms M Campbell: Yes. Their award letter will, for example, say that they are entitled to, say, £15 universal credit from Monday to Thursday. However, because it would cost too much administratively to pay that, they are not getting it. There is also the issue of the three waiting days. However, the letter will list the benefits to which they may be entitled, including free school meals and all the other passported benefits.
6824. The Deputy Chairperson: The administration of doing that — 6825. Ms M Campbell: But the award notice is standard.
6826. The Deputy Chairperson: I understand that, but a cost is still involved in the administration of the passported benefits.
6827. Ms M Campbell: That will be for the responsible Departments to worry about.
6828. Mr F McCann: It must be inflation. I remember that it used to be to the nearest penny.
6829. Ms M Campbell: Yes. If you are entitled to 1p, that letter will still be sent out. It will cost 38p or whatever a first-class stamp costs to send out a letter to tell you that you are entitled to 1p but that it will not be paid.
6830. The Deputy Chairperson: It is much dearer than that, Martina. Obviously, you use internal post.
6831. Ms M Campbell: No. I gave away a stamp yesterday, but I buy them in books, so I never know how much they are.
6832. The Deputy Chairperson: That is the position on the restrictions on entitlement. Does anybody have any further questions? If not, we will move on.
6833. Ms M Campbell: The next issue is the child disability rate. I did the calculation; I admit that it is very crude. We estimated it at around £11 million, with additional administration costs. That figure does not take in the clerical workarounds and all of that. The child tax credit shows that 7,600 children receive the disabled child element and 6,000 receive the severely disabled child element. Roughly, you are talking about 6,000 children who will receive more, because, under universal credit, the higher rate of the disabled child element is more than the child tax credit element. There will also be 7,600 children who will receive less under universal credit. If you take the tax credits rate, less the universal credit rate, and multiply it by the number of children, that is how I calculated the £11.3 million.
6834. The Deputy Chairperson: The potential cost to reinstate the child tax credit is the lower rate. I think that you estimated it at £11.3 million. You say that the disabled child element of lower rate of universal credit would be less than the lower rate of child tax credit.
6835. Ms M Campbell: Yes, that is the difference between the two.
6836. The Deputy Chairperson: But there are 7,600 children who are losing out.
6837. Ms M Campbell: Yes, but Lord Freud has committed to a review of the gateway elements. I presume that that is something to do with DLA. As we state in the paper, Lord Freud committed to a: “review of the gateway which passports children to the disability additions under UC.”
6838. The rates are linked to the rate of DLA that they get. He is saying that the work is expected to begin in 2015.
6839. The Deputy Chairperson: Has he committed to that?
6840. Ms M Campbell: He committed to that during the passage of the Bill.
6841. Mr Durkan: It is the crossover between the DLA and the tax credits aspects of it.
6842. Ms M Campbell: I think it is.
6843. Mr Durkan: How can you have 7,580 higher rate cases from the DLA aspect but only 6,000 receiving the severe

- disability premium, given that one of the first things that we are told in the paper is that the coalition Government are extending eligibility for severely disabled children?
6844. Ms M Campbell: They have included visually impaired children.
6845. Mr Durkan: Is the number of children who are eligible not likely to go up?
6846. Ms M Campbell: Could you say that again?
6847. Mr Durkan: If the Government are extending eligibility, is the number of children who are eligible not likely to increase?
6848. Mr Pollock: Do you mean extending eligibility for universal credit?
6849. The Deputy Chairperson: To clarify the figures, we were told at one stage that the disability premium on tax credits for a child was going from £58 to, I think, £27. The rationale for that was to spread it out. Ultimately, then, the rationale for having it in the first place is, in a sense, diminished because, presumably, the whole idea of having a disability premium was to enable those children to have a better quality of life. There is no doubt that that is being diminished, and the argument for the need to spread it around does not stand up as a rational one because the child's disability will remain the same. Again, we are probably into an equality/human rights issue there, and that is something to be discussed when we are going through the Bill, clause by clause.
6850. Has anyone else any questions on that? It is a fairly complex argument. It is a personal observation that it is probably to justify the unjustifiable on the matter of disabled children. There is a duty of care on the state to protect the most vulnerable and, if disabled children are not seen as being among the most vulnerable, I imagine that we are failing in our duty. That is a personal observation, but one that can be reasonably argued. If no one has any further questions, I will get off my soapbox for the moment.
6851. Ms M Campbell: I am sure that you will be back on it shortly. [Laughter.]
6852. The Deputy Chairperson: I have a new one built, you will be pleased to hear.
6853. The next issue is other particular needs or circumstances.
6854. Ms M Campbell: Yes, this is about the adult severe disability premium. Under universal credit, there will be a limited capability for work element. The assessment will be made through the work capability assessment, which is used to assess eligibility for the employment and support allowance (ESA). Under the current system, there is a very small difference between the two ESA components: it is only £5. The coalition Government believe that people who need the support most should get more money. Under the review that Lord Freud has undertaken, he intends to, as resources become available, increase in stages the weekly rate of the support component, which is equivalent to £34.05 today, to around £81 a week. Again, that is where he is saying that this will focus and target resources to those who need it most.
6855. The Deputy Chairperson: Of course, they are finding people capable of doing particular things in the assessment. Anybody who saw the 'Panorama' programme and the anecdotal evidence that it came up with for the fall in statistics will have severe reservations about the policy intention involved here. I have experience of this, as, I am sure, have others here who have had clients come to them. I mentioned one case in which the mother of a young fella with Down's syndrome was asked how long he had had it and when he would be cured. That is the kind of thing that is going on. Unless that is addressed — 6856. Mr F McCann: It was the health professionals who did that?
6857. The Deputy Chairperson: Yes, health in inverted commas. That is a big issue that needs to be addressed, and I am not sure that anyone would disagree.

6858. Ms M Campbell: I think that that is a contractual issue. Those types of things should be addressed through the performance management of the contract. It is not necessarily the provision of the Bill.
6859. The Deputy Chairperson: But it is an integral part of the whole welfare reform. That is the issue. You cannot divorce one from the other. These are the people who are implementing the policy intention, and they are getting very, very well paid for it.
6860. Mr F McCann: Atos, the company that is doing it, said that it is implementing only what the Department for Work and Pensions has told it to do.
6861. Ms M Campbell: I do not know, because I am not involved in that.
6862. Mr F McCann: I understand that. It might be unfair to ask you to deal with that.
6863. Ms M Campbell: The decision on whether to award benefit lies, ultimately, with the decision-maker. It is not the healthcare professional. They make the medical assessment and send it back to the decision-maker, who looks at all of the evidence, including any medical evidence that the claimant supplied, and makes the decision based on all of the information in front of them. You have the high level of successful appeals because claimants, in the main, produce more evidence when they decide to go to appeal than they do at the point of claim.
6864. The Deputy Chairperson: Maybe that is where the primacy of medical evidence comes in; it would cut out all of that cost.
6865. Mr F McCann: The problem is the amount of people who were initially awarded points to determine their level of disability, but who ended up with zero points. It would be interesting to find out how many of those people's level of points the decision-maker actually queried. You would probably find that it was zero.
6866. Ms M Campbell: I do not know whether the agency would have that, but we can look at that.
6867. Mr F McCann: Do you understand what I am saying?
6868. Ms M Campbell: I appreciate what you are saying. I cannot argue. You are seeing this on a daily basis, and I am not. I can only tell you what is in the Bill, what is proposed and how the system should work. In practice, I cannot — 6869. Mr F McCann: You are saying that, once it goes to the decision-maker, they will take into account a range of things. I emphasise, again, that quite a number of people, who were formerly on benefits, were awarded zero points. I have seen decision-makers appealing decisions that may have been made. However, the point that I am making is that I do not see any decision-makers saying that they disagree with someone getting zero points and that they want to look at it again. It does not happen like that. It is just accepted; that is the status quo.
6870. The Deputy Chairperson: The Minister stated that he is not prepared to consider this amendment.
6871. Ms M Campbell: I have done a crude calculation for you. The number of claimants currently in receipt of the severe disability premium is 17,000 multiplied by the current rate, £59.50, multiplied by 52 weeks. That gives you the £52 million. There will also be clerical work and costs added in around that. That is just a starting figure, and that is how I arrived at it.
6872. The Deputy Chairperson: That leads us nicely on to — 6873. Ms M Campbell: I will put on the record that I stand to be corrected, because, as you know from previous occasions, maths is not my strongest point.
6874. The Deputy Chairperson: As one who still uses an abacus, I am sure that you are better than me. That links into what we were talking about: capability for work or work-related activity. It is this whole issue of the primacy of medical evidence. Again, it could be argued that it is common sense. At the moment, the health professional ticks a box on a form and it goes to the decision-maker, in a lot of cases without medical evidence, and then medical evidence comes along at the appeal. I suppose the argument is that, if the decision-maker had the medical evidence to start with, he might have come to different decision, which a lot of the tribunals are.

6875. Ms M Campbell: I will say it again: medical evidence is a part of the package, but, as I have said, the appeals that are successful are generally so because the claimant has introduced additional evidence that was not available decision-maker at the point of claim.

6876. However, the Department is introducing a number of measures aimed at reducing the number of those appeals, which I think is good, in that it will, hopefully, elicit that medical evidence, or any evidence that the claimant is holding, a consultant's report or whatever, sooner than having to go to the expense and stress of an appeal.

6877. The Deputy Chairperson: The Minister suggested:

“the Committee considers writing to the Health Committee asking them to consider the issue of GPs/Consultants charging claimants to supply evidence in support of their claim.”

6878. In my experience of representing people at tribunals, if someone is referred by their GP to a specialist and a report comes back, that is included in the file. The file is computerised, as all records are now. There is a code that the GP can simply type into the computer which prints off that consultant's report, whether it be up to date or over a period, which may illustrate, for example, a manic depressive condition. So there is no charge necessarily involved. That had never been the case, certainly in my experience. Obviously, it depends on GP or the consultant.

6879. Ms M Campbell: I think that that came from one of our sessions; I cannot remember which. Anecdotal evidence was cited where claimants were being charged £10 by their GP if the Department requests medical evidence or a consultant's report, the Department will bear the cost, not the claimant. It is only if the claimant, off their own bat, gets a consultant's report that they will be charged, if his GP has not authorised it or whatever. That is where we are coming from. That is one of the issues and concerns that the Committee has, and we think that that is a Department of Health issue. It is not our issue, because we have no control over GPs.

6880. The Deputy Chairperson: It is an interdepartmental issue, because I sit on the Social Development Committee and the Health Committee, and there are overarching issues like that. What we are talking about is medical evidence available at a particular time. If someone is to go and make an appointment with a specialist, it may take six months, even if they are paying for it. So there is a timescale involved. That might not necessarily be the best way forward at that particular time. We are talking about the primacy of medical evidence, and that is what is available. That is to cut out cost as well. It is advantageous to the Department in that sense.

6881. Ms M Campbell: I think that is why this additional step will be introduced by the Department, whereby the claimant is given that opportunity to go and get whatever evidence they can, if they want to.

6882. The Deputy Chairperson: I think that is something that the Committee will obviously want to discuss in more detail.

6883. Mr F McCann: I know that you are trying to answer these questions to the best of your ability, and that is part of the general Bill process. However, there seems to be an implication that GPs cannot be trusted or believed when it comes to their own patients. The paper says that GPs are not the people best placed to give an assessment. It says that GPs:

“are not experts in disability assessment and, as advocates for their patients, are not best-placed to make an independent decision”.

6884. That is a broad swipe at GPs. I have dealt with quite a number of cases where GPs have been sent out to assess people who have disabilities and illnesses, and people have been turned down on the basis of GP reports. I cannot understand that, because people place a lot of trust in their GPs, more or less, and, when they get the medical evidence, they believe that that is sufficient to deal with it. That calls that all into question.

6885. Ms M Campbell: I think it is attempting to say that the GPs who are sent out by the Department to assess people have undergone training in what is required or in whatever benefit the person is being assessed for. GPs, in the main, do not have that training. Medical evidence is one element, but there are other factors to take into account.

6886. Mr F McCann: Let me give you an example. I dealt with a case about three months ago of a guy who has very severe spinal problems. The medical professional who did the assessment asked him to crouch down, and he was in agony and severe pain doing it, but the person would not accept that. It got to a stage where he fell over and lay on the ground. The man is in his 50s, and he started crying. The person would not even give him a hand up or help him out the door, and the guy was distressed.

6887. Ms M Campbell: That is a professional issue to be taken up under the terms of the contract.

6888. Mr F McCann: Tens of thousands of people have gone through the same thing.

6889. Mr Pollock: That is not the way the system should work.

6890. Mr F McCann: My point is that the system is completely flawed. There is clear evidence of it, and British Medical Association people have criticised it.

People have taken their own lives in England over this. That guy's doctor would have provided evidence to say that he was under severe stress, but that is not acceptable. It is more or less saying that the GP will take the patient's side. A person who assessed someone else who I have been dealing with was not trained up in anything but just got into the system and was getting the extra few quid on top of their money.

6891. Ms M Campbell: It is the Committee's decision whether or not it wishes to amend that, but the cost is —

6892. The Deputy Chairperson: In my experience over the years, I could never understand why GPs did not take a more active role, because they acquiesce to someone who does not know you from a bar of soap, sees you for 10 minutes and decides whether you are fit or not. That is another issue.

6893. I am conscious of time, and I think that everybody is starting to lose the will to live. We will concentrate on the Minister's proposed way forward, and we have dealt with the issue of mortgage interest in housing. There were pilot schemes, and the Minister said that he will write to Lord Freud, that oracle of knowledge about welfare reform, who presumably has the answer to all our problems.

6894. Mr F McCann: All our ills.

6895. The Deputy Chairperson: As long as Atos is not involved. The briefing states that the:

“Minister notes the Committee's concerns and will write to Lord Freud, at final stage ... about including”

6896. — the North —

“in future pilots so that ... demographics can influence the application of learning.”

6897. The Committee felt — it came up in the last mandate, too — that pilot schemes carried out in the leafy suburbs of Oxfordshire, for instance, really have no relevance to north, west or east Belfast, Newry, Strabane, Derry or wherever. That was the issue because you may

- include them in the demographics, but, as we discussed earlier, if you take the underoccupancy in the North, circumstances here can be so different. The Housing Executive is carrying out a pilot scheme in Craigavon to encourage people to take in lodgers, for example. Therefore pilot schemes can be introduced selectively and when required if the Department, but not necessarily others — such as our good selves — feel that they may be needed. Perhaps you would cogitate on that, Martina, and come back to me. Is that OK?
6898. Ms M Campbell: OK.
6899. The Deputy Chairperson: Moving on, housing and underoccupancy have been — 6900. Ms M Campbell: Done to death.
6901. The Deputy Chairperson: Pensions have been dealt with as well, I think.
6902. The Minister said that the contracting-out clause was “primarily” an issue for DEL, and:
- “there are no plans to use this clause to privatise services currently delivered by the public sector”.*
6903. In 2007-08, we were told by a former Minister that privatisation would not come into being. We wanted to delete clause 16 in the original Bill because it dealt with privatisation, but we were told that that would not happen. I asked why it should be kept if it was not going to happen. However, it was kept and, about three or four weeks later, medical support services were privatised. Forgive me, therefore, if I am sceptical.
6904. Ms M Campbell: Yes, but this clause is only for DEL to contract out training schemes, and it contracts them to the voluntary and community sector as well.
6905. The Deputy Chairperson: The tip of the iceberg springs to mind.
6906. Ms M Campbell: I can never win with you, Mickey, can I? [Laughter.]
6907. The Deputy Chairperson: I have probably been around too long. I was born cynical, and I presume that I will die cynical.
6908. Ms M Campbell: Perhaps you will have a conversion on the road to Damascus.
6909. The Deputy Chairperson: I have been on a few roads to Damascus, I can tell you. [Laughter.] I have never been to Damascus, and I have no intention of going at this point in time —
6910. Mr F McCann: Damascus is lovely.
6911. The Deputy Chairperson: Damascus is in trouble at the moment.
6912. The 365-day time limit for employment and support allowance is provided for in clause 52. The Minister says that he shares our concerns but points out that the cost of not implementing this measure is “approximately £3 million per month”. He asks:
- “to discuss with the Committee the additional cost of extending the period of contribution-based ESA to more than 12 months before approaching the Executive”.*
6913. I presume that that will happen.
6914. Mr Pollock: It is up to the Committee to decide whether it wants to move an amendment.
6915. The Deputy Chairperson: We would need to talk to the Minister to find out what the possible cost implication of our doing that would be.
6916. Mr Pollock: In his “Proposed way forward” he talks about “£3 million per month” for 12 months, which is a considerable sum.
6917. The Deputy Chairperson: People may think that they have paid 30 years’ contributions and are getting only a year back. It cuts both ways, I suppose. However, I take your point.
6918. If no one has any questions, I will move to the provisions for youth claimants, under which we are talking about the replacement for the severe disablement allowance and the waiving of contributions, which is going to change. The Minister says:

“There is an equality issue here in that no other contributory benefit waives its conditions of receipt for any other age or client group.”

6919. That, however, flies in the face of what the severe disablement allowance was introduced for: young people who would never work in normal circumstances because of their mental or physical disability.
6920. Ms M Campbell: However, they can still qualify for the income-related element. There are only two claimants in the entire live load that would not qualify for the income-related element because they have separate means, in the form of savings or a working partner.
6921. The Deputy Chairperson: I understand that. However, there are young people coming through and this will put that group into the larger group that will be assessed. That is my understanding. They will be assessed in the normal — if that is the right word — way that other claimants are.
6922. Mr Pollock: When you talk about equality, up until now they were treated more advantageously. This is just levelling the playing field.
6923. The Deputy Chairperson: The issue that members may have is that assessing those people under the ESA capability assessments could put them at a disadvantage if we are to go by evidence of what is happening with those assessments. Normally, if you were on severe disablement allowance, you were not assessed and did not have to go to be assessed.
6924. Ms M Campbell: Yes, but severe disablement allowance is gone.
6925. The Deputy Chairperson: Yes, but it was replaced by incapacity allowance; however, you did not have to satisfy the contribution conditions.
6926. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
6927. The Deputy Chairperson: Now, we are on to ESA for those young people.
6928. Ms M Campbell: And they still do not have to satisfy the income to declare.
6929. The Deputy Chairperson: Will they not be assimilated into the group that will be assessed as being capable or otherwise?
6930. Mr Pollock: No.
6931. The Deputy Chairperson: If you are talking about an equality issue and they have been outside the normal process, will they still be outside the normal process in not having to go through work capability assessments, for instance?
6932. Mr Pollock: I am not exactly sure where you are coming from on that, Mickey.
6933. The Deputy Chairperson: If someone is claiming ESA, the people who are being migrated across and coming on will eventually be assessed on whether they go into a work support group or otherwise.
6934. Mr Pollock: We are talking future-proofing there. They will be in universal credit. Are you talking about universal credit?
6935. The Deputy Chairperson: Yes, and will they not be assessed at some stage on their capability or otherwise?
6936. Mr Pollock: It depends on which grouping they fall into.
6937. The Deputy Chairperson: That is what I want to find out.
6938. Mr Pollock: If they were not capable of work, they would not be subject to — 6939. The Deputy Chairperson: The point is that they would have to be assessed. They will be assessed for that purpose in the way that other people in ESA are being assessed at the moment. The difficulty therein is how those people are assessed.
6940. Ms M Campbell: They must undergo the assessment at the minute. We will have to check that.
6941. The Deputy Chairperson: Will you check that?

6942. Ms M Campbell: I would say that even for contributory ESA, they have to undergo a work capability assessment.
6943. The Deputy Chairperson: Yes, but to date, they have not had to go through that because the contribution conditions have been waived because it replaced severe disablement allowance, which was there for a specific purpose. That is the point that I am trying to get across. It was recognised that those young people had lifelong chronic conditions: they will never be able to work.
6944. Mr Pollock: In that case, they would not be in a work-related activity group.
6945. The Deputy Chairperson: Will they be assessed? There are many people who should not be in work-related groups but who are because the assessment is flawed.
6946. Mr Pollock: You are talking about people coming forward. There will be transitional protection for anybody coming across.
6947. The Deputy Chairperson: I understand that, but will young people in that situation eventually be assessed? If that is the case, that is a major change for those young people.
6948. Ms M Campbell: We will have to check that.
6949. The Deputy Chairperson: The Minister does not believe that there is a strong enough case for making exceptions, which puts young people on the same foot. The idea of severe disablement allowance was that they would not be put on the same foot, so it gets away from that concept.
6950. I now turn to the personal independence payment (PIP). The Minister talked about welcoming the change to 13 weeks and he will continue to raise with the Department for Work and Pensions Ministers the issue of the number of claims here and the higher incidence of mental health here among claimants. I suppose that raising those issues and getting a response may be two different things.
6951. Ms Jane Corderoy (Department for Social Development): Originally, it was four weeks, and the Committee was keen that it should be extended.
6952. The Deputy Chairperson: That is a positive.
6953. Ms Corderoy: I think so, yes. There are still the 26 weeks in PIP for medical reasons and medical absence, but 13 weeks is now the standard period for temporary absence.
6954. The Deputy Chairperson: I came across a case where somebody who lived in the South, and who was getting a pension from the South, moved here and satisfied the health and residence conditions. However, they were told that because they have no insurance number, they cannot get attendance allowance. The reason that they will not get an insurance number is that they are not of working age. That is a complete anomaly in the system; I never came across it before. They satisfy all the other conditions, but you need an insurance number to get the benefit, and they will not be given one — I am checking it out at the moment — because they are of pension age and they are getting a pension from the South. Tenant's allowance and DLA are not means-tested, so you could be a lottery winner and still get then based on your medical condition. The anomaly is that they do not have [Interruption.]
6955. Ms Corderoy: I do not know.
6956. The Deputy Chairperson: That is the sort of thing that you might be faced with.
6957. The next issue is prisoners on remand. The paper states that the :
- “Minister notes the Committee’s concerns but believes that the policy intention to treat those people on remand or who have their conviction quashed in the same way as people are treated who go into hospital and that is a fair and equitable approach.”*
6958. People in that situation may think that it is slightly different from hospital. Having visited Hydebank Wood with the Health Committee, I would rather be in hospital.

6959. Ms Corderoy: As you know, PIPs will be retained for 28 days, even if people are on remand. It is, again, about avoiding the duplication of provision.
6960. The Deputy Chairperson: Yes; that is what the Minister is saying. It is something for discussion.
6961. Moving swiftly on to the timing of the report to the Assembly, which is clause 88.
6962. Ms Corderoy: There is a long explanation for that. From initial reactions, we thought that that could have been done legislatively. However, we looked into the detail, particularly the Committee's concerns about people transferring from DLA to PIP not being caught in the analysis of the report. That very detailed explanation says that we are better off sticking with what we have at the moment because that is how we can —
6963. The Deputy Chairperson: We were told the same about the pension: the report would take two years or longer, or the stuff would not be available. However, the amendment was accepted for one year. It is more or less the same argument that is being put forward: that there is not enough evidence. Going from two years to one is something that the Committee will discuss. The idea is to get a report that will give some indication of how people are being affected in a shorter rather than a longer time. Due to the nature of the changeover from DLA to PIPs, particularly, and how people may be affected, that information should be available sooner rather than later.
6964. Ms Corderoy: A very minimal number of people here will move from DLA to PIPs. It will be difficult to assess the impact on those people, and whether they — 6965. The Deputy Chairperson: You are talking more about the logistics. At one stage, there was talk of doing 1,000 cases a week. I am not sure who came up with that. The number of people is 187,000. Children are not affected, but you are still talking about a huge number of people. Doing 1,000 a week would still take about four years. Martina's maths are better than mine, so she might help me out. You are saying that it is the logistics of the transfer.
6966. Ms Corderoy: Yes.
6967. The Deputy Chairperson: Perhaps that needs to be looked at, because it was not apparent in the response.
6968. Ms Corderoy: OK. When Mickey Kelly was here, he said that there will be ongoing analysis of the agency as it gets implemented and that there will be opportunity to amend as things go along.
6969. Ms M Campbell: Yes. I think that it can give that type of factual information, such as the number of people who have been assessed and the number who have been turned down. That is no issue. The Committee could have that any time it wanted. Changing the legislation to have the report after one year will not be to any advantage because, first, DWP will say that your sample size is too small and that therefore your evidence is null and void or not acceptable — or whatever the statistical term may be. Secondly, DWP will not have reached the point of doing its report, so it would not entertain any recommendations from us until such times as it has done its sampling.
6970. The Deputy Chairperson: With respect, we are talking about how this affects people here.
6971. Ms M Campbell: Absolutely.
6972. The Deputy Chairperson: The point of going through all this is that it is a devolved issue. What DWP wants to do with its statistics is, quite frankly, entirely up to it; what we are talking about is what pertains here and any report that the Assembly might have.
6973. One of the arguments about the changeover and DLA is that more people here qualify for the right reasons because of their disability. That is the issue. Therefore, as I say, what DWP wants to do with its statistics is entirely up to it. I am personally

- not that interested. However, I am certainly interested in what happens to the people here whom we represent, because it is our constituents who will be affected by this. That is the issue. I am not sure whether people agree or disagree with that point, but it is important to make it.
6974. Mr Pollock: On Martina's point about the statistics, there will be certain categories in the assessment criteria. Producing a report after, say, one year means that you will not necessarily have enough claims through the system to make a statistically valid judgement to adjust the criteria.
6975. Ms Corderoy: If we do a report after one year here, we will not catch anyone who has transferred from DLA to PIP; we will have only new PIP claimants. Therefore we will not have anything on how people here who are on DLA are affected by the transfer to PIP, because nobody will have gone through the process by that point.
6976. The Deputy Chairperson: Again, the logistics are that the changeover for people who have indefinite awards has been put back for 21 months.
6977. Ms Corderoy: Yes; the managed assessment.
6978. The Deputy Chairperson: Therefore presumably more people will have changed over from DLA to PIP during that time. Is that true?
6979. Ms Corderoy: Nobody will have done so.
6980. The Deputy Chairperson: Therefore it will not start then? I want to clarify this.
6981. Ms Corderoy: No; it will be only those who make new claims.
6982. The Deputy Chairperson: Therefore any report would have to start from the date on which people transferred over; it would be pointless otherwise. Therefore it would not start until 2015, which is when the changeover starts.
6983. Ms M Campbell: The changeover is not until October 2015.
6984. The Deputy Chairperson: Therefore you could not do a report until at least 2016 if you are going for a year.
6985. Ms M Campbell: Well, yes.
6986. The Deputy Chairperson: There would be no point. You would not have any stats, would you?
6987. Ms M Campbell: DWP is planning a report by 2014.
6988. The Deputy Chairperson: Because it started early.
6989. Ms M Campbell: Because it started before us.
6990. The Deputy Chairperson: For claimants this year.
6991. Ms M Campbell: Yes. However, we will only be starting the managed reassessment in October 2015.
6992. The Deputy Chairperson: Therefore the DWP report will be out earlier, and it will presumably be used for information purposes.
6993. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
6994. The Deputy Chairperson: Again, the Committee will consider that.
6995. Ms P Bradley: It would be good to have that for that purpose, in preparation for what is coming.
6996. Ms M Campbell: As far as I know, the agency would be able to give factual details of the number of new claims and assess the numbers applying, but it could not give you trends because there would not be sufficient numbers.
6997. The Deputy Chairperson: One of the things that it might highlight is the effectiveness or otherwise of the assessment. Although that will be done by a different company here, will it not?
6998. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
6999. The Deputy Chairperson: Capita. However, it would perhaps give a flavour of how people are affected.
7000. Ms M Campbell: You could probably draw inferences.

7001. The Deputy Chairperson: I am sure that you could if you really wanted.
7002. We will move on, before I draw any more inferences.
7003. The next issue is the recovery of benefit overpayments.
7004. Ms Corderoy: I think that Fra touched on that.
7005. The Deputy Chairperson: I think that Fra dealt with it fairly comprehensively.
7006. I think that we have dealt with sanctions as well.
7007. Ms M Campbell: Assembly control is the next one. The Ad Hoc Committee also made that recommendation. Again, the legislation allows for the first set of regulations to be by confirmatory resolution, which will be the debate six months after, as opposed to prior, which is the affirmative process. From your perspective, I suppose that one of the advantages of the confirmatory process is that you would have six months of constituents telling you what is happening. You could have a more informed debate.
7008. The Deputy Chairperson: Let us talk about the disadvantages, in that the regulations would be a fait accompli by the time we started to debate them. You might wonder how effective that might be. It seems to me that if you are introducing legislation as important and far-reaching as welfare reform, to debate it before it is laid might be advantageous to the people we represent.
7009. Mr Pollock: Historically, Northern Ireland would have adopted the confirmatory —
7010. The Deputy Chairperson: I understand that 7011. Mr Pollock: — because of the timing of the IT releases.
7012. The Deputy Chairperson: This is the biggest change since 1948, and it is a devolved matter. Being a devolved matter, I think that it is only right and proper — some members may disagree — that we should debate it before it is implemented. That might not be a bad thing. We get the chance to do that with other legislation.
7013. One of the issues in the Ad Hoc Committee — Paula can confirm this or otherwise — was about policy and what is perceived as a policy change. However, the issue there was who decides whether it is a policy change. That is why we felt that the use of affirmative rather than confirmatory resolution was appropriate.
7014. Ms M Campbell: We are pursuing that with the Office of the Legislative Counsel. We will come back to you on that.
7015. The Deputy Chairperson: What is the time frame?
7016. Ms M Campbell: Hopefully, I will get an answer for you next week.
7017. The Deputy Chairperson: I think that estimated costs were the next thing, but that is an issue to be discussed. We have already dealt with sanctions and fraud. On that note, thank you very much.

31 January 2013

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Nelson McCausland	Minister for Social Development
Ms Martina Campbell	Department for Social Development
Mr Michael Pollock	Department for Social Development
Mr Tommy O'Reilly	Social Security Agency

7018. The Chairperson: I formally welcome the Minister and his colleagues Tommy O'Reilly, Michael Pollock and Martina Campbell. In your papers, you will have responses from the Minister to issues that the Committee raised in its deliberations. It is our understanding that the Minister will be available for 45 minutes. That might have changed slightly, but I am not sure. I will hand the meeting over to you, Minister, so that you can go through your paper.

7019. Mr Nelson McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): Thank you, Chair. I have been able to push the next appointment back, so there will be a bit more time than just the 45 minutes. Thank you again for the opportunity to brief members on issues that you raised on the Welfare Reform Bill. As you are all aware, the Bill has been the subject of scrutiny by an Ad Hoc Committee on human rights and equality issues. That Committee has now reported, and there was a debate on that report on Tuesday. I was pleased to see the level of interest in these matters in the Assembly during Tuesday's debate. That demonstrates that, as an elected forum, all Members are concerned for their constituents and, in particular, for vulnerable individuals right across our society. However, we have considered the Ad Hoc Committee's recommendations, and I now believe that we can move on to implement reform.

7020. Before the Ad Hoc Committee was established, this Committee did some very good work in scrutinising the Bill to ensure clarity of understanding and to put together some suggestions that members consider may be desirable to protect certain interests or to facilitate claimants as reforms are introduced. In some ways, things that were dealt with in the Ad Hoc Committee replicated many of the things that had been dealt with in this Committee.

7021. In that context, I think that it is most opportune to meet the Committee to go through the issues that you raised and to set out my position as Minister. That is because it is not possible to ignore the financial and logistical challenges that the reform agenda poses not just for benefit recipients but for wider society in Northern Ireland and, in particular, our public spending programmes.

7022. There has been much debate on parity, how it operates and what it means. Many of you have questioned the role of the Committee and, indeed, of the Assembly if we were to simply, as some people might say, parrot Westminster legislation. I assure you that that is not the case. Social security is a devolved matter for Northern Ireland, and, as Minister for Social Development, I intend to ensure that welfare reform is fit for purpose here. In that regard, I continue to work with ministerial counterparts across in Westminster to ensure that Northern Ireland's circumstances are being taken into account, that where we need operational flexibilities, we are afforded them, and that, where there - are potential financial consequences, we secure the best possible deal for Northern Ireland.

7023. The constraints of parity are frequently cited, and I can say that they are both financial and operational. In essence, parity means that an individual here in Northern Ireland should receive the same level of benefit, subject to the same conditions, as an individual elsewhere in the UK. That is equality in practice, and I do not think anyone here could seriously object to it. It also means, however, that Northern Ireland is hugely dependent on the IT systems that are provided through the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP). If changes are being made to the overall system, Northern Ireland needs to tie in with IT release dates or we will incur costs that are associated with introducing changes at later dates. The costs that are associated with any such departure are very significant.
7024. As you will all know, the GB Welfare Reform Bill gained Royal Assent in March last year, and many of the changes that that legislation introduced are now being implemented. We have not yet finished our legislative process, which means that we are already lagging behind, and we are incurring additional costs either by having to implement clerical work rounds or to tailor IT solution.
7025. Any breach of parity in the rates of benefits that are paid and the conditions applying are concerned states that Westminster has the right to review funding. That is clearly set out in the statement of funding, and that position was reinforced recently in correspondence from Iain Duncan Smith.
7026. So, with that in mind, I am happy to move on to the issues paper, which my office issued on Monday, to try to get some sense of how we can move these matters forward. Officials are with me this morning and will be happy to provide further clarification on any of the details if necessary.
7027. Chair, I do not know whether you wish to handle the meeting by going through the various points in order.
7028. The Chairperson: Are members content for the Minister to go through the issues in order as they are in the paper?
7029. Members indicated assent.
7030. Mr McCausland: The first issue that you raised was on payments. It is listed as clause 2, but it refers to clause 99. I share the Committee's concerns about payment frequency and payment to a nominated person. As you are well aware, that is why I negotiated the flexibilities on those issues with Lord Freud. I accept that many claimants need more frequent payments and that, for some couples, a split payment may better serve their needs. I directed my officials to engage with members of the public and the voluntary and community sector to develop criteria for more flexible payment arrangements. That is out for consultation. There have been a number of consultation stakeholder events, and I attended a couple of them here at Parliament Buildings to hear the sort of feedback that is coming from different stakeholders.
7031. We need to be very clear that many of the claimants for universal credit will be in work and will be well used to managing their money on a monthly basis and/or the wages being paid to the main earner. That is their current practice and experience. The vast majority of claimants will be able to work with that proposed arrangement, because they have joint accounts or are financially capable of managing their household budget. However, a minority of claimants will have difficulties. There will be the flexibility to opt for either a split or a bimonthly payment. The current estimated cost of everyone receiving twice-monthly payments as the default position would cost in the region of an additional £24 million.
7032. I want to be clear about whether the Committee wishes me to explore with the Executive the need to spend £24 million from the Northern Ireland block

- to provide every claimant with payment choice and to have that as the default position. We should bear in mind that that will not result in one penny more going to the claimant. Alternatively, is the Committee content to see the outcome of the consultation on criteria for payments flexibility and then to allow claimants to have the choice on a case-by-case basis? If you go for the default position, there will be a cost of £24 million. I am not sure of the exact numbers, but many people will already be in a position where they do not require that, so we would be spending quite a few millions of pounds unnecessarily.
7033. From the consultation that we had and from the events that I attended, I got the impression that if the criteria were right and claimants were to have that choice on a case-by-case basis, it would ease their concerns.
7034. Do you want to pick up on that point?
7035. The Chairperson: That was an issue of concern to a lot of members, and you will be aware of that. Can you give the Committee any insight into the development of criteria?
7036. Mr McCausland: It is out to consultation at the moment. I am not sure about the stakeholder events.
7037. Mr Tommy O'Reilly (Social Security Agency): To date, we have had five public events, and we have a number of others planned. We also have an oversight group with representatives of different organisations and voluntary sector groups. They meet on a monthly basis to look at the criteria, and the proposal is that we will come back to the Committee some time over the next four to six weeks for a session to outline some of the initial thinking and to seek the Committee's views. That is the current proposal.
7038. We also recently took a paper on direct payments to landlords to the Executive subcommittee. So, it is very much a work in progress that will move forward over the next couple of months.
7039. The Chairperson: Thank you for that. How has the figure of £24 million been arrived at, given that the criteria have not yet been agreed and that Lord Freud and others said that we will have flexibility and can do all that? Where has that figure come from? How has it been quantified? I cannot understand.
7040. Mr O'Reilly: We are working on the basis that there would be an estimated 300,000 households in Northern Ireland that would all have the option of taking bimonthly payments and split payments. That number of 300,000 households was multiplied by the average number of hours that we estimate would be required to carry out functions such as decision-making, clerical workarounds, deductions, housing benefit and the validation of evidence.
7041. We would have to build a separate ICT system for Northern Ireland to do this. We would also have to take the core data from the GB universal credit model, extract them and drop them into an IT solution for Northern Ireland.
7042. That is the way that we are currently working. We have allocated a total of six hours for a case over a year and multiplied that by the total number of cases and the average rates. So, the operational cost of running that system works out at an additional £24 million for Northern Ireland. However, that it is an early estimate.
7043. The Chairperson: OK; thank you.
7044. Mr Brady: Thanks for your presentation. Client choice is already built into the tax credits IT system. You said that another IT system would need to be introduced to make bimonthly payments but that that would be extremely expensive. I also want to ask you about the figures, which, as the Chair said, are speculative, to say the least. In your briefing document, you stated that the cost will be based on:
- “full automation of payment arrangements with the clerical workarounds focusing on decision making, taking of claims, change of circumstances, dispute resolution and checking.”*

7045. Claims, and so forth, are already an integral part of the system. That has to be done. So, would it not be more sensible to have an IT system that cuts out all that so that changes of circumstance could be automated? I cannot understand the rationale.
7046. If I were being cynical, which, of course, I am not, I might think that the reluctance to have another IT system might have something to do with the future privatisation of the payments of benefits. I would like the Minister to assure us that that is not a feature and that it has not been factored in to all this. That could be a reason for the reluctance.
7047. It seems worthwhile to have an IT system that is going to be effective in dealing with bimonthly, weekly or other payments. You would not then have all the added clerical work, which, according to you, is going to be much more expensive. So, I do not understand the rationale.
7048. Mr O'Reilly: Let me assure you that we are committed to developing an ICT system solution for Northern Ireland to deliver the flexibilities that the Minister outlined and that have been agreed with DWP. Work is in progress to take that forward, and we are also taking forward the development of the flexibilities criteria. It is not our intention to say that we are not doing the work; the work is going forward. We are trying to provide an estimate.
7049. If a couple decide they want to have a split payment, for example, the system will allow them to make a joint claim. The question then arises of who will receive the money and what allocation each partner should receive. Should they receive 50% or 60%, for example? How will that work if money is coming into the house or if deductions or overpayments need to be made? Furthermore, if they receive housing benefit, it will be paid on a monthly basis. We have to split that all down. We can do the calculations, but if there is no agreement between the couple about how that works, there will have to be some form of face-to-face intervention. If we are to protect families through the process, at some point the Department or some other body will have to make a decision about who the money should be paid to. So, we are trying to work through the processes and potential interventions and allocate an early estimate about the amount of time that it would take to do that in each case. That is what we have been asked to do. Given that we have not worked up all the flexibilities, that figure is only an early estimate. However, I take that point entirely.
7050. Mr Brady: I have two other points to make. First, you referred to exceptional circumstances where the criteria are concerned. Presumably, that will have to be decided on an objective basis.
7051. Secondly, on the payment arrangements, the Minister said that the majority of people on universal credit will be in work. We are really talking about people who will be on benefits. The whole idea of universal credit is that you go in one end on benefits and come out the other end in work. That is provided, of course, that there is a job for you, which, at the moment, is highly unlikely. The point of the frequency of payments, etc, is to protect people who are on benefits. If people go into work and are paid fortnightly or monthly, that is a different issue. Iain Duncan Smith said in the House of Commons that the reason they decided to go for monthly payments was to get people used to being paid monthly through a salary for when they eventually get a job. That is a different issue completely. We are talking about people on benefits who find it difficult to manage with weekly or fortnightly payments, without then having to wait for a month. That is the issue.
7052. Mr McCausland: I said that many universal credit claimants will be in work at the same time.
7053. Mr Brady: With respect, in the current circumstances, that is speculative, Minister. My constituency has some of the highest unemployment figures that it has had since 1995. Obviously, I hope that people will get jobs, but it - is speculative to say that the majority of people on universal credit will be in work. I think that that is wishful thinking.

7054. Mr O'Reilly: In one sense, it comes down to numbers. Over 200,000 people in Northern Ireland receive working tax credits and child tax credits and, at the moment, 95% of them are in work. They will all become customers of universal credit. So, in a sense, we are trying to deal with two different customer groups.
7055. Mr Brady: It comes back to the point that the reason why those people get working tax credit is because we live in a low-wage economy — [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.] People also have the choice of having their tax credits paid fortnightly or monthly. That is part of the criteria whenever you claim tax credits; you are asked on the form whether you want to be paid fortnightly or monthly. It goes back to the original point: why can that not be followed through or factored in to the payment of universal credit?
7056. Mr O'Reilly: That is what we are trying to do at the moment. We are trying to develop the discussion about how we can take the best of the working tax credit arrangements and the best of the benefit system to provide the most flexibility for the people in Northern Ireland.
7057. Mr Brady: With respect, it is a simple enough argument. Working tax credit is part of the benefit system. It is a benefit to supplement low wages. What is the difference? It is a benefit and can be paid fortnightly. Why can universal credit, which is also a benefit, not be paid fortnightly? I cannot understand the rationale. It is differentiating between two benefits that are, technically, in the same system. HMRC administers tax credits, but, presumably, there is some coming together of minds when you are working out those systems.
7058. Mr McCausland: Martina wants to come in on that point.
7059. Ms Martina Campbell (Department for Social Development): There are two different IT systems. The IT system for universal credit is a completely new system. DWP is taking over HMRC's customers.
7060. Mr Brady: With respect, when you are developing that new system, surely there is an opportunity to be innovative. Why can it not deal with how frequently a person is paid?
7061. Ms M Campbell: DWP is paying for the new system. The whole policy intent behind universal credit —
7062. Mr Brady: We are back to policy intention rather than the practicalities.
7063. Ms M Campbell: — is about getting people used to the world of work and to a monthly salary.
7064. Mr Brady: Nobody is denying that 7065. Ms M Campbell: We have been here before, Mickey.
7066. The Chairperson: I am very conscious that we are 20 minutes in and we have not got off the first issue. Other members want to raise issues. We are not going to make decisions on any of this, but it is important that we get clarity. I want to — 7067. Mr McCausland: Someone asked whether this is a clever plan to contract out or privatise. That is not the intention; no.
7068. The Chairperson: That is a helpful assurance. Thank you, Minister, for that.
7069. Before I ask anybody else to come in, I am getting elbowed here severely, because there is already serious interference with the recording system, and it is affecting Hansard. Can people switch their phones off? As I said, this is the worst room in the Building for telephone interference.
7070. Tommy referred a minute ago to the direct payments for housing benefit, and so on, but I understood that we were given very clear advice that the payments to landlords, and so on, would be paid directly by default. Is that the case? It does not sound like that to me now.

7072. The Chairperson: That is grand.
7073. Mr G Campbell: I want a bit more clarity on the cost. I know that we are in danger of running over our time, but I want to try to get my head around the implications. From what I can detect, the Committee and the Department are trying to achieve the same objective and may be looking at this from different perspectives as a glass-half-full or half-empty situation. I know that the overall objective is to try to prepare people for the world of work and to get them used to monthly accountability procedures and money in and money out, yet there is a hard core or nucleus of people, as yet numerically undetermined, who might find it difficult to make the transition to monthly management of accounts. I want to get my head around the numbers and the cost. The £24 million sounds to me like an extreme and absolute worst-case scenario if nobody avails themselves of monthly payments. I would have thought that that is extremely unlikely. If 200,000 people or thereabouts are working, I would have thought that a significant proportion will probably be content enough with monthly payments. Is that right?
7074. Ms M Campbell: We would make that assumption.
7075. Mr G Campbell: So, is it possible to get a more realistic assessment of the likely cost? That £24 million is the 100% worst-case scenario. Is the figure likely to be £15 million, £10 million or £18 million? Is it possible to determine that roughly?
7076. Mr Michael Pollock (Department for Social Development): The £24 million is the default position if everybody goes for it.
7077. Mr G Campbell: That is not likely to happen; that is what I mean.
7078. Ms M Campbell: That is what the Committee asked for.
7079. Mr Pollock: It is not likely to happen, but we are talking about potential amendments to the Bill. We are saying that you have to be aware of that if you are considering amending the relevant clause to say that everybody gets paid fortnightly.
7080. Ms M Campbell: The Minister has secured the facility for those people who wish to have a bimonthly or split payment.
7081. Mr Pollock: The functionality will be there, but there is a non-cost in the transaction cost —
7082. The Chairperson: Gregory is making the point that you have given a figure of £24 million if everybody takes the default position of the split payment. However, if people decide that they want to be paid every month and not every fortnight, that £24 million will, theoretically, come down.
7083. Mr G Campbell: Maybe my memory is faulty, but I thought that the Committee's position was that the default position should be fortnightly unless people specifically requested otherwise. The point that I am making is that people will specifically request otherwise, so the total cost is extremely unlikely to be £24 million. Even if it is £10 million or £12 million, I would still want to look at that. However, I want a reasonable guesstimate of the likely cost implication before we say that we are prepared or otherwise to bite the bullet. However, I do not like being asked to bite the bullet on a figure that we know is probably not realistic. If it is £15 million, I will say yes or no to that, but I do not like saying yes or no to a figure that everybody knows will not be the one that we will have to pay.
7084. Mr McCausland: Do we have any indication, Tommy, of the percentages that might be involved?
7085. Mr O'Reilly: Yes. We were asked to produce an initial cost on the basis of a default position of bimonthly payments to families. The working assumption on that was that, in the context that people were given a choice, they would - say, “I would rather have the money more frequently.” However, on the basis of 150,000, which is the figure that we worked on initially, it was coming out at an estimated £12 million for that level of usage. If we move to a default, where everyone would be given the opportunity, that would be the working circumstances. The costs that have been included in the pack were calculated on the basis of 100% take-up. We can flex that down to provide whatever level the Committee feels is a reasonable assumption. So, we can provide figures on the basis of 25%, 50% or 75% take-up.

7086. The Chairperson: Tommy, could I ask, with all due respect, that when we are being given figures, people actually qualify those figures? Could people actually say, “By the way, that is the maximum; it may not come in at that.”? When we get a figure in front of us in black and white, we have to take it at face value. However, when you delve into it, you see it is actually slightly different. I am just putting a marker down.
7087. Mr O’Reilly: Chair, that is fine.
7088. The Chairperson: I do not like that approach. Gregory, you were — 7089. Mr G Campbell: No. I am happy enough.
7090. Mr F McCann: I agree with you totally, Chair. A lot of stuff that we spoke about this morning is entirely speculative.
7091. There is a working group and meetings are taking place. If, at the end of the day, it came back and said that it believed that people wanted bimonthly payments, and given that it went through that exercise, would the Minister then advocate that regardless of the cost?
7092. Mr McCausland: Sorry. I was reading something. I missed that. Sorry. Say it again.
7093. Mr F McCann: You picked it up when I mentioned cost. [Laughter.]
7094. Mr McCausland: There was a silence.
7095. Mr F McCann: A consultation exercise is ongoing. A working group of sorts is sitting down and looking at those issues, one of which is about monthly or bimonthly payments. I take it that if it comes back and says that the results of its consultation are that bimonthly payments are the way to go and that a cost will come back, you would take the results of the survey as the position that you would run with regardless of costs.
7096. Mr McCausland: Ultimately, those things involve a political decision. You consult the stakeholders. You have got to balance it because people in stakeholder groups will not know whether we can afford £x million or however many million pounds the figure might be. Those are pragmatic decisions that, politically, we have to make in the Assembly. We look at the argument, the criteria and the cost alongside that if you apply those criteria. Until we get to that point and complete that, it is premature to come to a decision on it. We need to see what the criteria are and what the costs would be. Then, it is up to the Assembly to take a decision.
7097. Mr F McCann: This morning’s conversation was all in the air of speculation. What I am saying is that it would be a wasted exercise if the consultation group was to come back with the idea that there should be bimonthly payments and you, as the Minister who has called it in the first place, do not support the results of the consultation.
7098. Mr McCausland: Well, now, people having consultations and automatically following what the consultation says is not always the case in politics.
7099. Mr G Campbell: As we found out.
7100. Mr McCausland: We will move on quickly.
7101. The Chairperson: OK. We need to let other people in. Michael is next, then Mark. Then, we need to move on to the next issue.
7102. Mr Copeland: Tommy, I apologise for going back to the £24 million again. I presume that that money would be broken down into that which is for some - sort of hardware or software that might need to be purchased and that which is for man-hours, or woman-hours, as the case may be. Does that £24 million account for the recruitment of additional people for additional work or will that be done within the existing organisation?

7103. Mr O'Reilly: The current estimate is that additional resource would be required to run that aspect of the service.
7104. Mr Copeland: Is that on a once-only basis? How much of that is a once-only effort and how much is ongoing with regard to existing claims and new claims?
7105. Mr O'Reilly: At the moment, we are working on the basis that there would be additional running costs annually because those cases will require bimonthly interventions just to deal with the complexities of making payments and ensuring that they are right, accurate and on time.
7106. Mr Copeland: That would have to be done twice or month, or each — 7107. Mr O'Reilly: Again, the level of automation is something that we have to work through.
7108. Mr Copeland: How much of that would occasion spend on this side of the water? Is any of that included in the costs that we would have to pay because of work done on the mainland?
7109. Mr O'Reilly: The universal credit GB system works on a monthly assessment process, so it will calculate people's income and how much they are entitled to on a monthly basis. If we want to make payments on a fortnightly basis and split payments between couples, specific to Northern Ireland, we would have to pay the additional costs to do that. That is the estimated cost to meet that on a bimonthly basis in Northern Ireland.
7110. Mr Copeland: Are there estimated establishment and/or overhead charges included in that, above and beyond the man-hours or woman-hours involved?
7111. Mr O'Reilly: Sorry?
7112. Mr Copeland: The cost of doing something is whatever we have to pay the person to do it, but, above and beyond that, there are all the associated costs. I am just wondering how the £24 million is actually structured. Is it just based on man-hours?
7113. Mr O'Reilly: The way that we work in the agency is that we time each activity in the processing of claims, and we break that down. That takes a series of the normal activities that we have for the paying of benefits and allocates that time for it. To make bimonthly payments and split payments, we have allocated x number of hours in total, and then multiplied that by the staff numbers.
7114. Mr Copeland: Does the gross cost of the hours per person include — 7115. Mr O'Reilly: It is based on salary costs in Northern Ireland.
7116. Mr Copeland: But it does not include the overheads for the building, the heating, and so on?
7117. Mr O'Reilly: No.
7118. Mr Durkan: Thank you, Minister and officials. Of the approximately 200,000 people out of the 300,000 households who are in receipt of benefit but who are working, do we have any estimate of how many are in receipt of a monthly wage and how many are receiving weekly wages? I know that previous research indicated that those on lower wages are more likely to get paid weekly.
7119. Mr O'Reilly: About 55% of the current approximately 200,000 tax credit customers receive four-weekly payments under the working tax regime, and the remaining 45% receive them on a weekly basis. Under social security legislation, 99% of all social security claimants receive their payment on a fortnightly basis. There are three payment regimes in place within the social security tax credit regimes.
7120. Mr Durkan: Thank you, Tommy. I do appreciate that we are getting costs, at last, on which the decisions are going to be based, but you simply need greater

- analysis of those costs. That is why I have been going on about the need for us to have access to the outline business case when we are going to be making decisions and, hopefully, amendments to the proposals.
7121. I attended the consultation event in my constituency. If the fortnightly payment does not become the default position but remains an option for people when necessary, we will, therefore, have to establish criteria for when it is necessary. Officials at that event mentioned that those who are deemed to be in need of fortnightly payments will then be subject to review to see whether they will ever graduate to monthly payments. I hope that people who are not deemed to need the twice-monthly payments will also be reviewed. How far would someone in receipt of a monthly payment have to fall in to debt for a fortnightly payment to be deemed necessary? Is there going to be a flag system?
7122. Mr McCausland: If there are criteria, and a person's circumstances change, the position would change, but we have not yet got to the point of seeing what the criteria will be.
7123. Mr Durkan: Their circumstances might not necessarily change. It might just be someone who cannot budget.
7124. Mr McCausland: Sure. If a person is getting into debt, that is one of the things that they would flag up to say that there is a need to do something.
7125. Mrs Cochrane: I have just a wee query. Are we talking about bimonthly payments or fortnightly payments? There is a difference. Some people are paid their benefits four-weekly at the moment, and salaries are maybe paid monthly. There could already be a change here that people will have to adapt to anyway. Will you clarify that? Fortnightly and bimonthly are talked about, but there is a difference of 26 payments or 24.
7126. Mr O'Reilly: That is correct in the sense that there is a lot of language around all these issues. In the benefit world, we talk about it as being a bimonthly payment. Under the universal credit regime, we are moving to 12 payments over the year. Therefore, different arrangements would be on the basis of a bimonthly payment rather than a fortnightly payment. One of the problems is that, as happened over the Christmas holidays, we can have some technical issues with a small number of cases. The system did not recognise that last year was a leap year; therefore, it paid benefits early, in terms of the additional week. It is just the way that the system works with 26 fortnightly payments. The additional day threw it out as part of the cycle. So, we are working on the basis that universal credit will be a bimonthly system.
7127. Mrs Cochrane: So, are all people currently on benefits that they receive weekly or four-weekly going to experience a change anyway?
7128. Mr O'Reilly: Everyone will continue to receive their benefit payments under their current arrangements until they move to universal credit. That is when the new bimonthly or monthly arrangements will be explained to them.
7129. Mr McCausland: There was a second one —
7130. The Chairperson: Mindful of your time and when you might have to go, I suggest that we discuss housing, which is one of the big issues, particularly underoccupancy. Obviously, we can go through some of these things in more detail with your officials later. Are members content that we move to housing as the next item, and to other matters after that, should we have time?
7131. Members indicated assent.
7132. Mr McCausland: The first issue raised in regard to housing was underoccupancy and then there was the change in support for mortgage interest (SMI).
7133. I would not really support a proposal to depart from the GB policy on SMI. There has already been some movement from the UK Government in respect of support for mortgage interest assistance. The qualifying period is to remain at 13 weeks instead of reverting to 39 weeks, and the capital limits are to remain at the higher level, so those are two changes that were introduced in the rest of the United Kingdom.

I do not see the zero earnings limit and part-time workers as a particular problem here, simply because there is evidence that individuals with mortgage commitments will not accept part-time work. The advice from DWP is that the rules on tapers and disregards would, in any case — even were the changes made — ensure that an individual is not worse off through taking up part-time employment. That is my view on the SMI issue.

7134. I would certainly welcome the Committee's views on the underoccupancy provisions. On the face of it, there is nothing manifestly unfair about the proposal. It is not reasonable for taxpayers, through the benefit system, to subsidise individuals or households to live in accommodation that many households in work but on low incomes could not afford.
7135. Similarly, although I recognise the difficulty around segregated housing, which came up in the Assembly the other day, as a legacy of our past conflict, I do not consider that it would be acceptable for me, as an elected Minister, to use the segregated nature of our society as a reason to choose not to implement these provisions. The issue of underoccupancy and availability of smaller accommodation applies probably to a similar extent in both communities. I certainly encounter it across the board. Something that utilised blanket exemptions on this basis would surely be seen as perpetuating division. I do not think that is something that I, as Minister, or you, as the Statutory Committee, could be seen to endorse. I have commissioned some work to determine the actual scale of the issue in Northern Ireland. Although preliminary figures are available, it is premature to be alarmist. History dictates that many previous reforms on housing benefit, which had been heralded as catastrophic before they came in, have not had the repercussions that were envisaged, including the dreaded shared-room rate that was hotly debated here before being introduced. However, the impact was not as great as some of the predictions at the time.

7136. I have also, in the past, mentioned discretionary housing payments by way of mitigation. Although Committee members are somewhat dismissive of that, I stress that significant amounts have been set aside specifically for those purposes, and I have no difficulty seeking additional discretionary housing payment assistance from DWP or the Treasury should the need arise. Work is ongoing on housing. We are getting a better sense of the market out there because of the work that has been done. There has been a particular focus with the Housing Executive and the housing associations on ensuring that there is a better provision of the right size of accommodation for smaller units. The Committee has brought some examples to my attention where additional smaller accommodation could be provided fairly readily.
7137. The Chairperson: OK, Minister. Thank you.
7138. Mr F McCann: Where, Minister?
7139. Mr McCausland: There is your own example. You talked about the block up at the hospital, which would be suitable for singles.
7140. Mr F McCann: It is in an atrocious condition.
7141. Mr McCausland: I know that, and that is why you would be giving the housing associations —
7142. Mr F McCann: About 6,000 people may be affected, but we are talking about no more than a couple of hundred units. We have also heard that, over the next three to five years, only 300 units will be built by housing associations that will take that into consideration. If you talk to the housing associations or the Housing Executive, they will tell you that it will be impossible for them to meet the

- demands. I have serious difficulties with why segregation is not being considered. I pointed out that there are a number of areas — I can speak only for Belfast — where houses are lying empty. If people came along and put their names down on the transfer list, would you support them moving from, say, the New Lodge area into Tiger's Bay?
7143. Mr McCausland: I noticed that you asked the question about the number of properties in Tiger's Bay. Nobody will be moving into them. You could not even move people into them. Even the people in Tiger's Bay could not move into them.
7144. Mr F McCann: You used the blocks of flats at Broadway as an example. Therefore, you could use the same argument. I am trying to establish that there are more major differences in housing in certain areas of Belfast than there are in any part of England.
7145. The main thing is the whole question of discretionary payments. In some of the documents that I read recently, it is paid for 13 weeks at full rate, paid at 80% for the second 13 weeks, and after that there is nothing. Therefore, people will just go back to square one, and face debt, arrears and eviction.
7146. Mr McCausland: I will pick up on your first point about the underoccupancy issue. I noticed on TV this morning a report from Westminster yesterday — it could have been the Parliament channel — and that point was being made in England. The issue is certainly not unique to Northern Ireland; it applies elsewhere. The argument may be made that it is more acute in Northern Ireland, and that we do not have the right mix of smaller units. However, it was interesting to hear the number of people across the water who were saying that it is an issue for them as well. I am not arguing that we have got this right. Undoubtedly, a lot of work still has to be done on this. That is why I was disappointed last year when the social housing development programme came forward and no account was taken of welfare reform. That was wrong. Obviously, account should be taken of it in the nature of the mix of properties that are being brought forward, and that had not been done. That is why, more recently, we had to call in the associations and the Housing Executive to talk to them about that.
7147. Some of the associations said that there are things that can be done and some are more proactive than others. However, this is not something that we are going to solve in six months or whatever; there are no quick fixes. I was just using the Broadway roundabout as an example. There are other examples of properties that are empty and which could be brought back into use and would be suitable for smaller units.
7148. You are absolutely right: to refurbish a block to make it fit for purpose takes time. It is not going to be a place into which you can move people instantly. If a housing association takes over the site, it will have to negotiate the finance and commission the work. We are talking about a significant period of time. I have no doubt about that; I realise that and accept it.
7149. This is a piece of work that will take some time. That is why, in the shorter term, there will be a significant reliance on discretionary housing payments.
7150. Mr F McCann: Six months. After that, nothing. I have another couple of points to make.
7151. It is crucial to this whole debate that the Bill will be in law sooner rather than later, if it is accepted by the Assembly. From that point, people will be eligible for those payments. By your own admittance, however, the properties are not available to deal with the demand. People are being charged for something that they have no way out of. In England, they had a year's run-through. By and large, people are being given a few weeks' run-through and they are going to be hit.
7152. My other question is about adaptations. Many adaptations are specifically tailored to the needs of one individual in the house. That individual is living in a three-bedroom house but is the only - person living there. What happens in those circumstances?

7153. I read somewhere that where people are fostering children in the longer term, the foster child will not be taken into consideration when the number of rooms in the house is being looked at.
7154. Mr McCausland: It is a difficult one; there is no doubt about that. I am not saying that this is an easy thing to solve. It is going to take time and concentrated effort. We have inherited a housing mix in Northern Ireland; we cannot do anything about that, it is what we have got. We need to reshape that as we move forward to get a better mix of accommodation. I will ask Tommy to address the points about the discretionary housing payments in the shorter term.
7155. Mr O'Reilly: The housing market in general is at the core of the underoccupancy issue. There are issues around the age criteria in particular. When people are deemed to be underoccupying, the age of their children has to be considered. There are men who are single parents because their relationships have broken up and they want access to their children. There are issues about bringing them to homes that are houses in multiple occupancy. There are issues about disabled children. All those criteria are going to be affected by the current regulations. Further work needs to be done on those to understand their impact in Northern Ireland. That is work that the Department needs to do.
7156. Mr Pollock: That work is ongoing, as Tommy and the Minister rightly say. As the Minister said, this is a core issue as regards parity and the social security systems. Our concern, as the Minister said, is that these issues are not peculiar to Northern Ireland. From a social security system perspective, the parity issue — what you can pay for if you are eligible under housing benefit, or what housing costs you qualify for under universal credit — will apply. The mitigating factors and the issues around what you do for that are what the Minister was alluding to when he talked about the work and research that is ongoing on discretionary housing payments, the housing programme and the mix of social housing going forward.
7157. Mr F McCann: I have to say, it is amazing that you are actually speaking about what the Minister may be alluding to. You may sit at a certain level in the Department, but most of us around the table deal with the facts and the hard problems and difficulties that there may be. The Minister has already said that there is a big problem with the mix of housing here. By the time you get to that stage, how many people will have been evicted? How many people are going to have serious debt problems that they cannot get out of, before we even get to that stage? I have to say, Minister, with the shared-room allowance, we have not even reached the stage where we could quantify the problems and difficulties there are going to be. It is only in.
7159. Mr F McCann: I have to say, Martina, that I have heard figures from £500 million to £300 million to £200 million to £50 million to £20 million. I am not too impressed when I hear figures being thrown out.
7160. The Chairperson: Could I make a suggestion? The ultimate consideration of the Committee has to be in the context of the Bill we are dealing with. Minister, you and your officials have delved into some of the underoccupancy issues, and a bit of work is going on, as you rightly said, around quantifying the volume of people who are currently underoccupying under the terms of the new legislation. I do not know how long that work will take. When we identify the full quantity, I do not know how long it will take to redress that, because, clearly, we do not have the mix. The issue we have to deal with is that we have a Bill that we have to make a decision on. If the Bill is passed in its current form, we would have to deal with everybody currently deemed to be underoccupying, never mind the issues of the non-availability of other so-called appropriate accommodation and the segregated housing that we have across the North. How do we then deal with that? The discretionary payment is for only a limited time. It seems to me that people will end up having to rely on the discretionary payment. Where are the exemptions? Where are the criteria? We need to know. Obviously the Committee has taken a very firm view on that particular issue. We need to work out how that issue is going to be addressed by the Department. Under what we are being told at the minute, no criteria are being built in to exempt people because of the circumstances here. Where do we get any assurances on that? I have not heard anything yet. I appreciate that the quantitative work has to be done, but we are faced with the Bill, which will have an outcome the minute that it becomes legislation.

7161. Mr McCausland: Yes, the discretionary housing payment is for six months. However, my understanding is that, in circumstances where that needs to be extended, it could be extended.
7162. The Chairperson: But we do not know the circumstances.
7163. Mr McCausland: I appreciate that. A lot of those things will follow afterwards.
7164. It was interesting listening to David Cameron during Question Time yesterday, and the number of things about which he said, "That's something I'll have to look into." We are following on from GB.
7165. The Chairperson: Our problem is that we are passing enabling legislation. I cannot, in my mind, stand over something — 7166. Mr McCausland: I understand your point entirely. I understand the difficulty you are having, but I have the same difficulty. Things are being raised here, but we do not know what the position across the water is going to be or whether we will be departing from that or not. It is problematic, undoubtedly.
7167. The Chairperson: That is fair enough.
7168. Mr Brady: I have two quick questions, Minister. We have been given figures about the cost of intervening in underoccupancy. Would it not be wise maybe to do something about the cost of non-intervention? People are going to be on the streets. There are going to be all sorts of problems. The point was made about the single-room rate. That has not been around long enough for any detailed analysis of the effects to have been done. Certainly, we were told by the Housing Executive that possibly up to 6,000 people a year could become homeless. That is something that needs to be looked at. The cost of non-intervention might be useful.
7169. The other thing is that you were, I have to say, dismissive of the idea that the zero-earnings rule would affect people here. Do you not think that, with an underlying principle of incentivising people to get work, to have something like this is bizarre to say the least? It flies in the face of the so-called policy's principle. With respect, in my opinion, you were dismissive of it. Do you not think it bizarre that you are trying to deal with stuff like this, which flies in the face of the underlying policy principle of getting people back to work?
7170. Mr McCausland: You raised a number of points. I will not take them in the same order, but in the order that I have jotted them down.
7171. You made a point about the single-room rate. I remember when David Freud was over at the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action for a stakeholder meeting. Somebody said that all of the discretionary housing payment fund had been spent and that it had been taken up because of the single-room rate. I thought: "that is desperate to know; nobody told me." However, when I went back to the Department and checked, I found that there was adequate money

- in the discretionary housing payment fund. This is what happens. Somebody hears or imagines something. Clearly, the discretionary housing payment has managed to deal with that situation.
7172. All I am saying is that we do not yet fully know the impact of the single-room rate. However, it has not been as dire as some of the predictions. I am not aware of the extreme cases that were talked about at one time. That is why I am saying that we need to be cautious in the sort of predictions we make.
7173. A lot of the issues being raised here are not part of the actual Bill; they are part of the regulations. We are going to have to come back to the regulations, and a lot of issues will be revisited. When we come to revisit them, there will probably be a lot more information, because, as Michael said, all the work on housing, and so on, is ongoing in order to get a better sense of things.
7174. Mr Brady: Let me just say on that, Minister: the regulations flow from the enabling legislation. If it is flawed, by definition, the regulations will be flawed.
7175. Mr McCausland: If the legislation was flawed?
7176. Mr Brady: They are not being done in isolation; that is what I am saying. The regulations do not come along in isolation from the enabling Bill.
7177. Mr McCausland: No, but the nature, shape, character and content of the regulations is something that we will have to come back to. A lot of the issues we are dealing with today are really about the regulations. There will be another occasion when I am back here, going through the same issues, because they are much more about the regulations than the actual legislation.
7178. Mr Brady: Hopefully, there will be many occasions.
7179. Mr McCausland: I am glad that Mickey enjoys my visits.
7180. Mr Brady: Absolutely.
7181. Mr O'Reilly: Could I just go back to the question about the support for mortgage interest and the policy intent? The evidence to date suggests that, in the main, if people lose their employment and go on to benefits, SMI would kick in under universal credit. If they go into full-time work, they would be back to where they were, and, therefore, have the responsibility —
7182. Mr Brady: One hour a week.
7183. Mr O'Reilly: I will come back to that issue. If people are in full-time employment, they will be able to pay their mortgage in the way that they did prior to becoming unemployed. The question then arises: what happens if people become unemployed and then want to take up part-time work? That is the question you raised around SMI.
7184. Under the way that universal credit is set up, as people go into part-time work, the disregards that they get — the money that is taken from them for making additional income — are generous, on the basis that it gives people more money than they would get if they were on SMI. The tapers in disregards allow them to get sufficient money to start to pay off their mortgage. At the moment, we pay about £24 a week SMI, on average, for people who are on job seeker s allowance. The tapers and disregards will provide for that, as people increase their part-time working hours.
7185. The evidence in Northern Ireland and in GB suggests that people with a mortgage do not go for part-time work: they look for full-time work. They want to go back to work full time because the current system does not support them to do otherwise. So, we are trying to address the policy intent, but we are interested in finding a different way in order to make sure that people are protected.
7186. Mr Brady: Surely the whole concept is to ask people — force may be a better way to put it — to look for work.
7187. Mr O'Reilly: Yes.

7188. Mr Brady: So, the essence is that if people work one hour, they will lose their mortgage interest. You have talked about tapers, etc, and it is very complicated. It may be that someday, somewhere, somebody will be able to sit down and explain how they work. I have no doubt that somebody, somewhere, who thought them up is able to — 7189. Mr O'Reilly: I am happy to arrange that for you.
7190. Mr Brady: I am making the point that, at present, people see that if they work one hour, they will lose their support for mortgage interest. Therefore, there is a disincentive. That is the issue, because, by definition, it flies in the face of the underlying principle of incentivising people to work. Tommy, you probably understand tapers and all that a lot better than I do, and I am sure that some day we can sit down and you can explain them to me in detail. My point is that perception is everything: people see “one hour”, “lose support for mortgage interest”, and they say, “I am not going to go for that.” It is as simple as that.
7191. Mr McCausland: Tommy said that everybody acknowledges the complexity of this particular point. Again, it was one of the issues raised in Parliament yesterday. Even the people on television who deal with financial matters commented on the number of people writing in on that issue. Rather than rely on perceptions about it, we prefer that something be done to clarify and explain the point. The advice that we are getting from DWP is that an individual is not worse off through taking up part-time employment. If that is the case, let us get the facts out about that and, maybe, find some mechanism, which we can discuss, to get that clarity. Would that be helpful, Chair?
7192. Mr Brady: Maybe you should take your own advice, Minister.
7193. Mr McCausland: Sorry?
7194. Mr Brady: Take your own advice and not necessarily DWP's, because that does not seem to be working in this instance.
7195. Mr McCausland: I get advice sent across. I also get advice from all the officials in the Department. At the end of the day, the key thing is for us to get some structure, set up, or arrangement in place to get some clarity around this, if members consider doing so would be helpful.
7196. The Chairperson: OK; I think that that would be helpful. Thank you for that. I think that you will have to leave in five minutes or 10 at the most. So, members, may we move to the issue of sanctions?
7197. Mr F McCann: Chair, may I make just one point that goes to the very heart of discretionary payments? The discretionary money available depends on the time of the year you ask for it. As the year goes on, it runs out. We are talking about an increase in discretionary payments over the next three or four years, but it then drops back again. I want to make the point that the fund that is there will cover only the costs.
7198. Mr McCausland: Fra is totally right that this is interim. You are buying time. I would put it that you are buying time to get to the point where you have the right housing mix for the needs in Northern Ireland. We need to constantly challenge the Housing Executive and housing associations to step up to the mark over the next few years. If they do, there is no reason why work cannot be done to get things into a much better position over three years. Three to four years is a fair length of time. Done properly, the social housing development programme and other work will break the back of the problem. However, the challenge is there, and it is really over to the Housing Executive and housing associations to meet it.
7199. The Chairperson: Thank you for that. It is all good information, which we need. If you do not mind, we will deal with the issue of sanctions. Your papers refer to the case of someone being convicted of fraud, and the example was given of a sentence of 240 hours community service. That person would not receive benefits for a further two and a half years. Most people would see that as unfair, and, more importantly, unsustainable for those in that position. How would they live? It would cause other problems. Perhaps you will deal with this in general or even specifically. It was an issue of key concern for members.

7200. Mr McCausland: There is an argument that changing the sanctions from what is currently proposed would dilute their overall effectiveness. I assure members that sanctions are not applied automatically. They are always considered on an individual, case-by-case basis. Where claimants can provide good reason and set out reasons why they have not complied with the requirements under their claimant commitment, no sanction would be applied.

7201. I am also looking at our monitoring information and will be considering with officials how I can be assured about the overall effectiveness of the sanctions. I will seek to ensure that we have the data available to take an informed view on these matters. Some members have raised the issue of childcare in this context. I assure them that a lack of quality, affordable and accessible childcare is seen as a good reason for not taking up work-related activity. Therefore, those individuals would not be subject to a sanction.

7202. We are talking about serious cases. Seriousness is defined as being cases involving over £50,000. I see the figures coming through for cases that have gone to court, and, off hand, I cannot think of anything of that scale in the past while; generally, it involves much smaller amounts. Fraud over a period of two years and fraud involving identity fraud is where someone has gone out wilfully and over a sustained period to cheat the system. It is when you get into the area of identity fraud, it is running for years and where a sentence is imposed of 12 months imprisonment or over. Even in the biggest cases that I have seen go to court, which involved tens of thousands of pounds, the penalty was far short of what you mentioned. The sanction is there for really extreme and exceptional cases in which people go out of their way to defraud the system. We would all agree that you can see small cases, but this is serious stuff. The upper limit is reasonable for those extreme, exceptional and really serious cases.

7203. Mr Brady: Thanks for that, Minister. Tommy, to me, the application of the sanctions will, to a large extent, depend on the guidance. Over the years, my experience has been that the guidance must be right and it must be applied consistently.

7204. With respect, Minister, no one is trying to defend serial fraudsters of the social security system. There will always be people who will find ways of trying to do that. As I said, in my years of dealing with benefits, I only came across one case involving over £50,000. That was a long time ago, so a lot more money was involved proportionately.

7205. The guidance will be so important. One of the issues raised concerned childcare. In 2008, a previous Minister told us that people would not be sanctioned. I came across the case of a person who was threatened with sanction and withdrawal of benefit because suitable affordable childcare was not available. Due to our lack of childcare provision, that is very important, and we need reassurance for people about that.

7206. I think that the guidance and guidelines that are given to staff are important. Minister, you mentioned that staff will make informed decisions about good cause and what is reasonable in particular circumstances. That has to be done on an objective, individual basis for each claimant. That is because there will be people with mental health problems who may not have been diagnosed or whose condition may not be apparent, as well as those with all sorts of inherent problems that mean that they are not able to sign on, go to a job interview or whatever. I think that cases have to be dealt with sympathetically.

7207. The guidelines will be very important, and the staff on the front line will, ultimately, have to implement them. I think that we need to be reassured that targets will not be set for sanctions, which you said will not be automatic. Without being too sceptical, targets can be a big factor within the context of the Social Security Agency. I just wanted to raise that.
7208. Mr McCausland: First, on your point about vulnerable people who perhaps have mental health problems, I have had instances of such people coming into my constituency office, and I am sure that that is the case for you and other MLAs.
7209. On the assurance that you are seeking; this is not about penalising vulnerable people or whatever. The guidance given on this will have to take account of all these things. That is one of the things that we are very clear on. As I said earlier, we are looking with officials at monitoring and considering information. I need to be assured of the overall effect of this. We need to get it right. Work is still ongoing on that. Those are things that will come later.
7210. Mr Brady: Will the results of the monitoring — the number of people sanctioned; the type of sanction; and the reason they were sanctioned — be published on a regular basis?
7211. Mr McCausland: Why not? Yes.
7212. Mr O'Reilly: We will put arrangements in place to ensure that that happens.
7213. Ms M Campbell: I think that that is in the agency's standards assurance.
7214. Mr Brady: Finally, most Departments will do a risk assessment. In a sense, that falls into this. I am just wondering whether the Department has a risk assessment policy or strategy. If one is not already in place, will that be formulated and put into practice?
7215. Mr O'Reilly: For which aspect?
7216. Mr Brady: Will a risk assessment be done of who might or might not be impacted, the degree of risk involved and how people will be put at risk because of the implications of the Welfare Reform Bill?
7217. Mr O'Reilly: Currently, we carry out a fraud and error risk assessment to understand the range of individuals and types of groups who might be impacted by potential fraud and error. That will continue as part of the fraud and error strategy.
7218. Mr McCausland: We will come back to you on the guidance and go through that.
7219. The Chairperson: I think that the Minister's time is up. If that is the case, I want to thank you for being here this morning and for dealing with those issues as comprehensively as you and your officials did.

5 February 2013

 Mr Michael Pollock

7220. The Chairperson: We are just now opening our formal session, and I welcome everybody into the room this morning. I ask members to switch off all their phones, and so on, because this is the worst room for interference with the Hansard recording. Last week again we had a number of problems, and I have been advised by Hansard about how difficult that makes it to record these meetings properly.

7221. I also ask members to declare any interests relevant to today's agenda. None has been declared.

7222. We have an apology from Sammy Douglas; Mark Durkan has to be in the Chamber; and I think we have apologies from Michael Copeland as well.

7223. The substantive item today is the Welfare Reform Bill. The Committee heard from the Minister and his officials on the Committee's recommended proposals last week, and we also heard from the Clerk of Bills on the different options available to the Committee in respect of recommendations and amendments that members may wish to put. I suggest that today we consider the Minister's response and revisit the proposed amendments, if needs be. Copies of the Minister's response, the amendments and a paper prepared by the Committee Clerk can be found in members' tabled items.

7224. We are here this morning to recommence our discussions around the Minister's response and to go over the options open to the Committee, with the focus on a series of recommendations that calls on the Minister to take the issues to the Executive for consideration. If the Committee is broadly in agreement with that approach, I suggest that we go through the Minister's paper to ensure that we are content with the way forward for each proposal and reflect on the issues that are non-cost-related. The Committee met in closed session and has had a brief discussion as to how we see the way forward. I suppose that, in essence, we want to consider whether we should deal with the report by way of going through the Bill as we do, clause by clause, and tabling any amendments that people want to put forward, or should we seek to reach a consensus report. I want to formally put that to the Committee. Is the Committee is of a mind to seek a consensus report, as opposed to a report that will necessitate a range of amendments? Are members content that we seek to secure that?

Members indicated assent.

7225. The Chairperson: We will do that and, to facilitate it, we will go through the paperwork that has been provided to us. We had some limited discussions on it last week. In light of that, we propose to have our discussions on the papers that we have today, and then we will ask the officials to provide an updated paper to our meeting on Thursday. In other words, we will not be here tomorrow but we will return for a Committee meeting on Thursday morning. It should not be a lengthy Committee meeting on Thursday. We will resume meeting for the remainder of the days, if we need

- to, to consider an updated paper from officials.
7226. The main purpose of this is to try to reach a consensus report because, on a number of issues, members feel that they do not want to be restricted on some of the views that they might have on the basis that something may or may not break parity, or something may or may not cost something. We had a situation last week where we were told that something would cost us £24 million and, then, on questioning that figure, we were told that it might not cost that. I, for one, am not prepared to proceed on that kind of flawed basis.
7227. On the basis of that decision, the Committee will try to get a consensus report. We believe it will be a strong report and it will allow the Minister to go to the Executive on the basis that we have a twin pillars approach. On the one hand, we will seek flexibilities in the Bill, and on the other, we will look for mitigating measures that may or may not be taken by the Department or the Executive as a whole. We cannot guess what the Executive will do in their spending priorities. We cannot dictate that, and we are not privy to some of those discussions.
7228. On that basis, we will go through the papers that we have this morning. I will ask the Committee Clerk to take us through the first paper, and see where we are at on that.
7229. The Committee Clerk: Perhaps if we go through the Minister's paper first, members can make themselves fully aware of what has been suggested. As I indicated before, last week the Minister said that, where costs are attached, he will be content to take any recommendations that the Committee may have to the Executive for formal discussion and potential agreement. There were some issues last week that required clarification, particularly in relation to amendments 2 and 3.
7230. Would members like to have a look at the Minister's paper? It begins with "Issues/Topics". It starts with clauses — this was listed in the Committee's papers as clause 2, but it actually refers to clause 99. It relates to the twice-monthly payments being the default position. It would cost approximately £24 million if everyone were to take up the option.
7231. The Chairperson: This is the paper entitled annex 1, is that right?
7232. The Committee Clerk: Yes. "Annex 1" is in the top right-hand corner. Chair, if members are content with the information that they have on that particular clause, there are some issues around whether "fortnightly" is the same as "twice monthly", as you remember last week.
7233. Ms Martina Campbell (Department for Social Development): Yes. As it is a monthly payment now, it will not be quite fortnightly; it will be a bi-monthly payment, so it depends on the assessment. Tommy O'Reilly has offered to come to do a specific briefing on payments and the taper. I can arrange that, if members wish.
7234. Mr Brady: You are saying that the first payment has to be monthly.
7235. Ms M Campbell: It has to be monthly.
7236. Mr Brady: Then the IT system can be adjusted. Why can you not adjust the initial payment? If you are going to change the system, change the system. Presumably the agency is able to do that. It is only the logistics of it. I do not understand it.
7237. Mr Michael Pollock (Department for Social Development): I think it must be something to do with the software, Mickey.
7238. Mr Brady: It does not make sense. If you are going to pay it the following month fortnightly, bi-monthly or whatever, why not the first time? They also talk about exceptional circumstances. Who decides those?
7239. Ms M Campbell: The exceptional circumstances issue is out for consultation, so —

7240. Mr Brady: Yes, I think we heard that. I am still just a wee bit wary about that. That can be very subjective.
7241. Ms M Campbell: So, that will be decided by the decision-makers. Once the criteria and definition of “exceptional circumstances” are agreed, the agency will bring that work to the Committee. Once all that is agreed, the exceptional circumstances will be decided by the decision-makers.
7242. Mr Brady: If you have an IT system that pays bi-monthly, you would assume that that is put in place. You seem to be saying that you are putting in place a different one at the start, and then —
7243. Ms M Campbell: Yes, I get your —
7244. Mr Brady: I cannot imagine it being any cheaper to do it that way.
7245. Mr Pollock: It is probably something to do with the default position on the IT system in the rest of the UK, because the bulk of the payments would be monthly.
7246. Mr Brady: In a sense, they have an extra six months here to sort that out.
7247. Mr Pollock: I cannot remember the number of man days but it was something like 10,000 man days necessary just for essential variables for the Northern Ireland IT system, like our postcodes and things like that.
7248. Mr Brady: That sounds like the amount of time the Committee has spent on the Welfare Reform Bill.
7249. Mr Pollock: Pardon?
7250. Mr Brady: Ten thousand man hours.
7251. Mr Pollock: Something like that.
7252. Ms M Campbell: Join the club.
7253. The Chairperson: Before we go any further, I really do not want people telling me “it might be”. I cannot work on the basis of what might be. I am sorry, Michael, but — 7254. Mr Pollock: No, that is fair enough.
7255. The Chairperson: I know that you may be trying your best, but if somebody cannot tell me what will be or what will not be, I do not want to hear anything in the middle, because that does not mean anything to me. I cannot make a decision on what might be something, sorry.
7256. Ms M Campbell: Well —
7257. The Chairperson: I know what might happen as a result of a consultation on the universal credit and split payments. That will work its way out, so something might happen there. However, if someone comes here and tells me at this stage of the game, “Well, that might be because of”, I am sorry but I really do not want to hear that.
7258. Ms M Campbell: Actually, Chair, the second paragraph of the explanation under twice-monthly payments came from the agency. It says:
- “To be able to offer a twice monthly payment or split payment from the start of the claim DWP has advised will require significant changes to the ICT over and above that already agreed.”*
7259. If a split or bi-monthly payment is required from the start of the claim, that can be done clerically, but it cannot be done using the IT as it is structured at the moment, if that makes it any clearer.
7260. Mr Brady: Tommy O’Reilly mentioned six hours per claim.
7261. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
7262. Mrs Cochrane: What I picked up last week from Tommy was around the fact that a lot of benefits are currently paid fortnightly. Therefore, when you move to universal credit, because it will be paid monthly or twice monthly, you have to make that change initially. The issue seems to be that the initial change has to be made to make it be paid monthly, because it will be 24 payments in the year rather than 26 if it is being paid twice a month. So, there is an initial change for everybody, whether you will continue to have two payments in the month.

7263. Mr Pollock: That is our lay understanding, Chair, but we will clarify that for you. However, it is tied into the overall IT system and the fact that the bulk of the caseload, which is the whole of the UK, will be on monthly payments.
7264. Ms M Campbell: The best approach would be for me to ask the agency to attend on Thursday and clarify the position, because we are not close enough to that detail, if that is acceptable.
7265. The Chairperson: Bear in mind we were told that we were getting flexibilities, so I want to hear about the flexibilities.
7266. Mr Brady: I am sure that Judith knows more about computers than I ever will, but I just want to clarify about that first monthly payment made to people. There then has to be a decision made somewhere for somebody to be paid bi-monthly or fortnightly. I would be very wary about that happening seamlessly because a system will have to be put in place to accommodate those people who want to be paid bi-monthly as opposed to those who want to continue to be paid monthly. That just seems very complicated. I am sure that there is some computer-speak somewhere that says that it has to be done this way, which I would not necessarily agree with.
7267. I am just wondering, because the logistics of putting in those people who want to be paid bi-monthly — it seems to be a more complicated way of doing things than having the people who want to be paid monthly programmed in and those who want to be paid bi-monthly programmed in as well. There is almost a danger that someone who wants to be paid bi-monthly is going to just carry through, and you know as well as me that human nature being what it is, that is quite likely to happen to a number of people. The safeguards are maybe not necessarily as safe as they could be. I think that maybe clarification is needed on that.
7268. Ms P Bradley: I would prefer the default position for everybody to be bi-weekly rather than monthly. However, if this is the way it has to be, and if we accept that and everybody gets paid monthly from the beginning, I estimate — and I know that you do not want to hear estimates — that 90% of people are going to want it bi-monthly. That has to be done clerically — manually — by someone if they want it.
7269. Ms M Campbell: No. If everybody decides to go to bi-monthly, the agency is saying that that is more than what was agreed. What it has agreed is for a percentage of the caseload to go bi-monthly. Therefore, anything over and above that agreement would have to be done clerically because the IT system apparently cannot cope with that volume.
7270. Ms P Bradley: OK, and it will go over. We know that it will go over. It is not going to be the estimate that the agency agreed to, so the people who are over that have to do you know what. That could end up taking a very long time for a team of people to sit and do that manually. That in itself is another worry, with people asking to be paid bi-monthly and maybe having to wait a further six or eight weeks for that to be processed manually.
7271. Ms M Campbell: Yes, well, Tommy said six hours to do a clerical case. I am sorry, Chair, but we are not close to that detail, so I really think that the agency would be better placed to attend on Thursday and provide all that clarification.
7272. Ms P Bradley: They are going to be inundated.
7273. Mr Pollock: What we are getting is that you have concerns about the IT and people falling through and possibly having delays in their payments, and you want to try and get some sort of assurances about what safeguards are built into that system and, in particular, why someone has to go on monthly if, ultimately, they are going to be paid bi-monthly. Am I right?
7274. Ms P Bradley: I could accept everybody being paid monthly and that that is the default position if it was then easy for everyone to move on to bi-weekly, if it was a smooth process and if it could be done before the end of the following month. However, I do not see how that is going to be a smooth process or be done in time. There will be people who will fall into financial hardship, there is no doubt about that. I could accept the proposal if we knew that it was going to be — 7275. The Chairperson: Yes, I can understand that. I am also mindful that we were told that the system has been deferred for a number of months to get it right. Now, it seems we are being told that actually it will not be right in the way in which you would see it as being right.

7276. Mr F McCann: Chair, Paula has covered much of what I was going to say.
7277. Ms P Bradley: You are joking, Fra.
7278. The Chairperson: It is not necessary to report all that.
7279. Mr F McCann: Every time we discuss this we get more and more confusion about the thing. When we were debating it, we were fairly clear in our minds what we were asking to be done. When the Minister came back and said that he had flexibility with this, it seemed to fit with what we had argued that we wanted done, but it actually does not. It is going to be much more complicated for people to work the system. The flexibility seems to be designed more to frighten people off from asking for bi-monthly payments, as it might mean they have to wait longer to get their money, and, as Paula said, they may fall into debt waiting for that to happen. People talked about that, and Alec raised the point about making the system ready to deal with that flexibility. The system is not ready, and it will never be ready to deal with the bi-monthly payments we have asked for. In fact, people will nearly have to withdraw from the system to have their benefits paid, rather than being part of a system that has been set up.
7280. Mr Pollock: We should certainly be able to get some assurances as to processes and what will happen and when. Essentially, IT systems are fairly rigid: if you tell them to do A they will do A and if you tell them to do B they will do B. The Minister pointed out that there is a cost attached to getting a system to be able to do both A and B. That is maybe where the Committee has some reservations as to how flexible the system will be.

7281. Mr F McCann: What really gets me — Mickey constantly raises this issue — is the computer system that was put in place to deal with child support and the hundreds of millions of pounds that were spent on it. I take it that there has been a huge cost for a modern new system. When I lift my phone and turn it on, I can talk to it. It does not always listen to me, but I can talk to it and tell it what to do. I am amazed that people spend hundreds of millions of pounds on a system, yet they cannot press a button to change it to twice weekly or say to it that we want to operate the thing. It just amazes me that that amount of money can be spent on a computer system, but it cannot be adjusted to do that.
7282. Mr Brady: I just want to make the point, Chair — and I am sure that we are all aware — that when pension credit was centralised and transferred to Derry it took three years to get it working any way properly. They were bussing civil servants in from all over the place. There were people coming from the Plaza, Newry and all sorts of places, being put up in Derry over the weekend and working Saturdays and Sundays. It still took three years to get it right. You have that in the back of your mind.
7283. And yet pension credit was one benefit, which was probably relatively straightforward. All it does is make a change for relatively small numbers of people over 60. Universal credit is going to involve huge numbers — you are talking about something like 300,000 — and it is a much more complicated benefit than pension credit.
7284. Michael, you said you press a button to do B, but in pension credit they must have pressed Z, because it took them three years.

7285. Mr Pollock: I take your point, Mickey. However, you will hear about the exceptions and the people who fall through the net.
7286. The Chairperson: I actually think that we are now starting to the job of IT experts and everybody else. We need to be very careful.
7287. Ms Brown: We are talking about bi-monthly payments. The estimated annual cost is in and around £24 million, although we are not sure about the accuracy of that amount. If an individual opts for a bi-monthly payment, it will take six man hours per person or per case to do that. I do not know whether we have a percentage of how many people are going to request bi-monthly payments, but if it is in the region — the consultation is coming back about 80%. Do we have a cost of how much it will cost us to move that 80% times the six man hours per case? What is the estimated cost for making that the default position?
7288. Ms M Campbell: As I understand the position, the six hours apply when payments have to be made clerically if a person wants bi-monthly payments from the first payment. The clerical workaround for that is six hours.
7289. The agency has not given us an estimate for the best case scenario. The worst case scenario is that all payments will be made bi-monthly, and the agency estimated the cost of that to be £24 million. I think that the agency is still working on the best case scenario, which is that 150,000 will require bi-monthly payments, which is roughly half the caseload. I will seek to have that information for the Committee on Thursday.
7290. The Chairperson: Thank you for that, Martina. That brings me back to the point that we have had a position from the outset of wanting split payments to be facilitated, and we have outlined all the arguments for that.
7291. I am being generous when I say that we are still working on estimates, guesstimates and worst case scenarios, and I understand all the reasons for that. However, by the same token, theoretically, we will be asked to agree to accept something on the basis that it might cost this and might not cost that, plus the fact that a very important consultation is ongoing on the very issue of split payments. The most generous description that I can find is that this is a work in progress.

7292. I think that the Committee would be wise to stick to its original agreed position of wanting the Department and the Bill to facilitate split payments. The precise details of that and the associated costs are matters that will need to be deliberated on and decided further down the track. Why should I come down on one side or other of the argument when I do not yet have all the information? I would like us to stick with the position that we agreed initially. It seemed to make sense, and we are trying to work on that basis. If there is to be a cost attached, whether to a worst case scenario or a less worse case scenario, that is not a decision that we can take. Once the consultation is completed, the Executive will look at that, and they will get the costs associated with any split payment criteria. At best, I am being asked to make a decision without having most of the really pertinent information.
7293. At this stage of the game, I think that the Committee would be wise to stick with its original position. That is a decision that we will have to consider. That is part of the thinking behind us reaching a consensus report rather than making amendments, particularly when those amendments would be premature to say the least.
7294. The Committee Clerk: Chair, the Committee had an issue with split payments last week. Patricia, you referred to it last week, and I just want to remind members about it.
7295. The Clerk of Bills: The Committee wanted to explore amendment Nos 2 and 3. These deal with a situation in which, for example, one party is in paid employment and the payment is to be made to the other party, the claimant, and all other payments are to be made through a split payment. Clause 99 already contains regulation-making powers that could give effect to those intentions, if that is where the Committee intended to go on the basis of an amendment. Clause 99 allows for split payments and for payments to be made to a nominated person who, in the Committee's words, could be the main carer or second earner. That is how it is currently drafted.

7296. What the Committee asked for was much more specific. Last week, I drew to your attention the fact that, to be much more specific than what is already in the Bill, you would need to think a bit more about the definitions. It would be up to the Committee to accept that the Bill already includes such regulation-making powers and, for example, seek clarifications or recommendations. Alternatively, if you were to decide that you wanted to be much more specific, when you talk about one person being in paid employment, you need to be clear about whether you are talking about just one party to a couple who is in either part-time or full-time employment and the other party not having any employment. If it were to be drafted like that, it would cover only that group of people. If you want to be more specific than that, the regulation will be very detailed. In some ways, that is why these things are done by regulation, because — [Inaudible.] — policy and regulation-making power and then the — [Inaudible.] — brought back to consider at a later date.
7297. The other point is that, as drafted, all other employment payments would be split. It is extremely specific. I draw to your attention — [Inaudible.] — if you want to be that specific — [Inaudible.] — acknowledge that there are regulation-making powers in the Bill. You could clearly specify, for example, by recommendation, what you would like the regulation-making powers to do rather than trying to legislate and define things that would be extremely difficult to define.
7298. The Chairperson: That points to the need to consider the outworking of the consultation. We cannot bypass that. We have to bear in mind that the consultation goes out to all the key stakeholders. The Committee's very strong view was that split payments need to be facilitated. The precise nature of that will come down at some point to specific amendments in the Assembly. You are saying that the Committee amendment might actually be too prescriptive; that it is a good idea, but maybe we have not used precisely the right wording. The Committee was very clearly of the view that it wanted split payments to be facilitated for a whole range of reasons. I am not asking you to agree all of this formally now, but I presume that this is what the Committee is still minded to see.
7299. Ms P Bradley: If I had to list my priorities, split payments would be near the top. However, I do not want us to get tied in to this amendment, with the result that other vulnerable people will be affected by a rule that we have made. I am in full agreement with what you said.
7300. The Chairperson: OK. On that basis, we will move on to the next item.
7301. The Committee Clerk: The next issue raised concerns the claimant commitment. There are no associated costs, but the Minister did not consider that legislative change was appropriate. I just want to see whether the Committee can indicate how it wants to move forward. The Committee will recall that this relates to a situation in which, in a joint claim, one person refuses to sign.
7302. The Chairperson: The Committee felt that it was very unreasonable that, if one person refused to sign a commitment, the whole family was penalised. A cooling-off period is provided for, but nothing after that. Have I remembered that correctly?
7303. Ms M Campbell: Yes, there is a cooling-off period.
7304. The Chairperson: And then nothing?

7305. Ms M Campbell: Not until the claimant comes back to the agency, and it would be a new claim at that stage.
7306. The Chairperson: Yes, but it is our understanding that there is a cooling-off period and then —
7307. Ms M Campbell: That is it. After that, they are off the books.
7308. The Chairperson: So the claim just dies a death and is off the books. The Committee felt that this was not reasonable at all. There needs to be a solution to that. The Committee's view remains that this is not a reasonable or sustainable position.
7309. Ms P Bradley: I suppose that all these issues are priorities, and this is another one. My only concern, which was brought up last week, is about opening up the system to false claims. That could easily happen, so this needs to be tweaked in some way. I agree that we cannot leave the most vulnerable without money. Whether it is for 24 hours or longer, it is too long. If a female comes in with her children, and her partner has not signed the commitment, what else is in place?
7310. Ms M Campbell: If the unwilling partner does not sign the claimant commitment, nothing else is available.
7311. Ms P Bradley: In that case, we may need to look at making available another fund rather than people having to make a separate claim, which would be open to fraud. Another option may be to have a separate fund for use in such situations. I do not know whether that may be a way round it.
7312. The Chairperson: Remember that members' tabled items include options for the Committee. Paula, you suggest a separate fund. We can recommend anything, including that this situation needs to be sorted out or there must be some means by which vulnerable people are not left penniless. We can table something. I think that the Committee —
7313. Ms P Bradley: We cannot leave these people without anything.
7314. The Chairperson: — seems to be of the view that, in the event of one person in a couple deciding that he or she is not going to bother their backside to sign, for whatever reason — they could be vulnerable for all we know— it is not reasonable to penalise the whole family. Everybody has accepted that that cannot be allowed to pertain. So our recommendation could be as simple as, “Go and find a solution”, “Make a fund available”, or whatever. However, this certainly has to be resolved. I do not know the answer, but it seems ridiculous to leave it as is.
7315. Mr F McCann: I find myself agreeing with a lot of what Paula has said this morning. A key point that she raised was the time that elapses between a person refusing to sign the declaration and a family even being eligible for the hardship fund. It is about trying to narrow that gap. If a family member says, “That does not represent me; I want to put in a claim in my own right”, it needs to be dealt with. It cannot be put back. One difficulty with crisis loans is that some people have had to wait for a certain period to elapse from the time of application before being offered such a loan. We need to look at that intervening period.
7316. Ms P Bradley: I know that we discussed this last week, and I do not want to go over it all again. However, the fact that somebody is applying, whether to a fund or through a fresh application, they would have been getting that money anyway if their partner had agreed to sign. It does not cost more because it is money to which they would have been entitled anyway. Therefore, this would not be a big financial burden.
7317. Mr Brady: Following on from what Paula said, I just want to clarify that nothing at all is available in the cooling-off period, so people will be left without anything. Even if it were the case that hardship payments were made available, unlike current hardship payments, they would be recoverable from benefit, so the person would still be penalised.

7318. Ms P Bradley: That cannot be a hardship payment.
7319. Mr Brady: Paula's other point was about this leading to fraud. In my experience, people who are going to commit fraud will do so anyway. In those cases, it would be much easier to follow up on the possibility of fraud or alleged fraud. For instance, when the female partner claims separately, I imagine that the Department's follow-up enquiries would be fairly rigorous. That is because, over the years, one of the hardest things to prove was that couples who claimed separately were living together. From a fraud perspective, you would nearly have to sit outside their door for 24 hours a day, seven days a week, because they would have children in common, access and visiting rights, and so on. It would be more difficult, in a sense, to commit fraud, so something has to be put in place, which follows on from what you said, Paula. I am starting to agree with you.
7320. Ms P Bradley: This is really bad, Chair. [Laughter.]
7321. The Chairperson: That is what consensus is all about.
7322. Ms P Bradley: Let us see how far we get.
7323. The Chairperson: We are not doing too badly. The next item on our list is third-party verification. Again, this should have been relatively simple, should it not?
7324. The Committee Clerk: Yes, Chair. The Minister said that he would provide an assurance that the current practice of allowing third-party verification would, in effect, continue. I do not think that there is an issue for the Committee, other than it may want to acknowledge or welcome that.
7325. Ms P Bradley: I would like to welcome it.
7326. The Chairperson: OK, is that fair enough?
Members indicated assent.
7327. The Chairperson: We move on to the issue of 16- to 17-year-olds registered in training but not placed. Is that all right?
7328. Ms M Campbell: Sorry, Chair, I cannot remember whether it was you or the Deputy Chair who asked last week for more information on that from the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL). We expect to receive information on the numbers that might apply later today. DEL assured us that it was not aware of any 16- to 17-year-olds waiting for a training place. We are confirming that that is still the position.
7329. Mr Brady: Chair, may I just clarify something? When children come out of care at, say 16, normally, social services still have the duty of care — Paula can correct me if I am wrong. The paper states:
“Under this clause as an under-18 year old care leaver cannot qualify for Universal Credit unless they are part of a benefit unit with responsibility for a child (either as a lone parent or as part of a couple) or a limited capability for work or work related activities recipient. Care leavers cannot qualify on the grounds that they are without parental support or pregnancy post-confinement/or as a carer.”
7330. Currently, if someone under the age of 18 is estranged from the family home and claiming benefit, does that mean that they do not qualify?
7331. Ms M Campbell: There are exceptions in the regulations for those people.
7332. Mr Brady: So they will be covered?
7333. Ms M Campbell: Yes, they will be covered.
7334. Mr Brady: For children coming out of care, usually social services —
7335. Ms M Campbell: Social services should pick up the tab in that situation.
7336. Mr Brady: That is what the Minister means by changing the social security system.
7337. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
7338. Mr Brady: Hardship payments were made in 413 cases. Were those social fund crisis loans?
7339. Ms M Campbell: No, those were jobseeker's allowance (JSA) hardship

- payments, which cover people over that age as well.
7340. Mr Brady: Would that have been recoverable from benefit?
7341. Ms M Campbell: I am not sure about that.
7342. Mr Pollock: Not previously, but I think that it would be under the new system.
7343. Mr Brady: That is the issue: again, they are being penalised.
7344. Mr Pollock: It is a hardship payment. It is not a penalty as such.
7345. Mr Brady: That is OK. Thanks.
7346. The Chairperson: Are we happy enough with the explanation given and the situation that it provides for?
7347. Mr Brady: The issue was to do with youngsters who fall outside the normal criteria. Michael, you said that, under the present system, a hardship payment is not recoverable. In the new system, however, it seems that some young people will be put below subsistence level.
7348. The Chairperson: What do we want to do with this item?
7349. Mr Brady: We need clarification. Martina said that, currently, those 413 claims are under JSA and not recoverable. In my experience, there will always be children who fall outside that. Not too many, it has to be said, but you will get children who are not in the parental home or, having come out of care, are on a training course or a waiting list for courses.
7350. Mr Pollock: As Martina said, the indication from DEL is that very few would be affected by this, but we are trying to get the exact numbers.
7351. Mr Brady: The point that I am making is this: we still have a duty of care to help even a small number of children in those circumstances. They are probably the most vulnerable, or more vulnerable than most. If those numbers could be obtained —
7352. The Chairperson: Do you think that you will have those figures this afternoon?
7353. Ms M Campbell: We hope to get a response from DEL today.
7354. The Chairperson: Ok. We will move on. The next item is restrictions on entitlement. Are members content with the response?
7355. Mr Brady: May I have clarification? Essentially, does that mean that, if a claim is for less than seven days, the benefit will not be paid, but the person will be notified of an underlying entitlement?
7356. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
7357. Mr Brady: That could be six days. There are three waiting days.
7358. Ms M Campbell: It would be four days.
7359. Mr Brady: Four, sorry, because there are three waiting days. That is all that someone would have to live on for that period.
7360. Mr F McCann: I am being a bit flippant, but, if someone ended up owing six days' benefit, would the agency let that go because the cost of collecting it may be prohibitive?
7361. Ms M Campbell: Sorry, if a person owed six days' benefit? Oh, no, I take that back. I misheard.
7362. The Chairperson: The Committee sought assurances from the Minister on whether that would affect passported benefits and was told that it would not.
7363. Mr F McCann: It still seems an unfair situation if people are owed money. As I said before, the money used to be measured down to the penny.
7364. The Chairperson: I understand. There are two issues. The first is the loss of benefit for those three or four days. Martina, you are saying that it would be for four days. The second issue is whether that would impact on passported benefits, and we do not know. Fra, I presume that this does not change your first concern but does change your second. Are members satisfied with the response to the passported benefit issue? Will we welcome that reassurance?

7365. Mr F McCann: Yes.

7366. The Chairperson: We will come back to the loss of payment for three or four days. Is that fair enough?

Members indicated assent.

7367. We now turn to clause 10, “Responsibility for children and young persons”. We are told that this is a parity issue and that the potential cost of the proposed change is £11 million a year.

7368. Mr Brady: The Minister has asked whether the Committee wants to pursue this. I would have thought that disabled children were among the most vulnerable of those who will be affected, so I think that it is worth discussing.

7369. The Chairperson: This is in line with our earlier decision to ask the Minister to take to the Executive anything that carries a cost. The decision for us to make is simply whether the Committee would still prefer that lower payments were not made. We will put that to the Minister, and it will be forwarded to the Executive. Subject to what comes out of that, it will be up to Members and parties to make a decision at Further Consideration Stage. However, we would still like the position to be that those people will not be disadvantaged in the way that has been described. Are members happy enough to move forward on that basis?

Members indicated assent.

7370. The Committee Clerk: I know that it is difficult to distinguish between what is and what is not a priority for the Committee, but it would probably help the Minister if the Committee, when issuing a series of recommendations, indicated what exactly are the priorities as the Committee sees them: for example, whether disabled children are a key priority as opposed to split payments. I know that it is difficult to decide between two different animals, but it would be helpful to the Minister and the Executive if the Committee could do that.

7371. The Chairperson: We would probably be better doing that when we have decided on all our recommendations. We could then decide whether we needed or wished to weight any of them.

7372. Mr F McCann: I do not expect the officials to be able to answer this question, but is there a definition of “greatest need”? Who determines that when dealing with people, including children, with disabilities?

7373. Mr Pollock: Fra, that is, in a sense, down to the Programme for Government and the Executive’s priorities.

7374. Mr F McCann: Ministers will not define “greatest need” when it comes to disability. Will somebody with the relevant experience sit down to do that? All we have been told about is the split between the two rates: over 8,000 people will be on the lower rate, 7,500 will be on the higher rate and any money saved will go to those in most need. How do you determine who is in most need?

7375. Ms M Campbell: The eligibility for the disabled child additions is linked to the rate of disability living allowance (DLA) that the child is getting. The definition of “severely disabled” or the degree of disablement will be determined in that mechanism. The coalition Government are saying that, in directing resources to those in greatest need, 6,000 children will receive more under this measure. They feel that that is right and proper because those children are the most severely disabled.

7376. Mr F McCann: Nearly 8,000 people, however, will receive less.

7377. Ms M Campbell: That is true.

7378. Mr F McCann: That is what I am asking: how do you determine —

7379. Ms M Campbell: That is linked to their rate of DLA.

7380. Mr Pollock: It is their current entitlement.

7381. Mr F McCann: Is it a box-ticking exercise, or is it based purely on medical evidence that may be provided?
7382. Ms M Campbell: It is based on their assessment for DLA. Do you know what that assessment is?
7383. Mr F McCann: So it is a box-ticking exercise that determines their disability. I am talking about the assessment.
7384. Mr Pollock: It will be down to their current entitlement.
7385. Mr F McCann: I know that you probably do not have the details, but the system seems totally unfair. They say that there will be winners and losers with levels of disability. That seems totally unfair not only on a child who may need the money but on the people who provide the level of care that is required for a child.
7386. Ms M Campbell: There will, of course, be transitional protection for existing people for however long — 7387. Mr F McCann: One slight move, and that is away.
7388. Mr Pollock: There are other —
7389. Mr F McCann: It is like discretionary payments.
7390. Mr Pollock: — protections in the benefit cap for universal credit. If a child or a member of a household is affected by disability, they are exempt from the benefit cap. There are some safeguards, Fra.
7391. The Chairperson: Are members content with the position that they previously adopted? This issue could be around parity or cost. The cost decision is outwith our gift.
7392. We move to clause 12, “Other particular needs or circumstances”. There are a number of issues. We are being told that it is a parity issue and that costs are attached.
7393. Mr Brady: We are dealing with the severe disability premium. I want more reassurance that it is not based on the current assessment for employment and support allowance (ESA), which is, essentially, a work capability assessment. Most people accept that that is fundamentally flawed. It has been condemned by the British Medical Association and other bodies. Therein lies the problem: there is inconsistency in assessing people. In my experience, a severe disability premium can make a big difference to the lives of older people who live alone. It gives them a much better quality of life than they would have had if they did not receive it. Essentially, the move is to reduce what they will receive. We are talking about a carer-type premium or a disability premium. People will not be able to get both, but in the current system, they can. That is a fundamental issue for people who suffer from disability. Unless the assessment for ESA is changed dramatically, many people will suffer as a consequence. Any of us here can quote examples of people who have been found to be capable in the context of the work capability assessment. That type of assessment is appalling. Last year in England, 32 terminally ill people were found capable because of that assessment, and they died within a month or two. That is the statistic, and those are the Department’s figures.
7394. Mr Pollock: You previously raised concerns about the assessment process, Mickey. I think that that is right. There is a serious cost tag attached to this issue. The rationale that is outlined is to try to do away with overlapping provision.
7395. Mr Brady: I will make one final point. The issue is money. Since the Atos contract was signed, it has got over £400 million from the Government to do something that is fundamentally flawed and does not work for the majority of people. I quoted an example recently of a fella with Down’s syndrome whose mother was asked how long he had had the condition and when she thought that he would be better. She challenged the health professional and was told that they were not interested in the condition. They were there to fill in forms and not to ask those questions, and they were not going to deviate from that.

7396. Ms M Campbell: That is a contractual, not a policy, issue.
7397. Mr Brady: Unfortunately, the contract is as a result of the policy. To use that hackneyed phrase: the two are inextricably linked.
7398. Ms M Campbell: I accept that they are linked, but it is not the policy intention that that incident and similar ones should have happened. It is about the performance management of the contract rather than the policy intention.
7399. Mr Brady: I know what you are saying, but I do not necessarily accept it. Essentially, Atos is a data-processing firm and has very little medical background.
7400. The Chairperson: To go back to the root of the issue: the Committee was concerned at the removal of a severe disability premium. The Minister outlined that it is a parity issue, and he did not want to consider that amendment. There is an associated cost, so it would have to be discussed further.
7401. Mr G Campbell: In the paper, the costs for the severe disability premium are there, and “plus admin costs” is in brackets. I know that we are all speculating about how long a piece of string is, but is there any concept of what the admin costs might be?
7402. Ms M Campbell: No. The Bill team came up with that, and when the methodology is set out in square or round brackets, the team has calculated that. The agency was unable to give me a cost.
7403. Mr G Campbell: In the response, that is the single biggest cost.
7404. Ms M Campbell: It is huge.
7405. Mr G Campbell: It is about one third of the projected annual costs. We are back to the issue of likely outcomes. The figure is £52.6 million, which looks as if it has been more precisely analysed and is a round figure.
7406. Ms M Campbell: It is based on the number of claimants who are currently in receipt of the severe disability premium within income support: 17,000 multiplied by the rate of the premium, which is £59.50, multiplied by 52 weeks. Last week, I said — I will say it again — that maths is not my best subject, but I got someone else to check those figures. That is our estimate, but it is only an estimate because we have not included any IT costs or clerical workarounds because the IT system has not been built for that purpose.
7407. Mr G Campbell: Does “admin costs” cover clerical and IT costs? Is all that encompassed?
7408. Ms M Campbell: Yes. There will be admin and IT costs if we are going to go down that route.
7409. The Chairperson: It does not make sense for members to say that we accept that and will forget about it, because it is a big issue. We will all eventually have to face people screaming because of the £60 million that will come off the money for people with a severe disability. We are discussing technical, IT and administration issues in Committee, and all that will be lost in a welter of publicity outside of here. As I read it, the Committee is still concerned with the removal of a severe disability premium and wants that to be dealt with. Whether it will, ultimately, be dealt with and how it will be dealt with is anybody’s guess, but that decision has to be taken at a later stage in the Assembly.
7410. We will move on to clause 38, “Capability for work or work-related activity”.
7411. Do we have a scheduled time to suspend for a lunch break? It is an Assembly plenary day.
7412. Mr G Campbell: You will get consensus on that. [Laughter.]
7413. The Chairperson: The Assembly will break for lunch at 12.30 pm. Could we deal with clause 38 and then have a break? We will move to the Minister’s response on the proposed way forward.

7414. Mr Brady: On the primacy of medical evidence, the Minister states that he:

“wishes to advise the Committee that medical evidence is part of the package of evidence considered by Decision Makers”.

7415. What currently happens and would have continued to happen is that a decision-maker does not normally get the medical evidence until there is an appeal. You said that the Health Committee is talking to GPs and consultants about costs, and, in my experience of appeals, medical evidence is available from a GP. If people attend an orthopaedic surgeon, for instance, because they have a problem with their back or their leg, or they attend a neurologist because they have a chronic condition, a GP will have had reports over the years, and there is no cost involved. A GP types a code into the computer system — all GP practices are computerised — hits a button, and the reports come out. The person gets the report and takes it along to the meeting.

7416. The difficulty is that, at the work capability assessment, people bring reams of medical evidence to the “health professional”, and that person says, “No, I am not here to look at that.” So a decision-maker does not get it because if a decision-maker got enough medical evidence, people would not be put through the assessment. The primacy of medical evidence is not a big deal. If good medical evidence is available that shows that a person has a condition that means that he or she is incapable of work, that is easy enough and should be obtained at the start rather than at the end because, in fairness to decision-makers — I have spoken to them about this — they get it at the end of the process. In people’s experience, medical evidence comes when someone goes to an appeal tribunal. The reason that a doctor sits on the appeal tribunal is to disseminate the medical evidence and, along with the legally qualified member, make an informed decision on it. It would also cut out costs.

7417. Ms M Campbell: You made a few points, Mickey, and I will try to remember them. The reason for the suggestion of writing to the Health Committee is that, during initial discussions, somebody on this Committee — I cannot remember precisely who it was; I thought that it was you — said that claimants who went to their GP or consultant to get medical evidence were being charged. However, the issue of charging is not for our Department. It is for the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to take up because it is to do with the GP contract. The agency will bear the cost of obtaining medical evidence when the Department or the agency asks for it, so there should be no cost to a claimant. In response to what you said about medical evidence not being asked for at the start, a claimant will quite often produce medical evidence at appeal, but the agency is introducing a new procedure. Before a case gets to appeal stage, it will speak to a claimant to try to get that evidence, if it is available. The purpose of that is to reduce the number of appeals. So that should probably cover —

7418. Mr Brady: It would probably go a long way. The present DLA forms contain a statement from the person who knows you best, which is usually a GP. So somebody gets a GP to fill that in. It depends on the GP how much information is put in. That then goes to a decision-maker, who says, “I can’t make an informed decision without a bit of medical evidence”. The decision-maker sends for a factual report, for which the Department pays the GP.

7419. Ms M Campbell: That is right.

7420. Mr Brady: So the system that is in place necessitates reasonably good medical evidence that the Department, if necessary, pays for. My point is that some GPs may charge — [Inaudible.] — because that information is already available in the computer. If people are going to go to a specialist to get new medical evidence, that is a different issue. I am saying that good medical evidence is already available, and there - is no reason why a GP cannot press a button and hand it to you.

7421. Ms M Campbell: The agency is saying that it is introducing a new process that is aimed at trying to overcome that.
7422. Mr Brady: That, however, should not necessarily take away from the primacy of medical evidence, on which it seems fundamental, sensible and feasible for you to go forward, because if it is available, it cuts out a number of quite expensive appeals. If it is going to save the public purse, that may be one direction to consider to save some money. It is just a suggestion.
7423. Ms M Campbell: I accept what you say. I restate the Department's position: medical evidence is part of a package that has to be considered. Although claimants may not be capable of doing their normal job, they may be capable of doing another job, and we have to look at all those factors in the round.
7424. Mr Brady: I accept that, and I went down that alternative employment road years ago: a person not being fit to be a welder, for example, could be a bingo caller or a lift attendant. The nearest lift attendant job that we had at that time was in Lisburn. So somebody from Newtownhamilton was travelling by bus to Lisburn, standing all day in a lift and then developing a chronic back problem. Forgive me if I am sceptical about all that.
7425. Ms M Campbell: I know.
7426. The Chairperson: Very unlike you.
7427. Mr F McCann: I want to make a small point about appeals. In Britain, tens of thousands of people appealed decisions, and the subsequent discussions raised a number of concerns. Rather than trying to short-circuit the appeals process by allowing people more time to disclose their illnesses, there were discussions about how they would limit the appeals process, therefore curtailing the number of people making appeals. To cut down on the number of appeals, they wanted to make it more difficult to make an appeal. Is that the same process that they are talking about here? You said that there may be a period between when people go and the appeal.
7428. Ms Jane Corderoy (Department for Social Development): No. I think that clause 101 refers to mandatory reconsideration, which is a reconsideration process in the agency before it goes to appeal. It is supposed to be about speeding up the process and getting that information. Instead of waiting to go the whole way through an expensive and time-consuming exercise —
7429. Mr F McCann: Is that for a review?
7430. Ms Corderoy: — of getting new information, it will do this review. I think that it is done in some places anyway, but it will be put on a statutory footing so that all that evidence and so on is brought earlier, and it can be resolved sooner.
7431. Mr F McCann: At that stage, are you saying that full medical disclosure will be available at the review to the person who will be making the decision?
7432. Ms Corderoy: There should be as much evidence as a claimant or decision-maker needs at that point.
7433. The Chairperson: The Committee's concern is about medical evidence being at the heart of all this. It may be closing a gap on that. I am trying to be generous.
7434. Mr Brady: May I ask just one quick question? You mentioned the reconsideration procedure, but surely that is already in place in the current system.
7435. Ms Corderoy: It is not there legally; it is not mandatory.
7436. Mr Brady: I dealt with a case yesterday in which a person was turned down. I made a phone call and was able to put a reconsideration application in place, so a system is already in place.
7437. Ms M Campbell: Yes, but it is not mandatory.

7438. Ms Corderoy: It is not mandatory or statutory. It will be brought across everything now.
7439. Mr Brady: Some do it.
7440. Ms M Campbell: Yes. When, like you, I worked in appeals, many years ago —
7441. Mr F McCann: It was too long ago to remember.
7442. Ms M Campbell: — it first went to a different adjudication officer, as they were called in those days. Those officers reviewed the evidence impartially and decided whether everything had been taken into account before a case went forward. This development puts that on a statutory footing.
7443. The Chairperson: In a way, all that supports the Committee's concerns. It could go some considerable way towards addressing those concerns. You have also suggested that we write to the Health Department. I presume that that is a given and that people can do that.
7444. I will suspend the meeting until 1.30 pm.
Committee suspended.
On resuming —
7445. The Chairperson: All right, folks? Everybody is welcome back. So, we turn now to clause 42, on pilot schemes. Again, this is where the Committee wanted to try to ensure that in future policy decisions, changes and proposals to change policies there was a facility to have pilot schemes here because, obviously, we do not believe that information gathered elsewhere is pertinent to here. I take it that that remains the position of the Committee?
7446. Mr Brady: I just echo Alex Easton's remark from the last mandate that we have our own pilot schemes.
7447. Mr McClarty: There are peculiar circumstances here that should have been taken into consideration, namely the legacy of the past number of years and the impact that that has had. Obviously, no consideration was given to that.
7448. The Chairperson: OK. The departmental response on the matter states that the:
"Minister notes the Committee's concerns and will write to Lord Freud, at final stage".
7449. On that basis, I presume that we are happy enough with the position that we have already agreed.
Members indicated assent.
7450. The Chairperson: We now turn to housing, and the first item is mortgage interest. Again, there is a cost issue, so, in line with our earlier decision, we will want to retain our position and leave it for the Executive to consider whether they are prepared to support us.
Members indicated assent.
7451. The Chairperson: Turning to underoccupancy, again there are financial implications. We do not know the extent of that. That, clearly, is an issue that will have to be taken into consideration here by others for mitigating measures. Are members happy enough to move forward on the basis of the position that we have already adopted?
Members indicated assent.
7452. The Chairperson: Moving on to sanctions, the Committee agreed to ask the Minister whether there was room for variation in respect of the proposed sanction regime. The departmental response states that that would be a breach of parity. Again, there are potential costs, and we are not sure what they may be.
7453. Mr F McCann: Alex Attwood was the Minister who introduced sanctions in the first instance. Is the Department happy that the decisions that people are being handed are the correct decisions? When asked, Alex Attwood said that sanctions would not be widely used. Since they have been introduced, thousands of people have been reported for sanctions or had sanctions levelled against them. That seems to go against the spirit of what we were told by the Minister. Is there an internal review mechanism that allows people to deal with individual - cases? I know people who live beside me who have been sanctioned. They probably depend on their parents for money. It is nothing to them, because they say, "Well, I will go to my ma and da." Their parents are already under pressure. That is just for, say, turning up late to sign on or forgetting to sign on and things like that. If people are suffering sanctions for what seems to be fairly low-key stuff, what is it going to be like for people who end up with two years' or three years' sanctions?

7454. Mr Pollock: We reiterate that the sanctions regime is not meant to be punitive. It is designed to try to ensure that individuals accept their responsibility and move on from there. I cannot comment on individual cases.
7455. Mr F McCann: I appreciate that.
7456. Mr Pollock: The agency has mentioned on several occasions that it is monitoring the use of sanctions and the reasons why they are used. That sort of information is available and will be available for putting a report into the Assembly to state the amount. There was previously a difficulty with looking at numbers reported for sanctions, because it was not looking at the entire population. Essentially, a lot of the people who could have been considered for sanctions were not included in that headcount. Whenever you saw x amount being referred and such a percentage being actually sanctioned out of that, it was a misreading because DEL took the decision out of the decision-makers' hands when the decision on sanctions should have been with the decision-makers. They should have said that there are x thousand who should be included in that overall count to start with.
7457. Mr F McCann: Does DEL actually make the decisions or advise them of the decision to sanction?
7458. Mr Pollock: In the past, a lot of the people who could have been sanctioned were not referred for sanction. Whenever you were saying that 100 people were referred for sanction and 80 of them were actually sanctioned, it did not say that another 1,000 should have been sanctioned, and so the overall count was actually 80 out of 1,100. There is a misreading of the percentage of people who were referred and the percentage who were sanctioned.
7459. Mr F McCann: About 18 months or two years ago, I received a response that stated that 26,000 people had been reported for sanction but only 9,000 or 10,000 were sanctioned. We were given assurances in the Assembly by Alex Attwood that sanctions would not be widely used. That is a hell of a lot of people who have been sanctioned. They lost their benefit. Some of them did not even realise that they had been sanctioned because the money did not have an impact on their ability to survive.
7460. One of the reasons that many in the Assembly bought into the initial idea was the whole argument that you were putting in place a mechanism to protect the person behind the counter who may be attacked. That all fell into the wider early sanction things. When the Assembly voted, that is when the assurances were given that sanctions would be used only under certain circumstances.
7461. Ms M Campbell: Appendix 2 of the document that the Minister sent shows the latest figures for the numbers referred, the number of sanctions imposed and the number of claims disallowed. The total number of referrals was roughly 8,500. The total number of sanctions imposed was 823, so that is less than 10% of the referrals. Seventeen hundred were disallowed, which is roughly 20%; I am sure that Michael will correct my maths. Almost 6,000 claims were disallowed, which is more than 80%.
7462. Mr F McCann: I understand that. There is a figure in the box there; it says that the total number of referrals was 10,015 and there were 2,219 sanctions imposed. The number of claims disallowed was 728 and the number of claims allowed was 7,068. When you say "claims allowed", what does that mean?

7463. Ms M Campbell: That means that a sanction was not imposed. Based on the evidence that is before the decision-maker, the decision-maker decided that no sanction should be applied, for example, because the claimant had some mental illness or some other reason, including childcare arrangements, that prevented him or her from attending the work-focused interview or going for a job or whatever.
7464. It means that the option of applying sanctions is taken only in extreme cases. As we have said on a number of previous occasions, and as Mickey has acknowledged, the standard of decision-making in Northern Ireland is exceptionally high.
7465. Mr F McCann: That is fine. We will probably keep going back to the sanctions element because, although you said that sanctions are applied only in extreme cases, 20% is a bit extreme. It represents a substantial number of people.
7466. Mr Brady: I have a couple of points. We are talking about the statistics on sanctions that we have at the moment. The difficulty is this 35 hours spent looking for work. How can someone prove that they are doing that? Let us be honest, who is going to spend 35 hours — seven hours a day, five days a week — looking for work that is not there?
7467. Ms M Campbell: I think that our friend common sense comes in there. At the moment, people are supposed to spend a specific amount of time looking for work and should be able to show some sort of evidence that they have been willing to do so. Obviously, I cannot speak with authority on that, but I would have to say that common sense would have to prevail.
7468. Mr Brady: What about fraud sanctions?
7469. The Chairperson: Fraud sanctions are dealt with later on. Clearly, the Minister has considered the concerns that have been expressed and has agreed with DWP to pursue the possibility of varying sanctions. On that basis, we are happy enough to move on.
7470. The next item is clause 45, the contracting-out clause. The issue is that people were fearful of it being used to introduce privatisation. The briefing document states that the:
- “Minister wishes to confirm that there are no plans to use this clause to privatise services currently delivered by the public sector.”*
7471. Obviously, it is more to do with DEL, but the Minister has given that assurance, which is welcome.
7472. The next item is the time-limiting of the contribution-based employment and support allowance to 365 days, which is dealt with in clause 52. The Committee sought information from the Department on whether there would be a lead-in time for this to allow people to prepare.
7473. There were two or three issues on which the Committee sought clarification. We are told that the Minister:
- “shares the Committee’s concerns around the timelimiting of contribution-based ESA to 12 months, however the cost of not implementing this measure is approximately £3m per month.”*
7474. The Minister said that he would listen to the Committee’s views and then go to the Executive. The Committee’s views probably remain similar. Are members happy with that?
- Members indicated assent.*
7475. The Chairperson: The next item is ESA youth claimants, which is dealt with in clause 54. The Committee wanted to know how many people would be affected and what would happen to the estimated 3% of people who do not move to income-related ESA. People have raised the concern that there is an equality issue here in that no other contributory benefit waives its conditions of receipt. The briefing document states that the Minister:
- “does not believe that there is a strong enough case for making exceptions as this proposal puts young people on the same footing as other groups and treat them in the same way in relation to entitlement based on paid National Insurance contributions.”*

7476. It is the argument as to whether there is a strong enough case. Do members have the same view on that as they expressed at the outset?

Members indicated assent.

7477. The Chairperson: OK; we will move on to the personal independence payment. This one is around the length of time that a person is allowed to spend abroad. The Minister has agreed to continue to raise with the Work and Pensions Minister the issues of the number of claimants here and the higher incidence of mental illnesses among claimants here. Is everybody happy enough with that?

Members indicated assent.

7478. The Chairperson: Clause 86 relates to prisoners on remand. The Minister:

“notes the Committee’s concerns but believes that the policy intention to treat those people on remand or who have their conviction quashed in the same way as people are treated who go into hospital and that is a fair and equitable approach.”

7479. Are members happy enough with that response?

Members indicated assent.

7480. The Chairperson: The timing of report to the Assembly is in clause 88. I remind the Committee that it has concerns that the period for a report to the Assembly on the operation of assessments under section 79 is too long. The Committee, therefore, requests that the time period in clause 88(a) should be amended from two years to one and in clause 88(b) from four years to two. Are members happy enough with that position?

7481. The Minister is said to be sympathetic with the Committee’s concerns, however, in practice, it would take six months to deal with a deviation from that. The Minister just has a concern about the value of pursuing annual reviews. I would not have thought that it was a die-in-the-ditch issue, so —

7482. The Committee Clerk: I think, and the Department may confirm this, that the issue was whether or not there was really enough data available within that period to have a report that would be in any way meaningful.

7483. Ms Corderoy: The Committee has a particular concern about people coming off DLA and having to apply for PIP. We think that the numbers involved would be very small within that time period to gather the data that would enable any meaningful conclusions to be drawn or recommendations made. Certainly, with the delay in bringing in the managed reassessment of PIP — I think that DWP anticipates laying the report by December 2014 — we should really and essentially be able to catch that within a year. I think that the delay has actually accommodated what the Committee wanted in relation to that.

7484. Ms M Campbell: The other issue is that we are happy to bring to the Committee a sort of factual report of the numbers of claims, numbers reassessed, numbers not getting through or the outcomes of that. We are happy to facilitate that factual and practical type of solution rather than a legislative one.

7485. The Chairperson: Mickey, obviously this has, in some way, dealt with or at least alleviated the issue of having a longer period for migration. Am I right in saying that? Mickey, did you want to come in there?

7486. Mr Brady: Sorry, I thought that we were onto —

7487. The Chairperson: The timing of a report to the Assembly.

7488. Mr Brady: Sorry, it is the PIPs.

7489. The Chairperson: Are we happy enough with that, then?

7490. The Committee Clerk: Chair, just to clarify, is the Committee’s position on the way forward on that one to acknowledge that there are issues with data collection and it will pursue other formal statistical reports from the Department as an alternative?

7491. The Chairperson: The Committee wanted these things dealt with in

- as timely a way as possible, given their importance. There are practical issues or difficulties around doing that, particularly when you have a later time frame for migration. That may be very reasonable. I would not think that the Committee is going to fight over that.
7492. Ms M Campbell: We would welcome that, Chair.
7493. The Chairperson: Clause 109 makes provision for the recovery of PIP benefit overpayments. The Committee was unhappy about what it thought was an inherent unfairness in compelling a claimant to repay an overpayment when the overpayment was due to departmental error. The Committee sought a review of the level below which recovery of the overpayment will not be sought. That level is currently established at £65.
7494. We are told:
- “The Department will consider the ‘Overpayment Recovery Guidance’, to see if any additional clarification is needed for Decision Makers.”*
7495. I think that people were of the clear view that recovery provisions for a departmental error were unfair.
7496. Mr Brady: One of the things is the fact that the statistics that we have been getting since 2007-08 indicate that error accounts for more money than fraud, yet people are penalised quite strictly for fraud. Even now, I do not think that they put it on your record — [Inaudible.] — I do not think that that happens any more.
7497. Ms M Campbell: It would not go on your record, as such. It is a performance management issue, so it would be within the context of the annual appraisal.
7498. Mr Brady: It almost confers an infallibility on the Department. Even if it gets it wrong — [Inaudible.]
7499. Ms M Campbell: It is just like the bank or your employer.
7500. Mr Brady: Look at what happened to banks. That was why they had to bail some of the banks out, which cost £700 billion.
7501. Ms M Campbell: There are still getting their bonuses.
7502. The Chairperson: Exactly.
7503. Mr Brady: Give civil servants bonuses — [Inaudible.]
7504. The Chairperson: People see an inherent unfairness in that. While we do not have any control of the banks, we might have some influence over this policy. We can deal only with what we have some influence over. Are Members happy enough with the position that we have adopted so far?
- Members indicated assent.*
7505. The Chairperson: I think it sends a message: let us address error as well as driving down fraud.
7506. We will move to fraud sanctions, which are about the level of fines and so on. We felt that there was an issue of disproportionality. The paper states:
- “The Minister believes that Administrative Penalties provide an alternative for claimants and in some cases may be a much more appropriate solution. The Minister would like the Committee to reconsider this in light of the information provided by the Department ... The cost of not implementing administrative penalties is estimated at £0.1m.”*
7507. This is an issue of proportionality. Are members happy enough to stick with what we have?
- Members indicated assent.*
7508. The Chairperson: We will move to clause 111: “Period for withdrawal of agreement to pay penalty”. The paper states:
- “Minister will give an assurance that this (good reason) will be covered in guidance but the scope to increase to 28 days will also need an amendment to this clause.”*
7509. That was in response to a concern that we had. The paper states:
- “The Committee was concerned about the reduction in this ‘cooling off period’ and*

- is seeking assurances that this will be addressed in the guidance.”*
7510. We are told that it will be addressed in the guidance. The hope to increase the period to 28 days will need an amendment. Have we dealt with that by way of suggested amendments? Patricia, can you remember?
7511. The Clerk of Bills: No.
7512. Ms M Campbell: We said that we would bring that amendment forward just to tweak the wording to make it to read: “not more than 28 days.”
7513. The Chairperson: OK, that is fine. Are members happy enough with that?
Members indicated assent.
7514. The Chairperson: That is welcome; thank you for that explanation.
7515. We move to clause 113, which concerns the loss of benefit for three years for a first offence. The Committee was obviously very concerned that benefit would be stopped for three years for a first offence. The Minister says that he notes the Committee’s concern, but that this is a deterrent to prevent serious fraud. We are told that to have something different will result in a breach of parity and there will also be costs attached. We do not have any figures for the costs attached.
7516. Again, members were of the view that this was disproportionate because, in the event that it was for a first offence, there would be a loss of benefit for three years. That also aligns with the fact that people will also be prosecuted. As I recall, it is a double jeopardy issue as well. Is that not right? It is the same provision. Does this also come into play where someone has been prosecuted?
7517. Ms M Campbell: Yes.
7518. The Chairperson: So it is like double jeopardy as well. It is disproportionate. Are members happy enough to leave as is?
Members indicated assent.
7519. The Chairperson: We will move to Clause 115, which relates to cautions. The paper states:
“The Committee recommends that cautions should be retained.”
7520. We are told that the Minister wants to discuss the impact of a caution on a person’s criminal record before deciding whether cautions should be retained. That was an argument around cautions in the legal definition, or someone being told —
7521. Ms M Campbell: A slap on the wrist.
7522. The Chairperson: — get yourself sorted out and it will be all right. People were looking for a similar type of regime, in which people could be advised that there is a problem with their claim and that they should sort it out, and, if it is sorted out, it is sorted out. Obviously, that does not deal with serious systematic fraud or intentional fraud. Obviously, that will all take its course, as it should. This is about having the ability to say to people that they might be making a misclaim.
7523. Mr F McCann: I think that you, Martina, said earlier that it is about having a common-sense approach to how this is dealt with. A warning or ticking off for many people is far better than ending up with a criminal record, which may go against them in job applications.
7524. Mr Pollock: That is where we are concerned. If everyone was offered the choice between paying £350 or 10% or whatever and having a caution, they would have opted for the caution. The knock-on effect of that is the formal caution that you are talking about in those circumstances. That would have an impact on you applying for a job, obviously.
7525. The Chairperson: The Committee was of a mind that it wanted to retain that informal caution, so that people are advised that there may be a problem —
7526. Mr F McCann: It is usually a deterrent, anyway.

7527. The Chairperson: It appears to be successful and appears to work everywhere else. Are we happy enough with that?
7528. The Committee Clerk: So, does the Committee want to maintain its current position? These are formal cautions that we are speaking about under clause 115.
7529. The Chairperson: If I remember correctly, the Committee wanted a system in which people could be called in for some potential error in their claim — [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.] It should be an informal situation. The Housing Executive bring people in to tell them that they could be in breach of their tenancy because they are doing a, b or c, and, if it stops, the problem is solved; it is not on anybody's formal record. That does not deal with fraud.
7530. The Clerk of Bills: Chair, are you suggesting that that could be dealt with by way of a recommendation rather than — [Inaudible.]
7531. The Chairperson: It is either/or. The Committee wanted to make sure that there was that facility.
7532. Mr F McCann: The debate the other day was about whether the formal caution is recorded on the record. I think that the answer was yes.
7533. Mr Pollock: That is correct.
7534. Mr F McCann: The vast majority of people you are talking about are women, because they, more or less, deal with the benefits. The vast majority of them are terrified before they go into interviews. That is usually enough for them. Many of the fraud officers would have, at the end of the day, said, "I have to report this, but it will go with the recommendation that there is an informal caution." I think that that is what they were talking about. That allows people off.
7535. The Committee Clerk: If members want to retain cautions, clause 115 will not be amended.
7536. Mr Pollock: The Bill does away with the formal caution.
7537. The Committee Clerk: That will do away with the formal caution. You want to — 7538. The Clerk of Bills: My understanding is that the Chair wanted something addressed relating to informal cautions. The clause deals with formal cautions. You would need to take away the formal caution, because it could impact on jobs and things like that. You might want, in addition to that, to make a recommendation around the Committee's position on informal cautions and ask about whether they occur. If they do not — [Inaudible.]
7539. The Chairperson: Obviously, when we do the formal stuff, we will revisit that to make sure that we have it right.
7540. The Clerk of Bills: Maybe the Department — [Inaudible.]
7541. Mr Pollock: The Committee will deal with that in its report.
7542. The Chairperson: The next issue is Assembly control, which is dealt with in clauses 33 and 91. The paper states:
"The Examiner has recommended that the Committee amendments that would make regulations under the powers in clauses 33 and 91 subject to confirmatory procedure where the supplementary or consequential provision amends, modifies or repeals a statutory provision".
7543. Again, that is just for us to up the level of scrutiny.
7544. Mr Brady: The Ad Hoc Committee's recommendation — [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.]
7545. The Chairperson: The advice that we received from the Minister is:
"officials are currently considering this issue further in conjunction with colleagues in Office of the Legislative Counsel and Departmental Solicitors Office."
7546. Are members happy enough with that?
Members indicated assent.

7547. The Chairperson: We asked for options at a previous meeting. There was a list of them in your paper, Kevin.
7548. The Committee Clerk: Has there been any further update on those discussions?
7549. Ms M Campbell: No, there is not.
7550. The Chairperson: Are there any other papers, Kevin?
7551. The Committee Clerk: There is always another paper, I am afraid.
7552. As I was saying earlier, this is a paper that I prepared and which goes through all 134 clauses and the relevant schedules. Its purpose is to bring the Committee up to speed on its position and those of the stakeholders on the clauses. I just wanted to confirm with the Committee whether it is content that it sums up the issues as far as members are concerned to date. We could go through it today or, if members want, we could review it on Thursday.
7553. The Chairperson: Realistically, we are not going to get through it now.
7554. The Committee Clerk: On Thursday, I suppose, it will be a case of you taking members through and asking them whether they are content, for example, that the issues relating to the first six clauses are what the Committee has considered and has heard from stakeholders. If there are any other comments to be made, I can make them.
7555. The Chairperson: This is really the essence, or the beginning of the report that will go to the Assembly.
7556. Mr Durkan: We are dealing with clauses and how we would like to implement them. We know what came from stakeholders and most Committee members on the clause that deals with independent advice. There is news from Westminster today that, in response to the Work and Pensions Select Committee's report, the Government have announced a £65 million advice services transition fund that will run from April 2013 until April 2015. That is funded by the Cabinet Office.
7557. Mr F McCann: Where did that come from, Mark?
7558. Mr Durkan: It was announced at Westminster today.
7559. Mr F McCann: Where is it for? Where does it take in? What regions?
7560. Mr Durkan: It does not mention us.
7561. Mr Pollock: If it is a UK-wide initiative, there would be a Barnett consequential and Northern Ireland would get its share of the cake. That is the theory, anyhow.
7562. The Chairperson: OK. There will be a number of other items. The report will be a substantive body of work that will encapsulate the evidence that we have taken from stakeholders, the Committee's deliberations, the engagement with the Department and the responses from the Department and the Minister.
7563. There are other items. For example, although the Ad Hoc Committee's report, as I said before, does not have formal status in so far as it was not endorsed by the Assembly, it made 15 recommendations that were endorsed by all the parties. So, you would figure that those recommendations will have to be fed into our report in some shape or form.
7564. There are things that are outwith the particular clauses of the Bill, but we may want to make recommendations that they should be supported. That was one of the issues that the Committee previously agreed to.
7565. Mr Durkan: I mentioned it because it was just hot off the press.
7566. The Chairperson: Absolutely; it is a very important reminder.
7567. Mr F McCann: In the broader scheme of things, once distributed, it may not be a lot of money. Obviously, it would go the Department first because of, as you said, the Barnett consequentials.
7568. Mr Pollock: It would come into the block and it is then for the Executive to decide what the block's priorities are.

7569. Mr F McCann: Would it not be a different matter if was specifically earmarked for advice?
7570. Mr Pollock: It is termed non-hypothecated, which means that it is down to the Executive to decide where it goes. I do not think that they can necessarily ring-fence stuff like that, but it strengthens any Minister's case. For example, if there was a particular initiative at a UK level, say for health or education, that Northern Ireland wanted to pursue, the Minister concerned may want to use the Westminster argument as a lever at the Executive table because by doing so he would have a better chance of grabbing that sort of money from DFP.
7571. Mr F McCann: As we have argued, and I think that Mark said, good advice is a big plus in a lot of the stuff that we are dealing with. Is there a possibility that we could raise the subject of the £65 million and what we would get when it is divvied up? So, if we are looking at advice services and it comes through to DSD, we would know that x million pounds may be available for advice-givers.
7572. Mr Durkan: That is the £65 million question.
7573. Mr F McCann: That is it.
7574. The Chairperson: You will be keen to know that the Health Minister is on question 5, so I will have to leave very soon because I have a question down. I do not want my knuckles rapped by the Speaker. No hypothesis there; I will just be chastised.
7575. Mr Brady: Maybe in the meantime, Michael, you can explain what non-hypothecated means.
7576. Mr Pollock: It is just a finance term that DFP has that means that the money is not ring-fenced.
7577. The Chairperson: It just means that money has been allocated for that notional purpose.
7578. Mr Pollock: It means that, like everything else, you have to argue for it.
7579. The Chairperson: Exactly.
7580. Mr Pollock: And win the argument.
7581. The Chairperson: OK. So we will come back on Thursday morning for our Committee proper, after which we will go swiftly to the Welfare Reform Bill. I am advised that it is going to be a long Committee meeting. I ask members to go through that consideration of the Bill paper just to satisfy ourselves that it encapsulates what we want. As I said earlier, Kevin will try to prepare a narrative that the Committee can support in furtherance of our objective of agreeing a report that there is consensus on.
7582. Thank you very much for your support today again, Martina and Michael.
7583. Ms M Campbell: Thank you. Bring a sleeping bag on Thursday, then?
7584. The Chairperson: Thank you.

 Dr Colin Sullivan

7585. The Chairperson: We wanted to deal with a couple of items first and foremost. I remind members that, at our meeting on Tuesday, the Department agreed to arrange for Social Security Agency officials to attend today to clarify issues regarding claimants being paid monthly for the first month, before bimonthly payments could begin. In the tabled items, there is a paper that gives some statistics, and it would be interesting to get some clarification on the stats attached to clause 103. The agency provided a paper on it, and it is in today's folder.
7586. I welcome Tommy O'Reilly and Dr Colin Sullivan from the agency to speak to members on both those issues if they are in a position to do so. Thank you for being here this morning, gentlemen. Over to you, Tommy and Colin.
7587. Mr Tommy O'Reilly (Social Security Agency): Chair, I understand that the Committee had three issues that it wished to discuss with us. The first was the question around costs, which we discussed at last week's meeting with the Minister. Sorry for the delay, but I have been in London for the past couple of days. I have some figures that I would like to share with the Committee.
7588. The Chairperson: Thank you for that.
7589. Mr O'Reilly: The second issue is that we had a discussion last week about tapers and disregards, and we supplied a paper earlier this week, or yesterday. The third issue was the question around writing off of debt.
7590. I have provided you with three tables that set out the approach to the setting of costs. Those were to be used as the basis for the estimates for implementing the flexibilities when the Minister agreed with Lord Freud as to how we go forward. At the moment, we do not have an agreed process for handling the universal credit flexibilities. That is still the subject of ongoing consultations with the voluntary and community sector and the political parties. Indeed, we are coming to the Committee in the near future to have a discussion on that.
7591. Our working assumption is that there will be an IT system to support the flexibilities that the Minister has agreed, and that is how we move forward. As I said at last week's Committee meeting, we use the integrated complementing system that we use in the agency, which is a time and motion study for determining staffing levels. It takes specific tasks in the agency, assigns a time to each benefit, looks at all the different tasks together and takes that up by the total workload in that benefit to give us a total determination of the staffing levels required to administer the delivery of the benefit. In doing the estimates, we have tried to use the employment and support allowance (ESA) integrated complementing system's times as the basis to give us some approach.
7592. Look at the table. At a very high level, the caseload for universal credit is estimated to be around 300,000. We have allocated a time that each case will attract during the year, which includes fresh claims right through to maintenance, of about six hours.

- The average cost per hour of an administrative officer in the agency is about £13·71. Therefore, at a very high level, when those three are multiplied, it comes out at about £24·5 million for the full caseload. We then started to break that down to try to test out the six hours, because the other two were pretty static. In the middle column of the table, you will see an allocation of time and, working from left to right, the initial weekly volume of telephone calls — that is, about 6,000 cases per week. It takes, on average, about 10 minutes on the telephone with those individuals to verify their identity, take some details and work through their application. If you work across the page, you can see the number of staff involved.
7593. Each of those major functions, or pieces of work, that we carry out in each of the benefit areas has been allocated a time. Based on the current employment and support allowance processes, that works out at just under four and a half hours. However, as I say, that is ESA; that does not take into account that we will have tax credit customers whose cases are more complex because they are working, as well as jobseeker's allowance (JSA) customers and lone parents.
7594. At this stage, we do not have an agreed process. We are just trying to use some mechanism, and this is how we worked out our costs.
7595. In the table at the bottom, we work on the basis that the cost amounts to about £24 million for 300,000 claimants and, in some form of projections yet to be agreed, if only 75% or 50% will receive split payments and fortnightly or twice-monthly payments, those are the sorts of costs that will be included.
7596. That is a broad estimate of how we went about calculating the figures that we previously gave to the Committee.
7597. The Chairperson: OK, Tommy, thank you for that.
7598. Mr Brady: Thank you for that, Tommy. If administrative officers are getting
- £13·71, I should have stayed in the Civil Service.
7599. Mr O'Reilly: Yes, they do. That is their average cost.
7600. Mr Brady: I am telling you that I should have stayed there.
7601. Mr O'Reilly: What is the average cost of an MLA?
7602. Mr Brady: An hourly rate of £13·71 is twice the minimum wage. It obviously depends on how long someone has been in the job. There are other factors.
7603. The Chairperson: Anyway, let us get to the point.
7604. Mr Brady: I have a couple of questions. Management has two staff officers and eight executive officer 1s. Will their cost be additional? Are they not there already?
7605. Mr O'Reilly: These are the additional staff for the universal credit element.
7606. Mr Brady: I am sorry, but the point that I am trying to make is that, irrespective of how the benefit is paid, the staff would be there anyway, would they not? Looking at the list of costs, the figure of £333,000 is quite high. I assume that they will be an integral part of the set-up anyhow.
7607. Mr O'Reilly: Where the staff come from is a slightly different issue. We were asked to estimate the cost of providing this service, which is additional to the universal credit service that we provide. It is what might be called a vanilla service. It is an additional service that we do not currently provide.
7608. Mr Brady: I am looking at the figure for the weekly volume of the workload. That will happen anyhow.
7609. Mr O'Reilly: That is the weekly volume, and that will happen anyway, yes.
7610. Mr Brady: What is the extra cost of changing the payment system? You mentioned tax credit customers. They can already choose to be paid monthly or fortnightly. That is in their system, so I cannot see that being, necessarily,

- an additional cost. It will be subsumed by universal credit. I understand that aspect of it.
7611. Regardless of all these figures — the workload, the weekly volume and the time spent on a telephone call — I am trying to work out the extra costs that will be incurred if payments are to be made fortnightly rather than monthly. You are saying that if 100% want to be paid fortnightly, for instance, it will cost £24 million.
7612. Mr O'Reilly: No. At last week's Committee meeting, I made it quite clear that we were talking about split payments and twice-monthly payments.
7613. Mr Brady: Rather than fortnightly payments.
7614. Mr O'Reilly: It is both of those together. We hope that if it is simply twice monthly, the cost would be significantly reduced because large elements would be automated. You have to take into account that, for a lot of people, there will be issues with overpayments and third-party deductions. Housing benefit cannot be paid twice monthly; it has to be paid only once a month. Those benefits have to be checked to make sure that they are accurate. We hope that, for a large number of people, there will be a straight flow-through.
7615. When you get into the complex area of having split payments, and split payments with twice-monthly payments, it starts to mushroom. I take your point: you could probably argue that, in the centre where they are working, there is already a level of management staffing. However, where there are additional staff to provide these services, additional management staff would be required. This is broadly the way in which we would work out the numbers.
7616. Mr Brady: In a sense, if you will have to employ extra staff, this is job creation. The argument put forward is about how much it will cost to have an IT system that differentiates between monthly and bimonthly payments. It is really the difference between how much it will cost to pay people monthly or bimonthly within that system.
7617. Mr O'Reilly: What I have given you does not take account of the costs of development of the IT solution. That will be a separate cost, which the agency will have to pick up, and we are in discussions with the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) about that. These are our estimated costs at this point in the process. When we come on to the next item and Colin walks you through the example of housing benefit, it will help to illustrate some of the complexities involved in trying to develop our own flexibilities in Northern Ireland and trying to ensure that we get it right when building the IT system and delivering the right service. It would be interesting to hear your views on that. We are working on those costs.
7618. The Chairperson: Tommy, there are two wee points that I want to make on that. Members were concerned about the figure of £24 million. The Committee was of a mind that it wanted something to happen, but now we are being told that it will cost £24 million. Clearly, that will be a major consideration in how members may vote on the Bill. A query was raised last week about whether that £24 million would be an assumption on the basis that everyone would take up the split payment option and, if they do not, would that figure start to go down? I think that Gregory raised that issue in the first instance. If not everybody took up that option, it would not cost £24 million.
7619. The second issue that arose last week was that we were advised that everybody will have to get a monthly payment at the outset and then you will work your way through split payments. I take your point entirely that that is now out for consultation, so, in a way, you have to park what the criteria might be for that because you cannot be definitive. The idea that everybody had to get monthly payments at the start and that you would work your way through those who wanted twice-monthly payments seemed to confuse people. That seemed to throw a spanner in the works last week.

- It seemed to be new, but what did it actually mean?
7620. Mr O'Reilly: Let me try to address both issues. We were working on the basis of 100% take-up, which would cost £24 million. From an operational perspective, currently, about 200,000 customers in Northern Ireland are on tax credits, of whom about 50% receive payments on a four-weekly basis. When those individuals move across to universal credit, it will be a matter for them to decide whether they want to move to fortnightly or twice-monthly payments or stay with four-weekly payments. If the choice is there, it is likely that a number of them will move across. We are working on the basis that if that is the default position, a lot more people will move to that arrangement than if it were something that they had to request. All we are simply doing is calculating different levels of take-up, which are shown in the table. So, if there is 75% take-up, we calculate that it will cost £18 million. It is not for us, as operational people, to say what that figure should be. We simply estimate that as the likely cost to the block grant as a consequence.
7621. Your second point was about everyone having to go on to monthly payments. There is an issue about the first month when people make their claim. The universal credit payment is made in retrospect, so you have to get to the end of the first month, and that is when the calculation is done. Therefore, the system cannot calculate a twice-monthly payment during the first month simply because it does not have the information. How to handle that first month is an issue that we will have to work through. At this point, however, it remains an issue.
7622. Mr Brady: Will you clarify one point? You say that people on tax credits can move over to the new arrangement, so there is no issue if they want to be paid monthly or fortnightly because they will have that choice. They have that choice now anyhow, but, when they move to universal credit, they will have the choice to be paid monthly or fortnightly.
7623. Mr O'Reilly: The current default position is that people will receive monthly payments but will have the right to request twice-monthly payments.
7624. Mr Brady: That should apply to everybody.
7625. Mr O'Reilly: That will apply to everybody. However, some people are, for example, on working tax credits. If they get a new job, they come off working tax credits. They may then lose that job and come back on to working tax credits. Such people may previously have received payments every four weeks, but if offered fortnightly payments, they may take that option.
7626. The Chairperson: OK, Tommy, thanks, that is helpful.
7627. Mr O'Reilly: Does that give you sufficient comfort?
7628. The Chairperson: As I said earlier, the issue last week was that we were given a figure of £24 million, which was queried. In a way, Tommy, you have just re-clarified that it may not cost £24 million if not everybody opts for what may become the default position of twice-monthly payments. So the figures could come down naturally in line with the uptake.
7629. The second point raised last week was the rationale of what happened if someone started off on a monthly payment. That threw a cat among the pigeons because it seemed to muddy the water around the figure of £24 million. At least, it did in my mind because I could not understand what it was about, but I do now.
7630. Mr F McCann: I have a question about the first automatic monthly payment. From reading some of the documentation, I thought that anybody who requested twice-monthly payments after the first month would automatically be paid in that way by the system. Would that not cut down on the number of people who had to be paid manually?
7631. The Chairperson: None of that is agreed yet.

7632. Mr O'Reilly: The core universal credit system that we will use in Northern Ireland will calculate everybody's payment monthly. It is a monthly assessment cycle, and that will not change. We are building a separate system to sit alongside that. In effect, that means that all the Northern Ireland cases will be taken out and dropped into the Northern Ireland computer system. For people paid twice monthly, the system will calculate that payment and make two drops. In the majority of cases, if it is only a matter of making twice-monthly payments, that should be relatively straightforward and not a big issue. However, there are many exceptions in the social security world that must all be checked and any change of circumstance dealt with. That is where that issue starts to arise.
7633. Mr F McCann: I appreciate that. It states in this document:
- "if someone needs a more frequent or split payment in the first month these will have to be done clerically".*
7634. That means, more or less, that, after the first month, everything will be built into the computer, which will simply make the payment.
7635. Mr O'Reilly: Sorry, I am not sure where that comes from. Which document are you reading from?
7636. Mr F McCann: It is documentation that Committee members have to help us through.
7637. The Chairperson: It is from the departmental response paper.
7638. Mr F McCann: I am picking up on the fact that the whole argument is about the number of people and the associated cost. However, if we accept that the computer makes the payment for the first month, people will then be on the system. If correct, what I quoted states that people will automatically be paid twice monthly anyway.
7639. The Chairperson: The current default position of the Department and the Bill is that everybody gets paid once a month. So the criteria for if and when someone can opt for a payment to be made twice a month would have to be defined. A consultation on what those criteria and the circumstances may be is ongoing. The Committee wanted a default position of payments being made twice a month, or fortnightly.
7640. Mr O'Reilly: Sorry, may I just —
7641. The Chairperson: That, however, is not agreed yet. That was the view of the Committee —
7642. Mr O'Reilly: That is just the view of the Committee.
7643. The Chairperson: — and there were objections to that. The first was that there was not sufficient computer flexibility, but we were told that that could be worked through. Secondly, we are now being told that it would cost £24 million should everybody opt for the twice-a-month payment, which will not necessarily be the case. That is what we are trying to clarify. Neither twice-monthly payments nor the criteria for them have been agreed. That is out for consultation.
7644. Mr Brady: Let us say that it is agreed that people can get paid twice monthly or whatever. When a person makes an initial claim, you have said that, for the first month, for logistical or operational reasons, he has to be paid for a full month because the payment is made in arrears. If, in his initial claim, he chooses to be paid twice monthly, he will, of course, be paid for that first month. Is there not a system whereby he has made that decision and the Department has accepted it? What I am saying is that it pre-empts what is happening. I am picking up that there is an issue if someone is paid after the first month and then decides to move to bimonthly payments, but surely that decision would already have been taken.
7645. Mr O'Reilly: You are correct.
7646. Mr Brady: He can be consulted and then make that decision in conjunction with the Department. Obviously, it would be mutual.

7647. Mr O'Reilly: Yes.
7648. Mr Brady: So would the Department not then have time to put him into the twice-monthly payment stream?
7649. Mr O'Reilly: If Mr and Mrs Brady decide that they want to have a twice-monthly payment —
7650. Mr Brady: Mr and Mrs Brady might want weekly, but we will not go into that. [Laughter.]
7651. Mr O'Reilly: Mr and Mrs Brady ring up to start their universal credit claim. The form states that if Mr and Mrs Brady want more frequent payments — for example, twice monthly — please ring this number. Mr and Mrs Brady ring up and say what they want, and they discuss the case. Part of the telephone call is to discuss why they want to be paid more frequently, and, at some point, the box is ticked. So, after the first month, Mr and Mrs Brady are a straightforward case and will receive twice-monthly payments. The computer will generate and make those payments.
7652. Mr Brady: Would it not be simpler for Mr and Mrs Brady to have a claim form that asks them to tick whether they want a monthly or bimonthly payment? That would cut out all those telephone calls.
7653. Mr O'Reilly: No. The system into which we will download will be the core universal credit system. We are building something for Northern Ireland, so, in a sense, it has to come out of that core system.
7654. Mr Brady: Yes, but can you not build that in at the start rather than — 7655. Mr O'Reilly: No, because you would have to change the core system, and that is the problem. Let me just walk you through the process. It does not really matter because Mr and Mrs Brady have to be verified anyway, and they agree that they want bimonthly payments. Let us say that both also receive housing benefit, Mr Brady has a social fund debt and Mrs Brady has agreed to pay the electric company X amount out of her universal credit payment. The issue is this: as those payments start to roll through, how are they split? When are they paid, and when do they not get paid? That just needs to be checked to make sure that that is happening and that everything is accurate.
7656. Mr Brady: I am sorry; I do not mean to go on about this, but surely in any system these changes have to be put in place. Someone coming on to benefit will not have the repayment of loans or whatever from before. Presumably, social fund debt, and so on, will be carried over, so the Department will be aware of it. What I am saying is that for someone claiming initially, all these exceptional payments, such as those for an electricity bill, will be carried over. Housing benefit is separate because it will be paid directly to the landlord or the Housing Executive.
7657. Mr O'Reilly: Oh my. I wish it were so easy.
7658. Mr Brady: There is no reason, logically, why it should not be. If you are introducing a system that is apparently designed to save money, surely, with a bit of thought —
7659. Mr O'Reilly: We can come back to housing benefit in a moment.
7660. Mr Brady: Let us be honest: I have more technology in my mobile phone than the Americans had when they put a man on the moon. I cannot understand why all these systems cannot cope. Surely there are people who can design systems that are able to cope. It seems to me that this is being made overly complicated by saying that you cannot do this or that with the system. You are designing a whole new system, which, I accept, is probably a huge undertaking, but the technology and people who deal with it are available. I really do not understand why there is such a huge problem. You talk about the core system and a system for the North that will drop in and out of it. Why can that not be done initially to save all the messing about further down the line?
7661. Mr O'Reilly: That is because Westminster has decided that —

7662. Mr Brady: Yes — exactly.
7663. Mr O'Reilly: — this is the system that it is building for the people of Great Britain. Northern Ireland is part of the parity arrangements, but we buy the systems from Great Britain. If Northern Ireland decides that it wants to build its own IT systems, the Northern Ireland Executive have the right to make that decision, but the cost of that would have to be borne.
7664. If you want to buy into the GB system, that is how it works. I am not saying that it is right or wrong. All I am saying is this: the Executive and the Committee have asked the Social Security Agency to develop something to support flexibilities, and that is what we are trying to do. My point is that this is very complex. When we start to work through the processes, we think that we will find a level of complexity that will require additional staffing. I understand your view, but that is the way it is at present. I am not trying to be glib, but this is not easy; it is very complex.
7665. Mr Brady: The irony is that we are told that the whole purpose of universal credit is not to have complexity but to simplify everything. Now you are saying that we have a very complex system, which is probably even more complex than the system in place.
7666. The Chairperson: We do not need to have a debate about it. We need clarity on why it is happening and why we were given a figure of £24 million. That is the purpose of the exercise. We can argue, but the Committee has adopted the view that it wants a default position that will enable people to be paid more frequently than once a month. That remains the position of the Committee. Ultimately, people will have to grapple with whether they should be put off arguing for that because of the associated cost. Could it be £24 million, £10 million, or whatever? That is the information that helps us to make up our minds. We need to clarify the cost. You are giving £24 million as the figure that it may or may not cost, depending on the take-up, if this is agreed. I am not confident that it will be agreed, but it is out to consultation. Let us hold with that in good faith and see how it works out.
7667. Mr F McCann: Chair, I am at a loss because we are talking about the entirety of the universal credit system and the information that will be input into it. I take it that people's details are being entered into the system. This is just for talk's sake, but, before the system goes live, every aspect of benefits will be put into that system so, as the system kicks off, all information will be contained within that one computer.
7668. Mr O'Reilly: No, it cannot be done that way. It is just too large. It is being done in phases.
7669. Mr F McCann: Would that not have happened anyway?
7670. Mr O'Reilly: Yes, that will happen anyway.
7671. Mr F McCann: All that information is going into the system. Mickey's point about phones was right. As I said the other day, I can turn on my phone, ask it to tell me how to get to Derry or Newry and what route I should take. It will talk to me and give me the route. You are paying hundreds of millions of pounds for a computer, so I cannot understand why you cannot make these adjustments, either by talking to it or by pressing a button that will give you access to it. It seems a nonsense to me that people choosing a different option will cost an additional £24 million if, by and large, all the information is already contained in a computer.
7672. Mr O'Reilly: In the core universal credit system, you input a series of information about you and your family. The computer assesses that information against a set of rules, which are built into it, and decides whether you are eligible. If you are eligible, it makes a determination on what you are entitled to. It then takes that entitlement and assesses it against how much you have earned in the previous month. It does that by way of the real-time information that comes in from your employer, or, if you are not - employed, a zero form. It then tapers that down at an agreed rate and reduces the level, depending on your earnings, to give you a final sum.

7673. Mr F McCann: That is wonderful, Tommy. The joys of modern technology never cease to amaze me. That is all well and good, but there must be something that allows you to pay people fortnightly without even going into tapers and reductions. All you are asking the computer to do is make twice-monthly payments.
7674. Mr O'Reilly: Let me go back. That is what the core system does on the basis of the assessment period, which is the previous month. Once the system has made the assessment, it churns out a payment and states how much Fra McCann should be paid on his universal credit claim, or how much Mr and Mrs Brady should be paid on theirs. If you say that you want to take that and split it, that is a separate process to what the core system does. The core system was never built to do anything except the monthly assessment. As well as that, you could say that, not only do you want to make the payment to Mr and Mrs Brady's household benefit unit, you want to split it between the two of them, either 60:40 or 70:30, and pay it into different bank accounts. All that brings complexity to something that is for a lot of people. It is just about checking that and making sure that is accurate.
7675. Mr F McCann: So, when the Minister came to the Assembly and told us that he had a number of points of flexibility, one of which was split payments, he actually does not?
7676. Mr O'Reilly: He has.
7677. Mr F McCann: There was no top-up cost then. The additional cost of £24 million was sprung on us a couple of weeks ago.
7678. Mr O'Reilly: I cannot remember the details of the Minister's speech. I would need to check that. In respect of the agreement with Lord Freud and DWP, who are not building this system, they are building on the basis of a monthly payment and direct payment to people for them to take responsibility for payments to their landlords. That is what the core system is doing.
7679. We are ensuring that the flexibilities will be available in Northern Ireland to meet those on a much greater scale. Those are the flexibilities that have been secured against DWP. We are working with DWP, and that is part of the reason why I was in London in the past couple of days. We are working with DWP and building the IT systems so that it intercepts with the main core system in time for the launch of universal credit in Northern Ireland next year. That is what we are working on at the moment to make sure that those flexibilities are fulfilled.
7680. The Chairperson: OK. Mickey, I think that you wanted back in again. We are not going to spend much more time on this issue.
7681. Mr Brady: On a technical point, with regard to the 300,000 case load, you said that you have to go back to the previous month. I presume that those are fresh claims.
7682. Mr O'Reilly: Yes.
7683. Mr Brady: Is the estimate predicated on the existing case load or have you factored in the average fresh claims that you may have during a particular period?
7684. Mr O'Reilly: We factor in the population of Northern Ireland, based on benefit unit definition, so the case load would be 300,000. Then there is a series of on-flows and off-flows each month. That is what we work on.
7685. Mr Brady: Have you factored that in?
7686. Mr O'Reilly: We have factored that in. About 75% of ESA disappear within one year, for example, and JSA is broadly similar, so we have factored those figures in.
7687. Mr Brady: They will be disappearing if they only get paid their contributions for the year, but that is another story.
7688. The Chairperson: OK. We will move on. I just want to make one point, and it goes - back to Fra's last remark. We have been told that flexibilities have been agreed and the IT system will be enhanced to facilitate that, but now we are being told that that is fair enough, but it will cost us £24 million.

7689. Mr O'Reilly: Chair, I will check the Minister's speech to see whether there was reference to the additional costs, which I think he mentioned, but I will certainly come back to you on that issue.
7690. The Chairperson: That is fair enough. Really what you are saying is that it can be facilitated but at a cost. The Committee was always of the view that we wanted flexibilities built in, and we were assured that we could get them. I have never sworn blind that we would get flexibilities. In fact, I have always been very cautious around that. Anyway, we will see what happens. We have the information around that, and it is up to us to do what we want with that information. Thanks, Tommy, for providing us with that.
7691. Mr O'Reilly: The second issue was the question around tapers and disregards, which we started to have a discussion on. Colin has provided with you a paper on our thinking around the payment of housing benefit directly to landlords.
7692. Dr Colin Sullivan (Social Security Agency): This is one of the three flexible areas, and we will be doing similar work on split payments and more frequent payments, but I will just give you some early thinking, from a methodology point of view, about the options as to how we might deliver direct payments to landlords. It is a fairly complex paper, but I will take you through the three options that are presented. There is more detail to be worked up on each of these options.
7693. At the outset, the paper sets the scene in respect of the current position with regard to housing benefit, and it outlines how the housing element will be calculated once universal credit is introduced. The main focus is the three different options and what effect the options would have on different household types. I will take you through that as well.
7694. The three options that are presented are different places on a spectrum between more or less in respect of full and part payments of direct payments to landlords. We sent you copies yesterday. I am not sure whether you had those printed out in colour or in black and white, but the first option is on page 7, paragraph 25. That would involve paying the housing element directly to landlords in those cases where all the housing costs are met by the housing element of universal credit. That is shown in figure 1. It is only for full payments, not part payments.
7695. The Chairperson: Sorry, Colin, members are looking for that paper, but I do not think that we have it.
7696. Dr Sullivan: I will just describe it then. The first option is simply to pay all full payments, which would mean that there would be no part payments paid. So, if somebody were entitled to a part payment and not a full payment, they would get the money, and the onus would be on them to make it up from the other elements of universal credit or, if they have them, earnings and then pay the landlord. That is one option.
7697. A second option is to apply the disregard and tapers equally to all elements of universal credit and to pay full payments and all part payments. With that option, you have more people being paid directly, but quite a number of them would get part payments rather than full payments, so the onus would be on them to make up that shortfall. At the moment, we know that, under housing benefit, between 15% and 17% of people receive part payments, and they make up the shortfall under housing benefit at the moment.
7698. It is, however, slightly more complicated under universal credit. At the moment, if any change of circumstances occurs, a member of the public will make the Housing Executive aware of that change of circumstances. They are aware of - that, and they expect the part payment to change, and they know that they will have a different amount — either more or less — to pay to the landlord themselves.

7699. Under the real-time information system, that will happen automatically, and although they may be aware of the fact that they have changed the number of hours that they have worked, it may not occur to them that they will also have to change the level of the part payment. That could be complex for some people.
7700. A third option is to protect the housing element and to cross-subsidise from other elements of universal credit so that you pay all full payments. Where it starts to be a part payment, you cross-subsidise from other elements of universal credit into the housing element, so you have more full payments and only get to a part payment where you get to that point of the taper where there is not enough universal credit to cover the housing element. In those circumstances, there will be a part payment, and all that part payment will be given to housing.
7701. If you think of those three options, the advantages and disadvantages of those options are that the first one is fairly straightforward. It reduces complexity, and if you have a full entitlement, it is paid for you. If you do not have a full entitlement, the onus is on you to make up the difference and to pay the full amount, some of which you will get from universal credit and some of which you will get from your income.
7702. Between options two and three, the difference is that because you have protected housing in option three over option two, you have fewer part payments and more full payments, and you have given greater emphasis to housing over and above the other elements of universal credit. So, you will have fewer part payments in option three as opposed to option two.
7703. If you do not have the paper in front of you, it is difficult to talk through the scenarios, but, at a high level, you will have situations whereby customers will receive a housing element, and all of it will be paid. In other cases, maybe because of underoccupancy, they will not have all the housing entitlement, and it will not all be paid. They will then need to take account of that extra bit to be paid. It changes with different customer types.
7704. I am quite happy to come back to talk to you in more detail when you have received the paper.
7705. Mr O'Reilly: I think that it would be better if members had a look at the paper, and then we will come back again. We are due to come back to you next month or so to have a discussion on flexibilities, given some of the work that we are doing with the voluntary and community sector and some of the political parties. This paper in particular is really helpful for starting to look at the challenges with housing benefit for us and everyone.
7706. The Chairperson: I am trying to simplify this. Universal credit was supposed to simplify everything, but we are now told that it is very complicated under universal credit. I asked the Minister this the other morning, and he agreed that it is not a problem, and Hansard will have recorded that. From a position where we have been advised that we have resolved the issue of direct payments of housing benefit to landlords — in other words, that would be facilitated — we are now being told that it is a bit more complicated than that.
7707. Mr O'Reilly: No, not really, Chair. At the moment, people receive either full payment or partial payment, and that will be the same under universal credit. The question is this: what is the policy intent, and what do the Executive, the Social Development Committee and people think is the best way of using the universal credit housing benefit payment to achieve what you want to achieve.
7708. At the moment, we pay out to people in the private rented sector. The vast majority of people who currently live in the private rented sector get their - housing benefit payment made directly to the landlord, and they top it up themselves. In the social sector, the vast majority of the payments are made to the housing associations and the Housing Executive. That is full payment, or, if it is partial payment, the tenants top it up themselves. So, the policy discussion comes down to whether you want that system to continue or you want to move to a system whereby you protect the house at all costs and always make sure that the rent is being paid regardless. That is the choice. It is not a question of whether we will move away from where we are at the moment. We are trying to incorporate this into a system that allows you to make some policy decisions, and that is the discussion that we are having around the criteria.

7709. The Chairperson: People wanted direct payments so that whatever amount of money you were given for your housing support would be paid directly to the landlord.
7710. Dr Sullivan: That is an option.
7711. Mr F McCann: The option already exists.
7712. The Chairperson: If you want the option to have the £20, for example, that you need to cover your rent taken out of the rest of your universal credit to protect the house, you can do so?
7713. Mr O'Reilly: That is an option.
7714. The Chairperson: People may or may not take that up. OK.
7715. Mr Brady: Presumably, the partial payments apply where there are no dependants in the house or something, and the tenant is expected to contribute.
7716. Dr Sullivan: It could be partly that and also because of income levels.
7717. Mr Brady: The Chair made the point about universal credit, and it is gratifying to hear that it will simplify everything. I would love to be in a meeting when you are trying to explain that to Joe Public. I have been dealing with benefits for a long, long time, and it is more complicated, to be honest with you. I am not talking about the outworkings but in how you explain it.
7718. Mr O'Reilly: At the back of the paper, there are three examples. It takes you through the universal credit notification note, and you can see where it works through. Maybe that will help. We will happily come back and have a discussion, or we are happy to have it offline.
7719. The last issue was on the question around the £65 de minimis level for writing off debt. We provided with you a paper.
7720. The Chairperson: Members, it is entitled, 'Response to further query received on 6 February 2013'.
7721. Mr O'Reilly: It is a question around why debt below £65 is written off. We have set out the information to show the administrative costs. We were asked for a breakdown, so in table 1, we provide the numbers of people in each value band. So, 3,000 people were overpaid by between £0.01 and £5, which gave a total value of £6,000. In total, there were 22,000 cases, and their value was £580,000. The weighted average of overpayments in those cases — the write-off — was £32.
7722. The question then became one of whether the Committee would recommend that that £65 be increased. Table 2 sets out the costs associated with that breaking of parity. The total cost, based on last year's figures, of moving the write-off level from £65 to £80 for a total of 4,382 people was £315,000. That would be the additional cost incurred as a consequence of raising it from £65 to £80. That table provides you with the other levels and the total numbers involved, as you requested.
7723. The Chairperson: OK; thank you for that.
7724. Mr Brady: We have the tables there and the numbers of small overpayments and all that, but may I clarify whether you have any indication how many of those are departmental errors as opposed to customer errors?

7725. Mr O'Reilly: These are overpayments.
7726. Mr Brady: I mean the reason why those overpayments occurred.
7727. Mr O'Reilly: We do not reclaim departmental error or official error at the moment, so these are overpayments as a consequence of customer error or fraud.
7728. Mr Brady: Is there no departmental error in there?
7729. Mr O'Reilly: No.
7730. Mr Brady: Might that be an additional — 7731. Mr O'Reilly: That may be later on but not at the moment.
7732. Mr Brady: Thank you.
7733. The Chairperson: OK. Are members happy enough with that?
7734. Members indicated assent.
7735. The Chairperson: Tommy, thanks for that very helpful information.
7736. Mr O'Reilly: Thank you very much.
7737. The Chairperson: Tommy and Colin, thank you very much, again, for your support in our deliberations on this. No doubt, we will encounter each other again.

7738. The Chairperson: Members are aware that today we enter into the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Welfare Reform Bill. The Committee Stage of the Bill started on 11 October 2012. The Committee received some 50 written responses and considered oral evidence from 18 key stakeholder organisations and, of course, the Department for Social Development. Given the Committee's extensive consideration of evidence and responses from the Department, we agreed that the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny can commence today.

7739. Members have previously set out their interim positions on the Bill's clauses, which we went through last week. During the clause-by-clause scrutiny, members will be asked to set out their final positions, subject to the report of the Examiner of Statutory Rules and any consequential amendments. If members do not feel that they can agree a clause, that must be clearly stated during this session. If that happens, the member will be asked to set out his or her proposed recommendation, opposition or amendment.

7740. This is the countdown to our final consideration of the Bill, and the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny is important. The departmental officials — Jane, Martina and Michael — are here this morning to assist the Committee on any issues that we are not sure about or that we did not conclude on. Last week, we had quite a discussion on, first, trying to get a consensus report, and, secondly, agreeing the number of clauses that members determined that they did not wish to support at this time. There will be a caveat in so far as the report's preface will state that there are a number of outstanding issues — for example, universal credit, which is out to consultation — and members felt that they could not support the relevant clauses as they are currently drafted because a consultation is under way. In addition, the Minister is deliberating with Westminster on flexibilities or variances on, for example, sanctions and other issues. The Executive may also wish to take some mitigating measures, over which the Committee has no control.

7741. Last week, members agreed the clauses that they would not currently support. That does not prevent members either changing their mind this morning and voting for or against an amendment or a proposed clause, or tabling amendments now or at Consideration Stage. In other words, we understand, and it is written into our report, that members will be voting at Committee Stage on the clauses, bearing in mind how deliberations may continue when the Bill leaves the Committee, with the Minister seeking either other flexibilities or Executive support. That is the basis on which members adopt their position at Committee Stage, which is not in any way prejudicial to how members may or may not vote, or table relevant amendments that they think are appropriate or necessary, in the Assembly at Consideration Stage.

7742. If members are satisfied with that approach, the Committee Clerk and his staff have gone through the Committee's discussions and identified a number of clauses, based on last week's positions, that the Committee may or may not support as they are currently drafted. That does not mean that members will not be able to table amendments or vote in a different way at Consideration Stage. Members will be guided by the outworkings of consultations, Executive deliberations and any mitigating measures that may be taken to alleviate our concerns. At any time, members are free to table amendments or be guided by parity issues or costs in the way in which they finally vote on the Bill.

7743. Members have the Bill, the explanatory and financial memorandum, the clause-by-clause summary table and advice from the Examiner of Statutory Rules.
7744. Before we commence the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny, I welcome Sydney Anderson.
7745. Mr Anderson: Thank you, Chair.
7746. The Chairperson: He replaces Sammy Douglas. We have written to Sammy expressing our gratitude for his work on the Committee. We wish him well.
7747. Are members content that that is the position that we have adopted before we start our formal clause-by-clause scrutiny?

Members indicated assent.

7748. The Chairperson: Some clauses are grouped because of their relevance to one another. I will go through the clauses one by one or in their little groups. We will note whether or not members support clauses. I remind members to refer to their recommendations paper, which contains the clauses on which the Committee has retained its position; they are the clauses that members will not support. For the most part, the recommendations are well qualified and prefaced. We intend to go through the clause-by-clause scrutiny today and then have our next Committee meeting on Thursday morning, at which we will finalise our report on the Committee Stage of the Welfare Reform Bill. It will, obviously, include the results of our clause-by-clause scrutiny and other elements on which we agreed, and it will also refer to the Ad Hoc Committee's recommendations. Members are still free to raise individual matters today or on Thursday.

7749. If members are content, we will now go through the clauses. It is entirely up to members to raise any issue that they wish to during today's discussions. The purpose of doing business in the way in which we did, which is the normal procedure for Committee Stage, is that we have more or less had all our discussions and probably do not need much more, if any, discussion. I intend to go through the clauses, but members are free to raise any issues.

Clauses 1 to 3 agreed to.

Clause 4 (Basic conditions)

7750. The Chairperson: Clause 4 is included in the recommendations paper. Based on our discussions, it was decided that the Committee was not agreed to clause 4 as drafted.
7751. Mr G Campbell: Can we take your opening caveat as read, rather than repeating it ad nauseam?
7752. The Chairperson: That is even better. Thank you.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and negatived.

Clause 4 disagreed to.

Clauses 5 to 9 agreed to.

Clause 10 disagreed to.

Clause 11 agreed to.

Clause 12 disagreed to.

Clauses 13 to 25 agreed to.

Clause 26 disagreed to.

Clauses 27 to 32 agreed to.

7753. Ms P Bradley: Chair, may I interrupt? I am looking back at clause 26, "Higher level sanctions". The recommendations paper states:

"In this context the Committee was content to agree the clause as drafted."

7754. Am I reading this correctly? We have disagreed clause 26.
7755. The Committee Clerk: The Committee was interested in exploring with the Minister the possibility of varying the sanction regime. If that is the case, you cannot support the sanction regime if you want to ask the Minister to review it.
7756. Ms P Bradley: OK.
7757. The Chairperson: Remember that, because the Minister is in discussions about trying to vary the sanctions.
7758. Mr G Campbell: With the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP).
7759. The Chairperson: With DWP
7760. The Committee Clerk: If the Committee is then of a mind of not being content to agree it rather than asking the Minister to go and review it, that is the approach.
7761. The Chairperson: Are members content?
- Members indicated assent.*
- Clauses 33 to 51 agreed to.*
- Clause 52 disagreed to.*
- Clause 53 agreed to.*
- Clause 54 disagreed to.*
- Clauses 55 to 68 agreed to.*
- Clause 69 disagreed to.*
- Clauses 70 to 98 agreed to.*
- Clause 99 disagreed to.*
- Clauses 100 to 102 agreed to.*
- Clause 103 (Recovery of benefit payments)
7762. The Chairperson: I want to draw members' attention to this clause because the recommendations paper states that the Committee was not content to agree it. There was a bit of discussion on this, and members talked about the de minimis level of £65. The Department gave us rising figures for the cost of increasing the de minimis figures. When we reflected on this, I am not entirely sure what the Committee was minded to do. I think that we were asking the Minister to consider it; I do not know that we were actually opposing the clause per se. So, I am not sure whether members want to agree the clause and ask the Minister to review it.

7763. Ms P Bradley: I think that that was the general feeling.
7764. The Chairperson: Are members content to agree the clause and to ask the Minister to look at the de minimis levels?
7765. Mr Durkan: Is it similar to the other clause? If we agree it, can the Minister still look into it?
7766. The Chairperson: This is not one of the clauses concerning the cautions; those are a little complex and interrelated. This clause is saying that a figure of £65 at the moment would be non-recoverable and that anything above that would be recoverable. We were given a list of statistics that showed what the difference might be in the cost for non-recovery to the Department if the rates were raised to £70, £75 or £80. I think that the bulk of the money that would not be captured would be in the £70 or £75 range. Is that not right, Martina?
7767. Ms Martina Campbell (Department for Social Development): I think that that is right. I do not have the figures at the moment.
7768. Mr Michael Pollock (Department for Social Development): Something like 22,000 incidences of overpayments were affected. I think that the figures in the table represented 22,000 multiplied by the difference between £65 and £75.
7769. Ms M Campbell: We have agreed to look at the guidance again to give decision-makers a better flavour of when they would apply the de minimis level.
7770. The Chairperson: So, are we content to agree the clause as drafted?

7771. Mr Brady: Can I just check something, Martina? I suppose a lot of the smaller ones would maybe apply when somebody died or there was a delay in the reporting and that kind of thing.

7772. Ms M Campbell: Yes, or if people did not get notification of their change in on time or something like that.

7773. The Chairperson: Are members happy enough?

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 103 agreed to.

Clauses 104 to 108 agreed to.

Clauses 109 and 110 disagreed to.

Clauses 111 to 114 agreed to.

Clause 115 disagreed to.

Clauses 116 to 132 agreed to.

Clause 133 (Commencement)

7774. The Chairperson: Are members content with clause 133?

7775. Ms Jane Corderoy (Department for Social Development): I just want to make the Committee aware that the Government amendment that we will table at Consideration Stage for the new discretionary social scheme will become clause 133. I think that the officials who are leading on that hope to have that amendment with you at some point this week so that you can look at the enabling clause before Consideration Stage.

7776. The Chairperson: Are you saying that clause 132 will become clause 133?

7777. Ms Corderoy: No. Clause 133 will become clause 134, and clause 134 will become clause 135. There will be a new clause 133, which will be the enabling clause for bringing forward the new discretionary social scheme.

7778. The Clerk of Bills: That is fine. That is a new clause, so at the end of the clause-by-clause scrutiny, you may want to put the Question on that to the Committee.

7779. The Chairperson: I just want to make sure that we get this right. So, clause 133 will become clause 134. Are members content with that? Are there are no objections to the numerical change?

Members indicated assent.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 133 agreed to.

Clause 134 (Short title)

7780. The Chairperson: Clause 134, which is the short title, will now become clause 135. Are members content with that clause and with its numbering?

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 134 agreed to.

New Clause

7781. The Chairperson: We will now discuss new clause 133. Do we have the wording for that?

7782. Ms Corderoy: We do, but I do not know whether it has been cleared with the Minister yet. I think that that is what we are waiting for.

7783. The Chairperson: Can we take guidance on it?

7784. Ms Corderoy: I know that the Committee may have heard from the departmental officials who are leading on the policy, and Leo McLaughlin and Brian Doherty from the agency may have been up to talk about the details. I think that it is out to public consultation at the moment. I can give you a general overview of it, if you are happy with that.

7785. The Chairperson: You gave us an explanation, so it might just be that the best that we can do is acknowledge that the Department has indicated that it will bring forward a new clause 133, the purpose of which is as you articulated it a minute ago. Is that fair enough? I think that we are probably generally content with the explanation that we were given, so, subject to that, members are content.

Question, That the Committee is content with the new clause, put and agreed to.

New clause agreed to.

Schedules 1 to 12 agreed to.

7786. The Committee Clerk: I just want to clarify two issues about some of the clauses. In his report, the Examiner of Statutory Rules recommended that the regulation-making powers under clause 33 and clause 91 should be subject to the confirmatory procedure. I know that, at the previous meeting, there was some discussion about how far those recommendations went along with the Department and the Office of the Legislative Counsel (OLC). So, I want to be sure that the Committee has made the right decision on recommending that, following the guidance of the Examiner of Statutory Rules, that would be the case.
7787. The Clerk of Bills: Making clause 33 subject to the confirmatory procedure would require an amendment to clause 44, which was grouped with another two clauses. Making clause 91 subject to the confirmatory procedure would require an amendment to clause 93. If the Committee is of the view that it will be moving in that direction, you may want to revisit those two clauses to say that, “The Committee is content, subject to regulations — [Inaudible.] — amendment to come forward.”
7788. The Chairperson: Do you want to read that into the record? I think that that is what members agreed.
7789. The Clerk of Bills: I think that you agreed clause 44 and clause 93.
7790. The Chairperson: The Committee Clerk has reminded me that the Department has been in discussions with OLC, so you may have something further to add.
7791. Ms M Campbell: Sorry; I have nothing more to report.
7792. The Committee Clerk: It would be unusual for a Committee not to follow the guidance of the Examiner of Statutory Rules on recommendations on regulation-making powers. If we are thinking about amendments, it was my error; I should have pointed that out earlier. The issue is really whether the Committee is content for an amendment to clause 44 to be tabled.
7793. The Chairperson: We have an amendment for regulation-making powers in clause 33, subject to the confirmatory procedure. If you remember, we had a discussion about recommendations from the Examiner of Statutory Rules about getting a higher level of accountability by the Assembly. This is really just to give effect to that and to accept the recommendations of the Examiner of Statutory Rules.
7794. The Committee Clerk: The Examiner of Statutory Rules was — [Inaudible.] — and really the only points that he made were about how clause 33 and clause 44 should be subject to the confirmatory procedure. The Department indicated that it was in discussions with the OLC about that. If the Committee were to agree those clauses as drafted, it would not be following the advice of the Examiner of Statutory Rules. So, it is a case of proposing amendments to ensure that the advice of the Examiner of Statutory Rules is followed in respect of the confirmatory procedure.
7795. The Chairperson: Can we just read that into the record?
7796. The issue is how we procedurally formalise that.
7797. The Clerk of Bills: Members may want to look at the report, which is in the papers.
7798. The Chairperson: It involves only two clauses: clause 33 and clause 34.
7799. The Clerk of Bills: Not 33 and 34.
7800. The Committee Clerk: It relates to clause 33 and clause 91. It is a case of revisiting clause 44 and clause 92 and amending them in accordance with the recommendations of the Examiner

- of Statutory Rules. So, the amendment reads:
- “Clause 44, page 21, line 25
- At end insert -
- (c) regulations under clause 33”
- Question put and agreed to.*
7801. The Committee Clerk: Similarly, the amendment to clause 93 reads:
- “Clause 93, page 65, line 26
- At end insert -
- (c) regulations under clause 91”
7802. Those amendments are then following the Examiner’s recommendations.
- Question put and agreed to.*
7803. Mr Brady: Can I ask about the talk about the confirmatory and the affirmative procedures? Which will apply?
7804. The Chairperson: It will make the provision subject to the confirmatory procedure?
7805. On that basis, are members agreed?
- Members indicated assent.*
- Long title agreed to.*
7806. The Chairperson: That concludes the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny. Michael, did you want to say something?
7807. Mr Pollock: Just for our purposes, when we were going through the clause-by-clause scrutiny, I thought that clause 33 and clause 44 were agreed as drafted. Are we now saying that they are in the recommendations paper?
7808. The Chairperson: We will revisit them because we had neglected to remind ourselves about the recommendations of the Examiner of Statutory Rules. If you remember, the Department is in discussions with OLC about that to resolve the issue. So, it is just about raising the level of accountability through the confirmatory procedure.
7809. Mr Pollock: Is it the same for clause 93?
7810. The Clerk of Bills: Can I just clarify that, to change the regulation-making power in clause 33, clause 44 has to be amended. So, clause 44 was revisited. To make the regulation-making power in clause 91 subject to the confirmatory procedure, clause 93 needs to be amended, so it was also revisited. So, this applies to clauses 44 and 93.
7811. The Chairperson: Are members happy with that? Thank you, Michael.
7812. On that basis, we have concluded the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny. The Committee will return on Thursday morning for our normal Committee business, after which we will recommence the final deliberations on the Welfare Reform Bill, when we will agree the full report.
7813. Mr G Campbell: Just on a general point and going back to our discussion on the previous meeting, the recommendations paper had a series of issues arising from a number of clauses about which either the Minister was in discussions about variations or he was going to discuss them with Executive colleagues with a view to trying to get resources. I take it that the Committee is clear that, at some point in the Bill’s progress, those questions will receive answers. We will then get the very clear picture both about what we would like and the response to that.
7814. The Chairperson: As you know, we have made it very clear that this is the view that members here, who have had long deliberations on the Bill, have adopted and that it will not prejudice how members may have to vote, either because of parity or cost reasons or because they may have got an answer that satisfied them. Parties and their members and those from non-parties will consider all this in the round when the Bill reaches Consideration Stage.
7815. I thank the departmental officials for being very helpful and patient with the Committee.
7816. Ms M Campbell: You are very welcome.

7817. The Chairperson: Members, we are resuming our work on the Welfare Reform Bill. We are almost at the conclusion of this. The main reason for today's session is to agree the Committee's report on the Welfare Reform Bill. There are a couple of issues to consider prior to proceeding with that. On Tuesday, we completed our formal clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill, but it has been brought to our attention that there may be an issue with clause 115, which is about cautions, that requires a wee bit of clarification. Kevin revisited the Hansard reports from the other day, and when he and I discussed this, we were not entirely sure about the intent of the members and about how the vote ended up. It is a little bit confusing, to say the least. Kevin will take us through the points.

7818. The Committee Clerk: Once we got to the issue of cautions, particularly clause 115, an issue was raised. Members had a discussion about informal and formal cautions. Clause 115 relates to formal cautions, and, as members know, if the Department has investigated an attempted fraud and a person has been found actually to have attempted fraud, the Department can currently issue a formal caution that goes on the record and has potential implications for job applications, travel arrangements and various other things. Clause 115 will remove the Department's option to deliver a formal caution and, instead, will replace it with a more severe administrative penalty. That refers to clause 110. The Committee had considered all along that it wanted to oppose that clause and, therefore, retain a formal caution. Subsequently, when the Department clarified the situation, the Committee was moving more towards agreeing that clause, so that cautions would be removed and the administrative penalty would be applied instead. That is coupled with the Committee's recommendation that the Minister would review the levels of the administrative penalty in conjunction with that.

7819. When going through the Hansard report the other day, I noticed that — I think we were discussing the amendments of the Examiner of Statutory Rules at the time. When I went through the report, I noticed that the Committee had actually opposed the clause. That means that if the Minister were to act on that, they would keep cautions. However, in the Minister's response, he indicated that if we were to keep formal cautions as an option, it would mean that they would retain the formal caution as an option for attempted fraud. Rather than the £350 administrative penalty for attempted fraud, a person could, potentially, end up with a formal caution, which might seem somewhat disproportionate.

7820. I want the Committee to be clear on the decision that it has taken. There is still an opportunity, if I have misunderstood the Committee's intentions, to change that clause, given that the Committee has agreed to oppose some of the other clauses so that the Minister would review the administrative penalty. You want to

- agree the clause and, therefore, have the formal cautions removed, coupled with the Minister reviewing the level of administrative penalty that would apply.
7821. Mr Brady: I think the issue was around the fact that the formal caution could go on somebody's record and, therefore, impinge on their future — as you say, travel and all of that. The informal caution was warning people off. Presumably, if there was a repeat, there would be more severe action — maybe they would be taken to court, or whatever. The formal caution has removed that option. If you get a formal caution, it is going to impact on your future life, basically. It is a criminal record, essentially, and I think it is disproportionate.
7822. The Chairperson: Do you want to leave it as it is?
7823. Mr F McCann: I take the position that it puts in place what the Committee had asked for, which was that nobody ends up with a black mark on their record that may prohibit particular things.
7824. The Committee Clerk: That would mean that the Committee would have to agree the clause. Agreeing the clause means that the Minister would proceed as he intends, which is to remove the option of a formal caution, and an administrative penalty would be applied instead.
7825. Mr Campbell: My understanding is that that was the Committee's desire.
7826. The Committee Clerk: Yes, it was. It was simply that the Committee actually opposed the clause, but should have agreed it. However, the intent behind the Committee's decision was as per the Minister's action, which was to remove formal cautions as an option.
7827. Mr F McCann: Is there a form of words that allows us to move ahead on it?
7828. The Chairperson: Agree the clause.
7829. Ms P Bradley: We just formally have to agree the clause.
7830. The Committee Clerk: Agree the clause, as drafted.
7831. The Clerk of Bills: If you change what you did the other day, you will be consistent with your recommendations report. As it stands, you are not consistent.
7832. Mr Campbell: We have to try to be consistent.
7833. The Chairperson: Are members content with the clause, as drafted?
Members indicated assent.
7834. The Chairperson: That is in the record now; we have amended that.
7835. Just, again, to say that these are procedural matters, really. The Committee was not content with a number of clauses as drafted, and has the option of registering formal opposition to the question of those clauses standing part of the Bill. That would ensure, simply, that, in the absence of any amendments to those clauses, they are debated at Consideration Stage — formally logged for debate.
7836. The Committee Clerk: That is right. If the Committee wants, the Clerk of Bills can come in here, but formal clause-by-clause is concluded. Lodging the Committee's opposition to certain clauses gives speaking rights at Consideration Stage to indicate why the Committee took the action that it did. I think I am right in saying that it gives the same weight as amendments.
7837. The Clerk of Bills: Yes.
7838. The Committee Clerk: We can do that between now and Consideration Stage, if the Committee is minded to do so. Otherwise, as the Committee knows, the Consideration Stage debate will focus on amendments. The Chair will be given some latitude for his speech, but, otherwise, you will not be able to address these issues if they are not put down as amendments.
7839. The Chairperson: It makes sense to do that because, at the end of the day, there are points that people want to make one way or another during the debate. Are members content that we do that?

Members indicated assent.

7840. The Chairperson: Again, as circulated, we have an amendment being tabled by the Department. Obviously, as we have concluded the formal clause-by-clause stage, any further amendments by the Department would be brought forward at Consideration Stage. However, officials are here. The matter has been raised before. Members had some discussion about it. It is obviously an important issue. Are members content that we take the amendment? We might not even need a debate as such, but officials are here to assist if needed. The amendment was circulated. There is an introductory letter from Angela Clarke that sets it all out. I hope that members have had an opportunity to read that.
7841. Mr Brady: The whole point of discretionary support is to ensure that it targets the people who most need it. The initial intention of the social fund was to do that, but it kind of got lost somewhere along the way. Basically, it is used to top up people's benefits because people — [Inaudible.] — what they were getting. It is all about who it targets. If it is to be effective, it has to do that.
7842. The Chairperson: OK. Are members content with the amendment? It will be subject to Executive approval by way of statutory regulation, and so on, so there will be plenty of opportunities to deal with the details, and so on, at a later stage.
- Members indicated assent.*
7843. Mr Brian Doherty (Department for Social Development): Thanks very much.
7844. The Chairperson: That was an easy one, Brian.
7845. Ms Angela Clarke (Department for Social Development): Thank you very much.
7846. The Chairperson: Those are all the items from the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny that we did the other day. Are members content to agree the report? I want to clarify a couple of items in my own mind. Obviously, we went through the Bill clause by clause. There is quite a volume of contributions, debate, evidence gathered, views and assertions by a whole range of people, not least this Committee. There were two or three items there that I am not sure — I just have to recall — whether we actually did put any formal recommendations. For example, we discussed the issues — and were heavily lobbied, as people know — around a statutory right to independent advice. If I recall, members were broadly supportive of that concept. However, we did not discuss any particular mechanism for that or means by which the Department would deliver on that. It would probably be appropriate, if members agreed, that we could make, for example, one of the options open to us: a recommendation that the Minister or Department considers this, rather than us putting a formal proposal. I would be content for us to ask the Department to consider that. I am not sure how precisely that might be done. It could be a contract that is given out; I do not know. I do not want to get into trying to determine who might deliver on it, but I would like the Department to formally consider it.

7847. Mr Brady: I think that £69 million was mentioned the week before last. I am not sure how much of that might or might not apply here for advice services. Our intention was to ensure, because of the complexity — we have been told how simple universal credit is going to be, but I am certainly not convinced from listening to the officials. They are having difficulty explaining how simple it is. There is going to be a huge pressure, as there is already, on the advice sector. The other thing, too, is the whole issue of effective benefit take-ups. There have been a number of benefit take-ups over the past few years that have been effective to some degree. Take pension credit as an example; there is about £1.9 million unclaimed every week, so, obviously, it cannot be that effective. One of the things that we talked about was how the scheme was run in England in automatic entitlement — [Inaudible.] — people whom you think might be entitled, then eventually sorting out the people who actually are entitled, after a three-month period or whatever. That seems to have been very effective in parts of Britain. We did not have that option. So there is that, and the other big one that we discussed was the benefit cap. I am not sure what positions, if any, have been taken on that. It was just really, if you will excuse the phrase, to flag that up with you.

7848. The Chairperson: The first issue raised there was the statutory right to independent advice. Am I right in reading that members were sympathetic to that concept, without going into detail?

7849. Ms P Bradley: I think that we were all concerned about that. At Question Time on Monday or Tuesday, that was one of the questions that the Minister was asked, and he was quite open to that. He said that there were going to be more people phoning in to the Department and its local offices needing advice, so he is aware of that. I do not think that putting that down is a big ask.

7850. The Chairperson: So, we will put in a recommendation that the Department and the Minister should formally consider supporting this particular concept. Is that fair enough?

7851. The Committee Clerk: I have actually put in a recommendation to that effect.

7852. Ms P Bradley: Have you now?

7853. The Chairperson: Do we have that in? Well, that is why I was — 7854. Ms P Bradley: There you are. Was there a meeting going on before this?

[Laughter.]

7855. The Committee Clerk: No, it was on the basis of Mr Durkan raising the point about the £65 million. We just looked it up. It is in the executive summary and the recommendations. I refer members to the recommendations, at paragraph 83. I do not know whether this is strong enough for the Committee; I put it in on the basis of what is coming out of Westminster and the £65 million fund that there is to support the advice sector across the UK. When officials were here at the last meeting, they indicated that, if it were UK-based, Northern Ireland would be subject to accessing that funding. It is just that little bit at the end, where I put in:

“The Committee recommended that appropriate resources are made available to the independent advice sector in NI during this period”

7856. — that is April 2013 to April 2015, which is the key period when this is rolling out —

“to ensure that all benefit claimants can access independent advice as they prepare for the transition to the new system.”

7857. Does that encapsulate what the Committee wants, or is it actually more focused on the recommendation for a statutory provision? If so, that would really mean amending the Bill, as we discussed before. It would appear that funding is available.

7858. The Chairperson: OK. Although, in saying that, we do not know. We may or may not get something out of it.

7859. Mr Brady: There are many small, local advice centres. There are the big regional ones — National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux (CAB), Advice NI and people who are affiliated — but there are a lot of small, local advice centres that do a lot of very good work. Sometimes, they feel that they are being bypassed in funding. I know that myself. I worked in a centre for many years, and for the first 17 years, we got little or no funding. It was only when matching funding came from the Department for Social Development that we started to get money from councils and that kind of thing. So there are many small, local advice centres, and I think that any system has to ensure that they benefit from any funding that is available. I think it is unfair that sometimes, if you are not affiliated to some of the regional organisations, you do not necessarily come in under that.

7860. Mr Copeland: It is just the idea — maybe I am reading it wrong:

- “as they prepare for the transition to the new system.”*
7861. The real difficulties will come when they find themselves in the new system. The way that that is worded leans more towards people who are current claimants and who are going to have the nature of their claim altered, as opposed to those who may be entering for the first time. It is a moot point, and I suppose that it is open to interpretation, but I would have thought that the requirement for independent advice would go some considerable distance beyond the point of preparing for transition to the new system.
7862. The Chairperson: Those are only a couple of words, which we could amend. Paragraph 83 goes a long way, certainly in my mind, to delivering what we want. If you want to add another couple of words, that would maybe firm it up a little bit, but, again, it is only a recommendation to the Minister and the Department.
7863. Mr Copeland: On a point of information or interest, there is a motion coming from the all-party group on mental health, through Sue Ramsey, which is more strongly worded. It might be an idea to have a look at it in case we find ourselves at cross purposes.
7864. The Chairperson: This is more general. That is from the Health Committee.
7865. Mr Copeland: Yes, but it is specific to advice.
7866. The Chairperson: We were sympathetic to the notion that people need to have access to independent advice. Paragraph 83 goes a long way, and we can insert a line from, in a way, the lobby, asking the Minister to consider the argument that people need access to independent advice. We have already agreed that we are going to lodge these so that we can speak to them in the Assembly and that people can elaborate on them if they so wish at Consideration Stage. Kevin, are you happy enough that you can recirculate it again to people, just asking whether they want to agree?
7867. The Committee Clerk: Sure, I can do that. Is it a case of ongoing advice? Not just the transition from one system to another, but while they are in that system, their circumstances may change.
7868. Mr Copeland: It has got to be ongoing.
7869. The Chairperson: As you say, Michael, it might be a moot point, but at the end of the day, we all know it is from the outset. Actually, people need to have access to independent advice at all times, which is why the Department funds organisations: to make sure that they do have access.
7870. Mr Durkan: What about the interpretation of “appropriate” resources? The Department might say that appropriate resources have been allocated. An additional £3.1 million has been allocated for that period already.
7871. The Committee Clerk: If members want, instead of “appropriate” I can put in “additional”.
7872. The Chairperson: Are members happy enough with that?
- Members indicated assent.*
7873. The Chairperson: With regard to the benefit uptake, which was referred to, members will again recall that even in the fuel poverty discussions, you keep coming up with the fact that, no matter when anyone, including the Department, has launched any kind of take-up benefit campaigns for people's entitlements, they always result in people getting extra money that they were entitled to but, until then, had not been claiming. So there is always this argument over whether the Department needs to have some structured way of making sure that there is a benefit check, either when people are applying or at some point during their claim. We need to make some recommendations. We need to seriously look at that.
7874. At the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister yesterday, we had a presentation from Employers for Childcare. There are a number of parents here who are not claiming tax credits or receiving some of the vouchers that are available, because they do not know about them or think it is too complicated. That is another example of where people are sitting here at the moment who are not getting what they are entitled to. That would help people to get into work, and so on and so forth, if you know what I mean. So, we need to make some recommendation around trying to get the Department to focus on a means by which claims will be processed, assessed or, if needs be, reassessed to make sure that people are getting what they're entitled to. Does that include advertisements, and so on and so forth? There has been some good work done recently, but we need just to get something so we can say that it was raised with us routinely and that we want to try to focus the Department's mind on the issue and see whether we can make an improvement in regard to it.

7875. Ms P Bradley: I agree with that. Again, at Question Time the other day, that was another answer the Minister gave to somebody to do with the benefits uptake and how it has increased a heck of a bit in the past few years. However, there is still work to do.

7876. In my previous life, I worked with over-65s. Of the people I asked whether they received any form of benefits or pension credit, 90% of them did not. I would say that out of that, a further 60% did not even want me to look at it for them. So, there are other reasons out there as to why people are not applying. It is not necessarily because they do not know. They may feel that there is a certain stigma attached to it, whatever it may be, and do not want to apply for it either. So, maybe it is to bring that knowledge wider, that you can get this; you are entitled to this.

7877. Mr Brady: Unlike many MLAs, Paula listens at Question Time. That is good to hear.

7878. The point that she made about older people particularly is a thing that I would call the "brown envelope syndrome". People here have been brought up to believe — it is almost part of our culture — that if they get a letter from the buroo or something, it is bad news. I experienced that for years. People would come in; they would not even open the envelope, but would hand it to you to open. It could have been a giro or good news.

7879. My point is about benefit take-up. A lot of in-depth research has been done. In Scandinavia, people are paid automatically. When you reach pension age, for instance, whatever you are entitled to, you get. Research has been done here. Apparently, the Department for Work and Pensions in Britain has told people that it cannot do that because of postcodes. We have postcodes that are very straightforward and simple, and we have insurance numbers that are unique to the person. There is absolutely no reason why that cannot be done.

7880. There is so much money spent on benefit take-up. It would seem simpler if we had a proper IT system. I do not think that we are going to get to that stage, but it would be simpler. It is an automatic payment. When you reach pension age, for instance, if you are entitled to the likes of pension credit premiums — all of that — that is all done automatically. They would obviously just put your details in and press a button.

7881. Ms P Bradley: To follow on from what Mickey said, I worked for CAB for about five years and we had what was called a benefit maximiser. You put the details of the client into it and it printed off a sheet that said, even, the amounts of what you could be entitled to. It was simple. It was really very easy to do. There was nothing difficult about it.

7882. The Chairperson: Are members content to draft a recommendation that calls on the Department to deal with that in a formal, structured manner, around the — what did you call it — benefit maximiser?

Members indicated assent.

7883. The Chairperson: I only want to raise one more point, which is the benefit cap Mickey mentioned a minute ago. I want to raise that issue as an MLA and

- a member of my party, and not as the Chair of the Committee. We had some discussion around this, and I am not sure whether Kevin is going to produce a paragraph relating to it. Failing that, people know that there was a fair amount of discussion around that, and we got information on exemptions and other matters.
7884. As a member of the Committee, I am concerned that because this is enabling legislation, we do not know where this might end up. I only really want to serve notice, if we do not have any formal recommendation in relation to a benefit cap. I am not suggesting that we open up a discussion on that item at the moment, because I do not think that we would get agreement on it. I just want to formally record that I and my party colleagues are concerned about it. I am not suggesting that others are not, but I am just putting it on the record formally that, notwithstanding that we are content to agree the final report this morning, we are likely to raise this at Consideration Stage, possibly by way of opposition or some amendment. I am just serving notice of that and making people aware of it.
7885. Are members happy enough with that? If there is nothing else that anybody else wants to raise, it is just left to ask members whether they are content with the final report of the Committee.
7886. The Committee Clerk: Chair, we really need to go through it section by section. That is just in case there is a certain emphasis or wording that members may wish to address.
7887. The Chairperson: OK. We will use the executive summary paper.
7888. The Committee Clerk: Just to be clear, members, of course, know that there are tables of contents and a whole ream of appendices. In the end, the report will probably be two or three volumes. However, this is the body of the text that is of real concern.
7889. Committee staff will deal with the table of contents, numbering and everything else. Once the Committee agrees the - report — assuming it does — we will go over it again and look for any typos and things like that and change those. We will not change any of the content or emphasis of the report once it is agreed, subject to the two additional recommendations that the Committee would like to add.
7890. The Chairperson: Members were provided with the report and asked to read through it again. It recaptures all that we have already agreed. We will formally go through it.
7891. I ask members to turn to page 6 of the draft report. Paragraphs 29 to 84 on pages 6 to 12 form the recommendations of the report. This section lists the Committee's recommendations to the Minister.
7892. Are members content with paragraphs 29 to 84?
- Members indicated assent.*
7893. The Chairperson: I ask members to turn to page 13. Are member content with paragraphs 85 to 100?
- Members indicated assent.*
7894. The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 101 to 472 on pages 15 to 68?
- Members indicated assent.*
7895. The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 473 to 564 on pages 69 to 78?
- Members indicated assent.*
7896. The Chairperson: Paragraphs 1 to 28 on pages 1 to 5 give the executive summary of the report. Are members content with those paragraphs?
- Members indicated assent.*
7897. The Chairperson: On that basis, are members content that the report be the fifth report of the Social Development Committee to the Assembly?
- Members indicated assent.*

7898. The Chairperson: I need to determine whether the Committee is content for the Chairperson to approve the section of today's minutes that refers to the Welfare Reform Bill report. This will allow the printing of the report to proceed without the need for a further Committee meeting. Are members content that I just sign off on the minutes from today's meeting?

Members indicated assent.

7899. The Chairperson: Is the Committee content that the report be ordered to be printed on 14 February 2013?

Members indicated assent.

7900. Mr Campbell: Chair, the Minister's position will obviously come into play on the timing. Given what he has said up to now about the cost of delay, what is the likely timeline beyond today, provided that there is no further delay?

7901. The Committee Clerk: I have spoken to the Department about when the Consideration Stage might be. Although it has indicated that it is not set in stone, it is scheduled provisionally for 19 March. That might change.

7902. On the first package of recommendations, the best that I could get from the Department is that the Committee is scheduled to get them somewhere between April and June. The last timetable I saw was for May, and that is a package of about 15 or 16 recommendations, all on the basis of confirmatory procedure, and scheduled to come into operation around October. However, we are looking at 19 March for the next stage of the Bill.

7903. Mr Campbell: OK.

7904. The Chairperson: I want to take this opportunity to formally thank everybody who has been involved in this. It has been a very challenging and time-consuming exercise. It has been more challenging, in so far as we committed ourselves to a very extensive and robust scrutiny of the Bill. The conduct of the Committee, with the support of officials — big time — the Department and a whole range of stakeholders have demonstrated the import of this particular report. Indeed, because of the possible implications of the Welfare Reform Bill as it rolls out over the next couple of years, we were duty bound to give it robust scrutiny. I am satisfied that we have done that and that we have given a fair hearing to all those who were promised that. I think that the fact that the Committee has adopted the position that it has is testimony to that. It was very difficult for all the members to grapple with these issues, and I want to afford my personal thanks to Kevin and others for the critical support they have given to me as the Chair and to the Committee. I want to thank everyone who has contributed big time to allowing us to do this job robustly and with the integrity that it merited.

7905. Mr Durkan: I concur with your thoughts and echo your thanks to the Committee staff. I also commend you on how you have chaired the proceedings. It has been a difficult enough process.

7906. The Chairperson: OK.

A2B Briefing

Pensions Bill

General Concerns

The main impact of the Pensions Bill will be on people born between April 1953 and April 1960. This is no small matter to the 146,000 people affected in Northern Ireland. Many of them will already have made retirement plans which will now have to change. Because it isn't just State Pension that will be changing but also Pension Credit and Winter Fuel Payment, this could have a substantial adverse impact on the incomes of these people. This is particularly true if they are not working due to unemployment, ill health, caring responsibility or early retirement.

The difference in applicable amounts for working age benefits and for Pension Credit is substantial – someone on a set income may not qualify for a working age benefit but would qualify for Pension Credit on the same income. It must be remembered that there are not many jobs available and that older workers face more difficulties and discrimination in finding employment.

23% of older people in Northern Ireland are already living in poverty – this is much higher than in the rest of the UK. Pensioner poverty will only be worsened by these changes and we will inevitably find more older people who cannot afford to adequately heat their homes or feed themselves. Increases in the age for Winter Fuel Payment, above and beyond those already announced, will lead to more older people living in fuel poverty, which is already higher than ever in Northern Ireland. Increases in the State Pension Age will have a disproportionate impact on those from deprived areas or living with ill health who do not have as high a life expectancy.

Women

Within the age cohort detailed above, there is to be an even more substantial impact on women. The Pensions Bill EQIA listed the numbers of those who will have to wait more than a year longer than previously expected to become eligible for State Pension, Pension Credit and Winter Fuel Payment. At the time of the EQIA, we wrote that:

The 800 women who will have to wait an extra two years for State Pension are of particular concern. Over 140,000 more will have to wait between one and two years. The numbers may seem small in comparison to the total caseload but these women will suddenly have to change all their retirement plans at very short notice and work, if they do work, for two years longer than planned. This may mean a lost income of several thousand pounds.

We welcome the move by the coalition to soften the blow for those who will be worst hit by limiting the waiting period to eighteen months, however many will still struggle. These people must now be assured that no further changes to their State Pension Age will occur, so that they can begin to plan for working longer. Many women still have no knowledge of the impending changes and still expect to receive their State Pension at 60. Increased life expectancy for some women does not mitigate this impact.

Disability

Finally, the impact on people with disabilities has not fully been explored. We do welcome the increase in qualifying age for Disability Living Allowance as this will give more people access to the mobility component. However, as noted above, people living with poor health will not necessarily benefit from the increase in life expectancies. With the difference in applicable amounts between working age benefits and Pension Credit, for example, someone who does not meet the State Pension Age requirement may not qualify for working age benefits but would have otherwise qualified for Pension Credit. This policy will therefore have a greater impact on people with disabilities as they would therefore not be able to access the disability premiums associated with Pension Credit.

Wider concerns

While changes to the State Pension Age are taking place, the wider benefits system is also being radically reformed. It is proposed that entitlement to Pension Credit, rather than Universal Credit, will be based on the qualifying age of the younger member of a couple, rather than that of the older which is what currently takes place. Age UK's paper on this change was previously circulated to the Committee. It is of great concern that this major change is happening while the qualifying age is also rising, thus ruling many thousands of new claimants out of the more generous Pension Credit system and placing them within the conditionality-based Universal Credit system. Conditionality will be disproportionately harsh on older jobseekers, who already face many barriers in securing employment.

We welcome the proposed move towards a flat-rate State Pension for all – however, we would like to see a more informed debate on this issue and we would also like to see it extended to cover all existing pensioners as well as new ones. A two-tier system would not serve the best interests of our older population and would only lead to confusion.

Action on Hearing Loss

Committee Inquiry into the Welfare Reform Bill

Submission from Action on Hearing Loss, August 2012

Action on Hearing Loss is the charity working to create a world where deafness or hearing loss do not limit or determine opportunity and where people value their hearing. We work to ensure that people who are deaf, deafened or hard of hearing have the same rights and opportunities to lead a full and enriching life. We strive to break down stigma and create acceptance of deafness and hearing loss. We aim to promote hearing health, prevent hearing loss and cure deafness.

Action on Hearing Loss welcomes the opportunity to submit evidence to this Inquiry and would be happy to provide oral evidence to the Committee.

Universal Credit

Application methods

The online channel, while cheaper and easier for many people, is not always the most appropriate. Many older and/or disabled people do not use the internet and do not have the skills or confidence to use it in a setting such as a job centre or advice office. Likewise, use of the telephone is not always appropriate for someone who has a hearing loss. For many deaf people, English is not their first language and they will require face-to-face support with form filling, with the help of an interpreter. The Department will therefore have to ensure that information is available in a hard copy format, that claimants are not contacted by telephone where they are unable to use one and that they have provision made for the supply of communication support professionals for appointments.

Conditionality

While many deaf and hard of hearing people do work and many more want to work, it is vital that the Department makes full provision for support in order that people can access employment. This would include educating employers, promoting Access to Work and ensuring that communication support is provided for all appointments and interviews. Sanctions should not be enforced if the claimant has been unable to access any form of work or work-based conditionality due to this support not being made available to them.

Personal Independence Payment

As with Universal Credit, we have concerns about the application process and about the need for communication support. For example, the amount of time a claimant is given to return their form is unlikely to be suitable to meet the needs of claimants with a hearing loss – it can take weeks to get an appointment at an advice centre and if communication support is required for this appointment, it can take even longer to secure a time which is suitable to the claimant, the advice centre and the communication support professional.

It is also vital that the Department is prepared for numerous communication support requests for people attending assessments and the fact that scarcity of this support in Northern Ireland may mean that appointments need to be rescheduled. Under no circumstances should the claimant be penalised if they are unable to attend an appointment due to lack of communication support.

Advice NI Briefing Paper September 2012

Welfare Reform

Advice NI has been heavily involved in debate and deliberation about welfare reform over the last number of years. The Welfare Reform Act received Royal Assent at Westminster on 8th March 2012 and introduced sweeping reform in the following areas:

The Act introduced Universal Credit; provided for the replacement of Disability Living Allowance with Personal Independence Payment for working age claimants; provided for amendments to Employment and Support Allowance (ESA), including time limiting the payment of contributory ESA (WRAG group) to 12 months; provided that lone parents with a youngest child aged 5 and over to claim Jobseekers Allowance or Employment & Support Allowance (with associated increased conditionality) as opposed to Income Support; introduced reductions to working age claimants under-occupying in the social rented sector; introduced uprating of Housing Benefit in the private rented sector based on the Consumer Price Index; introduced a benefit cap to be set at the GB figure (estimated at £500 per week for a couple and single parent households and £350 per week for single adult households); provided for the transfer of responsibility for Social Fund Crisis Loans and Community Care Grants to the devolved administration in Northern Ireland; and set out the Intention to move to a point where parents are supported to make their own arrangements for child maintenance wherever possible.

In Northern Ireland social security is a devolved matter therefore corresponding welfare reform legislation must be introduced separately. However in reality the benefit system is the same in Northern Ireland as in England, Wales and Scotland; with amounts and conditions of benefit also the same across the UK. Benefit payments come direct from Westminster so no money is taken from the Northern Ireland block grant. Figures released by the Department for Social Development highlighted that in 2009, £4,176,435,887 was claimed in benefit (including State Pension), all coming from Westminster. In summary, although the Benefit system is devolved, a system of parity largely operates with the rest of the UK.

Advice NI acknowledges the arguments in terms of (i) the need to maintain parity; and (ii) the need to do things differently in Northern Ireland. Advice NI believes that every effort should be made to explore the possibility of making substantive changes to welfare reform legislation to take account of Northern Ireland-specific circumstances. Additionally there should be a focus on operational flexibility: the capacity to adapt and deliver welfare reform tailored to local circumstances.

Universal Credit:

- Identify, establish and promote all the channels through which people can apply for Universal Credit;
- Identify how people will be differentiated between those with (i) difficulties accessing online technology; (ii) difficulties using online technology; and / or problems associated with a lack of confidence and trust in online technology to deliver for them;
- Ensure that people do not lose out in terms of their 'date of claim' when submitting their Universal Credit application;
- Ensure that people without bank accounts are assisted in a timely fashion, with a guarantee that they do not lose out financially when claiming Universal Credit;
- Ensure that claimants 'stuck in the system' will be identified in a timely fashion and given urgent assistance to complete their application;
- Ensure that timely alternative provision is put in place for those people unable to provide pre-requisite alternative passwords for example for online bank accounts;

- Identify how independent advisers will be enabled to support claimants with their application given the security risk associated with the necessity for claimants to provide online passwords for example for their online banking accounts;
- Provide for independent advice for people as Universal Credit is rolled out, for example where they are uncertain about what to do;
- Provide timely help and support for people who find their mortgage support terminated after 2 years; and for people with unsustainable shortfalls between their contracted housing costs and the support available;
- Ensure that the frequency of payment (weekly, fortnightly or monthly) is geared towards meeting the needs of the person and not the system;
- Ensure that the person to whom Universal Credit is payable is the appropriate person in terms of managing the household finances;
- Ensure that payment of housing costs direct to the housing provider is considered (i) at the request of the claimant; or (ii) at the discretion of the decision maker where appropriate;
- Explain how claimants are to be proactively 'risk profiled' and supported in terms of their inability to (i) access Universal Credit online; (ii) budget monthly; (iii) cope with benefit and housing payments combined;
- Ensure that the sanctions regime is implemented in a way which is sensitive to (i) the increased numbers of job seekers with significant work-limiting health conditions; (ii) the lack of affordable childcare; (iii) the lack of employment opportunities in the current economic climate in Northern Ireland;
- Ensure greater transparency between the numbers of job seekers and the number of opportunities available, given the increased conditionality regime;
- Ensure that the increased numbers of people with working limiting health problems receive appropriate help and support through programs such as the Condition Management Programme;

Disability Living Allowance / Personal Independence Payment

- The contract with the medical assessment provider in Northern Ireland should contain the following aspects: (i) annual reviews of performance; (ii) penalties for under-performance (including complaints, number / percentage of decisions based on the medical report that are subsequently overturned at appeal). This approach will ensure that the assessment provider is aware that service delivery is about process and outcome;
- Ensure that appropriate cases are 'screened out' so that those claimants with the severest disabilities do not have to go through the trauma of the entire assessment process; thus providing better service and achieving better value for money;
- Ensure that the medical assessment for DLA reassessment is sensitive to the needs of people with disabilities and not seen as a means of cutting expenditure;
- Ensure that the medical assessors have a minimum level of qualifications and experience, with specialist expertise in particular areas such as mental health, learning disability, PTSD, behavioural and personality disorders and addiction;
- Ensure that medical assessors allocate sufficient time for each assessment to allow claimants the opportunity to fully discuss their health problems and the associated impact on their daily living and mobility;
- Ensure that the medical assessment is audio recorded to ensure that any allegations of poor quality service provision can be fully investigated;

- Ensure that there is an effective process in place for collecting medical evidence from all available sources so that the PIP decision maker is fully informed and best placed to make a correct decision;
- Demonstrate how the medical assessors and decision makers have an understanding of the high level of ill health and disability in Northern Ireland, including mental and behavioural disorders (eg in terms of numbers, over 100 people per thousand receive Disability Living Allowance in Northern Ireland in comparison with over 50 people per thousand in Great Britain. Taken together with additional payments included within other benefits due to Disability Living Allowance being in payment (for example Severe Disability Premiums) we would fear that claimants in Northern Ireland will disproportionately suffer as a result of these proposals);
- Demonstrate how the medical assessment is more than a ‘tick box exercise’ and takes full account of the evidence provided by claimants;
- Ensure that there is an opportunity for claimants to verify that the medical assessor has fully recorded their evidence during the medical assessment;
- Ensure that there is a process in place to learn from feedback from claimants, advisers, decision makers and in particular appeal tribunals;
- Ensure there is a clear, effective complaints process in place in respect of the medical assessment with systems in place to ensure effective monitoring and corrective action;
- Provide for independent advice for people as DLA reassessment is rolled out, for example with application forms and potentially the appeal process;
- Ensure claimants have adequate time to return PIP application forms: there is widespread concern that a 4 week turnaround for return of Part 2 “Telling your Story” is inappropriate and needs to be extended to 8 weeks;
- Ensure that there is independent advice in place for people who do not move on to PIP and so see their income substantially reduced by the loss of DLA / PIP and moreover by the loss of associated premiums within other social security benefits;
- Ensure that there is a timely, effective system in place to allow people to dispute decisions, ranging from (i) a rapid reconsideration by a different decision maker; to (ii) an appeal hearing;
- Ensure that robust monitoring and evaluation systems are developed and in place prior to DLA reassessment focussing on what happens to people who lose some or all of their DLA (and knock-on impacts on other benefits);

Time limiting the payment of contributory ESA (WRAG group) to 12 months

- Ensure that there is a check in place to ascertain if the claimant should be in the ESA Support Group, and so not subject to the time limit;
- Ensure that claimants affected by the time limit are provided with a benefit assessment to ascertain whether other social security support might be applicable; or whether increases to tax credit awards might be appropriate;
- Ensure that claimants affected by the time limit are referred to independent money and debt advice services where appropriate;
- Ensure that claimants affected by the 12 month time limit understand that they can still be considered as being ‘incapacitated’ in terms of Working Tax Credit entitlement;
- Demonstrate that claimants affected by the time limit are not forgotten about, and indeed are prioritised in terms of accessing appropriate support to help them prepare to (re)-enter the labour market;

- Demonstrate that a timely disputes process is in place for new contributory ESA claimants which will ensure that success at appeal will be within the 12 month payment 'window';

Lone parents with a youngest child aged 5 and over

- Demonstrate how decision makers have an understanding that most lone parents are not out of the labour market from choice but often because of the complexity of combining work outside the home with the demands of sole parental responsibility;
- Additional flexibility must be built into the regulations to allow lone parents in these circumstances to restrict their availability for work;
- Ensure that decision makers consider whether appropriate and affordable childcare is available when making determinations about availability for work;
- Ensure that decision makers take cognisance of the current economic climate in Northern Ireland when applying conditionality;
- Ensure that no sanctions are applied to lone parents without senior management sign-off to ensure that the well-being of child(ren) are fully considered;
- Parents should be able to decline a job offer because they believe the childcare available is unsuitable to the needs of their child, without facing the risk of sanction

Under-occupancy in the social rented sector; uprating of Housing Benefit in the private rented sector

- Consider delaying implementation of the under occupancy penalty until suitable appropriate alternative accommodation is available for those affected;
- Where appropriate alternative accommodation is available, provide financial help to assist people with relocation costs;
- In order to mitigate hardship and homelessness for those unable to relocate, that consideration be given to further significantly boosting the Discretionary Housing Payment fund;
- Increase awareness of the existence of the fund amongst claimants;
- Review the criteria for payments from the fund in order to enhance the support available (for example who can be paid, how long they can be paid and how much);
- Defer application of the under-occupancy penalty where the tenant is willing to relocate but no suitable alternative accommodation is available;
- Produce annual report outlining the nature and availability of the social and private rented housing stock in Northern Ireland (regionally and locally);
- Produce annual report outlining: (i) the impact of under-occupancy penalties; (ii) clear information in relation to Housing Benefit payments in both the social and private rented sectors (including to whom benefit is paid – tenant or landlord); (iii) clear information in relation to homelessness statistics in Northern Ireland (regionally and locally);
- Develop and implement a strategy for increasing awareness and providing information to housing providers on the issues associated with welfare reform;

Responsibility for Social Fund Crisis Loan and Community Care Grant replacement scheme

- Ensure the maximum resources are available to the replacement discretionary support scheme;
- Ensure that an effective communications strategy is developed and implemented to maximise awareness about the existence of the scheme;
- Access channels to the scheme should be geared towards meeting the needs of clients and should include face to face and telephony channels;
- Ensure that there is an effective review / appeals mechanism in place;
- Produce annual report which will include outlining (i) the number and value of applications to the scheme; (ii) number and value of payments made; (iii) administration information such as processing times; (iv) information in relation to challenges to decisions; (v) an assessment of the scheme to assess it's effectiveness in serving it's purpose and meeting demand;

Child maintenance

- Rethink proposals to introduce charging for parents with care; with another possible option being to impose charges on whichever parent prevents a family based arrangement being reached;

General Points:

- Annual reports be produced by the Department for Social Development monitoring and evaluating the proposals outlined above;
- Bolster support for independent advice services so that people are assisted with the impact of welfare reform (including the provision of independent tribunal representation services);
- Bolster support for money and debt advice services so that people who find their income reduced are assisted if they find themselves struggling to cope with debt;
- Ensure that statistical modelling of the impact of welfare reform is based upon the most up-to-date information available, and not outdated pre-recession information;
- Ensure that regulations in relation to passported benefits in devolved policy areas such as Free School Meals, help with Health Service Charges and access to civil legal aid are agreed and in place prior to the introduction of Universal Credit;
- Social Security Agency monitor and report on the number and type of Universal Credit cases needing to be administered clerically 'offline' ;
- Ensure that flexibility is built into the IT system at the earliest possible point (for example in relation to frequency of payment, split payments in a household and direct payment of housing costs);
- The new Employment Programme needs to be resourced properly to ensure sufficient, effective support provided to: (i) people with significant working limiting physical and mental health conditions (ii) people furthest from the labour market for example those suffering from addiction; (iii) people suffering from labour activation policies of welfare reform for example those who see their mortgage support withdrawn after 2 years;
- The new Employment Programme needs to have a funding model which front-loads resources in light of the work that needs to be done with the 'hardest to help' clients and with those with potentially the longest working age lifespan ;

- There is a real potential for the proposal to introduce the Personal Independence Payment as a replacement for Disability Living Allowance to have a significant differential impact in Northern Ireland. In terms of numbers, over 100 people per thousand receive Disability Living Allowance in comparison with over 50 people per thousand in Britain. Taken together with additional payments included within other benefits due to Disability Living Allowance being in payment (for example Severe Disability Premiums) we would fear that claimants in Northern Ireland will disproportionately suffer as a result of these proposals.

Executive Summary

Age NI's key concerns regarding the introduction of the Welfare Reform Bill and its impact on older people relate to the following;

- Mixed age couples who will be assessed under Universal Credit
- Reduced capital limits under Universal Credit in relation to mixed age couples
- Unsuitable sanctions being applied to older working age claimants and the impact this will have on their older partner
- Restrictions with regards to occupancy and help with housing costs for mixed age couples
- The impact of PIP and lack of clarity around DLA reassessment for pensioners

Introduction

Age NI is the new, independent charity for older people in Northern Ireland. Our vision is to 'create a world in which older people flourish' and our mission is to 'enhance and improve the lives of older people'. Age NI welcomes the opportunity to meet with and brief members of the Committee for Social Development on the issue of Welfare Reform and how it will impact the lives of older people.

Background and context

The Welfare Reform Bill paves the way for wide ranging changes to welfare payments and whilst Age NI supports the Government's aim to simplify the benefits system in order to tackle poverty and provide better incentives to work, we have some significant concerns regarding some of the details of the Bill.

In Northern Ireland,

- 23% of pensioners are living in poverty and this figure is increasing¹ unlike other areas of the UK
- 61.5% of older people are living in fuel poverty in NI (up from 47% in 2006)
- 75.8% of people over 75 are in fuel poverty in NI (up from 55%)
- 83.2% of lone older people are in fuel poverty in NI (up from 62%)²

2 NIHE (2009) House Conditions Survey

Universal Credit and mixed age couples

Currently couples can claim Pension Credit as long as one partner has reached the qualifying age – which is gradually increasing in line with rises in women’s State Pension age. However the Welfare Reform Bill changes the age criteria so that in future, couples will only be able to claim Pension Credit when they have both reached the qualifying age.

We accept there is a case for treating everyone aged below women’s State Pension age consistently, in terms of expectations with respect to work, but we would oppose any move which would reduce the overall income of households where one member has reached the age of eligibility for pensioner benefits.

For example:

John is aged 61 and Mary aged 56. Currently they are eligible to qualify for Pension Credit and would be entitled to a Pension Credit payment of £217.90 per week. Under Welfare Reform, they would be assessed under Universal Credit and would only be entitled to a weekly income of £115.45 per week

This is a reduction in income of £102.45 per week.

There are potentially many variables at play but this could also be further reduced should one or both be disabled due to the proposed changes to severe disability premiums. Within Universal Credit, individuals will only qualify for either a disability or a carer element, not both. In addition, they could lose other benefits linked to the receipt of Pension Credit.

Benefit rates will be published later this year but standard rates are expected to be linked to current Jobseeker’s Allowance (JSA) or basic Employment and Support Allowance (ESA). Benefit rates for 2012-2013:

Personal allowance couples aged 18 or over ESA/JSA	£111.45
Pension Credit standard minimum guarantee couple	£217.90
Pension Credit standard minimum guarantee single	£142.70

It can be seen that if mixed age couples are treated in the same way as younger couples, a pensioner could have a higher income living alone and claiming Pension Credit than receiving Universal Credit as a couple.

Age NI has submitted a request to the Department for Social Development to estimate the proportion of couples who will be affected by these changes. A question asked recently in the House of Commons, Westminster revealed that approximately 15% of Pension Credit claimants in GB were couples where one partner was aged below 60. While this percentage applied to GB, the proportion of those affected in Northern Ireland is likely to be similar.

Age NI is concerned that the changes could affect the health and well being of some older people, will increase pensioner poverty, force people to use their retirement savings to support a younger partner and put pressure on family relationships.

Age NI therefore calls on the Department for Social Development to carry out a detailed analysis of the impact of treating mixed age couples as working age for benefit purposes including providing information about the numbers over time, the circumstances of those affected and changes in the overall level of financial support.

Capital

Pension Credit does not currently have a capital limit although savings over £10,000 are treated as providing £1 a week additional income for every £500 over this threshold. Under Universal Credit there will be a £16,000 capital limit with savings over £6,000 treated as providing £1 a week income for every £250 over this threshold. In the future those with a low income but over £16,000 savings who have a younger partner will be excluded from Pension Credit but will not be entitled to Universal Credit due to their savings. And those with £6,000 to £16,000 will face a much steeper withdrawal of benefit. As a consequence some older people will find they have to use up more of their retirement savings to support a younger partner.

Age NI calls for the absolute cap to be removed and the current tapered system to be maintained and that recognition be given to the importance of passport benefits accessed through Pension Credit.

The impact of older people not being able to access Pension Credit does not stop with the level of direct financial assistance afforded by Pension Credit but the extra vital assistance it opens doors to such as Cold Weather Payments, full rate rebate and free dental and optical care (for recipients of the guaranteed element). Although people of all ages can receive additional support linked to income such as help with health costs, these are provided at higher income levels for pensioners.

Claimant commitments

All Universal Credit claimants will have to sign a 'claimant commitment' specifying the actions they are to take in order to find work and the consequences should they fail to meet these targets. Relevant claimants will have to sign a commitment prior to the introduction of Universal Credit, which is broadly similar to that which is currently expected of them. Age NI supports the principle of having such a claimant agreement, but believes that for people with significant barriers, including long-term sickness, voluntary participation in job search activities is a much more effective method of engaging older jobseekers and should be used where possible.

In regards to mixed age couples, Age NI are concerned that, as the younger partner of the couple will have to fulfill all work related requirements and if sanctions are imposed, this will impact detrimentally on the older person who will lose out on payment of benefit through no fault of their own.

Age NI also believes that the new claimant commitment under Universal Credit needs to take account of the needs of people aged over 50. With the extension of working lives, it is important that all the necessary support is provided to help older workers both remain in and re-enter employment and that advisers should be trained to be more aware of the circumstances and aspirations of the 50+ age group.

We support the notion that those with 'regular and substantial caring responsibilities' will be exempt from the requirement to sign the claimant commitment. However, greater clarity is needed on the exact meaning of this. Furthermore, there are many jobseekers who may have intermediate level caring responsibilities who will be subjected to the same job search requirements as those who are available to look for work full-time.

Age NI recommends the legislation should include a graded system of conditionality that could be applied to such carers, similar to that which is included for parents of young children; or alternatively, that Jobcentre Advisers are given greater discretion to tailor claimant commitments for this group.

Tackling age discrimination is of great importance to helping older workers find sustainable employment, and we recommend that the Government continues to advocate the benefits of older workers and work with employers to help them develop an age-positive culture.

Housing

The Welfare Reform Bill restricts the level of Housing Benefit for tenants in social housing who are considered to have more rooms than they need. The Government said this measure would not apply to pensioners. However, once Universal Credit is introduced, pensioners with younger partners will be regarded as 'working age' and the rent restrictions will apply to the housing element in Universal Credit. We do not have information on numbers of mixed age couples who will be affected in the future but it is likely that many will have an additional room. Although they may no longer have children living at home, it is often very important to have a spare room for family visits and for relatives or friends providing temporary support at times of illness. There is provision for an extra room if someone has a non-resident carer who needs to stay overnight. However, this is unlikely to help people who need occasional support or whose needs may change in the future. And there is no concession for an extra bedroom for couples who need to sleep apart due to the health needs of one or both partners.

Housing costs for younger people will be included in Universal Credit and for older people, a housing credit element will be introduced into Pension Credit. The intention is that someone will be broadly entitled to the same amount of support as they would have been under Housing Benefit and there are provisions for other changes such as the introduction of a capital limit for the housing credit.

Age NI welcomes the principle of incorporating help with housing costs into Pension Credit as this has the potential for simplifying the claim process and could improve take-up. However, we are keen to see the details of these proposals and to be reassured that people will not be adversely affected by the changes.

Personal Independence Payment

The Bill makes provision for the introduction of the Personal Independence Payment (PIP) to replace Disability Living Allowance (DLA) which will have two components - the daily living component and the mobility component each payable at two levels. The Government has announced that reform of DLA is expected to reduce expenditure by around 20 per cent. Age NI do not disagree with the principle of looking at changes to DLA but we are concerned that reducing expenditure appears to be a major aim rather than ensuring disabled people have adequate support. DLA currently provides essential help with the costs of disability for many people and we have been contacted by older disabled people who are worried that they will lose the support they rely on. Age NI are anxious to ensure that the introduction of the Personal Independence Payment provides adequate support for disabled people aged over 50.

The new legislation states that a person will not be entitled to PIP after they reach State Pension age (or 65 if that is higher), although there is provision for exceptions to this. The explanatory notes say that an example of an exemption could be if someone is already in receipt of PIP before they reach that age. This is the current position with DLA and we seek assurance that people entitled to help with their mobility costs will not lose that help once they reach 65.

The original announcement and the Disability Living Allowance Impact Assessment refer to people of working age being reassessed but the consultation paper on reform stated that 'We are considering whether to reassess children and people aged over 65'. Age NI believe that people currently aged 65 or over receiving DLA should be exempt from the reassessment process.

We would also like clarity on whether the Government envisages that the introduction of PIP will lead to changes to Attendance Allowance for people disabled after the age of 65.

Age NI will be judging the success of the Bill by whether it delivers improved outcomes for people in later life – both those below the State Pension Credit age and those beyond State Pension Credit age. The Bill must provide everyone aged over 50 with the support they need to be independent.

Dear Dr Pelan

Thank you for your letter inviting Barnardo's NI to make a written submission to the Committee for Social Development with regards amendments to the Welfare Reform Bill.

The potentially adverse impact of welfare reform on vulnerable children, young people and families is an issue of concern for Barnardo's NI. We believe every effort should be made to identify potential policy variations that will help protect children in Northern Ireland and are part of the NI Welfare Reform Group which is seeking a tailored NI approach to welfare reform. Barnardo's NI is therefore making a response to the Bill as part of that Group, which is being coordinated and submitted on behalf of members by Law Centre NI.

If you have any queries, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Yours sincerely

Dear Sir/Madam

Welfare “Reform” – Public Consultation

1. This is a submission on behalf of the Belfast and District Trades Union Council, which represents trade union members from across Belfast and surrounding districts who are employed in both the private, public community and voluntary sector.
2. The Trades Council considers that the deadline of 19 October does not offer sufficient opportunity for interested parties to consider the contents of the draft Bill and offer opinions. Further, there will be insufficient time for the Committee to consider the responses and take into account the views expressed. This entire process is a perfect example of how not to do good government and represents a total disregard for the views of citizens, in particular those affected by the changes to be introduced.
3. In our view there needs to be a serious debate and greater honesty shown with the public in respect of the Welfare “Reform” debate. It is not possible to have any kind of meaningful or intentional community buy-in in such a truncated consultation period. It demonstrates a disregard for the most vulnerable and disadvantaged section of the community and illustrates the inadequacies of the structures at Stormont.

4. There is no point in political parties indicating that they object to this legislation in its entirety and then proposing to implement it. Equally there is no point in political parties indicating that they will not agree to the legislation unless there are changes to the “harsher” elements of the Bill if they do not spell out clearly what these “harsher” elements actually are in their opinion. Throughout the last few weeks there has been much bluster, but painfully little detail on what specific changes should be implemented.
5. To date there has been some talk about presenting an argument for fortnightly rather than monthly payments; Housing Benefit to be paid directly to the landlord (as it is currently for the majority of cases) and that there should be a choice of which claimant receives the benefit payments. Whilst agreement on these 3 issues, if achieved, would be welcome, let’s not kid ourselves. Those are not the “harshes” elements of this legislation. They will not make any material difference to the amount of money a family will receive and will not make any difference to the thousands of families who will lose out when these Benefit changes are imposed.
6. Whilst there clearly is a significant issue in respect of parity and the impact on the block grant if the changes are not forced onto people there is a requirement to be honest with people about what the parity debate is actually about. Politicians also need to do more to counter the anti working class diatribe emanating from the Belfast Telegraph and other media outlets which refer to people on Benefits as “work-shy” and other derogatory comments. People who are unemployed or disabled or with caring responsibilities deserve more respect. Politicians should also be more vocal in clarifying that these Benefit changes will impact on those who are currently unemployed, but also many thousands of families who are currently employed, through Housing Benefit changes and Tax Credit changes etc.
7. In recognising the difficulties that parity creates the manner in which this debate has been handled by politicians in Stormont contrast sharply with how other issues were dealt with. For example Stormont was collapsed over weapons which were silent; Stormont was collapsed over an informer who fell out of favour with his handlers; Stormont was threatened with collapse over the provision of funding for a police training centre. Strangely there has not been the same political conviction, strong tactics used or threat to the institutions issued to protect the most vulnerable in our community. It would seem that although politicians appear to agree that the impact of welfare "reform" is not to be welcomed, this does not really present any moral or political conviction dilemmas for the same politicians.

8. This welfare debate really is about how we view each other in society and whether politicians really consider that each citizen should be treated equally and with dignity. This was an issue around which politicians should have been able to unite in standing up for their constituents who will suffer in their tens of thousands.
9. There has been some recognition that taking out £500m (the share of the local pain from the welfare cuts programme) from the local economy will be devastating to not just those in receipt of benefit, but because they tend to spend their total benefit payments each week, there will also be a significant knock on effect to local small business and shops who will suffer as a result of the loss of Benefit incomes. Politicians have acknowledged this impact in the political debate. They just do not seem willing or able to do anything about it.
10. However, a similar monetary figure has also been publicised in relation to the actual impact on the block grant every year if the setting of corporation tax was devolved to the Assembly. Estimates of the impact range from £400m-£700m each year. In real terms, according to economists, this would equate to the loss of some 15,000-30,000 jobs each year (based on 40 job losses per £1m cut). This is apparently justified by hoping that foreign direct investment will, in 15-20 years time create approximately 18,000 jobs. This does not appear to create the same dilemma for politicians, with each of the political parties seemingly content to condemn another 15-30,000 workers to the dole queue to satisfy big businesses and multi-national corporations.
11. The irony of all that of course is that many of these companies such as Google, Facebook, Starbucks and many many others avoid paying their fair share of taxes anyway, so in reality the rate set for corporation tax becomes irrelevant as their corporate accountants have already devised ways not to pay any tax, regardless of what the rate is. In addition, you only have to consider the economic situation south of the border to realise that job losses in these same companies have continued over the last number of years despite the lower corporation tax rate.

12. Notwithstanding the above politicians have remained extremely tight lipped about where the impact of £500m-£700m on the block would be felt, or where job losses of the magnitude envisaged would be implemented. Strangely though politicians seem to be able to argue that they have to force through Welfare “reform” cuts because to do otherwise would see the block grant hit by some £220m (Minister McCausland reference on several occasions in the Assembly debate). That raises 2 distinct issues for politicians:-

- (i) The Assembly cannot find £220m to protect against welfare cuts but can apparently find up to £700m to offer tax cuts to businesses;
- (ii) If it can apparently find hundreds of millions to help big business (which we would challenge given the lack of debate and clarity to date) then why does the Assembly not have a serious political and public debate about the type of society they actually want to create. The Trades Council would welcome a debate of this nature, which would consider a discussion in respect of a society where big businesses and corporations are not rewarded, but where vulnerable citizens are protected.

13. It is said that a society can be judged by how it treats its most vulnerable. This Assembly has made it clear on which side of this debate it sits. No doubt the CBI and others will be congratulating them in the coming months.

14. The real anger in the community created by this proposed legislation is in response to the deliberate attempt to mislead the public into thinking that these changes are actually about encouraging people away from Benefits into paid employment. There are currently 64,000 people registered as unemployed with a further 30,000 or so actively seeking employment. There are also tens of thousands of people who are currently in receipt of Incapacity Benefit or Disability Living Allowance who will be forced off these benefits. This represents at least 120,000 people who will face sanctions as a result of a harsher benefit regime. The job market vacancy notices stands consistently at only 3,000-4,000 each month. This figure has remained relatively consistent for the last number of years. There are no jobs for people to move into. There is no likelihood in the short to medium term of any significant increase in the number of job vacancies. If the 15-30,000 from the cut in the block grant linked to corporation tax are added, this will represent economic devastation for increasing numbers of families. Politicians need to sit down and discuss the type of economic system which can deliver real jobs and real protections for its citizens. This Tory model which they intend to implement benefits only the rich.

15. Belfast Trades Council will not comment on the specific clauses in the Bill. To do so, in our view, would legitimise this "Reform" Bill as somehow a positive piece of legislation to assist unemployed people, people with disabilities or people in low paid jobs. There is no carrot in this legislation, just a very large bag of sticks.

16. If this legislation is introduced by the Assembly, with or without tutting, it will represent a collective failure of politicians to stand up for its citizens and will condemn tens of thousands of already vulnerable and marginalised people to greater misery and possibly abject poverty.

Yours sincerely

CBI submission to Northern Ireland Assembly Social Development Committee's call for evidence on the Welfare Reform Bill

October 2012

Introduction

CBI Northern Ireland is an independent, non-party political organisation funded entirely by its members in industry and commerce. Across the UK, the CBI speaks for some 240,000 businesses which together employ around a third of the private sector workforce. Our membership in Northern Ireland includes businesses from all sectors and of all sizes. It includes the majority of the top 100 companies, small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), social enterprises, manufacturers and sectoral associations.

CBI Northern Ireland welcomes the opportunity to comment on the Welfare Reform Bill as part of the Northern Ireland Assembly Social Development Committee's Committee Stage consideration of the Bill.

Commentary on clauses of the Bill

CBI Northern Ireland has no specific commentary to make, or amendments to propose, to any of the clauses in the Bill as we support the Bill in its entirety.

Additional commentary on the Bill

From an early stage the CBI has been very supportive of the UK Coalition Government's welfare reform programme and the Bill that was subsequently developed by the Department for Work and Pensions. We strongly welcome the proposals as they seek to get people off benefits and into sustainable employment and to tackle long-term sickness. We also believe the Bill adequately provides the protections and support for those who are genuinely unable to work as our welfare system, even in these difficult economic times, can and must continue to do.

However, we have been very concerned at the length of time it has taken since the Bill was approved at Westminster for it to be introduced in the Northern Ireland Assembly. While it is not our position to in any way comment on the political disagreements in relation to the Bill which have been alluded to in the media, we strongly believe that this Bill must be progressed due to the significant financial penalty to the Northern Ireland Budget if parity with Great Britain on welfare payments and welfare system is broken as well as any potential knock-on cost which may be incurred by way of the proposed changeover in IT systems.

CBI Northern Ireland is not suggesting that the Bill itself should not be subjected to the normal democratic principle of detailed scrutiny, and indeed we welcome the fact that the Bill is now at its Committee Stage, but rather that the potential consequences to any further delay of the Bill, or the possibility that the Bill might itself fall, are financially too high for anything other than the main principles of the Bill being ratified. We would strongly urge that the Committee take account of these potential consequences as part of their deliberations.

The £200 million bill that the Executive would be faced with should the Bill not be passed in its current form is completely undesirable given the certain negative impact this would have on planned resource expenditure by the Executive over the next two years. This would have a significant and hitherto unforeseen impact on public services and would undoubtedly have some level of impact on local businesses.

We very much hope that the Executive and the Assembly can come to a positive conclusion on this Bill as it provides for a necessary and balanced welfare-to-work reform programme and because the financial consequences of not passing this Bill would be devastating to Northern Ireland's budgetary position.

CBI Northern Ireland would be happy to discuss any aspect of the above with the Committee should its Members' so wish.

Dear Mr Maskey, MLA

In response to the Welfare Reform public consultation I would appreciate if you consider our recommendation that information relating to the processing of cross border claims for Universal Credit be clearly outlined in policy documents and working guidelines for the relevant staff responsible for processing claims.

According to EU regulations the social security rights of cross border workers frequently depends on their country of last employment and only occasionally their country of residence. Therefore specific consideration should be given to:

- Claims from cross border workers, living North and working South (e.g. real time HMRC information will not apply as cross border workers are required to submit tax returns once per year)
- Claims from cross border workers, living South and working North (e.g. currently cross border applications for Child Tax Credits regularly take in excess of 18 months)
- Claims from Northern Ireland residents moving South across the border (e.g. exporting Universal Credit)
- Claims from Southern residents moving into Northern Ireland (e.g. clear guidelines regarding entitlement to Universal Credit)

It is our experience that cross border claims for benefits and tax credits are subject to cumbersome red-tape and frequently result in lengthy and unnecessary delays for applicants and their families. We request that due consideration is given to significantly improving the application process for cross border applicants.

If you need any further information or clarification on any point please do not hesitate to get in touch.

Yours sincerely,

Annmarie O’Kane

Chartered Institute for Housing

Evidence for the Committee for Social Development on the Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Bill

Chartered Institute for Housing
19 October 2012

Introduction

The Chartered Institute of Housing (CIH) is the professional body for people involved in housing and communities. We are a registered charity and not-for-profit organisation with a diverse and growing membership of over 22,000 people – both in the public and private sectors – living and working in over 20 countries on five continents.

CIH is the only professional organisation representing all those working in housing. Our purpose is to maximise the contribution that housing professionals make to the well being of communities. This response draws on the experience and expertise of members and officers across CIH, including Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. CIH delivers a range of services and tools to help landlords and tenants prepare for changes to welfare benefits, and a great deal of our knowledge and understanding of impact and implementation comes from this work. These include guidance to help social landlords tackle under occupancy in preparation for the new penalties introduced by welfare reform and our new Welfare Reform Impact Tool.

CIH, in partnership with DWP and the Department for Communities and Local Government, have also created an online learning network for the housing benefit direct payment demonstration projects which enables organisations that are not part of the projects to be informed about the work and findings, to share in their learning and to exchange information and views about implementing direct payments. This network is also producing invaluable best practice from housing providers about how to support tenants through the changes to housing benefit and the welfare reform process.

Our comments on the Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Bill have been informed by CIH's expert on housing benefit, Sam Lister, who has published a number of papers on welfare reform (available from the CIH website). Sam is also the co-author of the respected Guide to Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit 2012-13 and previous editions.

This briefing focuses primarily on the housing related elements of the Bill. We have, however, included some comments outside of specific clauses in the Bill.

1. General comment on the Bill

- 1.1 In terms of the main principles, CIH has welcomed universal credit as an attempt to streamline the current complex benefits system. However, whilst the range and number of benefits will undoubtedly be simplified, it will be at the cost of creating a very complex new benefit (because it brings together a number of different elements) making it far from straightforward to administer and deliver in practice.
- 1.2 The lower rates of digital inclusion in Northern Ireland are a big issue in relation to universal credit and something that will have to be factored into the implementation here.

- 1.3 A significant concern is that the housing knowledge and expertise that is so important in effectively administering housing benefit currently will be lost in the universal credit system. Housing costs have to be related to the housing market and the availability of options like shared accommodation/HMOs and smaller social housing properties. Without that detailed knowledge in making assessments and supporting claimants, there is a risk that individual claimants will be adversely impacted.
- 1.4 Lack of information is also a key area for concern. CIH has not been able to do much of the complex modelling work that has helped assess the impact for the housing sector in Great Britain because the data is not available here in Northern Ireland. That means tenants and housing organisations here are at a disadvantage compared to counterparts in the rest of the UK because we do not have as clear or as detailed an understanding of the impacts of the welfare reform proposals. Looking to Scotland by way of example it is clear that the government has consistently sought to provide an evidence base for analysis, plan ahead to mitigate and manage the welfare reform changes and ensure that individuals and organisations have access to as much information as possible on the impact of welfare reform.
- 1.5 We also do not know enough about how universal credit will work or when that detail will become available – this is obviously problematic given that the first universal credit claims will happen in less than a year.
- 1.6 Without wishing to overstate the impact, it is also clear that the Welfare Reform Bill will mean major changes to the housing system in Northern Ireland and we will all need to work together to ensure that tenants are protected as much as possible and the changes managed effectively and in a timely manner. Involving stakeholders as much and as early as possible in the design and implementation of universal credit in Northern Ireland would be a means of utilising the specific knowledge and skills that exist in the housing sector and ensuring that universal credit adequately reflects the local housing environment.

2. Secondary regulations

- 2.1 The Welfare Reform Bill's heavy reliance on regulations is a concern, particularly given the short time frame before implementation. Given the serious nature of these reforms we would suggest that there must be as much detail provided as quickly as possible on the regulations. It will be important to ensure that there is proper time given for scrutiny of the regulations and debate in the Assembly.
- 2.2 We welcome the fact that the process of confirmatory resolution will be used to introduce a significant number of these resolutions and that this process will enable the Assembly to introduce amending regulations if they wish to alter regulations which are introduced in parity with Great Britain.
- 2.3 The lack of detail around a number of the proposals in the Bill is also worrying, again especially because of the tight turnaround between the primary legislation and a number of these measures taking effect prior to and during the introduction of universal credit. It would be useful to press the point that as much information should be made available as soon as possible as widely as possible to ensure that individuals and organisations can fully understand what this will mean for them and take the necessary steps to manage the changes.
- 2.4 Given these factors the Assembly may wish to consider asking for specific clauses to be included on the face of the Bill rather than accounted for in regulations. The purpose of these additional clauses would not be to alter the structure of universal credit, but to give greater confidence to the housing sector – including its funders – around the practical aspects of administration that enable landlords to help support their tenants and help protect their income streams.

- 2.5 A practical example is how the rules on payment of universal credit (assumed to be to the tenant in the first instance) combines with the rules about notice and access to information (presumably electronic notice to the tenant only). As principles these are fine, but in practice raise the question of how does a landlord make a judgement on whether to commence possession proceedings when a tenant tells them they have claimed universal credit but have no documentary evidence. Even if the landlord accepts that a claim has been made, how do they make a judgment about the likelihood that an award will be made?

3. Universal credit (Clauses 1 and 2) - Design and Implementation

- 3.1 As universal credit implementation progresses, CIH will continue to assess whether the housing aspects of the system will create an effective system of help with housing costs.
- 3.2 The process of designing and implementing universal credit poses a number of strategic and operational risks to provision of an effective system. At this stage we are still looking for assurance that these risks will not be realised, because of their potential impact on both the ability of lower income households to secure appropriate housing and on the ability of landlords to provide it.
- 3.3 Our current concerns are that:
- People and businesses that will be affected by the introduction of universal credit do not have enough information about its detail and operation, or about when this information will become available. This means that concerns about risks and design cannot be allayed, and that those affected find it difficult to schedule and deliver preparations for the impending changes. Perceived risks worthy of particular mention are that:
 - The IT system will not be reliable and simple to use, or there will be insufficient capacity in the system, which in turn will affect speed of claim administration, liaison with claimants, accuracy of decisions and fraud. There is worrying anecdotal evidence emerging from Great Britain that the online questionnaire may take as long as one hour to complete – and if a claim is only partially completed it will not be saved, meaning that claimants who have not successfully completed the process may have to begin from scratch.
 - Since universal credit rolls together a number of different benefits it will comprise of several different elements (e.g. standard, childcare, housing costs). At moment these elements are processed in parallel. There is a danger that the decision on an award will be slowed down to the slowest part of the process. Under universal credit, nothing will be paid to the claimant until everything within the claim has been decided.
 - The intention to reform multiple aspects of the welfare system and simultaneously cut expenditure will lead to the benefit available not covering tenants living costs, pushing people into hardship. This will potentially affect their lives quickly and severely, requiring further public/third sector expenditure
 - The scale of change, and the reduced likelihood that there will be a period of ‘steady state’ benefit operation, will make impact assessment complex and possibly lacking in value.
 - There are significant implementation costs outside of the DWP budget i.e. the time and financial cost of activities which landlords, tenants, and advice services have to undertake to prepare for and deal with the changes. The costs of transition borne by third parties are likely to be high and are unlikely to be rewarded with an equal return to them once steady state operation of universal credit is reached.
 - It is very unlikely that the new benefits system will be simple or stay simple. The continuing focus on further reforms and cuts (e.g. proposed £10bn further reductions, changes in eligibility for under 25s) creates a risk that the objective of creating and running a simplified system could very quickly be undermined. There are no safeguards in the universal credit system to prevent the type of tweaks and additions which have caused the current system to become so complex and unwieldy.

- The links between different parts of the implementation programme (e.g. the universal credit pathfinders and the direct payment demonstration projects) appear to be weak. This increases the risk that the final system will not work smoothly and it gives rise to many questions and concerns which hinder preparations for implementation by third parties.

- 3.4 CIH supports the broad aim that the claims process should be digital by default, not least because in a highly centralised system this appears to be the only way the required rate of decision making can be achieved without a backlog developing.
- 3.5 A move to online claims will be a significant change for a lot of tenants, many of whom do not have internet access. Moving people rapidly towards greater digital inclusion is beneficial for their social and economic opportunities, but we are concerned that the 'big bang' shift to online claiming could cause exclusion rather than inclusion.
- 3.6 The potential benefits of claiming online will not simply emerge, even with the increased government investment in internet provision and the promise of some high-street support for the new benefit system. Clarity on the resources that government will provide to the most excluded would be welcome – a good solution will help build capacity for local authorities, housing providers and claimants around provision of advice, support, and skills building.
- 3.7 The need to provide all requested documentation before a claim is accepted, rather than use the date of engagement as a starting point has particular relevance for those in temporary accommodation. Often homeless people have lost documentary evidence, National Insurance Numbers, Birth and similar Certificates. It is likely this population will be more disadvantaged if the impact of homelessness in this area is not recognised.

Suggested amendment:

That nominated third party verification can be considered in the first instance to activate a claim from claimant who is homeless or living in temporary accommodation, while supporting documentation is collected.

4. Housing costs (Clause 11)

- 4.1 This clause provides for regulations to specify the basis of the amount to be paid in respect of housing costs. It does not provide for benefit entitlement to be related to actual rents in the local housing market. This means that there is a potential in the future for a disconnect between housing costs within universal credit and actual rents to arise. The move from RPI to CPI will also result in reduced availability of affordable Private Rented Sector accommodation and increased homelessness. DWP estimate that CPI will rise by 2% a year and rent by 4%.
- 4.2 We would suggest that the Welfare Reform Bill should include provision for annual reviews to ensure that there is a strong correlation between housing costs with universal credit and actual rents in Northern Ireland. This would allow for housing costs provision to be amended where necessary, particularly to ensure that the lowest 30th percentile of properties in the private rented sector are affordable.
- 4.3 Although the extension of the shared accommodation rate was introduced in October 2011 through regulations, CIH would suggest that given the significant impact of this measure and the shortage of shared accommodation in Northern Ireland, this amendment proposed by the Lords is considered.

Suggested amendment:

Insert in Clause 11 after subsection (3)

Regulations shall provide that where the award for housing costs is restricted to the shared accommodation rate, this shall not apply for a period of 52 weeks for any claimant aged between 25 years and 35 years, who is not an existing claimant of housing benefit.

- 4.4 The Bill does not allow for housing cost run-ons, also known as extended payments, when claimants start work. Under the current system, housing benefit (or support for mortgage interest) continues for four weeks after an individual has found employment which helps claimants to transition from benefits to wages. We already know that the universal credit regulations being drafted in Westminster plan to abolish extended payments. CIH believes that the decision to abolish the current system of extended payments contradicts the government's objective of improving incentives for the long-term unemployed to take up work. Given the high levels of long-term unemployment in Northern Ireland, the Assembly may wish to consider continuing extended payments upon the introduction of universal credit and write this provision into the Bill.

Suggested amendment:

Clause 11 (5) Regulations may:

(c) provide for housing costs to continue for a period of four weeks after a claimant has found employment

5. Housing benefit: determination of appropriate maximum (Clause 69)

- 5.1 CIH is very concerned about the under occupation penalties for claimants living in social housing. Failure to exempt disabled people and foster carers is an issue that we raised in relation to the Bill in Great Britain and is a similar consideration in Northern Ireland. DWP has stated in its Explanatory Memorandum to The Housing Benefit (Amendment) Regulations 2012 that an additional £30m a year will be made available in Discretionary Housing Payments to offset the impacts of under occupation penalties on disabled people and foster carers. This additional funding is aimed at enabling disabled people to remain in their specially adapted homes even though they are under occupying them and for foster carers to account for the periods between fostering when a room may be unoccupied. However, by its very nature the Discretionary Housing Payment is discretionary and short-term. Whilst in the second instance financial support may only be needed for a limited period of time, in the first it would need to be for a sustained period. Furthermore this additional funding has not been ringfenced.
- 5.2 In order to minimise the extra bureaucracy imposed by attempting to mitigate both of these particular cases through the Discretionary Housing Payment, CIH would suggest that the Committee amend the Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Bill to exempt these two groups from under occupation penalties.

Suggested amendment:

New clause as per the amendment suggested by the Lords:

In the case of a disabled person, relocation shall not be required nor shall benefit be reduced, where adaptation has occurred and local services are provided, in order to deal with the disability.

- 5.3 The under occupation penalty also takes no account of local market conditions and the availability of alternative accommodation. For example there has been an emphasis on building family housing within the social sector in recent years, meaning that there will not necessarily be smaller properties available for people to move into.

6. Benefit cap (Clause 95)

- 6.1 Under the universal credit regulations, once the benefit cap is in place any money over and above the cap will be reduced from the housing costs element. Some households could in theory find their entire housing award reduced to zero. Although the discretionary payments system can be used to help households adversely affected by the reforms, we expect that because of the very high shortfall that will apply to people affected by the benefit cap most authorities will be reluctant to award DHP because of the very high attrition rate it will place on the budget. This will initially present problems around rent arrears, and then potentially around homelessness, as households are unable to find any accommodation.
- 6.2 It may be worth noting that, according to child benefit figures, Northern Ireland has the highest levels in the UK of families with four or more children (only London and the West Midlands have higher numbers of five children families). Although this measure has been estimated by the Department for Social Development to have a low impact in Northern Ireland, we do have higher levels than the rest of the UK for four children (30% more) and five children (25% more) families. We also make considerable use of the private rented sector to meet housing need and rents are higher than in social housing. Families receiving housing benefit/universal credit living in four bedroom properties in the private rented sector would be hit by the benefit cap (esp. in Belfast and the South East).

7. Rate relief schemes: application of housing benefit law (Clause 130)

- 7.1 This clause essentially allows for an interim scheme to be developed to replace existing forms of support for rates, as these will not be included within universal credit. This scheme will provide support for rates to households who are not receiving universal credit as well as to those that are.
- 7.2 The Assembly may wish to consider how best to influence the development of a scheme to ensure that people returning to employment or taking on more hours assume more responsibility for payment of rates at a manageable rate.
- 7.3 This would ensure that the benefits of a lower withdrawal rate of support (a key element of universal credit) are not lost. The key question is, at what rate will this support be withdrawn?
- 7.4 For example, housing benefit for rent and rates is currently withdrawn at a combined 85% taper (65% for rent and 20% for rates) of net income after tax credits¹. If help with rates under a new system continues to be tapered away net of universal credit then people in low paid work would lose the benefits of a single benefit (universal credit) that is withdrawn at a 65% taper of net income². This would mean that the combined withdrawal of universal credit and rates support would leave claimants with 10.2p for every extra £1 they earn as opposed to 23.8p if the only benefit withdrawn was universal. This is hardly an incentive to increase hours or take up work – the primary aim of universal credit.
- 7.5 Our amendment seeks to ensure that help with rates remains outside of universal credit (thus maintaining parity with the policy intent in Great Britain), whilst mimicking the amount of benefit that would be received if help with rates was included within universal credit (so that support for rates is removed at lower marginal withdrawal rates). If the new rates relief scheme is developed based upon the current system, rather than what would be the case if support for rates was contained within universal credit (as was advocated in Great Britain), then low income households returning to work or taking on additional hours will find that they very quickly have to take on responsibility for payment of rates. What we are suggesting would ensure that payment of rates is assumed at a level commensurate with universal credit, thus ensuring that households do not find themselves only very marginally better off in work or if they increase their hours.

1 Tax credits are withdrawn at a rate of 41% of gross income. So for each additional £1 of earnings, 73p is lost from tax, national insurance and tax credits (20p, 12p and 41p respectively) leaving 27p of which 85% is lost (22.95p) from the HB combined taper leaving 4.05p. This is equivalent to 95.95% rate of tax.

2 Universal credit is withdrawn at 65% net of tax and national insurance (32p) so for each £1 extra earned a further 44.2p is lost of the 68p left after tax and national insurance. Leaving 23.8p equivalent to a 76.2% tax rate.

Suggested Amendment:

That the current rates relief system is replaced by a scheme that will enable the same tapers to be applied to rates relief as to universal credit.

8. Supported Housing

CIH welcomes DWP's decision to remove the housing costs for supported housing from universal credit as it recognises the higher costs for this form of accommodation and the need for greater flexibility in providing support to tenants. However, this does still leave a number of issues to be worked out in relation to supported housing. For example, will removing these housing costs from universal credit mean that they are no longer demand-led and therefore mean a reduced pot of money if claimant numbers increase in the future.

- 8.1 CIH would suggest that a working group of supported housing providers and representatives is set up to work with officials in the Social Security Agency on how housing costs for exempted accommodation are to be managed within the new benefits context.

Conclusion

These are by no means CIH's only concerns pertaining to the Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Bill, the subsequent regulations and the planning and preparation for how welfare reform will be managed and mitigated. However, within the context of clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill and the potential to amend the legislation, we believe that they are important points to consider and hope that they will be of use to the Committee in its deliberations.

Welfare Reform the Churches Response

Introduction:

We acknowledge that a reform of our benefits system has been long overdue and needs to be fit for purpose. Welfare reform will impact on all members of society, but will hit those on lower incomes harder. We would accept that the Act – creates incentives to get people into work, ensuring that work always pays. The Act also seeks to protect the vulnerable and sees the need to deliver fairness to those claiming benefits and to the taxpayer.

The Churches also acknowledge that Government has enabled a review process, a process that has returned to the basic concept of Welfare... To many of a certain generation the term Welfare holds great stigma as did the Poor Laws. It was Beveridge who set out a plan to put an end to what he called the ‘five giants’ - Poverty, Disease, Ignorance, Squalor and Idleness. What Beveridge did not envisage was a society that would become totally dependent on benefits, or on a system that was accepting of high levels of unemployment and benefits. The review we acknowledge is a response to perceived notion that there are high levels of fraud, over claiming and unacceptable levels of under claiming. There would also be that wider acceptance that the system could not sustain the level of existing payments.

The Churches have always connected well with the overall welfare of its members and the wider community both as services providers and advice givers. Already we are dealing with increased levels of hardship, the opening of “Food Banks” and heavy demands of Pastoral Care are clear illustrations that the system is under pressure, if not at breaking point. The Prime Minister in launching his “Big Society” initiative stated:-

“I’ve been saying for the last four-and-a-half years that I want to Empower the voluntary sector, social enterprises, social capital, the Big Society – all the things that can actually help us build a stronger and bigger society in Britain.” The Churches have been doing this for generations – some of the great Christian Social Reformers of the mid-19th Century, awakened the social conscious of the day and made great things happen in the Church, showing that love of Christ has been the oxygen of Christian witness.

The Churches role and comments on the proposed reforms:

The four main Churches connected with the Welfare Reform Process in December 2011, when they met with Lord Freud (Welfare Reform Minister), the then Secretary of State Owen Patterson and Social Security Minister Nelson McCausland. They also hosted an event in the Assembly Buildings, which was addressed by both the Secretary of State and Minister McCausland. This event gave the wider church membership and community an opportunity to connect with the process at an early stage and also hear at first-hand what the Churches are already doing in this whole area.

The Church wants to stay connected to the process and respond in a way that will show the true Mission of the Church as it reaches out in a Christ-like way to those in need. We need evidence that someone has walked the walk with those who are considered most at risk. Walk the walk with - the lone parent with one pre-school child and one with special needs and a wheelchair user? Not to make the assumption too that claimants have internet access or a bank account? Consider seriously the “purse to wallet” concept and the possible risk to vulnerable partners and children. The impacts on both the Cared and the Careers given that 1 in 8 of our adults is in a caring role.

The introduction of Universal Credit to provide a single streamlined benefit that will ensure work always pays:

The Churches would acknowledge that the present system is overly complicated and needs to be streamlined. Claimants are familiar with the current process and language and will require time to adjust. Great anxiety has already been created by the process. The media coverage has dealt in the main with the negative aspects. We would simply request that all changes and reassessing is done in such a manner that it reduces potential hardship. For example, leave adequate time during the transition for payments to reach the claimants. There is no doubt that higher levels of employment will result in an improved standard of living and go a long way in improving self-esteem to those who secure meaningful employment.

We ask that particular attention be paid to: lone parents having to return to work and the impact that will have on Child Care; the lack of appropriate Child Care Provision that impacts on any "Return to Work Strategy"; the Carer coming off benefit to return to work after caring for an elderly parent or sibling resulting in a Care Package being negotiated. Although Universal Credit will be available to those in employment, it has also given rise to the term "working poor". It is encouraging that there will be more scope for part time employment in the overall application of a Universal Credit model. The Churches would also voice their concern that the proposal to switch to monthly payments, although parity is desirable, it will present major budget management for many families, and there is a clear need for our regulations to be flexible.

We recognise that the levels of fraud are low, although errors both by claimants and agency must be concerning? We also recognise the on-going work to simplify the claims process and to make it more user friendly.

Reforms to Disability Living Allowance, through the introduction of the Personal Independence Payment to meet the needs of disabled people today:

DLA Reform is creating the most anxiety – claimants who have been claiming for 10 or 20 plus years, now having to be assessed. Returning to employment would be desirable but in many instances would have to be linked to a return to work programme. Some recognition that Northern Ireland has a higher proportion claiming as a result of mental health issues, would also have to be factored in to the strategy, especially in the whole area of "fit for work testing".

Creating a fairer approach to Housing Benefit to bring stability to the market and improve incentives to work:

Already there is hardship being experienced by those who are losing out as a result of their benefit being reassessed. They receive less benefit, as a result of under occupancy. Neither the Northern Ireland Housing Executive nor Housing Associations have adequate housing stock for those seeking single accommodation, those under 25 are particularly vulnerable. There is some evidence to show that many claimants already have to contribute to the shortfall from their main benefit or wage. There is no recognition or provision for Carers or Foster Carers who require additional accommodation on an irregular basis.

Young Care Leavers, those under 25 years old in abusive homes or with other Special Needs could be marginalised within this proposal, resulting in possible overcrowding or a danger of being made homeless.

Questions to the Committee

1. What level of confidence has the Committee that the employment target of 25,000 new jobs contained within the Programme for Government can be achieved?
2. With high levels of under occupancy in the social housing sector how will accommodation for single people be achieved?
3. Given that 1 in 8 people in Northern Ireland preform a daily caring role how will the needs of the cared for and the carers be protected in the overall reform strategy?
4. How will the public be confident in the proposed assessment process for the new Personal Independence Payments?
5. What steps will the Department of Social Development take to reduce the high levels of under-claiming by those in most need?

In Conclusion

Although the Churches recognise the need for Welfare Reform it is very aware of the potential impact on our members and the wider community. We prefer to respond and not react, to accommodate change as opposed to block it. We therefore welcome the opportunity to respond to this consultation process. We will remain connected to the implementation process and continue to respond to the wide range of pastoral needs as they arise.

Citizens Advice

October 2012

1. Citizens Advice - Overview

- Citizens Advice is the largest advice charity in Northern Ireland working against poverty. In 2011-12, our offices handled 305, 337 issues and dealt with 84, 456 clients directly while in the same period there were 122, 109 instances of the public downloading information documents from our website.
- Citizens Advice has promoted services in Northern Ireland since 1984 and has unmatched brand awareness among the public here, with 98% of people aware of Citizens Advice (MORI Omnibus Survey Northern Ireland, June 2011).
- The increasingly complex nature of work undertaken reflects the effects of welfare changes, squeezing of household budgets and reductions in working hours on our clients during the current economic crisis.
- The service is delivered through an unrivalled network of 28 local offices and 100 other outlets. We have a physical presence in 22 council areas around Northern Ireland.
- Online services have increasingly become a major priority for the organisation, as we seek to meet the changing needs of clients and growing demand for such advice and information.
- The largest single increase in advice demand over the past 3 years is to our online self-help advice service - Adviceguide.
- In 2011-12, Adviceguide had 180,273 separate users who accessed a total of 542, 458 Northern Ireland specific advice items. This represents a high growth rate over the past three years, with respective increases of 55% and 51%.
- Citizens Advice works in partnership with a number of statutory, voluntary and community bodies on a range of programmes and projects. Some of our major partnerships include:
 - The 'Beat the Recession' project funded by Big Lottery
 - The Royal British Legion/RAFBF Benefits and Money Advice service
 - Macmillan CAB Welfare Advice Service
- These are in addition to a range of local initiatives undertaken by our member bureaux. This extensive service is delivered within a budget of £6 million. It is in part funded by our social economy arm, Citizens Advice Services Ltd.
- Citizens Advice Northern Ireland has formal links to Citizens Advice in England and Wales and a close working relationship with Citizens Advice Scotland (CAS). Together the three associations constitute the largest advice network in Europe, with over 60 years experience of providing advice and information to the public.
- Citizens Advice also works in partnership with the Citizens Information Board in the Republic of Ireland to provide cross border advice and information.
- The CAB network is tuned to targeting social need with regional spread, modern integrated IT infrastructure and skilled staff. We provide an efficient and cost effective channel for the delivery of information and advice to the most socially vulnerable people in Northern Ireland.

2. Citizens Advice Clients And Welfare Reform

Citizens Advice welcomes the opportunity to contribute to the Social Development Committee's consideration of the Welfare Reform Bill 2012.

Citizens Advice assists clients throughout Northern Ireland with a wide range of issues and problems. Many of those clients and problems will in future be directly impacted by the provisions of this bill.

In 2011-12 Citizens Advice:

- Assisted 84, 456 clients via bureaux on 305, 337 issues
- Handled 169, 687 benefits issues via bureaux (56% of all issues)
- Advised clients on 39, 571 issues relating to DLA
- Advised clients on 76, 602 issues across Income Support, Jobseeker's Allowance, ESA, Housing Benefit, Child Tax Credit and Working Tax Credit¹
- Delivered 106, 851 items of information on benefits to Northern Ireland users via our Adviceguide online self-help service²

In the context of this existing service delivery, it is anticipated that Citizens Advice will see a significant rise in enquiries from clients in relation to the material of this bill up to, at and during implementation of its provisions.

The experience of these clients, their issues and our advisers has contributed to the suggestions and observations in this response.

3. The Assembly and Welfare Reform

Citizens Advice believes that this bill should be considered by the committee in contemplation of a number of wider governmental aims and strategies, in terms of holding the executive to account and assisting the Department.

The Programme for Government commits the Executive to:

- deliver a range of measures to tackle poverty and social exclusion
- use the Social Protection Fund to help individuals and families facing
- hardship due to the current economic downturn
- improve online access to government services
- fulfil its commitments under the Child Poverty Act to reduce child
- poverty
- support people (with an emphasis on young people) into employment by providing
- skills and training.

Various statutory obligations come into play including:

- Statutory Equality Duties (Northern Ireland Act 1998, s75)
- Child Poverty Act

A number of governmental strategies and programmes should also be considered in respect of this bill, including:

- Social Investment Fund
- Social Protection Fund
- Child Poverty Strategy
- Economic Strategy

1 In addition, bureaux handled 8, 510 issues relating to the Social Fund.

- Anti Poverty and Social Inclusion Strategy
- Young People Not in Education, Employment, or Training (NEET) Strategy
- Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy
- Benefits Uptake Strategy
- Draft Housing Strategy
- Childcare Strategy

4. The Welfare Reform Bill and the Northern Ireland Context

Citizens Advice acknowledges that this bill largely mirrors the content of the Welfare Reform Act 2012 passed at Westminster.

Citizens Advice is aware of the devolutionary context of and debate around the bill, particularly in terms of the opportunities for administrative flexibility and the potential financial consequences of particular breaks in parity.

In that spirit, we have endeavoured both to provide specific recommendations in respect of various clauses, including some amendments as well as a range of observations and other criticisms which may require joint action with (or subsequent to) the UK Parliament. We hope that the Committee finds both to be helpful in its deliberations.

We believe that there is considerable awareness of certain proposed administrative deviations from the UK bill, namely:

- Payments made more frequently than monthly (by default)
- Payments to be issued to persons with actual caring responsibilities
- Payments to be made directly to landlords

Given the apparent consensus emerging within the Assembly on these issues, we have focused our commentary on other issues where possible. Similarly, there is significant awareness of the differential impact of the lack of affordable and accessible childcare in Northern Ireland compared to England, Scotland and Wales and the consequences of an online by default system (although we have considered these points as they relate directly to various clauses).

Citizens Advice broadly welcomes the stated key principles of the Welfare Reform Bill, that is, to encourage more people into employment, and to make work pay. Simplification of the benefit system is also generally welcomed, as the current process of administering benefits can be overly complicated and difficult for claimants to navigate.

However, the likely impact of this bill will be the reduction in benefit entitlement and payments for a many of the most vulnerable people in our community. Changes to benefits and taxation in the present 5 year period will hit Northern Ireland hardest of any region outside London.

Universal Credit is being promoted as a means to help people to move from benefits into work. Citizens Advice believes there is a disjoint between this objective and the reality of the unemployment situation in Northern Ireland. When unemployment is so high, the focus should be to invest in the wider economy and create jobs rather than focus on cutting access to essential financial support for many people in need.

The new benefit is named after personal independence – but Citizens Advice is concerned it will actually reduce independence. The experience of new assessments in ESA has been one full of problems, driven by bureaucracy-led decision making (rather than a people centred approach). Citizens Advice fears that PIP will extend that experience to people on DLA.

The UK government has said it wants to reduce disability benefit spending by 20%. Citizens Advice fears that this approach seems to be more about spending less on vulnerable people than realising their independence.

5. Clause by Clause Response

Part 1

Universal Credit

Clause 4

(3)

Citizens Advice welcomes this provision in anticipation that regulations mirror provision under Income Support, such as to provide for lone parents under 18, young people under that age who are estranged from parental financial assistance or experiencing an inappropriate home environment.

(5)

Consequent regulations should be tailored to reflect the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland including the movement of people between here and Great Britain and the movement of people between here and the Republic of Ireland.

(6)

We hope that regulations interpret “receiving education” and “treated as receiving education” to reflect the current exemptions in Income Support, eg., those who missed a key part of education due to illness or disability and those who, due to the nature of their disability, are receiving education later in life which most people would receive earlier

Clause 5

(1) (a) and (2) (a)

We are concerned at the potential impact of a capital limit of, say, £16 000 in savings for couples (per 2 (a)). At present, couples who exceed that capital limit do not qualify for income-related benefits but can be eligible for tax credits. Under UC they would not appear entitled to any help. Such a limit would penalise people in various categories such as;

- Couples who have saved for a house deposit who experience unemployment or another reduction in income. This will disproportionately affect couples from lower income backgrounds, as similar couples fortunate to receive a deposit from relatives would receive UC while self-accumulated deposit payers would not)
- Parents of disabled children currently receiving tax credits to help with the extra costs of a disabled child will lose out on that help if they have set aside savings to cover the future care needs of their disabled child
- Couples who experience illness, unemployment or redundancy by one partner will be worse off than at present. Currently, the remaining working partner is eligible for tax credits, but that help would be lost under UC. Combined with the loss of contribution-based ESA after 12 months for a Work Related Activity Group assessed ESA recipient, this could be calamitous to their finances and result in the wiping out of lifetime savings at a time in life when older age care needs are looming.

Clause 6

(1) (b) and (c)

The minimum periods of entitlement and waiting period that would be provided for in these regulations should reflect the objective of enabling claimants to move into work without disincentive, bearing in mind the possible opportunities available from a planned Real Time

Information system. These provisions should properly mirror the flexible, unpredictable and often-short term nature of the work opportunities that lower paid workers, in particular, encounter.

(2)

A period of seven days seems unduly long to secure entitlement. Citizens Advice recommends the following amendment:

Possible Amendment 1

After “exceed” delete all and replace with “3 days”.

Regulations should ensure that no waiting period applies in the event of a claimant losing entitlement to ESA, e.g. after the one year WRAG time limit passes.

Clause 8

(3) (a) and (b)

Citizens Advice considers that all statutory payments such as Statutory Sick Pay or Statutory Maternity Pay and benefits such as Maternity Allowance and the first 6 months of ESA payments should be categorised as earnings for the purposes of UC.

This would mitigate the likely adverse impact of UC on people who have been working and who are on parental leave or who are in the initial stages of illness. At present, these people are treated as if they are working, and hence qualify for Working Tax Credits. Aligning these groups as earning for UC purposes will help them to avoid debt and poverty as a consequence of the possible loss of entitlement in UC as proposed.

This comment also goes to Schedule 1 Paragraph 4 (3)

8 (3) (a)

The calculation of earned income in respect of people previously self-employed should reflect actual payments issued to the claimant rather than any assumed floor which may not reflect actual previous remuneration.

This comment also goes to Schedule 1 Paragraph 4 (3)

Currently in Northern Ireland war disablement pension, war widow's pensions and war widower's pensions are disregarded in full when assessing entitlement to Housing Benefit and Rate Relief, though they are treated as income for other means tested benefits. A recent client, who is 75% disabled, was able to receive full Housing Benefit once his £900 per month service disablement pension was discounted. Citizens Advice recommends that in the regulations that prescribe how income is calculated and taken into account in Universal Credit these pensions remain disregarded in the same way as personal injury payments and special compensation schemes (see DWP Universal Credit Regulations 2012, Part 6, IC 10 and 13).

Clause 10

At present families with a disabled child may be entitled to receive additional financial support through the disability element of child tax credit, currently worth £57 per week. Under UC the proposal is to cut the level of this financial support in half to £28 per week unless the disabled child is receiving the high rate of care component of DLA or is registered blind. It is very difficult for parents to find work with suitable hours to fit in with caring for their disabled children. This is particularly true for lone parents. Frequently parents have to pay more for childcare for their disabled children.

Citizens Advice would like to see additional support provided for working parents of disabled children by increasing the rate of childcare support for these families to 80%.

(3) and (4)

Citizens Advice is concerned that regulations will provide for an under occupancy provision ('bedroom tax'), following the changes scheduled for Housing Benefit. However, UC provisions will differ for example protection on death will no longer run for 53 weeks but benefits will run only for 3 months. There will also be less protection for mixed age couples where one is not above pension age and the younger partner is not already receiving Pension Credit.

University of Ulster research that highlights a shortage of single-bed housing units available. The research also shows that Northern Ireland does not have the social housing mix that would enable people to move types of accommodation. This bill will penalise people for not moving when there will not be homes into which they can move

Overall, Citizens Advice considers that the under-occupancy penalty should not apply (i) for a period of 2 years after a change in circumstances (e.g. children leaving home) and (ii) in any circumstances where suitable alternative accommodation is not available, given the nature of housing demand and the social housing stock in the region.

There is a wider point about the continued priority given by Housing Associations to build accommodation with two or more bedrooms, which fails to take account of the increased need for HMOs and single bedded dwellings that is likely from the bill.

See also the comments on clause 69

(3) (a) and (4)

Citizens Advice has previously expressed concerns about the limiting of Support for Mortgage Interest to 2 years since 2011 and reiterates that concern in respect of possible UC provisions. There problem is compounded by the high probability that low income home-owner families are in negative equity and consequently unable to move to a cheaper property.

Clause 12

(1), (2) and (3)

- The calculation of an award of universal credit is to include amounts in respect of such particular needs or circumstances of a claimant as may be prescribed.

Citizens Advice is concerned that the support offered by the Severe Disability Premium to severely disabled people who live alone and have no one caring for them is not going to be offered under Universal Credit. While DLA and its successor PIP is available to meet the additional costs that all disabled people meet, SDP helps with the extra costs faced by people who live on their own and may need to pay others to do things for them, including essential personal care. The extra payment enables them to continue to live independently.

Citizens Advice notes that the Explanatory and Financial memorandum states that, in reference to this clause, 'It is also intended to provide an amount for working claimants who pay for formal childcare in respect of a qualifying child or children. Regulations may specify or provide for the determination or calculation of the rates of any such additional amounts'. The provision of assistance with childcare is to be contained within the regulations, rather than guaranteed through the Bill. It is unclear at this stage what assistance is to be offered in terms of extra elements to assist with childcare for those in receipt of Universal Credit.

It is critical that the level of support for childcare within UC is sufficiently generous to make work pay for parents on low incomes who rely on formal childcare and for parents with disabled children. This is particularly important given that most support for childcare costs at present is delivered through WTC, which will subsumed into the UC system (and the WTC assistance was already reduced from 80% to 70% of eligible costs in 2011).

Citizens Advice would like further clarification on the arrangements that will affect parents with severely disabled children. Formal childcare for those children is specialised and generally more expensive. Also, such caring parents may prefer to work for a smaller number of hours per week. It would be helpful to have clarity on the availability of suitable support for those parents who seek to engage in work outside home.

Generally, Northern Ireland at present does not have the same level of standard of childcare provision as England and Wales, which may be problematic for those wishing to return to work, but who are unable to secure adequate, affordable childcare. Citizens Advice is concerned that this Bill will introduce new sanctions on lone parents in the absence of the childcare support that is essential if they are to take up employment. Any fair approach to sanctions must consider the lack of employment opportunities, together with the lack of affordable childcare.

Clause 14

Citizens Advice sees opportunities in the idea of a claimant commitment. However, this should be based on a partnership approach between citizens and the state. For example, undertakings should be reflective of the experience, skills and circumstances of the claimant as well as the relevant local labour market.

We therefore suggest the following amendment:

Possible Amendment 2

Clause 14 insert new Clause 14 (6)

“(6) A claimant commitment shall be drawn up in consultation with the claimant and have due regard to his/her skills, knowledge and experience.”

Citizens Advice notes that there is little evidence to prove sanctions are effective in moving claimants closer to the labour market.³ There is also an apparent injustice if sanctions remain in place even after a claimant (re)enters work. This is a disincentive to engagement and contrary to the purported aims of the bill.

In the context that sanctions are applied, a useful innovation would be to ensure that the reasons for them are properly conveyed to and understood by the claimant for developmental purposes (and potentially to enable challenge).

3 (c)

Citizens Advice would wish to see further detail on how “improving personal presentation” will be interpreted and imposed. There is particular scope for subjectivity in the interpretation of such provisions, and regulations and guidelines should be clear to both frontline officials, claimants and decision reviewers. Such regulations and provisions should also be particularly framed and implemented in adherence with obligations under Article 19 of the Human Rights Act.

Clause 17

As with the claimant commitment, undertakings expected should be reflective of the experience, skills and circumstances of the claimant as well as the relevant local labour market.

Clause 18

Citizens Advice wishes to see regulations that may impose requirements on a claimant to be “immediately” available for “more paid work or better paid work” crafted in a way that ensures that they are not held in contravention of commitment as a result of obligations to an existing employer, for example immediate availability may be restricted due to a notice periods

Clause 23

Citizens Advice welcomes the potential support offered to claimants through these additional interviews. However, scheduling of interviews should be done after consultation with the claimant in order to take reasonable account of circumstances, e.g. timing interviews to facilitate existing work, caring, medical or child care responsibilities.

To that effect we suggest the following amendment:

Possible Amendment 3Clause 23 (2) after “take place” insert

“in consultation with the claimant and with reasonable regard to the circumstances of the claimant”.

24 (7)

Citizens Advice welcomes the special provision offered to victims of domestic violence and would seek for the extension of this provision to those who have to be rehoused due to hate crime. We would also advocate that arrangements for the payment of housing costs to a refuge/hostel or landlord in instances of domestic violence be continued as currently exist for Housing Benefit.

We suggest the following amendments for consideration:

Possible Amendment 4Clause 24 (7)*Line 3 after “domestic violence” insert

“, or a victim of hate crime resulting in a need to be rehoused”

And Possible Amendment 5Insert new Clause 24 (9)*“ (9) For the purposes of subsection (7) -

- (a) “hate crime” has such meaning as may be prescribed and shall include grounds of ethnicity, sexual orientation, gender identity, religion, political opinion or disability.
- (b) “victim of hate crime” shall be defined by regulations under subsection (7)
- (c) “resulting in a need to be rehoused” shall be defined in regulations
- (d) a person has recently been a victim of hate crime if a prescribed period has not expired since the crime was committed or since the victim became aware of the crime.

Clause 26

(8) (a)

Citizens Advice again notes that there is little evidence to prove sanctions are effective in moving claimants closer to the labour market.⁴ There is also an apparent injustice if sanctions remain in place even after a claimant (re)enters work. This is a disincentive to engagement and contrary to the purported aims of the bill.

26 (8) (b)

Citizens Advice recommends that this provision be deleted in order to encourage engagement with the labour market. This change would incentivise work while encouraging claimants to remain in work for at least as long as the period of sanction applied.

Explanatory Memorandum para 97 (refers to Clause 26)

This indicates that the sanction decision will be appealable but not the decision to impose work-related or connected requirements of whether the client has good reason). This may raise issues about the right to fair process. Also, it is unclear how a decision can be taken on an appeal against a sanction without consideration in many instances of the question of good reason.

Clause 28

(f) The provision around recoverability of any hardship payments should have due regard to the imperative to incentivise work. Any decisions to recover hardship payments are likely to deter the entry of claimants into the workplace.

Clause 33

Citizens Advice has some concerns about the probable arrangements for transitional support. In particular, the cash top-up will be eroded by inflation unless it is index linked. Also, the top-up will be lost as a result of (as yet undefined) changes of circumstances. This might penalise people for having children or disincentivise claimants from taking up work, for example, dependent on the nature of regulations.

Part 2

Working-Age Benefits

Clause 45

(3) (4) and (5)

As in the case of Universal Credit, Citizens Advice sees opportunities in the idea of a claimant commitment. However, this should be based on a partnership approach between citizens and the state. For example, undertakings should be reflective of the experience, skills and circumstances of the claimant as well as the relevant local labour market.

In that spirit, Citizens Advice would suggest the following amendment:

Possible Amendment 6

Clause 45 (4) [Article 11 (2) (a)] [line 24];
after “(a) be prepared by an employment officer” insert

“in consultation with the claimant”

Citizens Advice also suggests a similar amendment to the provision for variation of the claimant commitment:

Griggs J and Evans M, Sanctions within conditional benefits systems; a review of the evidence, December 2010.

Possible Amendment 7

Clause 45 (5) [Article 12 (1)] [Line 40];

After “officer” insert:

“in consultation with the claimant”

Citizens Advice notes that there is little evidence to prove sanctions are effective in moving claimants closer to the labour market. In the context that sanctions are applied, a useful innovation would be to ensure that the reasons for them are properly conveyed to and understood by the claimant for learning purposes (and potentially to enable challenge).

As with the claimant commitment, undertakings expected should be reflective of the experience, skills and circumstances of the claimant as well as the relevant local labour market.

Clause 47

As per Clause 28 and Universal Credit, the provision around recoverability of any hardship payments should have due regard to the imperative to incentivise work. Any decisions to recover hardship payments are likely to deter the entry of claimants into the workplace.

Clause 50

(8C) (3) (d) and (e)

Action required in respect of employment programmes, work experience and work placements should have specific focus, be tailored to the previous experience, skills and likely employment opportunities of the claimant and be time limited. This should be guided by an approach (i) to ensure that there is a tangible employment related outcome to the claimant, (ii) to minimise displacement of paid employment in the local labour market and (iii) to prevent possible abuse by employers of such a scheme.

(8J) and (8K)

As previously stated, Citizens Advice is unaware of convincing evidence to prove sanctions are effective in moving claimants closer to the labour market.

(1)

Citizens Advice strongly disagrees with the introduction of time-limiting of CB ESA for those in the work related activity group. Many of the people affected will have paid their national insurance, will have been let go from their occupation due to ill-health and will be unable to get other work. Having understood that national insurance guaranteed them a wage replacement when they were unable to work, they are now having that guarantee removed.

A typical client coming to us for advice would be a man in his 50s who had worked all his life in the shipyard, but is no longer able to work because of back pain. Given his age and the economic climate, it is unlikely that he will find work again to suit his disability. He will have prudently saved for his retirement but this will now count him out of IB ESA. He will therefore have to use up his capital at much earlier time of his life rather than the retirement he has saved up for.

We argue that it is wholly unreasonable, if time-limiting proceeds, to count days occurring before the coming into operation of this section towards the 365 days time-limit. Anyone due to have a reduction in their income of up to £105 per week needs adequate time for financial planning. In Great Britain letters were sent out to claimants who might be affected in the year preceding the introduction of the regulation. No such notification has been given here. We therefore recommend that, at the very least, the 365 days limit starts to run from the time that the claimant is notified of the change in regulations.

Clause 53

We welcome this clause, which allows for people who have been put into the WRAG to re-establish their entitlement to CB ESA if they are moved into the support group. We would like to see further details of this amendment, particularly whether there are any time limits on linking to a previous claim and what the requirements are for demonstrating a continuous underlying claim.

Clause 54

We are concerned with discontinuation of CB ESA in youth. While many of these claimants will qualify instead for IB ESA, if they have a partner who works they will no longer have access to their own income and be wholly dependent financially on their partner.

Clauses 55 to 58

Citizens Advice sees opportunities in the idea of a claimant commitment. However, this should be based on a partnership approach between citizens and the state. For example, undertakings should be reflective of the experience, skills and circumstances of the claimant as well as the relevant local labour market.

We therefore suggest the following amendment:

Possible Amendment 8

Clause 55 insert new Clause 55 (3) (1C) (6) after “prescribed.” Insert

“(6) A claimant commitment shall be drawn up in consultation with the claimant and have due regard to his/her abilities, skills, knowledge and experience.”

And renumber accordingly.

Citizens Advice notes that there is little evidence to prove sanctions are effective in moving claimants closer to the labour market. There is also an apparent injustice if sanctions remain in place even after a claimant (re)enters work. This is a disincentive to engagement and contrary to the purported aims of the bill.

In the context that sanctions are applied, a useful innovation would be to ensure that the reasons for them are properly conveyed to and understood by the claimant for developmental purposes (and potentially to enable challenge).

(1) and (2)

Citizens Advice is concerned at the reduction of the age of the youngest child from 7 to 5 for eligibility for income support on the grounds of lone parenthood. There are two significant differences between Northern Ireland and Great Britain: we have much poorer childcare provision; and children in P1-3 have a shorter school day, most finishing at 2.00pm rather than in the later afternoon. It is therefore reasonable that there should be different rules here.

In addition, the Department predicts that the change in lone parent conditionality will save £11.73m in 2012/2014. However, it is unclear if these stated savings are net of a corresponding increase in the JSA budget which will occur when lone parents of 5 and 6 year old children are unable to find work which fits in with their childcare responsibilities.

Clause 60

See comments in respect of Clause 16 and Clause 17.

Part 3

Other Benefit Changes

Clause 69

As already stated in relation to clause 11, we are concerned that housing benefit claimants in the social rented sector will be penalised for under-occupancy when there are not available Housing Executive or Housing Association homes for them to move into. Choice is particularly limited in rural areas.

While the policy objective is to contain Housing Benefit expenditure in the social rented sector, the DWP impact assessment⁵ for GB is unable to predict reliably how much the savings will be. Because of the shortage of one and two-bedroom properties in the social rented sector, some tenants may have to move into the private rented sector, but because rents in the private sector are higher, in many cases Housing Benefit entitlement will be higher, thus no savings will be generated. The survey also points to the associated costs for local authorities of implementing the policy.

Citizens Advice advocates delaying the implementation of the bedroom tax until it can be seen from the experience in GB whether it does generate significant savings without excessive associated costs. The DWP research suggests that around 35% of claimants in GB are likely to fall into arrears if their Housing Benefit is reduced. There is no reason to assume the figure would not be the same in Northern Ireland.

Clauses 70 to 73

Citizens Advice welcomes the SSA's intention to maintain both loans and grants in the successor to the Social Fund and to widen eligibility to include those on contributory benefits and people in work but on a low income. We also welcome the fact that there will be no reduction in the fund's budget and that it will be ring-fenced for the next two years. We would like reassurance that this ring-fencing will be maintained throughout the period of transition to Universal Credit, when there will be increased demand on the fund.

Clause 75

This clause will allow for the introduction of a capital limit for State Pension Credit, potentially in line with the £16,000 that currently exists for means-tested benefits. This will have a prejudicial effect on older people who may have accumulated savings throughout their working lives. There is currently no upper limit, and Citizens Advice recommends a continuation of no capital limit for State Pension Credit. Having such a limit would disincentivise saving.

Citizens Advice calls for further consideration of the impact of Welfare Reform on older people. Grandparents often assume care of their grandchildren, and financial support will be paid through Pension Credit.

Part 4

Personal Independence Payment

Citizens Advice welcomes provision of funds to contribute to the extra costs of overcoming the barriers faced by long-term disabled people to leading full and active lives.

In Northern Ireland, there are over 40,000 people currently⁶ claiming Employment and Support Allowance and over 189,000 receive DLA. Westminster has stated an aim of reducing disability spending by 20%—this approach seems to be more about spending less on vulnerable people than about ensuring independence for those living with disabilities.

5 <http://www.dwp.gov.uk/docs/social-sector-housing-under-occupation-wr2011-ia.pdf>

6 DSD, May 2012

There is a lack of detail in the Bill, with most of the significant provisions being left to regulation. Some of these are elaborated in the accompanying explanatory and financial memorandum. Important points, which have been subject to consultation, remain unresolved. The regulations need to be fully scrutinised before the Bill is passed into law.

Citizens Advice calls for the following to be taken into consideration in Part 4 of the Welfare Reform Bill: Personal Independence Payment.

(3)

Currently an individual can be absent for up to 26 weeks for any reason before they lose entitlement to DLA. The DWP has proposed that after 4 weeks abroad DLA/PIP should no longer be payable and entitlement should end, except if the absence is for medical treatment when the period of absence can be extended to a maximum of 26 weeks. We contend that the 26 week period should not be shortened. During times of exacerbation of their condition individuals may spend time with family across the border, others may have periods of work or study out of Northern Ireland.

The descriptors for the activities have been subject to consultation (April 2012). We have expressed various concerns about the impact of proposed descriptors⁷. Again, it is important that the regulations are fully scrutinised. As yet we are unsure what the final descriptors will be.

It is crucial that assessment for PIP learns from the problems of ESA. We want to avoid the stress and expense of the numerous appeals where benefit has been denied. The regulations must ensure:

- that appropriate claimants should be given an award on the basis of their submitted evidence, thus avoiding the expense and stress of a face-to-face interview. Particularly for claimants migrating from DLA, a combination of their medical details and the supporting evidence from a healthcare professional who knows them, could obviate the need for a short impersonal face-to-face interview with an assessor, whom it has been shown from ESA has made an incorrect assessment.
- that the medical assessments are carried out by assessors who understand the particular conditions of the people with disabilities they are examining and the impact these conditions have on daily living and mobility. This is particularly important when it comes to mental health conditions.
- that claimants have a chance to look at the assessor's report at the time of assessment and note any disagreement. The ESA appeals process has shown many cases where the claimant has disagreed with what the Health Professional says happened at the interview, resulting in appeal in moving from 0 or low points to double those required.
- that all relevant medical evidence is reviewed at an early stage, and additional evidence requested where necessary, so that the decision-maker is fully informed before making the determination.
- that the assessments are carried out in a sensitive manner in a place appropriate to the individual. Recent problems that have emerged with ESA assessments – lack of home visits; because Royston House is not suitable for people with poor mobility, some Belfast clients have been sent to Ballymena and Craigavon, which can increase their discomfort, distress and stress. Providers in England are offering assessments in GP surgeries and up to 60% home visits, which is much more suitable for claimants.
- that a monitoring system involving stakeholders regularly reviews the performance of the contracted assessors and the decision-making. (see clause 88).

(4)

We welcome that the regulations under this subsection will be subject to the confirmatory resolution procedure. These regulations have been subject to consultation (April 2012). We have expressed concern that:

- Enhanced mobility will be available to people who use an aid, including a wheelchair, only if they also require supervision or help. This fails to recognise the additional expense involved in being a wheelchair user, an expense which DLA up to now has been designed to meet.
- With a 20% cut in the disability budget, there will inevitably be some claimants currently in receipt of higher rate DLA who will not qualify for enhanced PIP. If the passported benefits of the Motability scheme, road tax and Blue Badge entitlement are dependent on the higher rate of enhanced mobility PIP, these clients will have their mobility seriously affected. There must be an alternative route in place to access these passported benefits.

See comments on Clause 77 (5).

(6)

The Explanatory Notes at paragraph 370 state that, "If a person is over pensionable age, it is not normally the case that they would be entitled to the mobility component". We would like clarity here that if an individual is already in receipt of PIP mobility, they will continue to receive it once they reach pensionable age as is currently the case with DLA.

Clause 79

(1) to (3)

Already discussed above under the assessment criteria. These regulations need to be further scrutinised before passing into law.

(4)

It is stated that most individuals will be asked to attend a face-to-face consultation with a trained independent assessor, such as a healthcare professional, as well as providing information. Learning from the experience of ESA, we recommend that the healthcare professionals do not ignore, as they do currently, additional information such as X-rays and doctors' letters that an individual may bring with them, and that they flag up in their report to the decision maker if they think that additional information would be useful in making a decision. This should reduce the number of claims going to appeal.

(5)

The regulations may include provision- (a) For a negative determination to be treated as made if a person fails without a good reason to comply with a requirement imposed under subsection (4)

Citizens Advice is concerned with the claims procedure. There is a two-part form, the first of which will be by phone, initiating the claim. An advisor will only be allowed to do this for the claimant if they have the client sitting beside them, unlike the present DLA claim. The claimant will then be sent out a barcoded second part, which has to be returned to complete the claim. If claimants need help through each part of this process, they may not be able to complete the forms in the prescribed time, particularly with the increasing waiting times in advice agencies for form completion.

There is also widespread refusal among GPs to complete benefit forms, with some asking for a fee from the client. Clients must not be penalised for GPs' non-cooperation.

Citizens Advice has concerns that negative determinations may result in financial penalties for those who, for example, may suffer from mental health conditions that can act as a barrier in communicating with others, or engaging in the assessment and claiming process. Learning from the IB/ESA migration process, regulations must allow for protection for those who, because of a medical condition, have difficulties in engaging with the system by taking their mental health into account when determining what constitutes a good reason for failure to comply.

Regulations under section 79(2) may provide that in prescribed cases the question of whether a person meets “the required period condition” for the purposes of section 77(1) or (2) or 78(1) or (2) to be determined by reference to- (b) whether, as respects every time in the next 9 months, it is likely that the relevant ability were to be assessed at that time that ability would be determined to be limited or (as the case may be) severely limited by the person’s physical or mental condition.

Citizens Advice calls for this to be amended so that if a claimant initially fails to meet the prospective “required period condition” but their disability persists so that in hindsight they would have met the condition, the claimant will receive an award backdated to when they first applied.

We call for this amendment as, with the proposal that the prospective test should be extended from 6 to 9 months, it can be difficult to predict whether a condition will persist for particularly in the first few months after, for example, a complex fracture or the onset of depression. A claimant should not be disqualified from a personal independence payment by an optimistic prognosis nor should a doctor be put in the position of having to be unduly negative in order for the claimant to qualify. If the prognosis turns out to be wrong, the claimant should be able to get the award instated without a time penalty or need to reapply.

A person to whom a relevant EU Regulation applies is not entitled to the daily living component for a period unless during that period the United Kingdom is competent for payment of sickness benefits in cash to the person for the purposes of Chapter 1 of Title III of the Regulation in question

Citizens Advice is concerned that this clause will negatively impact on those claimants who live in Northern Ireland but work in the Republic of Ireland. Under these circumstances, it is likely that the Republic of Ireland will be deemed as the competent authority, effectively negating the Claimant’s entitlement to a personal independence payment. This could disincentivise a DLA/PIP recipient from seeking work across the border, and prevent the increased independence which the bill purports to advance.

Clauses 84 to 85

Citizens Advice has already raised concerns about PIP claims and temporary stays in hospital or care homes. We were pleased to see the removal of the need to reapply for PIP after time in treatment or recovery but seek reassurance that the time frame for these remains at 28 days before suspension of claims

Clause 86

Citizens Advice are concerned that if no mobility PIP can be received by those on remand this could result in loss of access to Motability for those who are not convicted. We would recommend that claims are suspended during a period of remand (with Motability protection similar to that available with DLA and hospital.

Part 5

Social Security: General

(1)

Regulations may provide for a benefit cap to be applied to the welfare benefits to which a single person or couple is entitled.

Citizens Advice is greatly concerned that the proposed benefit cap will result in significant hardship for a number of families. The Explanatory notes at paragraph 461 state that the amount of welfare benefits a claimant or a couple receives will be capped by reference to the average earnings of working households in Great Britain. This will equate to approximately £350 per week for single adults with no children, or £500 per week for a couple or lone parent, regardless of the number of children that they have⁸. This cap does not take into account household size or circumstances, such as variations in housing costs. This will result in disparity between regions, and within regions, which may have varying average housing costs.

A cap on benefits will disproportionately affect those families with outgoings in excess of the average, for example, if they have children living in the home with disabilities, or if they live in an area with high rental rates. Citizens Advice is concerned that the effect of the cap will be to push families below the poverty line.

The benefit cap will be applied via a claimant's housing benefit, so the applicability and effect of the benefit cap will depend on a house-holds entitlement to housing benefit. This will have the effect of reducing available monies for sustaining the family or individual, and meeting housing costs. This may lead to debt and homelessness, if claimants find that they are unable to afford to pay their rent.

The government has suggested that claimants can reduce the impact of the benefit cap by moving into employment, with the possibility of receiving in-work benefits, but this will not be a realistic option for the large number of people who have been unable to secure employment. This may result in families having no option but to move home in an effort to lower their housing costs, with a disruptive effect on employment and education, as well as the potential to have negative impacts on family relationships. Furthermore, this could result in both a polarisation of housing stocks, where some areas will simply be unaffordable whilst others become ghettoised, and in the further depletion of rural populations, where appropriate affordable housing is simply unavailable.

(3)

Citizens Advice is concerned to note that a decision that the benefit cap applies to a particular award of benefit may not be appealed. If the cap is applied incorrectly, leading to an incorrect award of benefit, this will be appealable; otherwise, claimants will have no right to appeal. Given the high ratio of successful appeals in current benefits, with which decision makers are familiar (Appeal Service figures show that 2455 represented appeals upheld 2189 disallowed) it is likely that there will be more errors or miscalculations with a new benefit and the right to appeal is paramount.

Clause 99

Citizens Advice has concerns that in the majority of cases, payments will be made to the male head of household, despite studies showing that money is more likely to reach children of the family if payments are made to the woman. In reality, it is often women who manage www.ons.gov.uk/ons/rel/regional-trends/region-and-country-profiles/key-statistics-and-profiles--august-2012/regional-profiles--key-statistics-tables--august-2012.xls household budgets. Northern Ireland is the only region in the UK where child poverty rose- 21% of children live in persistent child poverty, which is more than double the GB rate. Further issues arise in situations where there is domestic violence or mental health/drug or alcohol dependency or other forms of addiction/compulsive behaviour.

Suggested Amendment- Payments could be made to the main carer where there are children in a family, or split payments between joint claimants, so that payments for children could be received by the main carer, who will usually, but not exclusively be the mother. Payments for housing costs could then be received by the person who is responsible for managing rental payments.

The Explanatory Notes, at paragraph 479, states that the Department may determine that the couple should nominate a lead individual to receive payment of the benefit. Clause 99(2B) also provides for the Department to determine to which member of the couple the payments should be made. In determining who is to receive the benefit payment, the Department should have consideration of the reality of the daily lives of claimants, and who is the main carer.

Clause 101

The effect of this clause is to enable the Department to make regulations setting out the cases or circumstances in which an appeal can be made only when the Department has considered whether to revise the decision. This clause has the stated aim of resolving more disputes with claimants through the internal reconsideration process before an appeal to the tribunal is made.

Citizens Advice has concerns that this provision will be made in an attempt to reduce the number of permitted appeals of Department benefit decision, acting as a barrier to justice for claimants who feel (and the statistics above suggest that a large portion of them are supported by the appeal service) that the decision is erroneous. Appeal numbers are well documented, and it is apparent that historically, claimants have felt that appeals are a necessary way of challenging decisions. Citizens Advice regularly assists claimants with appeals to tribunals, and so has experience in dealing with common reasons for appeals. If claimants are only able to request revision of decisions, there is a real likelihood that wrong benefit decisions will not be adequately challenged and that the further clarifications of regulations through case law will be less effective.

If claimants no longer have the right to appeal at the first instance, by forcing mandatory revision requests to be made, they may be discouraged from appealing decisions that they believe to be wrong. Claimants will have to trust that the Department has reached the correct decision, but if they feel they have not, they might chose not to appeal due to the added layer of bureaucracy, especially for those claimants who may be claiming benefits due to ill-health.

A fair and effective decision-making process requires correct awards to be made from the outset, which would be a more cost-effective and customer friendly approach to reducing appeals than placing additional barriers in the way of customers seeking corrections of wrong decisions.

In section 165 of the Administration Act... regulations under this Act require or authorise the use of electronic communications...

Citizens Advice notes that provision will be made in the bill to allow for electronic communications between, for example, the Department and HMRC. Citizens Advice seeks clarification about how the security of electronic communications will be guaranteed, particularly with reference to cyber fraud and online identity theft. It has been mooted that the Department and DSD will utilise similar security systems to those used by banks, however, in light of the systems failure experienced by Ulster Bank customers, it is clear that these systems are not infallible. The regulations do not seem to make provision should the system fail, which could result in real financial hardship for people if they do not receive their benefit payments. Whilst communication between departments is to be encouraged in streamlining benefit claims and administration, security must be considered a priority.

Citizens Advice has concerns over the operational functionality of the real-time information system for PAYE taxation, developed by HMRC. Citizens Advice would welcome assurances that this system will be fully implemented in time for the new benefit system.

Citizens Advice would also welcome clarity about how advisers will be able to access the Universal Credit system on behalf of claimants without requiring the claimant's personal security system.

The Department for Work and Pensions has set a provisional target of 80%⁹ of claims being made through the online claiming system by 2015. Citizens Advice has concerns about this focus on 'digital by default' arrangement, particularly given that only around 20% of Jobseekers Allowance claims were made online. Citizens Advice questions whether the target is realistic. It is clear that increased provision must be made for additional computers to be placed in Job & Benefits offices, as well as increased resources being made available to advice agencies such as Citizens Advice, who will undoubtedly be called upon to provide assistance and support for claimants struggling to cope with an online system. More resources must be made available to the advice sector to ensure that such help is available for those require it.

Claimants will face a number of difficulties with using online claiming systems, for example, there will be a large number of claimants who do not have access to the internet, either at home, and/or particularly those who live in rural areas who may not have easy and regular access to a Jobs & Benefits office or library. Those who do use public computers primarily for the purpose of filling in claim forms may not then have access to email facilities for follow-up communication regarding their claim. Claimants who are not comfortable or familiar with computer equipment may struggle with a lack of technical ability and confidence, and may have fears over the security of inputting personal and sensitive information onto a computer.

If such an onus is to be placed on making online claims, claimants who require it must be provided with training to learn how to make and maintain benefit claims. This will be particularly prudent for those who for example, are non-English speakers, or who have learning difficulties or mental health conditions.

This clause allows for the Department to recover social security overpayments and social security debt (including social fund debts) by means other than through the court system, with the result that time limits do not apply to recovery by deduction from benefit.

Citizens Advice is concerned that time limits do not apply for the recovery of, for example, overpayments of benefits. Where an overpayment has been made as a result of error on the part of the Department, recovery should be time-limited to prevent unnecessary hardship to claimants. Having no time limit creates uncertainty and unfairness in the recovery system.

Clause 109

This clause amends existing rules to allow the Department to provide a financial penalty as an alternative to prosecution where a claimant has made a false or fraudulent claim for benefits, even if the claimant did not receive any payment. Citizens Advice is concerned about the increase of powers to allow for such draconian penalties to be made.

Clause 110

The amount of the penalty in a case... is 50 per cent of the amount of the overpayment... subject to- (a) a minimum amount of £350, and (b) a maximum amount of £2000.

Where no overpayment has been made, the penalty will be £350. This appears to be a significant penalty for claimants who may already be financially vulnerable, and is not a reflection of the seriousness of the offence, particularly where the Department has suffered no loss as payments have not been made. Citizens Advice appreciates the need to reduce benefit fraud, but recommends that the minimum penalty should be much lower than £350. Having such a minimum penalty may act as a deterrent to those who have legitimate entitlement to benefits from making a claim, in case they are deemed to have done so fraudulently.

Clause 111

This clause reduces the cooling-off period for agreeing to pay a penalty to avoid prosecution from 28 days to 14 days. Citizens Advice calls for the repeal of this clause, as 28 days is a more suitable time period to allow for proper consideration by claimants of the decision to pay a financial penalty. A reduction to 14 days will affect a claimant's opportunity to seek advice, such as from a Citizens Advice bureau, and the claimant may feel pressured by the reduction in time to make a decision they later seek to have overturned. Repeal of this clause will have no financial impact upon the Department, but would allow claimants to explore all their options to make an informed decision, which would in turn reduce appeals.

Clause 112 provides for a civil penalty where claimants fail to disclose information that would affect benefit entitlement or the amount of benefit payable; or fail without reasonable excuse to report changes of circumstances. Citizens Advice is concerned that the imposition of civil penalties in the case of client error will result in unfair and excessive sanctions.

A penalty of £50 has been proposed, which is a punitive measure that will potentially act as a deterrent for claimants who may be entitled to make legitimate applications. Before penalties are imposed upon claimants who fail to inform the Department of changes to personal circumstances, systems must be in place to allow for changes to be easily reported. Claimants must also be told before transferring to Universal Credit of the potential implications for failure to notify, as well as what constitutes a relevant change in circumstance and some claimants should receive special consideration, for example, those with memory issues (such as early onset dementia) or some learning disabilities or mental health conditions, where the capacity to retain knowledge necessary to notify the Department is limited

If penalties are to be imposed upon claimants who may negligently give incorrect statements, reciprocity would call for the same principle to be applied to the Department: if errors are attributable to the Department, claimants who suffer loss should be suitably compensated, with sanctions imposed on the Department. This would ensure equality amongst claimants and the Department, with the objective of driving down errors across the claiming process.

The experience of Citizens Advice advisers is that errors are more commonly attributable to Department officials than claimants. Many clients seek advice from bureau in relation to Department administrative errors, which, with intervention from advisers, are generally rectified. However, no compensation is offered by the Department to make up for the hardship

Any failure to provide information, or where information had been mistakenly provided in error, as a result of a move towards electronic claiming, must be allowed for during a transitional period. Claimants will be familiarising themselves with the new system, and mistakes may be made without any malicious or fraudulent intention. Regulations must provide for human error or problems with the software and any decisions regarding sanctions must take this into account.

Sanctions imposed on claimants must not result in financial hardship. Claimants in receipt of benefits are living on a government-established level of subsistence, so penalties can run the risk of placing clients in further financial difficulty. Citizens Advice is concerned that the use of sanctions will adversely affect the most vulnerable in society, who may be the most likely to make errors in the claiming process. The claiming process should be simplified to reduce the likelihood of errors being made either by claimants or by officials.

There are likely to be a significant number of appeals against the imposition of sanctions, which will lead to increased pressure on advice agencies, such as Citizens Advice. The advice sector desperately requires more funding to ensure that all those affected by Welfare Reform are able to access reliable advice and assistance. If resources are not given to the advice sector at a time of increasing demand, vulnerable people could be at further risk.

Even with sanctions being taken from the adult component of Universal Credit, in reality, children of the sanctioned adult will also be negatively impacted. A reduction in household income will have an effect on the living standards of the children, whose welfare should be a paramount consideration, especially given the high levels of child poverty in Northern Ireland. The Department must ensure that the regulations do not allow children to suffer as a result of sanctions.

Suggested amendment: Claimants should not be penalised for a first mistake, and they should be given an opportunity and a period of time to allow for the mistake to be rectified or additional information to be provided before a sanction is imposed.

Clause 113

Clause 113 introduces a new 3 year loss of benefit sanction where the benefit offence is a relevant offence, for example, serious organised fraud or serious identity fraud. It also increases the period of sanction for a first offence from 4 weeks to 13 weeks. Citizens Advice has concerns that the period of sanction is too protracted. It will lead to financial hardship for many, particularly where there are children in the family. A reduction of household income for such a prolonged period will have consequences extending beyond the claimant at fault. Citizens Advice recommends that the period of sanction remains at the current levels.

Clause 115

This clause has the effect of removing the offer of a caution, instead being replaced by either a more severe administrative penalty or a prosecution.

This clause removes discretion from the Department in the management of fraudulent claims, and leads to the criminalisation of claimants when a caution may have been a more appropriate remedy. Allowing for cautions in the administrative process retains the fit with the partnership approach between the claimant and the Department. Cautions also allow for claimants to gain an understanding of the claiming process, and the reasons for the issuing of the cautions, with a reduction in the likelihood of re-offending. Pursuing prosecutions for minor offences may be counter-productive financially for the Department, with costs of issuing court proceedings.

Citizens Advice is concerned by the removal of cautions, recommending that cautions can still be offered for first offences.

Part 6 Miscellaneous

Clause 125

The Explanatory memorandum, at paragraph 618 states that the power under subsection (1) can be used to make provision for the apportionment of fees and waiver.

Citizens Advice is concerned about proposals to introduce a system of fees for parents with care- if fees must be included under Welfare Reform, it may be more appropriate for fees to be levied at the parent who prevents a family based arrangement from being secured.

Citizens Advice is further concerned that parents will be required to show that they had taken 'reasonable steps' to set up an arrangement with their former partner, or they may have to pay an application fee, which has been mooted to be around £100, or £50 if the applicant is in receipt of benefits. A survey conducted by Gingerbread found that 72% of single parents would be unable to agree private arrangements with their former partners and almost half would be unable to afford the application fee . As the Bill already acknowledges the additional needs of partners who have experienced domestic violence, these needs require further consideration here.

Subsection (3) of the Child Maintenance Act (Northern Ireland) 2008 includes the power to make provision for the charging of fees which are not related to costs. Citizens Advice is concerned that this punitive system has the potential to act as a barrier in reaching arrangement between parents and carers. Citizens Advice does not support a system of fees in the child maintenance system which is not directly related to costs.

Rather than introducing a system of fees and what will in effect be financial penalties following the breakdown of a relationship, additional support and guidance should be facilitated to aid parties in reaching an agreement between them. This would improve family relationships, with the added incentive of avoidance of additional costs.

Clause 130

We are concerned that the rate relief scheme is going to be removed from the housing benefit scheme from 1st April 2013 and we have not yet seen the replacement. The Minister has indicated that there could be a deficit of £13m in the first year 2013/14, which may easily escalate due to inflationary pressures and increased demand in the future years.¹⁰

It is essential that individuals currently in receipt of rate relief are informed in good time of any cut in their entitlement so that they can plan financially and that transitional protection is put in place. We also want to see how any new scheme will interact with Universal Credit.

Schedule 1

(3) (c)

Citizens Advice considers that all statutory payments such as Statutory Sick Pay or Maternity Pay and benefits such as Maternity Allowance and the first 6 months of ESA payments should be categorised as earnings for the purposes of UC.

This would mitigate the likely adverse impact of UC on people who have been working and who are on parental leave or who are in the initial stages of illness. At present, these people are treated as if they are working, and hence qualify for Working Tax Credits. Aligning these groups as earning for UC purposes will help them to avoid debt and poverty as a consequence of the possible loss of entitlement in UC as proposed.

(3) (d)

Regulations which set out the prescribed rate of income yield should allow for calculations based on relevant indications of net market deposit savings performance based on actual market data.

Paragraph 4

(3)

The calculation of earned income in respect of people previously self-employed should reflect actual payments issued to the claimant rather than any assumed floor which may not reflect actual previous remuneration.

Committee for Social Development Consultation on Welfare Reform

Submission by the College of Occupational Therapists

Introduction

The College of Occupational Therapists (COT) is pleased to provide a response to the consultation on Welfare Reform which has been assisted by occupational therapists in Northern Ireland and the COT Specialist Sections in Work and Housing.

The College of Occupational Therapists is the professional body for occupational therapists and represents over 29,000 occupational therapists, support workers and students from across the United Kingdom of whom about 900 are in Northern Ireland. Occupational therapists work in Trusts, across health and social care services, they deliver services across housing, schools, prisons, the voluntary and independent sectors, and vocational and employment rehabilitation services.

Occupational therapists are regulated by the Health and Care Professions Council, and work with people of all ages with a wide range of occupational problems resulting from physical, mental, social or developmental difficulties.

The philosophy of occupational therapy is founded on the knowledge that occupation is essential to human existence and good health and wellbeing. Occupation includes all the things that people do or participate in, for example, caring for themselves and others, working, learning, playing and interacting with others. Being deprived of or having limited access to occupation affects physical and psychological health.

General Comments:

Occupational Therapists work with people of all ages, supporting them to lead independent lives. They assess a person's holistic (entire) needs including physical, psychological, practical, social and emotional –helping individuals to achieve the occupational goals that are important to them.

Occupational Therapists are experts in assessing functional performance. They have a unique understanding of the impact of disability and illness on occupation (e.g. activities) recognizing that poor physical and mental health, disabilities, or the effects of ageing can affect people in different ways.

Occupational therapists carry the statutory delegated function, on behalf of Chief Executives in Trusts* in Northern Ireland for recommendations for housing adaptations for people with disabilities. (*Health and Social Care Trusts have a statutory duty to assess the needs of disabled people, including their housing needs.) Housing adaptations can range in complexity and cost, from relatively minor, e.g. additional stair rail, to major works, such as ground floor extensions involving significant structural changes to existing properties. Occupational therapists also assess, prescribe and make provision for specialist equipment and seating.

Specific Comments:

Restriction of housing benefit in social housing sector: Under occupancy

The College has concerns about the impact the 'size criteria' which will be introduced for new and existing working-age Housing Benefit claimants living in a Housing Executive or housing association home, will have on disabled people. The College believes this is going to disproportionately affect disabled people Disabled people can have different needs from accommodation from the non disabled, therefore size would not be a good indicator of need. Some, for example may require housing adaptations such as through floor lifts or additional rooms downstairs depending on individual needs. There may be requirements for rooms to store large and bulky equipment such as storage for hoists, pressure relieving beds (profile beds) and wheelchairs etc, as well as circulation space needed for wheelchair users and other needs such as people requiring assistance of carers for personal activities of daily living and safe transfer circulation space.

In the Department of Social Development, Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011 Completed Equality Impact Assessment, April 2012, it said that "at 10 August 2011 there were 8,317 claimants receiving a premium in respect of disability, with 4,503 of those living in the social rented sector. (This does not include those receiving only a disabled child premium as there would be entitlement to a bedroom for the child when considering the size criteria.)"

It also included that "The impact of the measure on households containing a disabled claimant or partner suggests that a higher proportion of households containing a disabled person would more likely be affected by the introduction of the size criteria." We understand this to be saying that the 'size criteria' will particularly impact people with a disability. However at a later point it says that "As a proportion of the Housing Benefit caseload and the overall number of claimants in the social rented sector, the measure has no significant differential impact on disabled claimants."

It also mentions Discretionary Housing Payments which it says allows the Housing Executive to give extra help to those facing difficulties meeting their housing costs on a case by case basis. The issue with discretionary housing payments is that many other vulnerable groups will be making a call on the same resources. We would question the practical sustainability of this approach and what will the duration of this payment be and can this be sustained over a long period of time.

If people are required to downsize there needs to be the stock to move to and as accessible dwellings are in limited supply disabled people are going to struggle to find smaller accessible accommodation. We are told there is an acute shortage of bungalow/wheelchair friendly accommodation throughout Northern Ireland and 'lifetime homes' do not meet wheelchair standards which tend to be the core of Housing Association builds.

Northern Ireland has a strong community infrastructure and family networks. Social support networks can be critical to independence. The political situation also affects social mobility and which community people will feel comfortable to move to which further adds to the overall difficulty finding suitable accessible dwellings. A move away from their existing communities/support could have a detrimental effect on the wellbeing of disabled people and significant financial costs for statutory care input.

Occupational therapists have collated data as part of their interventions and what is clear is that while families with younger members are more open to moving, the preference of the vast majority of people with a disabled family member is to stay and adapt rather than move.

Occupational therapists also have concerns regarding the implications for their practice. If an adaptation is added on, it may potentially mean adding another downstairs room. An alternative such as a lift may not be feasible due to the house layout requiring an additional bedroom or ground floor facilities. This could create greater under occupancy and have financial implications. The individual may then find themselves in an unsustainable tenancy.

From an occupational therapists' perspective, a house which has been adapted to suit the needs of a disabled tenant, whose tenant number has reduced should not be made to pay the excess if they are living in a house which has been adapted to suit their needs. It seems that they are being discriminated by being forced to pay an excess even though they may have no other option but to remain in their accessible home

Some other key issues which may arise in relation to the "room tax" or loss of Housing Benefit income due to under-occupation are:

- The determination of bedroom usage where inter-floor lifts take up significant space in an existing bedroom.
- Changes of bedroom usage to other functions such as shower toilet /storage provision.
- The validation of the use of "spare" bedrooms for overnight care by informal and formal carers.
- Policy on providing an extension to provide a room for carers to stay overnight.
- Calculation of bedroom usage where two children normally assumed to share a bedroom under housing benefit policy cannot, due to physical disability or challenging behaviour. This could apply either to using a spare room to provide separate sleeping arrangements for the two children or where an extension is provided.
- The calculation of housing benefit where a lift cannot address the needs of a disabled person and an extension is required resulting in under-occupation of first floor bedrooms.
- The impact on relatives where a family member succeeds to the tenancy of an adapted home which is under-occupied. This could also apply possibly to a carer
- The additional difficulties disabled people will face in trying to down size to suitable, accessible accommodation in a location where they can enjoy the support of family and friends.

We do understand that changes need to be made secondary to the issues with lack of Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) housing, waiting lists for housing and the current financial crisis. The proposed changes will however only create a greater burden to some families already experiencing inequalities and whose budgets are already being squeezed by the cost of living. We are concerned the impact is going to be more significant for individuals, families and carers where someone has a disability in the household.

Occupational therapists in Northern Ireland say they are aware some larger NIHE properties may be solely occupied and suggested that, perhaps if the tenant said they were willing to be re-housed to a smaller property, they could be omitted from having to pay the excess in the interim until a suitable property becomes available. In contrast, however some houses are overcrowded and it does make sense that they should be accommodated in larger housing.

Effective planning and allocation by NIHE/ Housing Association housing will help prevent under occupation of homes where one person lives in a three bedroom family home sometimes with adapted facilities

We also note that foster children will not be accommodated for in house size which is likely to cause a greater strain for a service which is already in great need of applicants. This may affect potential foster carers coming forward.

Work Capability Assessments:

Occupational therapists are Allied Health Professionals (AHPs) and are dual trained and skilled to assist and rehabilitate people who have physical health and mental health related conditions. Integral to any occupational therapy intervention is the assessment of functional capability for self-care, productivity, play and leisure.

Occupational therapists have particular expertise in assessing functional capability for work (work capability), to assess job demands and match demonstrated work capability to demands of a job in order to facilitate a return to safe, suited and sustainable work or to help maintain someone with a health related disability in work.

Research has shown that an accurate and reliable assessment of an individual's occupational functioning (work capability) facilitates a successful return to/maintenance at work (Innes et al 2010). To ensure accuracy and reliability when assessing work capability, occupational therapists use multiple data sources and multiple methods to collect the data in order to provide deep and rich information that combines subjective and objective measures of performance. Triangulation of the data collected is seen as imperative in order to make judgments regarding performance. The WCA may be seen as meeting a triangulation assessment process, in as much as a number of data sources are used, e.g. review of supporting documentation, interview and observation. However, the WCA does not incorporate an objective assessment of function and therefore the reliability, validity and utility of it as an assessment process may be questioned.

The current WCA process reduces work to a limited number of physical and cognitive/perceptual factors and descriptions that have very little bearing on whether an individual can or cannot work.

It may, therefore, be prudent to incorporate comprehensive and objective assessments of work capability carried out by occupational therapists who have skills and expertise in the objective assessment of function. The components of the objective assessment of function should be sufficiently comprehensive to reflect the actual demands of work, and not be a checklist of unconnected job factors that are removed from actual purposeful behaviour.

It is not surprising therefore, that occupational therapists support many of their clients to access benefits including Employment and Support Allowance (ESA). This involves the full process from supporting their clients to obtain an application form to attending medical examinations and tribunals. Supporting people through the application process, WCA appointment and appeals procedures including time to attend tribunals, is time consuming and a drain to NHS resources.

Occupational therapists have concerns about the outcome for a number of service users who have undergone a work capability assessment (WCA), which is used to determine eligibility to the Employment and Support Allowance (ESA).

Presently the main company contracted to carry out WCAs do not, that we are aware of, recruit or employ occupational therapists for this assessment. We understand, nurses, GPs and physiotherapists are employed to carry out the WCAs in England and nurses and GPs in Northern Ireland.

Occupational therapists in Northern Ireland are concerned that the WCA depends on self reporting and from what we understand some requests to show some movement s such as bend down, but not what an occupational therapist would term as a functional assessment. They have also voiced concerns that the WCA does not pick up on mental health problems well and the view and comments of assessors can be sometimes subjective e.g. how the person presents. They would like to see the process become less reliant on self reporting and move towards an evidence-based functional assessment that uses best practice in such things as triangulation of data.

They do not believe the present process of asking questions and filling in details on a computerised form which a decision maker subsequently looks at along with medical or other information presented will accurately assess a person's capability for work. Assessing capability for work is a complex process of using multiple methods to identify a person's limitations and abilities, which take more time the more complex the presentation on functional issues e.g. physical and mental health issues. Occupational therapists are also concerned that the part of the process which would allow or require information from a treating clinician, such as an occupational therapist, is not properly developed. Whilst not everyone will have a treating clinician involved, where relevant this may help give a more accurate functional assessment.

The system at present is fundamentally flawed if there are in the region of 40% of those appealing winning their cases. Occupational therapists are concerned that instead of promoting an individual's ability to work on health and wellness and managing their condition and improve their symptoms where this would be realistic or possible to do, going to tribunal is sometimes causing an opposite effect. They report that service users who are waiting to go to tribunal are often focusing on how ill they are, and not on how well they could become. This 'symptom magnification' they worry is making some service users more ill than well.

The College of Occupational Therapists would support the increased and enhanced role of occupational therapists in the fair and effective delivery of Work Capability Assessments. Occupational therapists would be very well placed to undertake work capability assessments particularly in relation to our biopsychosocial background and our specialism in functional ability and vocational rehabilitation. Occupational therapists are also trained at an undergraduate level to understand a wide range of physical, mental, cognitive and developmental impairments including the fluctuating and variable nature of disability. Occupational therapists are experts at evaluating an individual's ability to perform activities, analysing work tasks, and measuring a wide range of environmental factors that can affect work performance. Many ESA applicants have combined physical and mental health conditions and occupational therapists have dual training in these areas.

Whilst undertaking Work Capability Assessments, occupational therapists will act in accordance with the College of Occupational Therapists Professional Standards and Code of Ethics and Professional Conduct <http://www.cot.co.uk/standards-ethics/standards-ethics> The Professional Standards stipulates that occupational therapists work in partnership with the service user, acting in their best interests including respecting the human rights of the service users; ensuring decisions and actions are always in the best interests of the service user and where necessary, acting as, or arranging for, an advocate to promote the best interests of service users.

Occupational therapists in Northern Ireland feel the process could be improved. They would like to see that it incorporates values and vision of 'Transforming Your Care' where the individual is at the centre. They believe that work and health should provide an approach which will encourage a services user's self reliance and self management of their condition where appropriate to do so

The College of Occupational Therapists continues to engage with the government in England for a fair process of Work Capability Assessments. The College of Occupational Therapists submitted a formal response to the DWP's consultation in September 2011 (Work Capability Assessment Call for Evidence: Year 2 Independent Review) based on feedback from its members and service users where we cited a number of recommendations for improvement.

This can be read by visiting <http://www.cot.co.uk/consultation/uk/work-capability-assessment-year-2-call-evidence-42-10-11>

Personal Independent Payments (PIPs)

The College welcomed the Work and Pensions Select Committee Report on 'Support towards additional living costs of working-age disabled people' (19 February 2012) calling on the Government not to introduce the new Personal Independence Payment (PIP) nationally until it is confident that the assessment process is fair and accurate. <http://www.parliament.uk/business/committees/committees-a-z/commons-select/work-and-pensions-committee/news/dla-report/>

As part of the assessment for PIP will review all a person's activities of daily living an occupational therapy assessment would seem to be the most efficient and accurate to do this.

Conclusion:

The College of Occupational Therapists welcome Welfare Reform but are concerned about

- The lack of occupational therapists involvement in the process and the added value their skills would bring with regards to Work Capacity Assessments.
- Disabled people who will be disproportionately affected by the size criteria for housing.

Policy in Northern Ireland is towards a whole systems approach and the need to move towards promoting health and well being. The aim proposed in the present Public Health consultation 'To improve the health and well-being status of all our people and to reduce inequalities in health' includes housing as an important element. We are pleased that Minister Mc Causland has been successful in changes which have been secured to the way Universal Credit can be paid to reflect Northern Ireland's unique circumstances. We do hope that that the under occupancy rule for disabled tenants can also be looked at.

Dame Carol Black and David Frost's Health at work – an independent review of sickness absence says "In an ideal system, people who are unable to work would be swiftly identified and supported; those with conditions that are compatible with their current work would receive early treatment and support to return quickly; and those needing to change jobs would be efficiently helped back into work. Costs would be fairly distributed between employers, individuals and the State, and incentives aligned to manage these costs."

The Review makes a number of recommendations to improve the sickness absence and benefits systems such as "Government should fund a new Independent Assessment Service (IAS). The IAS would provide an in-depth assessment of an individual's physical and/or mental function. It would also provide advice about how an individual on sickness absence could be supported to return to work. This service should usually be accessed when an individual's absence spell has lasted around four weeks. The College along with occupational therapists in England have been speaking to Lord Freud about this as well as looking at other elements of this overall system such as devising Allied Health Professionals (AHP) Fit notes

The College believe that occupational therapists are ideally placed to carry out work related assessments. There are many occupational therapists who are regularly conducting assessments of an individual's functional capacity for work. The College of Occupational Therapists therefore supports the increased and enhanced role of occupational therapists in the fair and effective delivery of Work Capability Assessments and their expertise be used to develop an approach which would link together health and work. An enhanced connection between all of the government departments responsible for work and health would enable a more joined up approach perhaps across a theme of reablement to work. Fiscal measures to achieve this would be necessary. The College would be pleased to engage further regarding this or to offer any assistance to any planning or development in this area.

Combat Stress Ex-Services Mental Welfare Society

Dear Sir/Madam,

The Ex-Services Mental Welfare Society – Combat Stress provides treatment and welfare support to ex-service personnel who may have suffered a psychological injury as a result of their military service.

As a welfare officer working for the Society in N Ireland veterans will often feel aggrieved that they are being discriminated against with regard to benefit entitlement. Many that have been injured, physically or psychologically, and are in receipt of a War Disablement Pension (WDP) or a Guaranteed Income Payment (GIP) as part of the Armed Forces Compensation Scheme (AFCS) are currently excluded from many benefits as their income places them above the thresholds. Presently only £10 or £20 is disregarded when calculating their entitlement. The only exception to this is Housing Benefit. In such instances WDP and GIPs are totally disregarded when calculating entitlement.

The Armed Forces Minister had been quoted in the national press as stating that from April 2013 changes would be made to welfare benefits regarding veterans. The changes would ensure that those veterans injured in the service of their country would not be disadvantaged when applying for benefits. WDP and GIP's would be totally disregarded when calculating entitlement.

I have read through the Bill and, as a lay person, can find no reference to such 'disregards' when calculating entitlement. I would therefore respectfully request confirmation that the new Welfare Reform Bill includes such provision.

Yours sincerely

Community Foundation for Northern Ireland

1. The Community Foundation for Northern Ireland welcomes the opportunity to make a written submission to the Assembly Committee for Social Development on the subject of the Welfare Reform Bill. The Community Foundation is an independent charitable grant making Trust which supports work in areas of deprivation and with disadvantaged groups across Northern Ireland. While primarily a grant making organisation, the Board of Trustees of the Community Foundation were so concerned about the likely impact of both the current Welfare Reform Bill, and related policy changes, that it agreed to fund a 3-year Community in Action Programme (2012 – 2014) to ascertain the impact of these changes on people's lives in practice. To this end it is working with local communities in
 - Donegall Pass, Belfast
 - Cregagh, Belfast
 - Ardoyne, Belfast
 - Doury Road, Ballymena
 - Taughnevan, Lurgan
 - Lettershandoney, Derry
 - Villages Together (Bready, Donemana), Co Tyrone
 - Fountain Street, Strabaneto monitor developments on life opportunities and to support community resilience.
2. In the initial set of community conversations that have been carried out it is clear that there is both fear and uncertainty about the nature and likely impact of the changes. This is augmenting already very high levels of stress and community fragmentation. There is also a concern about the negative stereotyping of groups of Welfare benefit recipients, such as the young unemployed or single-parent families.
3. In terms of community fragmentation the side effect of increasing rates of unemployment and poverty that is to be feared is the likelihood that new immigrant communities and residents will be blamed for a situation not of their making.
4. With regard to the specific provisions of the Welfare Reform Bill the Community Foundation understand the need to maintain parity, but equally feels that it is important to take account, where possible, of Northern Ireland specific circumstances. The latter may include
 - Restrictions in access to on-line technology increasingly required to make claims.
 - The number of claimants who may not have Bank Accounts.
 - The nature (and number of rooms) of the housing stock.
 - The limitations (real and/or perceived) in terms of where people feel secure in terms of living and working.
 - The impact on people living in remoter rural areas.
 - The number of job seekers experiencing significant work-limiting health considerations.
 - The relative lack of affordable child care in certain areas.
 - The high levels of people in Northern Ireland that will be affected by the introduction of the Personal Independence Payment, resulting in a disproportionate impact on the region.
5. The area studies conducted by the Communities in Action project has already highlighted a range of relevant concerns –

- (i) The high cost of heating (oil/gas/electricity) and the limited choices available to low income consumers. This has resulted in high cost options such as purchase of fuel in £20 - £30 lots. The Assembly has already itself recognised the fuel poverty issue in Northern Ireland.
- (ii) The high cost of running a car/or 2 cars in rural areas. As one lady explained –
- “My husband runs a van to work and then I have a car but because we’re rural we were trying to work out how we could do with one vehicle but it just didn’t work out... I have to take my children to school every day and lift them, and I have to do it because one of my wee boys has a health issue... and life if we give one vehicle up it means my husband is going to have to give up his job, so it’s a constant battle – trying to run two vehicles is a nightmare... we’re constantly getting into debt to try to keep the two on the road because at this stage nobody wants to buy an old van because there’s no building site work...”*
- (iii) Even with the current benefit levels, debt is a constant worry. Another lady noted –
- “The milkman or the window cleaner, you see people avoiding them because they genuinely can’t afford them until their money comes in ... feeding your child is more important than owing a milkman £6 or £7, and then eventually the milkman doesn’t come ... so you’re switching back on your child getting more things, like we would all like to go out and feed the wee ones fresh vegetables and fresh fruit and have the best for them so that they can have a healthy lifestyle but the reality is we just can’t afford to do it...”*
- The constant balancing and financial juggling was reported to be reflected in higher rates of depression, and in extreme cases, leading to a breakdown in family relations...
- (iv) Concern was expressed about the concept of monthly payments which could well make already squeezed budgeting more difficult.
- (v) The issue of benefit being paid to the designated householder (often the man) was another area of distinct concern as noted by a number of mothers in particular –
- “It’s going to lead to more repossessions. It’s going to lead to your children not getting fed properly; clothed properly...”*
- with the additional concern that it could well lead to additional pressures on family relationships.
- (vi) Young people – especially where living a distance from major towns – referred to the existing expense of travelling for further study at FE Colleges. Alongside this a single-parent mother referred to the income related deterrence –
- “... Then I had my wee girl and obviously it was hard but I’ve actually found out over time that if I go back to Tech to study, I get all my money took off me, my Income Support that I get for my child – so it nearly seems like there’s not point in me going to Tech which is really bad for my child. I get my money took off me if I go back to Tech...”*
- In short what we are in danger of seeking is a contradiction in government policy between the administration of welfare benefits and policies that argue for ‘Lifetime Opportunities’ – particularly for young people that are not in education, employment or training.
- (vii) A further contradiction in government policy seems to appear with regard to home ownership, on the one hand, but lack of adequate housing support for those on benefits. As one Belfast interviewer reflected –

“Talking about the jobs and all that there, cuts in jobs and wage cuts and everything else. Up where I live there is a lot of people own their own homes and the amount of people who had their houses up for sale because they’ve lost their jobs, and the amount of separation in families – wives and husbands splitting up, where I live is ridiculous. (This is because of the stress of the money worries and everything else...) and then the ‘For Sale’ signs because they can’t cope, because the husband has lost a job or the wife has lost a job...”

There were considerable fears expressed about the proposed measures with regard to under-occupancy in the social rented sector which many people felt they would be increasingly forced into.

- (viii) There were extensive anxieties expressed over the treatment and representation of younger people in the Welfare Reform debates. This related to both the pressures that younger people were under (including the media ads for high interest loan companies) and the lack of employment which is in danger of resulting in a devaluing of education. A Ballymena mother noted –

“Who I actually feel sorry for more is the kids leaving school, there’s no jobs whatsoever. Like my daughter as I said she’s 20, did all her GCSEs, pass them all; stayed on at school for an extra two years. Did A Levels, passed them all, applied for over 30 jobs and never got one interview, not one interview. There’s no jobs for them. They tell you you need qualifications and you get qualifications and you can’t get a job because you’ve no experience...”

Similar stories were related in Lurgan, although there it was a graduate cited. The further demonisation of the young unemployed in the current welfare debates has aggravated feelings of injustice.

6. While the Community Foundation for Northern Ireland is not a welfare advice agency, we feel that the experience in local communities which have a high level of households in receipt of the benefits that are currently under scrutiny is valuable. With regard to specific provisions of the Welfare Reform Bill the Foundation is in support of the detailed representation proposed by Advice NI and the Law Centre (NI). On a general point we believe that is particularly important that resources are made available to allow independent advice, information and representation for claimants given current high levels of fear and confusion and in the face of the complexity of the proposed changes.
7. The Community Foundation is nevertheless in favour of measures that seek to simplify the current maze of welfare benefit entitlements. Its major concern is that this is not implemented in such a manner as to effectively introduce cutbacks in current entitlements, which themselves are meagre in terms of prevailing levels of relative deprivation. We view interim transitional arrangements proposed as just that – transitional (as related to the new Personal Independence Payment) and potentially in effect a longer-term reduction in entitlement.
8. We are further concerned by a recent report by the Institute of Fiscal Studies which found that after London, Northern Ireland will be the hardest hit by tax and benefit cuts announced and to be implemented under the Bill. It was estimated that the potential loss to benefit recipients in Northern Ireland will be more than £600 million per annum by 2014 – 2015.

Dear Committee Clerk

RE: Evidence Welfare Reform

Thank you for your invitation to submit evidence to the Social Development Committee in relation to the Welfare Reform Bill.

Whilst the Community Relations Council (CRC) is not directly involved in the area of welfare advice/services, we do provide support via grant-aid to a range of organisations¹ that support Victims and Survivors of the troubles in this area of work² e.g. Welfare Advice workers and welfare advice sessions.

In response to concerns raised over welfare reform from our funded groups CRC facilitated a number of meetings with these groups and their members. The following issues were raised and are particularly significant to the current debate:

- Clients want to access an advice service that understands trauma relating to the conflict, and are concerned that this understanding/training will not be available in high street agencies;
- High profile cases aren't always comfortable accessing high street, statutory agencies therefore delaying benefit uptake;
- There are concerns about having to undergo a reassessments of physical disabilities;
- Lack of confidence and trust can make accessing welfare advice difficult for victims and survivors;
- Many clients are concerned over the 'pay monthly' proposals and the ability to budget over a monthly period.

In addition we would refer you to a recent report from WAVE (CRC funded group) 'The needs of Individuals and their families injured as a result of the Troubles in Northern Ireland'³ which examined matters such as managing complex medical needs, economic and financial needs, families of the injured, post-traumatic stress, obstacles to work and ability to work since injury. These issues are specifically relevant to Part 4 of the Bill - Personal Independence Payment.

1 Groups funded via the CRC Strategic Support Fund & Development Grant Scheme who provide welfare advice include Corpus Christi Services, CALMS, Relatives for Justice, WAVE, ELY, UDR Coleraine, and SEFF.

2 ESA assistance (appeals and questionnaires), DLA, Housing Benefits, JSA, Social Fund loans, Steps to Work, and Tax Credits.

3 'The needs of Individuals and their families injured as a result of the Troubles in Northern Ireland', Executive Summary; <http://www.wavetraumacentre.org.uk/files/WAVE%20Executive%20Summary.pdf>; Full Report: <http://www.surrey.ac.uk/politics/files/cii/WAVE%20Final%20Report.pdf>

Finally a CRC commissioned report in 2006 Who Cares for the Carers?⁴ which also identified financial issues. The report found that the victim was often identified as the main breadwinner with this source of income now gone, and in other cases carers found themselves having to give up paid employment to provide care and support.

In conclusion, it is clear the legacy of the conflict continues to impact heavily on victims and survivors and their families. What has emerged very strongly during our engagement with the groups we fund and support are the genuine concerns about accessing financial support in the aftermath of the Welfare Reform Bill. These are important areas that need to be given serious consideration under the current welfare reform proposals.

We hope our comments assist the Committee in their deliberations. If you need clarification on any of the points raised please contact Gemma Attwood, Policy Officer at the following email gattwood@nicrc.org.uk Please also note that from 12 November 2012 CRC's Victims & Survivors Programme will transfer to the new Victims Service.

Yours sincerely

Dear Mr Hay

WELFARE REFORM BILL

The Council at its meeting held on 3 December 2012, adopted the following Notice of Motion –

"That this Council recognises the efforts being made to secure the best possible deal for Northern Ireland within the Welfare Reform Bill and encourages continuous negotiations with Lord Freud to deliver the best possible solution for Northern Ireland and calls on all Parties to work with the Minister and the Assembly to that end.

"This Council further calls on the Assembly to work to amend the Welfare Reform Bill consistent with the specific circumstances and needs of people living in Northern Ireland."

The Council would ask that this be brought to the attention of the appropriate Assembly Committee.

Briefing Paper For Social Development Committee October 2012

Welfare Reform Bill – Committee Stage Response

About Us

- 1 Disability Action is a pioneering Northern Ireland charity working with and for people with disabilities. We work with our members to provide information, training, transport awareness programmes and representation for people regardless of their disability; whether that is physical, mental, sensory, hidden or learning disability.
- 2 21% of adults and 6% of children living in private households in Northern Ireland have a disability and the incidence is one of the highest in the United Kingdom.
- 3 As a campaigning body, we work to bring about positive change to the social, economic and cultural life of people with disabilities and consequently our entire community. In pursuit of our aims we serve 45,000 people each year.
- 4 Our network of services is provided via our Headquarters in Belfast and in three regional offices in Carrickfergus, Derry and Dungannon.
- 5 Disability Action welcomes the opportunity to respond to the Social Development Committee Call for Evidence. As requested we have provided a Clause by Clause response.
- 6 Disability Action's Information and Advice team have dealt with over 12,927 queries from disabled people, their families, carers and professionals in the last year.

United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD)

- 7 On 1 March 2012, the Joint Committee on Human Rights, published its findings and recommendations of its parliamentary inquiry. Of relevance to this briefing, the JCHR found that:
 - reforms to benefits and services risk leaving disabled people without the support they need to live independently;
 - restrictions in ...eligibility criteria for social care support, the replacement of the Disability Living Allowance with Personal Independence Payment, ... and changes to housing benefit risk interacting in a particularly harmful way for disabled people;
 - the Government had not conducted an assessment of the cumulative impact of current reforms on disabled people

It stated that the Committee "Received evidence that impact assessments of current reforms were not adequately carried out, and did not take into account the likely cumulative impact of reforms on disabled people. We therefore argue that the Government should publish a unified assessment of the likely cumulative impact of the proposals on independent living".

The crucial point the Committee considered was the implementation of the Right of Disabled People to Independent Living. The Government has legal obligations under Article 19 of the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD). Article 19 requires states to take effective and appropriate measures that will facilitate full enjoyment by disabled people of key rights to independent living and their full inclusion and participation in the community.

Disability and Welfare Reform

8 Disability Action would highlight the following key statistics in relation to disability and welfare reform.

- Approximately 117,000 people will be impacted by changes to DLA/PIP (DSD)
- Estimated 207,000 carers in Northern Ireland. Despite contributing an estimated £4.4 billion to the NI economy with unpaid care they provide, the vast majority are worse off financially as a result of becoming carers. (Carers NI)
- As it currently stands the weekly income of a disabled person who relies solely on benefits is approximately “£200 below the amount required to live an acceptable and equitable quality of life”. (Low Incomes Tax Reform Group)
- Disabled people’s day-to-day living costs – for basic items such as mobility aids, care and transport – are 25% higher than those of a non-disabled person. (Papworth Trust)
- Statistics show that just over 10% of NI population is in receipt of DLA. In the last decade the proportion of working age population in receipt of DLA has risen from 8% to 9% and it is twice the rate of GB. Research evidence would suggest that ‘part of the explanation for higher recipiency of DLA in Northern Ireland lies in the worse levels of ill health. (Disability Living Allowance Recipients in NI – Poverty)
- Disabled people are twice as likely to live in poverty as other citizens and are more likely to be hit first, hardest and longest by the current recession. (Disability Alliance The Coalition)
- For disabled people there has been a decline in the number of work placements available and increased insecurity for those in work. (Equality Commission – Employment Inequalities in the Economic Downturn, July 2010)
- Employers are twice as likely to offer a non-disabled candidate an interview as an equally qualified disabled candidate. (Leonard Cheshire Disability, Discrimination Doesn’t Work, 2006)
- 12% of children living with a disabled adult are in severe poverty compared to 8% of those children who aren’t living with a disabled adult. (Save the Children, Severe Child Poverty in Northern Ireland, 2011)
- Three in five disabled children were poor under the Consensual Poverty Measure (OFMDFM Child and Family Poverty, 2006)
- 38% of parents/guardians of children with disabilities under the age of 15 stated that benefits were their only source of income (NISALD, 2009)
- Disabled people who are in employment are more likely to be in low skill, low paid jobs earning less than non-disabled people. (Disability Poverty in the UK – Leonard Cheshire Disability.

Clause by Clause Response

9 Universal Credit

9.1 Entitlement and Awards

9.1.2 Clause 4

The regulations must take into account the definition of ‘receiving education’ to ensure that it offers an understanding that people with a disability may have missed part of their education or be receiving education later in life due to their disability.

9.1.3 Clause 6

Regulations must ensure that if the time-limiting of those who receive Contributory ESA and are in the Work Related Activity Group is to be applied then no waiting time should be applied.

9.1.4 Clause 10

Under the new benefit there will be a ‘disability addition’ and a ‘higher addition’ for disabled children. Children who are in receipt of higher rate DLA (Care component) will get the ‘higher addition’, which will be paid at a similar level as now. However, those children who are currently receiving the lower level of support through the ‘disability element’ (because they receive low or middle rate DLA care component) will now receive the new ‘disability addition’ which will be worth only £27 instead of the current £54.

The NICCY report¹ found that “Large families where there is a severely disabled child are at risk of being affected by the benefit cap and this could potentially impact on the lives of 6,500 children in Northern Ireland”.

In Northern Ireland we have the additional impact in relation to childcare costs and the availability of childcare for children with disabilities. Without the existence of a child care strategy which specifically considers the needs of disabled children and their parents then mitigating measures will need to be considered.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Provide additional support to provide for the extra cost of childcare for families with disabled children,
- and, at the very least extend the protection for additional financial support for children who receive the mid-rate care component of DLA.

9.1.5 Clause 11

The EQIA² states that “the impact of the measure on households containing a disabled claimant or partner suggests that a higher proportion of households containing a disabled person would be more likely to be affected by the introduction of the size criteria”.

It further states that “households containing a disabled adult and with a non-residential carer will be assessed as having a reasonable requirement for an additional room. This will have the effect of reducing the number of disabled claimants affected by the measure”.

The mitigating measure only takes into account the need for an overnight carer and does not take into account the extra space that may be needed for aids and equipment, medical equipment or to provide therapies in the home.

It also does not take into account other factors in living in a particular area, for example, being close to family or friends that provide support, accessing community service, transport and being part of the community. The provision of accessible housing options may already significantly reduce the choice a disabled person has over where to live. By implementing the housing criteria as it currently stands disabled people may not have the opportunity to live independently in their own community.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Ensure that in the case of disabled person or families with a disabled child(ren) that where an adaptation is in place, additional space is needed for treatment or equipment or services are only available in a specific area that they will not be required to move and will not have their benefit reduced.

1 A child’s rights impact assessment of the impact of welfare reform on children in Northern Ireland, April 2012, G Horgan and M Monteith (NICCY)

2 Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011 Completed Equality Impact Assessment, April 2012, Department for Social Development

9.1.6 Clause 12

Severe Disability Premium (SDP) is presently available to adults who either live on their own, with another disabled adult or only with dependant children. It is intended to help with the additional costs of living alone as a disabled person without someone to assist them.

The removal of SDP under UC is a key concern. Extra support for disabled adults is built into the Universal Credit differently to the current system of premiums and tax credits. In some instances the loss of the SDP will lead to some people being less well off under the Universal Credit.

It is estimated that the reduction for some people will be up to £58 per week and even the most disabled adults will lose £28 a week.

The EQIA states that the additional cost of disability is accounted for through DLA/PIP. However, PIP/DLA does not take into consideration whether the person is living alone or with support. SDP has assisted many disabled people to live independently.

This clause also needs to consider how the circumstances of parents of a disabled child will be taken into consideration. There is little detail in the Bill and further clarification is required in this area.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- SDP should be retained in full. If this is not possible then consideration must be given as to how the legislation and regulations can ensure that no-one is worse off due to this change.
- Ensure that the circumstances of parents of disabled children are taken into consideration and in particular access to childcare.

9.2 Claimant Responsibilities

Under UC, the work related requirement will be extended, where appropriate and dependent on the particular circumstances of the individual claimant. For example, people with regular and substantive caring responsibilities, limited capability for work and work-related activity will not have any work related conditions placed upon them. All claimants will be required to accept a 'claimant commitment'.

However, the draft regulations don't appear to recognise that disabled people can themselves be carers. For example, under Universal Credit claimants will only be able to receive either the LCW/LCWRA element or the carer element which is overly restrictive. This means that claimants will have to choose between their disability and their caring responsibility to establish their eligibility for UC.

9.2.1 Clause 14

At present clause 14 does not recognise the individuals' role in developing the claimant commitment. Disability Action, through the services we deliver, is aware of the many barriers disabled people face in accessing the workplace. Disabled people are the experts in their own conditions and lives and therefore there should be amendment to the clause to recognise this.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Adding an additional line in the clause that states that the Claimant Commitment shall be drawn up in partnership with the claimant and take into account their individual circumstances.
- An agreement of support and a minimum guarantee agreement must be in place to ensure that the person receives the required level of support.

9.2.2 Clause 15

There is little detail in the regulation as to how disabled people will be supported in relation to clause 15. The regulations must ensure that disabled people are given the appropriate support to ensure that these measures are accessible.

9.2.3 Clause 16

In relation to section 5 it is clear that the WRB does not take any account of the physical and attitudinal barriers which disabled people face in gaining and retaining employment.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Adding an additional line in the clause that states that the work preparation requirement will take into account the barriers which a disabled person may have in accessing the workplace such as location, number of hours and flexible working requirements.

9.2.4 Clause 17

This clause does not take any account of the physical and attitudinal barriers which disabled people face in gaining and retaining employment.

For example, section 3 (C) states, creating and maintaining an online profile. This takes no account of the fact that disabled people are less likely to have access to the internet than a non-disabled person and that disabled people face barriers in accessing websites due to accessibility issues.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Adding an additional line in the clause that states that the work search requirement will take into account the barriers which a disabled person may have in accessing the workplace.

9.2.5 Clause 18

Clause 18 may be of particular issue for those people who are finding they are not entitled to ESA but still have a level of disability or ill health that impact on them being able to be available for work. If they apply for JSA presently they have to be available for work but if they have been turned down for ESA applying for JSA is their only option. Disability Action, through our advice work are already aware of cases where people have been found 'fit to work' but when they turn up to apply for JSA they are being told by Job Centre staff that as they are not 'available for work' they are not entitled to apply for JSA.

Disabled people are also less likely to have qualifications, work experience and work history and these factors need to be taken into consideration.

Disability support in Universal Credit should be provided to working disabled people who are found to be fully 'fit for work' but are at significant disadvantage in the workplace as a result of an impairment of health condition. Loss of in work financial support for many disabled people could severely affect their ability to move into and retain a job.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Ensure that the situation of a person found fit to work through the Departments work capability assessment but who still have a disability or health condition is provided with the appropriate support.

9.2.6 Clause 19

There is little detail of how conditionality will work in practice and we await further details on the regulations to better understand how it will impact on people with disabilities.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Ensure that conditionality requirements are clearly set out for carers and disabled people and that individual circumstances are considered at all times.

9.2.7 Clauses 20, 21, 22, 23

The regulations must ensure that disabled people are given the appropriate support to ensure that these measures are accessible.

9.2.8 Clause 26

The sanctions outlined in Clause 26 require further detail that will be available under regulation. Disability Action is concerned as to how the term 'with good reason' is to be interpreted in the regulations. For example, if someone has a disability or ill health and cannot attend a work placement will this be taken as 'good reason' and what will be the evidential requirement.

9.2.9 Clause 30

Disability Action has concerns about delegation and contracting out and how the Department will ensure that contractors will have the specific skills and experience to work with disabled people in gaining and retaining employment. Disability Action has concerns over the payment by output related funding model for contractors and the negative impact that this can have on disabled people. This has been demonstrated through the experiences of disabled people in the work programme in England.

Part 2 – Working Age Benefits

10 Job Seekers Allowance

10.1 Clause 45

It is clear that the WRB does not take any account of the physical and attitudinal barriers which disabled people face in gaining and retaining employment.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Adding an additional line in the clause that states that the claimant contract will take into account the individuals requirements and ensure that the persons has access to the appropriate support to enable them to comply with the claimant commitment.

11 Employment and Support Allowance

11.1 Clause 52

The Welfare Reform Bill will make changes to ESA. For people who are in the Work Related Activity Group (WRAG) for Contributory ESA then there will be a 365 day time limit on claiming for this group. This will come into affect straight away. So if people in this group have already received this benefit for 365 days then they will lose this benefit and will have to apply for other benefits.

The time limiting of Contributory ESA for those in the Work Related Activity Group will have significant impact, particularly because the time limiting is effective straight away. There is little evidence to show what support has been given to those on the WRAG group in the time period and how effective support has been in people gaining and retaining employment. Evidence needs to be provided to demonstrate that effective support will be available for those people in the WRAG group.

The average loss in net income for Contributory ESA cases subject to time-limiting is £30.50 per week for men and £32 per week for women³.

It is expected that 53% of those losing their contributory ESA will be wholly or partially compensated by income-related ESA⁴.

The mitigating measures proposed by the Department in its EQIA⁵ are:

- Individuals with low or no other income may apply for income-related ESA. This will in effect act as a safety net to support those who have no means for supporting themselves.
- In addition individuals who do not qualify for income-related ESA will still be able to access the support offered by the Work Programme to help them continue to move towards work.

The proposal move towards alignment with contributory JSA but with a longer ‘time-limit’ to recognise some disability-related barriers to work.

Currently there is no ‘Work Programme’ in Northern Ireland. The Steps 2 Success Programme is currently out for consultation by DEL. Furthermore, the Steps to Work evaluation found that “Consultation findings suggest that not all Employment Service Advisors are using the more flexible and tailored support needed by those with significant barriers to employment”. The report notes that less than one third (31%) of respondents with a disability indicated that they had been asked about their additional needs. It further states that the issue of having a disability is important as “results from the StW Leavers’ Survey suggest that those with a disability are less likely to be in employment than those without a disability (14% compared to 26%)”.

Under the current proposals the only option available to those receiving Contributory ESA in the WRAG after the 365 day time limit will be to apply for Income Based ESA or JSA. If the case is that JSA is to be applied for then when that person presents to apply for JSA and the details of their health condition or disability are made known that they are deemed not available for work and therefore not entitled to apply for JSA. This will lead to many people being in a situation where they cannot apply for with ESA or JSA (or the equivalent under Universal Credit).

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Remove the time-limiting of Contributory ESA for those in the WRAG Group
- Exclude the time spent on the assessment phase (should time-limiting go ahead)
- The Executive must demonstrate that those who receive contributory ESA and are in the WCAG group have been given effective support to move into work. Evidence must be provided on how many people having gained and sustained employment in the WRAG before any change is made to the legislation.
- For the 47% that will not be eligible for income-related ESA then additional supports must be made available to ensure that these people are not pushed further into poverty by these measures (should time-limiting go ahead). This includes making provision to ensure that claimants are not in limbo between ESA and JSA or their equivalent under Universal Credit.

5 Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011, EQIA, (Page 68)

11.2 Clause 54

Disability Action is concerned that Contributory ESA Youth will also no longer be available under the legislation.

The EQIA states “Removing the youth provisions will affect young disabled people. The Executive is committed to promoting employment prospects for younger people, with and without health conditions, by investing in employment support, apprentices and further education.”

However, there is little detail about the provisions that are being made or the number of people that will be impacted by this change. It may result in a person no longer having access to their own income and being financially dependent on someone else.

The removal of this benefit will have an impact on those young people leaving care and we would ask that the Department gives further information on what provisions are being made to mitigate the impact.

11.3 Clauses 55, 56, 57, 58

It is clear that the WRB does not take any account of the physical and attitudinal barriers which disabled people face in gaining and retaining employment.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Adding an additional line in the clause that states that the claimant commitment will take into account the individuals requirements and ensure that the persons have access to the appropriate support to enable them to comply with the commitments.
- Ensure that the work placement element will have a specific need for the person to be supported and the placement effectively monitored to ensure the person is receiving the appropriate support.

12 Income Support

12.1 Clause 60

Please see previous comments in relation to the claimant commitment (9.2)

13 Other Benefit Changes

13.1 Clause 69

Please see comments in section 9.5 (Clause 11)

13.2 Clauses 70 – 73

Social Fund Reform

The Department for Social Development recently consulted on a new Discretionary Support Policy for Northern Ireland.

The EQIA on the Welfare Reform Bill states that “figures for disability are not available from the social fund data scans”. However, given the nature of Community Care Grants a significant proportion will be people with disabilities, their families and carers.

Until such time as the new discretionary support policy is made available for consultation we have no further comment. A copy of Disability Action’s response to the high level policy consultation is available by contacting us or from our website.

14 Personal Independence Payment (PIP)

14.1 The Bill lacks specific detail on PIP with much of the detail being left to regulations. Disability Action has already provided a briefing for the Committee in relation to the detailed design of PIP and has responded to a number of consultations in relation to how PIP will work including the descriptors and thresholds. We would seek confirmation that all the subsequent regulations are fully scrutinised before the Bill is passed into law.

Disability Action has a number of key concerns in relation to the introduction of PIP

- Lack of modelling to ascertain how many people will be affected by the changes in Northern Ireland.
- The proposed descriptors and thresholds for PIP have not yet been finalised and it is our understanding that the final versions will be available in November. Disability Action highlighted our key concerns in a response to the initial consultation (available on request).
- The face-to-face assessment will cause considerable stress to disabled people, their families and carers.
- “Life-time” or “indefinite” awards will no longer be available, even for those with progressive conditions. There may be 5-10 year awards but review periods will be set.
- Linking rules: these are rules which currently allow people who have come off DLA to reclaim the benefit within 2 years if they need it again, without having to ‘requalify.’ The Government plans to limit this to one year for PIP. Inevitably this will hit people with fluctuating conditions, for example, mental health conditions or multiple sclerosis, who might have reduced symptoms for twelve months but then need DLA again and have to go through the needlessly bureaucratic and stressful process of making a whole new claim.
- Motability: Under PIP, families will lose the right to retain Motability vehicles if they spend 28 days or more as a hospital in-patient in any 365 day period. This fails to recognise just how families depend on these vehicles, often as their only vehicle in the family, and just how often many disabled people with complex needs have to stay in hospital. Losing their Motability vehicle could be devastating for families.
- Neither the knock-on impact on carers’ finances or the likely increase in caring responsibilities has been assessed in the existing impact assessments.
- Carers currently depend on the person they look after receiving DLA to be eligible for receipt of Carers Allowance. Therefore the loss of PIP/DLA will directly impact on carers’ income. As disabled people become less able to stay independent because of a loss of income from DLA/PIP they will require more support from family members, increasing the pressure on carers with risks to their health, social inclusion and ability to juggle work and care.
- For families already struggling to make ends meet, often in debt and where caring is already taking a serious toll on their health there is the real risk that the loss of disability benefits could push them to breaking point, and making caring financially and physically impossible.

14.2 Clause 76

Under the proposed residential test DWP has proposed that after 4 weeks abroad PIP entitlement would end, with the exception of when a person is receiving medical treatment, when it would be extended to 26 weeks. Currently under DLA a person can be absent for up to 26 weeks.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Ensure that the impact of those who have family commitments, work or study across the border.

14.3 Clauses 77, 78, 79

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Ensure that the descriptors and thresholds are amended to reflect the true context in which people with disabilities live. Activities must be located in the context and environmental (both physical and attitudinal) in which the individual with a disability exists.

14.4 Clause 80

Under the regulations for DLA the person must satisfy the conditions with periods of three months before and six months afterwards. Under new proposals for PIP the person must satisfy the conditions for PIP three months before the date of the entitlement and nine months afterwards.

The rules which currently allow people who have come off DLA to reclaim the benefit within 2 years if they need it again, without having to 'requalify.' The Government plans to limit this to one year for PIP. This is dealt with in regulations.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- To what exists currently under DLA and leave the period at six months afterwards.
- Retain the current time limit of 2 years that exists with DLA.

14.5 Clause 87

Disability Action is concerned that the stress experienced by disabled people in having to undergo medical assessments and process will be further exasperated by the PIP procedure. In particular we are concerned that those with life long conditions that are unlikely to improve will have to be continually re-assessed.

The experiences for the WCA for ESA has demonstrated the problems with implementing this type of assessment, in particular the provision of additional information being provided to support a persons claim being taken into account by decision makers.

Disability Action would ask that the Committee considers amendments to the clause and/or the regulations to:

- Allow for people to avoid unnecessary face-to-face assessments when sufficient written evidence exists and ensure that people are not financially penalised when sourcing additional medical evidence.
- Ensure that people with long-term conditions that are unlikely to improve are not subjected to unnecessary re-assessment or re-assessment which is too frequent.
- Ensure that ongoing medical assessments do not have a detrimental effect on a person's health and mental well being.

14.6 Clause 88

The time-frame for producing the first independent report is too short and should be reduced to one year. The clause or regulations should also ensure that the methodology for the independent report includes ensuring that disabled people are involved in the design and implementation of the research and report.

14.7 Other

Disability Action would further ask that the Committee presses the Department to:

- Publish policy simulation modelling results and clearly state mitigating actions where the impact on disabled people and carers is required.

- Ensure that customer journey must be based on a rights based approach and ensure that people are given the support that they require to complete the process including, where necessary advocacy and advice from external organisations.
- Put in place protections for those people who may not meet the criteria for PIP and their carers in relation to poverty and social exclusion.

15 Social Security: General

Benefit Cap

15.1 Clauses 95 and 96

Disability Action is concerned that there is little detail on the number of people that will be affected by the benefit cap and if disabled people or families where there is a disabled child(ren) will be disproportionately affected.

It has been stated that the impact of the benefit cap can be mitigated by people moving into employment. However, as we have already highlighted disabled people and families where there is a disabled child(ren) experience numerous barriers in accessing employment.

Disability Action would ask that further information is published by the Department on the number of people likely to be impacted by the cap and that is broken down by section 75 categories.

Appeals

15.2 Clause 101

Disability Action supports a number people successfully at appeal stage in relation to a number of benefits. This stage of the process is key to ensuring that disabled people have a right to access justice in relation to decisions which have been made in relation to benefits.

The addition of the initial stage of 'applications for revision' need to be further considered. The purpose of the additional stage is to resolve disputes internally before going to appeal. We are concerned that this will lead to a reduction in the number of appeals and that disabled people will have less access to justice where the decision is erroneous.

Disability Action is also concerned that the additional stage will leave people with no income or a severely reduced income and that there needs to be consideration given to how urgent cases can move straight to appeal.

Finally we would ask that consideration is given to the time limits applied for both 'application of revision' and further appeal to ensure that they are fair and that they are dealt with in a timely manner.

Recovery of Overpayment

Disability Action is concerned that if appropriate provision is not made to ensure that all the process for application are accessible to people with disabilities and that they are provided with the appropriate support to ensure that the application is correct.

16.3 Clauses 103 and 104

Disability Action is concerned that the application of this clause also would seem to allow overpayment to be reclaimed when it has been the Department at fault.

Disability Action would ask that further consideration is given as to which circumstances in which the recovery of an overpayment will not be made and what guidance will be available.

16.4 Clauses 109 – 111

The provisions in these clauses allow for a benefit payment to be introduced even where no overpayment has resulted and that the penalty will be £350 or 50% of the overpayment whichever is greater up to a maximum of £2000. Where no overpayment has arisen the benefit penalty will be £350.

Disability Action believes that the penalty of £350 is too high, particularly where there is no overpayment. The penalty for overpayment is also increasing and we do not feel that the increase is justifiable. Disability Action would recommend not introducing these charges.

Miscellaneous

17 Clause 130

Disability Action would ask that the Committee seek further information on the impact of those people in receipt of rate relief. It is our understanding that the rate relief scheme is going to be removed from the housing benefit scheme from 1 April 2013 and at present there is no indication of what will replace it. It is not clear how the scheme will relate to UC.

Other Considerations

18 Getting the Support Right for Employment

In Northern Ireland there has been a move away from Disablement Employment Advisors (DEA) to the generic Employment Support Advisor (ESA). This has resulted in a restricted service to people with disabilities. Whilst disabled people should be free to choose to access mainstream services, some people with significant disabilities benefited from support from specialist DEA's who had a role in advocacy and direct engagement with employers. Disability Action believes that the DEA role should be re-established in line with practice in GB. This would go some way to ensuring equitable inclusion for people with disabilities in any new employment programme.

19 Digital Inclusion

The matter of IT and process for application are dealt with in regulations and some areas of the Bill. Disability Action would like to make specific comment on the requirement for UC to be applied and managed using an online system.

A report⁶ in 2011 found that internet use is linked to various socio-economic and demographic characteristics, such as age, disability and location. Groups of adults who were more likely to have never used the Internet included people over 65, people who have been widowed and people with a disability.

There were 4.20 million disabled adults, almost half of all those who had never used the Internet. This represented 35.9 per cent of those who had a disability. Of those adults who reported no disability, 11.9 per cent of adults had never used the Internet.

The region where people were least likely to have used the Internet was Northern Ireland, where 28.6 per cent had never done so.

Whilst we are aware that the Department is considering other methods of application we would ask that the Committee seeks further information on how disabled people are going to be protected to ensure that they are not further disadvantaged by the Governments 'digital by default' position.

6 Internet Access Quarterly Update 2011, Q1, Office for National Statistics, May 2011

20 Getting the Message Right

20.1 Mind your Language

As organisations working for and with disabled people, their families and carers we are only too aware of the effect of 'the scrounger' message is having. Disabled people, families and carers already face negative attitudes on a daily basis. There is evidence that the language being used to gain public support for these welfare reforms is adding the stigma people face in their lives.

It is therefore essential that everyone when talking about welfare reform remembers that they have a social responsibility to ensure that they are not adding to the negative perceptions of disabled people. Public authorities are reminded of their duties under the DDO to promote positive attitudes to disability.

20.2 Communicating the Changes

It is essential that people are made aware of the significant changes that will impact on their lives. It is imperative that communication strategies are developed and resourced to ensure that everyone is made aware of the changes that will impact them. All communication strategies must ensure that they are accessible to people with disabilities. For example, provision must be made to communicate using Easy Read, audio, Braille and large print.

Conclusion

21 Disability Action would like to thank the Committee for the opportunity to provide evidence in relation to this important Bill and can provide further information on any element of this briefing if required.

22 This Bill will have a significant detrimental impact on the lives of disabled people and families with disabilities in Northern Ireland. We would ask that the Committee considers our amendments and advocates for the rights of disabled people to live independently in their own community.

Equality Commission

Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland)(as Introduced) Briefing for Committee for Social Development (30th October 2012)

BRIEF

1. The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland (Commission) made a response to the Department for Social Development (Department) consultation on the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011 Equality Impact Assessment in December 2011¹. Furthermore, the Commission provided evidence to the Committee for Social Development (Committee) on 8th March 2012².
2. In doing so, we advised both the Department and the Committee not only about the requirement³, but also the critical importance, of assessing the potential equality implications of its policy proposals. In this regard, we wish to remind the Committee that the Commission considered that the Department's 2011 equality impact assessment consultation paper:
 - provided no substantive analysis of the proposals nor did it provide any real consideration of the potential adverse impact; and
 - while recognising and endorsing parity, it did not consider the changes in the context of Northern Ireland policy and proposals not subject to parity.
3. The Commission expects that a range of the mitigating actions and alternative options should be addressed during the passage of the Bill in the Assembly. The implementation of the resultant Act will be subject to the commitments to screen and equality impact assess individual policies, and decisions, as they arise in accordance with the Department's Equality Scheme. The Committee may bring matters to the attention of the Department to assist it in the monitoring of its policies for adverse impact, to ensure that adverse impacts over time can be identified and mitigating measures put in place.
4. The Commission has previously raised concerns regarding the policy proposals within the Welfare Reform Bill and associated regulations, regarding some aspects of the Universal Credit, the Lone Parent Conditionality, the Housing Benefit Cap and Disability Benefit Reform. This briefing provides additional and targeted consideration of the provisions within the Bill, and related regulations, that may impact upon equality groups.
5. It is important for the Committee to note that, even at this stage, there are opportunities to amend the Bill without undermining the parity principle. In effect parity means maintaining a single system of social security, but not necessarily one that has the exact same regulations and operational procedures. In this regard, the Minister for Social Development has already demonstrated this potential, through his statement to the Northern Ireland Assembly, 22

1 Response to the Department for Social Development's consultation on the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011 Equality Impact Assessment.

2 Response to the Department for Social Development's consultation on the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011 Equality Impact Assessment.

3 Schedule 9 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, paragraph 4 (2) (b) "assessing and consulting on the impact of policies adopted or proposed to be adopted"

October 2012, by negotiation with Lord Freud, that he has secured changes to allow: the housing cost element of Universal Credit to be paid direct to landlords rather than the customer; the payment of Universal Credit to be split between two parties in the household; and the payment of Universal Credit on a twice monthly basis. The Commission welcomes these changes along with the delay in the implementation of Universal Credit until April 2014. The Commission considers that other mitigating measures should be put in place to address outstanding adverse equality impacts stemming from the Bill. In respect to specific clauses within the Bill, the Committee may wish to:

Payment to the Primary Carer

- consider that the entire payment of Universal Credit should be made to the primary carer, usually the mother of children, rather than to be split between two parties within the household. (Clause 7)

Standard Disability Premium

- consider whether the removal of the direct link between receipt of the 'Standard Disability Premium' addition to Income Support for those in receipt of Disability Living Allowance under Personal Independent Payments will result in loss of income for claimants at either the enhanced or standard rate. The Committee could ask the Department why the 'Standard Disability Premium' addition to Income Support is not considered within this clause under the extra elements to the standard allowance within Universal Credit. (Clause 12)

Passport Benefits

- seek clarification regarding access to, and entitlement of, passport benefits taking account of changes to the benefit system as well as other wider benefits such as the operation of the Blue Badge Scheme etc.

Online Systems & Accessibility

- seek assurances from the Department that the development of the online system for Universal Credit will contain a range of safeguards against any immediate adverse impact on claimants where information relating to claimant's entitlements is wrongly calculated or recorded outside the control of the claimant. The Committee should ask the Department what action has already been taken or being taken in this regard.

Claimant Commitment

- seek clarification from the Department regarding the requirement for a claimant or "both members of a couple" to enter into a claimant commitment as part qualification criteria for Universal Credit. (Clause 14)

Lone Parent Conditionality

determine what measures are in place to provide support to parents with young children to meet the conditionality requirements of entitlement for Universal Credit / Income Support, and for those parents belonging to the Employment Support Allowance work-related activity group. (Clauses 13 to 18, 21 to 27 and Clauses 58 and 59)

Pension Credit Entitlement for Couples

- seek clarification as to whether a claimant reaching the qualifying age for Pension Credit will be subject to the conditions and sanctions associated with entitlements of Universal Credit until their partner reaches the qualifying age requirement for Pension Credit. The Committee could also seek assurances that this clause will not result in the loss of income for couples where one partner has not yet reached the qualifying age for Pension Credit. (Clause 32, Schedule 2)

Work Capacity Assessment

- determine what measures will be taken for the implementation of Work Capacity Assessments for work-related activity, under the Universal Credit, taking into account the failings of the similar assessment process for the transition from Incapacity Benefit to the new Employment Support Allowance, to ensure that fair, appropriate and individualised assessment processes and practices are put in place in Northern Ireland. (Clause 38)

Pilot Projects for Implementation of Universal Credit

- determine what measures are in place to assess the effectiveness of the implementation of Universal Credit, including proper consideration of any adverse equality impacts, for example, what independent review and monitoring frameworks are in place to assess the outcome and impact of the implementation of Universal Credit. (Clause 42)

Penalties

- ask the Department to outline what steps have been taken to ensure that disabled people / older people are not unduly penalised for failing to meet the requirements of entitlement for Job Seekers Allowance by taking account of claimant's individual circumstances. (Clause 47)

Housing Benefit and Under-Occupancy

- whether assessments for Housing Benefit will fully take into account the needs (and rights) of tenants who are disabled, or who are separated from their partners and require additional rooms to respectively accommodate their carers and children. Furthermore, whether assessments for Housing Benefit will fully take into account of the tenants' ability to move to new accommodation considering the separate nature of social housing in Northern Ireland. The committee may wish clarification that tenants under these circumstances will not be placed under financial hardship. (Clause 69)

6. Finally, under Clause 33, the Department has the power, by regulations, to make such consequential, supplementary, incidental or transitional provision in relation to any provision of Part 1, Universal Credit, of the Bill, as the Department considers appropriate. These regulations may amend, repeal or revoke any statutory provision (whenever passed or made). The Commission recommends that the Committee regularly keeps under review the implementation and operation of Universal Credit in Northern Ireland, cognisant of developments in Great Britain, and where necessary takes action to ensure its operation is reflective of the unique circumstances in Northern Ireland, with particular regard to its impact upon equality groups under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998.
7. The considerations we ask the Committee to address are further outlined within Annex 1; the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland's remit is outlined in Annex 2.

Annex 1

Introduction

8. The Committee is asked to note that the Commission's evidence is not concerned generally with the particular wording of the clauses in the Bill. Rather, the Commission addresses the detrimental and adverse impacts of the subject specific clauses identified within the Bill in relation to the promotion of equality of opportunity. Many of the clauses within the Bill are bound by regulations which detail the intended and actual effect of these clauses. In this regard, the Commission is not aware of the Department's considerations. For example, the outcome of two recent public consultations on the Personal Independence Payments. Therefore, our evidence is presented to highlight our overarching concerns with the Bill, recommending amendments where appropriate to lessen adverse impact on the relevant Section 75 equality groups.

Part 1 Universal Credit, Chapter 1 Entitlements and Awards

'Awards' – Clause 7 – Basis of awards

9. The Committee may wish to consider that the entire payment of Universal Credit should be made to the primary carer, usually the mother of children, rather than to be split between two parties within the household.
10. We remain concerned that the Bill does not identify the negative impact on women with respect to the payment of Universal Credit. The payment of the new Universal Credit to the main earner following joint claim and joint assessment will, in many instances, leave women without income. Payment of benefit to women in their 'caring for dependents role' was an important social security reform introduced in the 1970s, recognising that women more readily spend on children and household essentials. We expected the Department to consider this matter further and include a qualifying clause to that effect in the Bill.

'Elements of an award' - Clause 12 - Other Particular needs or Circumstances

11. The Committee should consider whether the removal of the direct link between receipt of the 'Standard Disability Premium' addition to Income Support for those in receipt of Disability Living Allowance under Personal Independent Payments will result in loss of income for claimants at either the enhanced or standard rate? The Committee should ask the Department why the 'Standard Disability Premium' addition to Income Support is not considered within this clause under the extra elements to the standard allowance within Universal Credit.
12. This clause considers the amounts to be included in the Universal Credit award for other needs or circumstances which would be extra elements in addition to the standard allowance. The Commission understands this clause refers to additional income supplements for disabled people who are assessed as having limited capability for work or limited capability for work-related activity with reference to the existing 'Severe Disability Premium'. We note that this clause does not include an alternative provision for the 'Standard Disability Premium' addition to Income Support. We are concerned that this may result in loss of additional income for many disabled people.
13. We understand that this 'Standard Disability Premium', which claimants would receive in addition to their Income Support, will no longer be directly linked to the receipt of the new Personal Independence Payments, as it is under the current system of Disability Living Allowance. We have already highlighted to the Department our concern that disabled people who qualify for entitlement to the Personal Independence Payments will be required to take an additional assessment for entitlement to additional income-related benefits which are currently automatically granted under the existing Disability Living Allowance framework⁴.

Additional Concerns: Passport Benefits

14. The Committee may wish to seek clarification regarding access to, and entitlement of, passport benefits taking account of changes to the benefit system as well as other wider benefits such as the operation of the Blue Badge Scheme etc.

15. Under the existing system, entitlement to Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance facilitates access to a range of other benefits which are vital to disabled claimants, such as Motability, Free Road Tax, Blue Badge Scheme, Income Support, and the Standard Disability Premium. We are concerned that there is insufficient detail on how passport benefits, plus other issues, such as childcare costs, carers' support allowance, rate rebates (in Northern Ireland) and mortgage interest support will be integrated into Universal Credit.

Payment of Benefits Online

16. The Committee may wish to seek assurances from the Department that the development of the online system for Universal Credit will contain a range of safeguards against any immediate impact on claimants where information relating to claimant's entitlements is wrongly calculated or recorded outside the control of the claimant. The Committee should ask the Department what action has been taken or is being taken in this regard.

17. Action to ensure safeguards, and the provision of accurate and timely information, to claimants is important. This is particularly important as many equality groups in Northern Ireland may exhibit lower internet usage than the general population. In recent research carried out on behalf of the Commission, it reported that there is clear evidence that there are large areas of information which are inaccessible to disabled people, see for example RNID and BDA (2009)⁵ and the ECNI (2008)⁶, and it is particularly disappointing that a primary source of information, the internet, is underused by disabled people. A 2011 survey on internet usage by the Office for National Statistics (ONS)⁷ revealed that in Northern Ireland, participants with a DDA⁸ defined disability (46.3%) were much less likely than non disabled people (77.4%) to have "ever used the internet". The figures also reveal that internet usage amongst disabled people in Northern Ireland is less than the average in the UK for people with a DDA defined disability (63.8%)⁹.

Part 1 Universal Credit, Chapter 2 Claimant Responsibilities

'Introductory' - Clause 14 - Claimant Commitment

18. The Committee may wish to seek clarification from the Department regarding the requirement for a claimant or "both members of a couple" to enter into a claimant commitment as part qualification criteria for Universal Credit.
19. This provision may have an impact upon for those with dependents and for women who are typically the primary carers in many households. We are concerned that if only one member of a couple accepts the claimant commitment and the other refuses, then both parties may be penalised. We believe this clause may have an unintentional adverse effect particularly when children are involved.

'Work-related requirements: supplementary' - Clause 25: compliance with requirements and 'Reduction in benefits' - Clause 26: Higher-level sanctions and Clause 27: Other sanctions

20. The Commission urges restraint in the blanket application of these sanctions and recommends that each case should be considered on its own merits taking into account the Departments equality obligations under Section 75 and the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (as amended).

'Introductory', 'Work-related requirements', Application of work-related requirements', 'Work-related requirements: supplementary' and 'Reduction in benefits' – Clauses 13 to 18, 21 to 27 and Clauses 58 and 59

21. The Committee may wish to determine what measures are in place to provide support to parents with young children to meet the conditionality requirements of entitlement for Universal Credit / Income Support, and for those parents belonging to the Employment Support Allowance workrelated activity group.
22. Here, we are concerned with Clauses 13-18, 21-27 58 and 59, and the Lone Parent Conditionality in respect of entitlement to Universal Credit / Income Support and Employment Support Allowance. The Commission is concerned that the lone parent conditionality, and the lack of appropriate, accessible and affordable childcare in Northern Ireland, may restrict¹⁰ a claimant's ability to seek education and training opportunities and may undermine, or run counter to, the plan within the Northern Ireland Executive's Economic Strategy to "improve the skills and employability of the entire workforce so that people can progress up the skills ladder, thereby delivering higher productivity and increased social inclusion".
23. The Assembly needs to provide the appropriate support infrastructure to assist lone parents into work, such as affordable and flexible childcare to help lone parents find sustainable employment.¹¹ The Committee should note that the statutory obligation to provide childcare is applicable only to England, Scotland and Wales. For example, unlike England and Wales where the Childcare Act 2006 imposes a duty on local authorities to identify and meet childcare needs, Northern Ireland has no corresponding childcare legislation, where both the availability and affordability of childcare does not meet the demand or the needs of local families¹².

10 NI Welfare Reform Group Briefing Paper - Welfare Reform Bill, Second Reading House of Lords July 2011 page 4 - Evidence suggests that forcing lone parents of children under 5, the majority of whom are as the consultation paper acknowledges are women, would have an adverse impact on both the parent and the child / and older siblings - limiting educational and training opportunities to enable good quality work opportunities as opposed to a low pay unskilled job, as well address the need for quality child care that meets the 'best interests' of the child. It should also be noted the correlation between low income families and the increased likelihood of child poverty. Save the Children research points out that 21% of children in Northern Ireland live in persistent child poverty which is double the GB percentage rate, and severe child poverty stands at 40,000, almost 10%.

Part 1 Universal Credit, Chapter 3 Supplementary and General

'Supplementary and consequential' - Clause 32 – Supplementary and consequential amendments and Schedule 2: Universal credit: amendments

24. The Committee may wish to seek clarification as to whether a claimant reaching the qualifying age for Pension Credit will be subject to the conditions and sanctions associated with entitlements of Universal Credit until their partner reaches the qualifying age requirement for Pension Credit. The Committee could also seek assurances that this clause will not result in the loss of income for couples where one partner has not yet reached the qualifying age for Pension Credit.

25. We are concerned about the qualifying criteria for Pension Credit. In that, a member of a couple who has attained the qualifying age for Pension Credit may not receive it until their partner has reached the same qualifying age. We recommend that the Committee reviews this provision for the purpose of clarifying its intended effect. It is not clear whether those claimants who reach the state pension age are prevented from claiming Pension Credit because of the age status of their partners when their partners continue to be subject to requirements / conditionality of entitlement for Universal Credit.

'General' - Clause 38 - Capability for work or work-related activity

26. The Committee may wish to determine what measures will be taken for the implementation of Work Capability Assessments for work-related activity, under the Universal Credit, taking into account the failings of the similar assessment process for the transition from Incapacity Benefit to the new Employment Support Allowance, to ensure that fair, appropriate and individualised assessment processes and practices are put in place in Northern Ireland.

27. The Commission strongly recommends a review of all procedures in determining a person's capability for work-related activity and employment, given the recent controversy and media attention¹³ around the Work Capability Assessments for the transition from Incapacity Benefit to Employment Support Allowance. In any assessment of this nature, it should include evidence from the claimant as well as medical evidence from the claimant's own doctor, or relevant medical professional, and not left solely at the discretion of an independent medical assessor who has no previous knowledge of the claimant's health condition or personal circumstances. According to the Department's own figures, we note that approximately one third of Work Capability Assessments, in respect of the transition from Incapacity Benefit to Employment Support Allowance, are overturned on appeal¹⁴.

'Regulations' - Clause 42 – Pilot schemes

28. The Committee may wish to determine what measures are in place to assess the effectiveness of the implementation of Universal Credit, including proper consideration of any adverse equality impacts, for example, what independent review and monitoring frameworks are in place to assess the outcome and impact of the implementation of Universal Credit.

29. In respect to the pilot schemes of the regulations under Part I of the Bill, we recommend that the Committee considers this in the context of the ongoing statutory equality duties on the Department, to ensure that the information gained from any pilot schemes assists in the monitoring of policies for adverse impacts, in line with Equality Scheme commitments. The Commission expects that all matters decided upon during implementation of the provisions of the current Bill will be assessed according to the commitments in the Department's Equality Scheme (or that of any other implementing organisation), particularly the policies will be screened and if necessary, subject to an Equality Impact Assessment.

Part 2 Working-Age Benefits, Chapter 1 Jobseeker's Allowance

'Claimant responsibilities for interim period' – Clause 47 (and related clauses) - Sanctions

30. The Committee may wish to ask the Department to outline what steps have been taken to ensure that disabled people / older people are not unduly penalised for failing to meet the requirements of entitlement for Job Seekers Allowance by taking account of claimant's individual circumstances.
31. The application of sanctions, as specified in Clause 47 of the Bill, should be considered on a case by case basis, and in light of the effects a person's disability may have on that person in respect to failure to attend work-focused interviews, in leaving a job, and in refusing or failing to apply for a job. For example, a person with recognised mental health issues such as "depression" may be unable to meet all the conditions and requirements of entitlement during the timeframe in which their disability is symptomatic, and has an impact on their decision making abilities, in relation to accepting job opportunities and retaining employment etc. It is important that cases of this nature are considered on their individual merits and that sanctions are not applied without proper consideration of the individual claimant's personal circumstances.

Part 3 Other Benefit Changes

'Housing benefit' - Clause 69 – Housing benefit: determination of appropriate maximum

32. The Committee may wish to ask whether assessments for Housing Benefit will fully take into account the needs (and rights) of tenants who are disabled, or who are separated from their partners and require additional rooms to respectively accommodate their carers and children. Furthermore, whether assessments for Housing Benefit will fully take into account of the tenants' ability to move to new accommodation considering the separate nature of social housing in Northern Ireland. The committee may wish clarification that tenants under these circumstances will not be placed under financial hardship.
33. Clause 69 relates to the introduction of the size criteria into the calculation of housing benefit for working age tenants in the social rented sector. The Commission is concerned that the Department ensures that Housing Benefit assessments of disabled persons and separated parents, including those in similar situations, fully takes into account the needs (and rights) of these groups. Furthermore, the Commission is concerned in regard to a tenant's ability to move may be severely restricted, due to the separate nature of social housing in Northern Ireland. Therefore, the tenant may be placed in financial hardship because of a reduction in benefits due to under occupancy.
34. In implementing this provision, consideration should be given to the individual circumstances of each claimant and the support networks available to them in the communities and localities in which they currently live. For example, informal support networks developed by disabled people to meet their day-to-day living and mobility requirements, in particular those disabled people who may not be entitled to the new Personal Independence Payments or any additional consideration as a result of changes to their benefit entitlement status may still require additional rooms to meet their care / support requirements to deal with the affects of their disability.
35. The Commission recommends that the Department delay implementation of this provision / clause until appropriate housing stock is available to facilitate this provision, through the implementation of the current draft Housing Strategy¹⁵. The Minister has acknowledged in previous statements to the Assembly that the Northern Ireland housing infrastructure cannot accommodate claimants affected by this provision, in particular, those claimants who require 1-2 bedroom accommodation¹⁶.

‘Social fund’ - Clauses 70, 72 and 73 - Ending of discretionary payments, Determination of amount or value of budgeting loan and Community care grants

36. These clauses refer to the ending of discretionary payments from the ‘existing Social Fund. The Bill does not make clear, at this stage, what alternative arrangements are in place in relation to budgeting loans, crises loans and community care grants. The Northern Ireland Assembly should continue to invest the same level of resources in this core provision, and retain a non-loan grant scheme for those assessed as being unable to repay loans as a result of financial hardship.

Part 4 Personal Independence Payments

‘Personal independence payments’- Clauses 76, to 79

37. In wider responses¹⁷ we have raised concerns regarding the higher qualification criteria under the Personal Independence Payment (PIP) compared with the existing Disability Living Allowance¹⁸ (DLA) and that the experiences faced by disabled people through the implementation of the ATOS assessment scheme for ESA and DLA (and the subsequent very high percentage rate of successful appeals for those refused DLA) should not be replicated for the implementation of PIP and that people currently in receipt of the DLA care component should not lose out under Personal Independence Payment (PIP).
38. The Commission has responded to both consultations undertaken by DSD and DWP regarding the regulations for the introduction of Personal Independence Payments. The Commission is not aware of the outcomes to responses to the two recent public consultations on the Personal Independence Payments.

‘Entitlement and payability: further provision’ - Clause 85 – Hospital in-patients

39. In respect to Clause 85 of the Bill, there appears to be no account taken of our recommendations regarding the withdrawal of the mobility component of the Personal Independence Payments for hospital inpatients. The Bill specifies that for the first 28 days after the claimant becomes a hospital inpatient that they will continue to receive the relevant disability benefit after which time it will be withdrawn. We have recommended to the Department that this period be extended for disabled adults to approximately the same period allowed for disabled children to retain the mobility component. We do not see the justification for limiting access to the mobility component for adults in comparison with the extended timeline provided for children¹⁹.

18 The proportion of working age people in receipt of DLA in Northern Ireland is approximately twice the level in Great Britain - 10.3 per cent of the Northern Ireland population (http://www.dsdni.gov.uk/dla_publication_august_10.xls) . Reform of the DLA system therefore could result in many thousands of disabled people in Northern Ireland losing entitlement to this benefit or receiving reduced support – with potential impact on personal mobility; independent life in the community and adequate standards of living.

Annex 2:

The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland

40. The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland (“the Commission”) is an independent public body established under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. The Commission is responsible for implementing the anti-discrimination legislation on fair employment, sex discrimination and equal pay, race relations, sexual orientation, disability and age.
41. The Commission’s remit also includes overseeing the statutory duties equality duties on public authorities in Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998: to pay due regard to the need to promote equality of opportunity and pay regard to the desirability of promoting good relations, as well as the duties in Section 49A of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (as amended).
42. The Commission, along with the NIHRC, has also been designated as the ‘independent mechanism’ in Northern Ireland, tasked with promoting, protecting and monitoring implementation of the United Nation Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD).

Equality Commission

Response to the Department for Social Development's consultation on the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011 Equality Impact Assessment

December 2011

1. Introduction

- 1.1 The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland ("the Commission") is an independent public body established under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. The Commission is responsible for implementing the legislation on fair employment, sex discrimination and equal pay, race relations, sexual orientation, disability and age.
- 1.2 The Commission's remit also includes overseeing the statutory duties on public authorities to promote equality of opportunity and good relations under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 and the positive disability duties.
- 1.3 Further, the Commission has also been designated to act as an 'independent mechanism' jointly with the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission, to promote awareness of, and monitor the implementation of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities with regard to Government's obligations in relation to Northern Ireland.
- 1.4 The Commission welcomes the opportunity to respond to the Department for Social Development's (the Department) public consultation on the Equality Impact Assessment for the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011. Our response addresses the following:
 - A consideration of the broad policy aims of the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011 (the Bill); and
 - The potential impact of welfare reform in an economic downturn
 - The extent to which the Impact Assessment is carried out in a manner consistent with the principles enshrined in our Practical Guidance on Equality Impact Assessment.
- 1.5 Our response is also focused on a number of selected policy issues addressed in the EQIA, where these have identifiable equality implications, in accordance with our priorities. This response therefore also includes consideration of:
 - Universal Credit;
 - Housing Benefit Cap;
 - Lone Parent Conditionality; and
 - Disability Living Allowance Reform

2. Policy aims of the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011

- 2.1 While the Commission agrees with the policy aim to 'seek to make the social security system fairer, more affordable and better equipped to deal with poverty and welfare dependency', we recommend that the Department reconsiders and clarifies the statement that 'by accepting personal responsibility for our individual circumstances, it is considered that each person has the ability to improve their situation'.¹ It is recognised and widely evidenced that many barriers to employment exist for groups, including women, older people and people with disabilities. These barriers are often institutional or societal, and without appropriate support, it is incorrect to assume that everyone has the ability to improve their situation. Unfortunately, within this consultation document we are unable to see what additional measures the Northern Ireland Government will put in place to assist these individuals into skilled and well paid employment to ensure that welfare reform does not simply increase their experience of poverty and social exclusion.

- 2.2 The overarching intention “to promote the fact that work always pays and to incentivise individuals to enter the labour market” is of merit. We welcome any supportive measures from Government that will have the effect of improving access to employment for traditionally marginalised and excluded groups. However, the Commission is genuinely concerned that many of the proposed measures may have the effect of creating further poverty, particularly for already traditionally marginalised groups in Northern Ireland.

3. The potential impact of welfare reform in an economic downturn

- 3.1 At a United Kingdom level, despite the current economic recession, the number of children in poverty among workless families fell during the period 2008-09, but those from working families rose slightly. Therefore, access to work is not necessarily the sole measure by which poverty can be reduced. The annual report on poverty and social exclusion by Joseph Rowntree Foundation and the New Policy Institute concluded that the Government faced a number of challenges including in-work poverty, the number of children/young adults with few/no qualifications, young adult unemployment, health inequalities, and low income households' lack of access to essential services².
- 3.2 A key issue arising from the Commission's own research³ suggests that the issue of welfare reform combined with the recession will have a serious impact on those already vulnerable in the labour market; in particular, the long term unemployed, disabled people, lone parents, young unemployed, and older workers. Of significant concern is the emphasis on conditionality and sanctions and benefit cuts as opposed to the need for investment in the support infrastructure needed to assist people to access work, such as affordable and flexible childcare to help lone parents find sustainable employment⁴. The Department's equality impact assessment consultation paper provides no substantive analysis of the proposals nor does it provide any real consideration of the potential adverse impact.

1 Department for Social Development (2011): Equality Impact Assessment for the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) page 16.

2 Parekh, A., MacInnes, T. and Peter Kenway (2010), Poverty and Social Exclusion Report 2010, concluded that despite the current recession, the number of children in poverty in workless families fell in 2008/09, to 1.6m, the lowest since 1984, but those in working families rose slightly to 2.1m, the highest on record the thirteenth annual report in the Monitoring poverty and social exclusion series. See link <http://www.jrf.org.uk/sites/files/jrf/poverty-social-exclusion-2010-summary.pdf>

3 McQuaid, R., Hollywood, E. and Canduela, J. (July 2010): Employment Inequalities in an Economic Downturn (ECNI). The overall aim of this research was to: update understanding of the effect of the economic downturn on the employment status and prospects of relevant groups across the nine equality grounds in Northern Ireland (NI). It was carried out by the Employment Research Institute at Edinburgh Napier University for the Equality Commission Northern Ireland. <http://www.equalityni.org/archive/pdf/EconDownturnSummaryReport.pdf>

4 NI Welfare Reform Group (July 2011): Briefing Paper - Welfare Reform Bill, Second Reading House of Lords, page 4. <http://www.lawcentreni.org/Publications/Policy%20Briefings/WelfareReformGroupHoL.pdf>. Evidence suggests that forcing lone parents of children under 5, the majority of whom are as the consultation paper acknowledges are women, would have an adverse impact on both the parent and the child / and older siblings - limiting educational and training opportunities to enable good quality work opportunities as opposed to a low pay unskilled job, as well address the need for quality child care that meets the 'best interests' of the child. It should also be noted the correlation between low income families and the increased likelihood of child poverty. Save the Children research points out that 21% of children in Northern Ireland live in persistent child poverty which is double the GB percentage rate, and severe child poverty stands at 40,000, almost 10%.

3.3 While recognising and endorsing parity, the consultation document does not consider the changes in the context of Northern Ireland policy and legislation not subject to parity. For example, unlike England and Wales where the Childcare Act 2006 imposes a duty on local authorities to identify and meet childcare needs, Northern Ireland has no corresponding childcare legislation. There is thus no statutory requirement for the provision of childcare in Northern Ireland where it is recognised that the situation on both availability and affordability of childcare is the worst in the UK⁵. Whilst the proposals indicate that some flexibility can be included for lone parents⁶, it is not clear how this will be determined and how such a discretionary measure will be delivered fairly.

3.4 The Commission wishes to bring the following statistics to the Department's attention in respect to employment, unemployment and economic inactivity in Northern Ireland:

- The seasonally adjusted figures for Northern Ireland show that the economic inactivity rate for people aged between 18-64 currently stands at 26.6 per cent which is 2.3 percentage points lower than the rate 5 years ago which was at an all time high of 28.8 per cent. However, Northern Ireland has the highest economic inactivity rate of all regions in the UK (UK average 23.2 per cent)⁷.
- UK-wide research concluded youth unemployment (16-24 year olds) was at 20.0 per cent⁸ in 2010; the highest figure in 18 years. The statistic was slightly higher in Northern Ireland at 20.4 per cent youth unemployment⁹. Our own research concludes that the Welfare Reform proposals are likely to impact on single people, the greatest group largely composed of young people¹⁰.
- Prior to the current recession disabled people were twice as likely to be unemployed as non-disabled people¹¹ - this statistic is unlikely to change in the current economic climate. Over 184,500 people in Northern Ireland currently receive Disability Living Allowance (DLA), representing 10.3 per cent of working age population in Northern Ireland - approximately twice the level in GB¹². Furthermore, disabled people have a tendency to be over-represented in entry level jobs and under-represented in higher level occupations which is evidence that employment in itself is not a quality indicator of a reasonable level of income¹³.
- While the unemployment rate in Northern Ireland is lower at present than the UK average, our own research indicates that continuing redundancies in the public sector will have a significant impact on women who make up the greater number of employees in the public sector. Most economists agree that the economy is overly dependent on the public sector and that redundancies in this area are set to continue for some time. As a result, Northern Ireland is likely to experience the highest level of unemployment throughout the UK. There is also a growing consensus among leading economists that Northern Ireland will take much longer to come out of the current economic recession because of its over reliance on the public sector in comparison with all other regions in the UK.

- The proportion of lone parents in employment in Northern Ireland is well below the average for the United Kingdom, with female lone parents at the highest risk of poverty. Only one in seven lone parents in Northern Ireland are currently working. This is a smaller proportion of lone parents than for any other region within the United Kingdom¹⁴.
- Welfare Reform proposals will also place significant demands on other people with dependents. Parents with one or more children will be obliged to seek and find employment, requiring them to access high quality affordable childcare. However, unlike England and Wales where the Childcare Act 2006 imposes a duty on local authorities to identify and meet childcare needs, Northern Ireland has no corresponding childcare legislation and, therefore, there is no statutory obligation on the part of local or public authorities to provide high quality affordable childcare. Broadly, the consultation paper does not fully recognise the often complex and individual needs of children and/or the flexibility required by all parents, including those on low incomes and in receipt of benefits, both to work and to raise a family¹⁵.
- The Commission is also concerned that the Welfare Reform proposals are likely to undermine the UK Government's commitment to its international obligations, with respect to the impact of these reforms on children (arising from the conditionality requirement on lone parents) and disabled people. Specifically Government's obligations under the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (e.g. Article 19 Independent Living) and the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (Article 3) which requires government to consider the 'best interests' of the child in all actions that impact on children.
- Also, statistics show older people currently in receipt of welfare support are unlikely to find it easy to return to the job market. The emphasis on finding employment for younger workers may detract from government's efforts to find suitable employment for those other benefit recipients under pension age¹⁶.

4. Comments on the Equality Impact Assessment process

4.1 First of all we wish to point out that (in Chapter 1 of the EQIA) the text of Section 75 has not been quoted correctly.

4.2 Section 75 (1) requires that public authorities, when carrying out their functions relating to Northern Ireland, have due regard to the need to promote equality of opportunity between the listed groups.

The term "due regard" was intended to be, and is, stronger than regard. Every public authority is required by the statute to take these specific matters properly into account and to give them the required weight when carrying out its functions relating to Northern Ireland.

4.3 Section 75 (2) requires that a public authority shall have regard to the desirability of promoting good relations.

15 Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Group (2011): Joint Briefing Paper– Welfare Reform Bill 2nd Reading House of Lords, page 6. The Briefing also noted that between 2002-2009 the overall number of daycare places in Northern Ireland fell by 6% and further added that the decrease of the Childcare element of the Working Tax Credit from 80-70% from April 2011 was also having an adverse impact on low income family households. <http://www.lawcentreni.org/Publications/Policy%20Briefings/WelfareReformGroupHoL.pdf>

16 McQuaid, R., Hollywood, E. and Canduela, J. (July 2010) op cit., page 44. The research also notes that older people are likely to face discrimination from employers when trying to return to work after redundancy and that there was also evidence of a lack of flexible working conditions for older people compared to other age groups. It is likely there will be a higher percentage of older unemployed people as the ongoing redundancies in the Northern Ireland public sector take effect and this presents particular challenges for government, for while older people are valued while they are in work after redundancy or loss of occupation statistics show a lower rate of return to employment for the above reasons (page 43).

General

- 4.4 The Commission acknowledges that the structure of the consultation document follows the 5 steps of the 7 steps process for Equality Impact Assessments as detailed in the Commission's Practical Guidance on Equality Impact Assessments. This process, however, is not an end in itself and we have considerable concerns regarding the way in which some of the steps have been completed.
- 4.5 The aim of an equality impact assessment to identify any potential adverse impacts and take steps to address these. Therefore, the consideration of mitigating measures and alternative policies is at the heart of the EQIA process as it is the outcomes from an enhanced policy that are of primary concern. Unless different options can be developed for delivering the policy aims, options which have a less adverse effect on or which better promote equality of opportunity for the relevant equality category, an equality impact assessment remains a 'box-ticking' exercise.
- 4.6 The Commission is aware that the prevailing view of parity is that it applies both to the rate of benefits and the conditions for receipt of benefits. However, the legislation does not require social security parity, but does signal the desirability of providing coordinated systems of social security.¹⁷ Social security remains a transferred matter with separate primary and secondary legislation with its own separate administrative arrangements.
- 4.7 The Committee for Social Development was advised by DSD that "[u]nder the Northern Ireland Act 1998 and the principle of parity [...] we will bring forward a Northern Ireland-specific Welfare Reform Bill in 2012 [emphasis added]. That will be the enabling legislation, which will then need to be followed by detailed regulations on a number of the points in it."¹⁸ We do not see however, how the subsequent proposals contained in the consultation document are Northern Ireland-specific.
- 4.8 We would also query why there are no proposals contained in the document for a replacement scheme for the Social Fund or possible arrangements for the Northern Ireland equivalent of the Council Tax Benefit (by way of parity with GB arrangements), despite the fact that the Westminster Welfare Reform Bill proposes to remove this discretionary fund from the ambit of social security.
- 4.9 The Commission appreciates that, due to the financial implications of breaking parity and other reasons,¹⁹ there is limited scope for Northern Ireland to depart significantly from the current Westminster proposals. However, it is the Commission's firm view that wherever "breathing space"²⁰ between the two systems can be developed, this should be done. Furthermore, it should be done on the basis of a thorough and comprehensive equality impact assessment.
- 4.10 Therefore, the Commission considers it crucial that the Department is absolutely clear about the extent to which the policy options presented in the EQIA can still be altered/amended in light of the outcomes of the EQIA and what the possible alternative policy options are. Clearly setting out the available policy options in the EQIA would ensure a more effective focus by consultees on those issues where a positive difference can still be made.
- 4.11 The Commission notes the Minister's comments that "[i]t is difficult to be clear about the precise impact at this stage. Any precise measurement will be very difficult until we are further down the track and have seen more detail on the precise changes being made”²¹

 The Commission’s guidance Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998- A Guide for Public Authorities (ECNI: 2010) advises that “For more detailed strategies on policies that are to be put in place, through a series of stages, a public authority should then consider screening at various stages during implementation” (page 52).

Consideration of available data and research

- 4.12 In order to determine how the proposed policies will impact on people on the ground, it is essential to gather and consider a wide range of qualitative and quantitative data. Given that the current welfare reform will have major impacts for the people of Northern Ireland [a recent report by the Institute of Fiscal Studies found that Northern Ireland as one of the poorest regions of the UK will inevitably be hardest hit from the welfare cuts²²] the data considered by the Department is extremely limited.
- 4.13 We have already highlighted some additional data sources [see above at 3.4]. But there are many more that should be considered, in particular data specific to issues of poverty and deprivation. Existing quantitative data constitutes only a minimum base from which to judge the impacts and outcomes of a policy and the Commission is particularly concerned that qualitative data is completely absent from the current document. We would query why the wealth of qualitative information provided by sectoral groups since the Welfare Reform Bill and its implications for NI were first debated well over a year ago have not been considered in the EQIA.
- 4.14 We are also concerned that the Department has not taken any steps to address the existing data gaps it has identified in relation to religious belief, political opinion, racial background and sexual orientation. It is not acceptable for an EQIA to merely record that no data are available²³. Furthermore, in the absence of any data no comments can be made on potential effects. It is incorrect to simply assume that “social security benefits are paid to individuals on the basis of entitlement and conditions which are in no way affected by affiliation to any of these 75 categories.” [page 23 of consultation document; emphasis added. Indeed, previous analyses suggest that characteristics like religious belief, political opinion, racial background or sexual orientation can put individuals at higher risk of exclusion and poverty²⁴ which in turn could impact on an individual’s need for support through social security benefits.

Assessment of impacts

- 4.15 While the Commission appreciates that assessing the impacts of a policy can be particularly challenging, we wish to emphasise again that a proper analysis of the impacts of the proposed policy is at the core of any EQIA, the purpose of which is to identify any potential negative impacts and take steps to address these. The Commission is therefore particularly concerned with the minimalist approach taken by the Department to this part of the EQIA.
- 4.16 The Minister himself has admitted that “[t]here will, undoubtedly, be a major impact”,²⁵ yet the Department’s equality impact assessment consultation paper provides no substantive analysis of the impact of the proposals or any real consideration of the potential adverse impact.

- 4.17 In fact, in some instances, no assessment is made at all.²⁶ Instead, the Department relies heavily on percentage figures and statistical information, often simply focussing on whether or not a particular group is more or less likely to be affected. But while establishing a differential impact is a starting point, the focus of the EQIA should in the first place be on potential adverse impacts. Figures alone do not provide any information on the nature of the effect nor do they provide reasons or explanations for difference.
- 4.18 The document, for example, states that “As there is a higher number of single male claimants, any change to Housing Benefit can reasonably be expected to have a greater impact on male claimants.”²⁷ But no information is provided as to what this may actually mean for the affected group. But, as we highlight further down in our response (see below at 5.4) claimants, for example, who are the non-primary carer (in most cases a father) who has separated / divorced from their partner / spouse will be unable to exercise their right of access to their family as a result of moving to single room accommodation – in other words, a parent will not be able to accommodate their children overnight.
- 4.19 Similarly, the fact that certain changes will apply irrespective of a particular characteristic does not mean that therefore the impact will be neutral for this group. Such characteristics could, directly or indirectly, either exacerbate negative effects on the individual or, in some cases, they may have a positive effect. This is highlighted in the contradiction contained in the assessment of the impacts of the time-limiting of contributory employment and support allowance at 7.4, page 43. On the one hand the document states with respect to the Marital Status category that it is not envisaged that the proposed changes present any inequitable treatment on the grounds of marital status yet on the other hand, as noted in the paragraph above with respect to the age category, it is assumed that older recipients are likely to have e.g. a working partner and thus will not be left without income.
- 4.20 The assessments also fail to consider the cumulative effect the different proposals could have on individual groups. For example, the combined effect of the benefit cap and housing policies could be significantly adverse for those affected, particularly for families with children but this has not been assessed.
- 4.21 Similarly, Disability Living Allowance, which is a passport to other benefits, including Carers Allowance, is considered in this consultation. While we know that Disability Living Allowance claimants are comprised of approximately equal numbers of males and females, there are significantly more women than men claiming Carers Allowance. Again, the impact of this has not been assessed.
- 4.22 As was pointed out to the Committee for Social Development²⁸, the welfare reform agenda has seen an increasing interdependency between social security and areas which are the responsibility of other Departments. This has been particularly apparent in areas which fall to the Department for Work and Pensions in GB but which fall to several Departments in Northern Ireland, for example, work-focused interviews (DEL), health and safety at work (DETI) etc. It was also highlighted that increasingly, there are interdependencies with a number of other areas, for example, health and affordable child care.
- 4.23 However, there is little concrete evidence in this impact assessment of Departments “currently working together to address issues arising from further proposals for welfare reform”.²⁹

Mitigating measures/ alternative policies

- 4.24 As we have already pointed out above, the consideration of mitigating measures and alternative policies is at the heart of any EQIA process. Where negative impacts are identified, a course (or courses) of action should be considered in order to moderate or lessen any such impacts.
- 4.25 The Commission is therefore extremely concerned about the high number of assumptions, expectations and vague possibilities which are put forward as mitigating measures, without any evidence to support these.³⁰
- 4.26 Furthermore, on a couple of occasions the document states that the Department is currently considering what mitigating measures might be necessary or available³¹ without providing any detail on what these might look like.

No detail is provided on how the social protection fund and other mechanisms could be utilised to ensure that the already vulnerable will not be further disadvantaged and marginalized by these proposals

Formal consultation

- 4.27 The Commission appreciates that the consultation document is available in a number of alternative formats. We are concerned, though, that the Department has restricted responses to those made in writing or by email and that no provision seems to have been made for face-to-face engagement with consultees, in particular those who may find it difficult or daunting to provide their views in a written document.
- 4.28 The Department will be aware that as part of the process of considering the potential impact of the Welfare Reform policies there is a requirement in accordance with equality scheme commitments for the Department to consult directly with affected groups and provide evidence of the contribution in the development of these proposed measures.

What effort has the Department made to ensure maximum access of those equality groups affected by the proposals, such as disabled people, children and young people or carers?

- 4.29 As regards the list of consultees, we would note the following:
- the list still includes Economic Research Institute for Northern Ireland (abolished) and the Civic Forum (suspended)
 - it includes neither the Older Persons Commissioner or the Older Persons Advocate
 - MLAs are not included
 - only women in greater Belfast area seem to be included
 - the Presbyterian Church does not seem to be included

5. Policy Issues

- 5.1 The Commission strongly disagrees with the Department's view that "many provisions proposed, e.g. increased conditionality, are not considered as having a direct equality impact on benefit customers and merely facilitate the establishment of the legislative framework under which a number of the proposals [...] will be introduced." [p 23 of consultation document]

30 Department of Social Development (2011) op. cit., for example on page 35: "the change could act as a stimulus [...]; page 43: assumption that older recipients "will generally either have a working partner or capital over £ 16,000"; pages 46 and page 59: support to continue to move towards work assumes that jobs are readily available; page 58 : "there is a possibility that younger lone parents are likely to have more recent experience of the labour market" ; page 60: " it is envisaged that flexibilities and operational easements in place will ensure that no one will be penalised [...]".

31 Department of Social Development (2011),op. cit., for example pages 28, 29.

5.2 Below are our comments on selected aspects of the proposed reform and the impacts they may have.

Universal Credit

5.3 The Commission welcomes the aim of the reform to simplify the benefits system. However, we are concerned that the equality impact assessment has not identified the negative impact on women. Paying the new Universal Credit to the main earner following joint claim and joint assessment will, in many instances, leave women without income. Payment of benefit to women in their 'caring for dependents role' was an important social security reform introduced in the 1970's. It was considered necessary to allow certain benefits, including Child Benefit, to be paid to women, recognising that women more readily spend on children and the household essentials. We expect the Department to consider this matter.

5.4 This position is made more serious given the cuts in Child Benefit and in the childcare element of Working Tax Credit already planned.

5.5 We are concerned that no consideration appears to be given to weekly payments of Universal Credit where that is preferred. Weekly payments would be a no or low cost provision that would assist those families on the least income³².

Housing Benefit Cap – Social Housing Rented Sector

5.6 From the 1st of April 2013, it is intended to introduce size criteria for new and existing working age claimants on housing benefit for those in the social housing rented sector will replicate the size criteria that apply to claimants in the private rented sector. Under this measure, claimants will have their housing benefit reduced on the basis of 'under-occupancy' of tenancy in line with the private sector. While we agree in principle that under occupancy within the social housing sector should be addressed, the Commission is deeply concerned that this measure will have a serious impact on a range of equality groups. This measure may force claimants, of working age, to leave their homes if they no longer can justify the need for the rooms available in their property. Hence, someone at 59 years old, who may or may not have adaptations to their home as a result of their own circumstances, will receive reduced housing benefit or will have to seek alternative one bedroom accommodation if they have no dependents in their home. The Commission understands that several potential negative impacts may arise from this measure and raises a number of key issues:

- Claimants who are the non-primary carer (in most cases a father) who has separated / divorced from their partner / spouse will be unable to exercise their right of access to their family as a result of moving to single room accommodation – in other words, a parent will not be able to accommodate their children overnight.
- Similarly, a disabled person who does not necessarily require personal support on a continuing basis will be unable to obtain overnight support during short periods when they do need assistance.
- Potentially, claimants would have to move from their local community, regardless of their longevity of tenancy, causing undue stress.
- The consultation paper acknowledges that there is very limited mobility in the social rented sector. Therefore, a tenants' ability to move may be severely restricted. Restricted mobility is particularly relevant to Northern Ireland as social housing is often segregated on the basis of community background. There is a risk of placing all social housing tenants in financial hardship, as the tenants maybe unable to move because of the de-facto lack of available alternative but still be subject to a reduction in their housing benefit.

<http://www.wrda.net/Documents/The%20NI%20Economy%20%20Women%20on%20the%20Edge%20Report.pdf>

- 5.7 The Commission recommends that the Department ensures that housing benefit assessments of disabled people, with non-residential carers, fully takes into account the needs of disabled people, particularly when the effects of a disability may change within a time period. Similarly, assessments of parents separated from their children should also take into account that these claimants will be required to accommodate their children in their home to allow them full access to their offspring.

Lone Parent Conditionality

- 5.8 Childcare is an essential feature in the eradication of child poverty, the removal of barriers to and in employment, achieving equal pay and protecting against poverty in later life. Despite this the UK, and Northern Ireland, failed to meet the Barcelona childcare targets³³. Recent research³⁴ across the UK found that parents in Britain spend almost a third of their income on childcare – more than anywhere else in the world. Research to be published at the end of last month³⁵ will show that Northern Ireland remains the most expensive part of the UK to secure childcare. The UK study³⁶ pointed to the paucity of policy in Northern Ireland and the historical underinvestment – early years spend in 2007-2008 amounted to £630 per child in Northern Ireland compared with around £2,000 in Great Britain.
- 5.9 Broadly, the welfare reform measures developed at Westminster are predicated on the statutory obligation in Great Britain, under the Childcare Act 2006, to deliver good quality childcare and a more effective pattern of provision. This will therefore require the Minister for Social Development to allow an element of discretion, if it considers that appropriate affordable childcare is not available. In Northern Ireland, £12m³⁷ has been allocated over the current Budget period³⁸ to address the childcare need through a Childcare Strategy, currently being developed by the Office of the First and deputy First Minister. However, at the time of making response to this consultation, the Childcare Strategy had not been published to enable anyone to determine if the strategy can deliver accessible, appropriate and affordable childcare to all children in Northern Ireland.
- 5.10 The lone parent conditionality provision requires that lone parents be available for work when their child reaches the age of 5 years. However, this conditionality assumes that there is an affordable and appropriate childcare infrastructure in place in Northern Ireland available to the individual claimant – looking at the evidence above, this is currently not the case. The Department should urgently address this matter through liaison with OFMDFM to ensure that all lone parents can access appropriate and affordable childcare to enable access to, and continued employment.
- 5.11 The lone parent conditionality provision may also restrict a claimant's ability to seek education and training opportunities as lone parents will be required to claim Jobseeker's Allowance or Employment and Support Allowance. This approach may deny lone parents the opportunity to seek appropriate education or training to enable them to gain skilled, higher paid, employment to enable them to reach a reasonable level of income; to fulfill the rights of the child, and of the parent, to raise a child through an adequate standard of living and level of social protection. It should also be added that while there is a statutory legal obligation on public authorities in Great Britain to consider the welfare of the child no such obligation exists for public authorities in Northern Ireland.

5.12 The lone parent conditionality provision may undermine, or be counter to, the plan within the Northern Ireland Executive's Economic Strategy³⁹ to "improve the skills and employability of the entire workforce so that people can progress up the skills ladder, thereby delivering higher productivity and increased social inclusion". The lone parent conditionality provision may deny lone parents the additional training as outlined within the strategy's 'key rebalancing measure' to "delivery of 210,000 qualifications at Levels 2, 3, 4 and above by 2015, through Further Education, Higher Education, Essential Skills and Training". The Commission strongly advises the Department to consult with the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in regards to how the lone parent conditionality provision may affect the objectives outlined within the economic strategy. Similarly, the Department should seek advice from the Department of Employment and Learning on this issue.

Disability Benefit Reform

5.13 The Commission has previously made a number of public policy interventions on the issue of welfare reform as it may impact on disabled people, including our submission to the Department on the Independent Review of the Work Capacity Assessment. The Commission, jointly with the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission, in our collective role as the Independent Mechanism for Northern Ireland to promote, protect and monitor the implementation of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD), has also highlighted our concerns on this issue to the Joint Committee on Human Rights, Parliamentary Inquiry on the implementation of the right of disabled people to independent living as guaranteed by Article 19 of UNCRPD.

5.14 In summary, the Commission has a number of concerns in this area:

- The higher qualification criteria for the Disability Living Allowance (DLA) equivalent Personal Independence Payment (PIP);
- The assessment process and the very high percentage rate of successful appeals for those refused Disability Living Allowance; and,
- We note there will only be two components under Personal Independence Payment (PIP) in relation to daily living. We believe that people who are currently in receipt of the old DLA care component will lose out given the strict and objective criteria laid out in the proposed new test which determines whether or not a person receives support under PIP

6. Conclusion

6.1 The Commission has advised policy makers of the critical importance of assessing the equality implications of their budget decisions and of ensuring that the most vulnerable people in our society are not affected to an unfair extent by reductions in public expenditure.⁴⁰ This applies equally to the current Welfare Reform.

6.2 Section 75 is a continuous duty and this EQIA should not be considered as a one-off exercise. Throughout the process of reforming the welfare system in Northern Ireland, which includes subsequent benefit specific reforms requiring further legislation to enact, every effort must be made to ensure that decisions are based on the needs of people, that the vulnerable are protected and that equality of opportunity is promoted. The Department is under an obligation to continuously consider the potential impact of its current and future proposals on affected groups, to seek and carefully consider input from consultees to gain a better understanding of the issues relating to equality of outcomes and to address potentially adverse impacts.

- 6.3 We are also concerned that there is no account taken within the consultation paper of the wider agenda in relation to pensions. Nor does the paper consider the implications of the proposed reform for other government strategies like Lifetime Opportunities or the Child Poverty Strategy.

Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011 Equality Impact Assessment

Briefing for Committee for Social Development (8th March 2012)

1. While the Commission agrees with the policy aim to 'seek to make the social security system fairer, more affordable and better equipped to deal with poverty and welfare dependency'¹ we consider that there is a need to properly understand, consider and respond appropriately to the impacts of welfare reform.
2. The Commission has advised policy makers of not only the requirement², but also the critical importance of assessing the potential equality (and good relations) implications of policy proposals.
3. The Commission is concerned that many of the proposed measures may have the effect of creating further poverty, particularly for already traditionally marginalized groups in Northern Ireland. However, the subject of the consultation was the Equality Impact Assessment, rather than the substantive policy proposals.
4. In its response to the Department, the Commission provided comments in the following areas:
 - A consideration of the broad policy aims of the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011, particularly given the potential impact of welfare reform in an economic downturn; and
 - The extent to which the Impact Assessment is carried out in a manner consistent with the principles enshrined in our Practical Guidance on Equality Impact Assessment.
5. In broad terms, our response to the DSD consultation on the Equality Impact Assessment of the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011 set out that:
 - The Department's equality impact assessment consultation paper provides no substantive analysis of the proposals nor does it provide any real consideration of the potential adverse impacts.
 - While recognising and endorsing parity, the consultation document does not consider the changes in the context of Northern Ireland policy and proposals not subject to parity.

Equality Impact Assessment

6. The Commission considers that the Department's equality impact assessment consultation paper provided no substantive analysis of the proposals nor did it provide any real consideration of the potential adverse impact.

1 Response to the Department for Social Development's consultation on the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011 Equality Impact Assessment;

2 Schedule 9 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, paragraph 4 (2) (b) "assessing and consulting on the impact of policies adopted or proposed to be adopted"

7. With regards to the way in which the EQIA was conducted, while the document follows the five steps as recommended in the Commissions guidance, we have considerable concerns about how some of the steps have been completed:
- in order to determine how the proposed policies will impact on people on the ground, it is essential to gather and consider a wide range of qualitative and quantitative data. Given that the current welfare reform will have major impacts for people in Northern Ireland³ the data considered by the Department is extremely limited.
 - while the Commission appreciates that assessing the impacts of a policy can be challenging at this strategic level, we wish to emphasise that a proper analysis of the impacts of the proposed policy is at the core of any EQIA, the purpose of which is to identify any potential negative impacts and take steps to address these. The Commission is therefore particularly concerned with the minimalist approach taken by the Department to this part of the EQIA. In some places, there is no assessment at all.
 - the Commission noted with concern the high number of assumptions, expectations and vague possibilities which are put forward as mitigating measures, without any evidence to support these.⁴
 - the Commission considers it crucial that the Department is absolutely clear about the extent to which the policy options presented in the EQIA can still be altered/amended in light of the outcomes of the EQIA and what the possible alternative policy options are;
 - the Commission also commented on the accessibility of the consultation exercise, as it appeared that responses were invited in written formats only.

Policy Considerations- Welfare Reform

8. Although the consultation was an Equality Impact Assessment, with no associated consultation on the whole policy framework as it applies in Northern Ireland, the Commission made some additional points about the reform proposals.
9. We disagreed with the Department's view that "many provisions proposed, e.g. increased conditionality, are not considered as having a direct equality impact on benefit customers and merely facilitate the establishment of the legislative framework under which a number of the proposals [...] will be introduced." [p 23 of consultation document]. By way of example:
- Universal Credit: We are concerned that the EQIA did not identify the negative impact on women. The payment of the new Universal Credit to the main earner following joint claim and joint assessment will, in many instances, leave women without income. Payment of benefit to women in their 'caring for dependents role' was an important social security reform introduced in the 1970s, recognising that women more readily spend on children and household essentials. We expect the Department to consider this matter.
 - Lone Person Conditionality: The lone parent conditionality provision requires that lone parents be available for work when their child reaches the age of 5 years. The Commission is concerned that the lone parent conditionality, and the lack of appropriate, accessible

3 A report by the Institute of Fiscal Studies considered that Northern Ireland, as one of the poorest regions of the UK, will inevitably be hardest hit from the welfare cuts. Browne, J.(2010) The Impact of Tax and Benefit Reform to be introduced between 2010/11 and 2013/14 in Northern Ireland , Institute of Fiscal Studies Briefing Note 114, p 5, available at <http://www.ifs.org.uk/bns/bn114.pdf>

4 for example on page 35: "the change could act as a stimulus [...]"; page 43: assumption that older recipients "will generally either have a working partner or capital over £ 16,000"; pages 46 and page 59: support to continue to move towards work assumes that jobs are readily available; page 58 : "there is a possibility that younger lone parents are likely to have more recent experience of the labour market" ; page 60: " it is envisaged that flexibilities and operational easements in place will ensure that no one will be penalised [...]".

and affordable childcare in Northern Ireland, may restrict⁵ a claimant's ability to seek education and training opportunities and may undermine, or be counter to, the plan within the Northern Ireland Executive's Economic Strategy to "improve the skills and employability of the entire workforce so that people can progress up the skills ladder, thereby delivering higher productivity and increased social inclusion".

- Housing Benefit Cap: We agree in principle that under occupancy within the social housing sector should be addressed. However, the Commission recommends that the Department ensures that housing benefit assessments of disabled persons and separated parents, including those in others but similar situations, fully takes into account the needs (and rights) of these groups. Furthermore, the Commission is concerned in regard to a tenant's ability to move may be severely restricted, due to the segregation of social housing in Northern Ireland. Therefore, the tenant may be placed in financial hardship because of a reduction in benefits due to under occupancy.
- Disability Benefit Reform: In wider responses⁶ we have raised concerns regarding the higher qualification criteria for the Disability Living Allowance⁷ (DLA) equivalent Personal Independence Payment (PIP); that the experiences faced by disabled people through the implementation of the ATOS assessment scheme for ESA and DLA (and the subsequent very high percentage rate of successful appeals for those refused DLA) is not replicated for the implementation of PIP; that people currently in receipt of the DLA care component may lose out under Personal Independence Payment (PIP).

10. Further, while recognising and endorsing parity, the DSD EQIA consultation document does not consider the changes in the context of Northern Ireland policy and legislation not subject to parity. For example, unlike England and Wales where the Childcare Act 2006 imposes a duty on local authorities to identify and meet childcare needs, Northern Ireland has no corresponding childcare legislation. There is thus no statutory requirement for the provision of childcare in Northern Ireland where it is asserted that the situation on both availability and affordability of childcare is the worst in the UK⁸.

Conclusion

11. While the Equality Commission welcomes efforts 'to make the social security system fairer, more affordable and better equipped to deal with poverty and welfare dependency'⁹ we are concerned that many of the proposed measures may have the effect of creating further poverty, particularly for already traditionally marginalised groups in Northern Ireland.

⁵ Evidence suggests that forcing lone parents of children under 5, the majority of whom are as the consultation paper acknowledges are women, would have an adverse impact on both the parent and the child / and older siblings - limiting educational and training opportunities to enable good quality work opportunities as opposed to a low pay unskilled job, as well address the need for quality child care that meets the 'best interests' of the child. [NI Welfare Reform Group (July 2011): Briefing Paper - Welfare Reform Bill, Second Reading House of Lords, page 4]. It should also be noted the correlation between low income families and the increased likelihood of child poverty. Save the Children research points out that 21% of children in Northern Ireland live in persistent child poverty which is double the GB percentage rate, and severe child poverty stands at 40,000, almost 10%.

⁶ Independent Review of the Work Capacity Assessment (Professor Harrington) and ECNI (2011); Evidence to the Joint Committee on Human Rights (JCHR): Inquiry into the implementation of the right of disabled people to independent living as guaranteed by Article 19, UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities

⁷ The proportion of working age people in receipt of DLA in Northern Ireland is approximately twice the level in Great Britain - 10.3 per cent of the Northern Ireland population (http://www.dsdni.gov.uk/dla_publication_august_10.xls). Reform of the DLA system therefore could result in many thousands of disabled people in Northern Ireland losing entitlement to this benefit or receiving reduced support – with potential impact on personal mobility; independent life in the community and adequate standards of living.

⁸ Employers for Childcare Charitable Group (2011): Northern Ireland Childcare Cost Survey 2011

⁹ Response to the Department for Social Development's consultation on the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011 Equality Impact Assessment;

12. On 1 March 2012, the Joint Committee on Human Rights, published its findings and recommendations of its parliamentary inquiry. Of relevance to this briefing, the JCHR found that:
- reforms to benefits and services risk leaving disabled people without the support they need to live independently;
 - restrictions in... eligibility criteria for social care support, the replacement of the Disability Living Allowance with Personal Independence Payment,... and changes to housing benefit risk interacting in a particularly harmful way for disabled people;
 - the Government had not conducted an assessment of the cumulative impact of current reforms on disabled people.
13. We consider that there is a need to properly understand, consider and respond appropriately to the individual and cumulative impacts of welfare reform. We consider that, effectively conducted, an Equality Impact Assessment should aid DSD to anticipate and address whether the most vulnerable people in our society will be affected to an unfair extent by the welfare reform proposals.

Annex 1: The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland

14. The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland (“the Commission”) is an independent public body established under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. The Commission is responsible for implementing the anti-discrimination legislation on fair employment, sex discrimination and equal pay, race relations, sexual orientation, disability and age.
15. The Commission’s remit also includes overseeing the statutory duties equality duties on public authorities in Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998: to pay due regard to the need to promote equality of opportunity and pay regard to the desirability of promoting good relations, as well as the duties in Section 49A of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (as amended).
16. The Commission, along with the NIHRC, has also been designated as the ‘independent mechanism’ in Northern Ireland, tasked with promoting, protecting and monitoring implementation of the United Nation Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD).

Fermanagh District Council

Our ref: 1/mm

7 November 2012

Mr Alex Maskey MLA
Chair of Committee for Social Development
Room 412 – Parliament Buildings
Ballymiscaw
Stormont BELFAST
BT4 3XX

Dear Mr Maskey

At the meeting of Fermanagh District Council on Monday, 5 November 2012
Members passed the following Notice of Motion:

That this Council:

- Rejects the welfare cuts agenda and austerity policies being pursued at Westminster which are targeted at the most vulnerable and disadvantaged in our society and which will create significant hardship and difficulties for many individuals and families living in already socially disadvantaged unionist and nationalist communities.
- Calls on the Assembly to amend the Welfare Reform Bill consistent with the specific circumstances and needs of people living in the North of Ireland and to work together to ensure that the most vulnerable in our society are protected.
- Given the uncertainties and the likely number of appeals that will follow any implementation of the Welfare Reform Bill, this Council urges the Department of Social Development to make additional resources available to support front line advice agencies.

I would be grateful if you would bring this resolution to the attention of the Committee for Social Development.

Yours sincerely

Fostering Network

The Fostering Network NI – Issues for Foster and Kinship Carers in Welfare Reform

1. Introduction

- 1.1 The Fostering Network is the leading charity for foster and kinship carers in NI and we work to improve outcomes for children in care. We have 1900 members who are approved foster carers, including kinship carers, and we provide support, training and advice to ensure they can transform the lives of children in care.¹
- 1.2 We also deliver the flagship Fostering Achievement scheme on behalf of the Health and Social Care Board. This provides additional resources and support to improve the educational outcomes of children in care; it includes the award winning Letterbox Club.
- 1.3 The Fostering Network (UK) campaigned at Westminster to seek significant changes to the Welfare Reform Bill on behalf of foster carers a number of which were accepted by the Department for Work and Pensions.² However, there remain a number of outstanding issues with the Welfare Reform Bill as proposed that could have a significant impact on fostering and which the Fostering Network would ask the Committee to address. In particular we want to ensure that the DSD Committee replicates these assurances for approved foster and kinship carers in Northern Ireland.

2. Children in Care in NI

1. There are currently 2644 children and young people in care in NI. This represents a 5% increase since last year and an underlying trend of increases since 2006. There is nothing to suggest that this trend is about to change and we should expect for the next five years either a continuing upward trend of children coming into care or it remaining at a similar level.
2. At the same time that the overall numbers of children in care has continued to increase the percentage looked after in foster or kinship care has also continued to grow. In NI at March 2012 75% of the total number of children in care were cared for by either foster or approved kinship carers. This represents an 18% increase over the last six years.
3. Care Matters and Transforming Your Care have both clearly indicated that they see foster and kinship care as the placement of choice for the future of care in Northern Ireland. Residential care has continued to shrink in-terms of the percentage of young people placed there and while there will always be some young people for whom this is appropriate, the majority of children and young people should be placed in a family setting.

3. Foster and Kinship Care in NI

1. We currently have around 2000 approved foster and kinship carers in Northern Ireland. However, not all of these are available for full-time care placements and many carers only undertake respite care.
2. Each week here, there are 2 children who require foster care and for whom a placement cannot be found because of lack of carers. We are already in a deficit position with the number of carers and it is also the case that for foster care to work effectively there needs

1 Throughout this briefing we refer to foster and kinship carers. These are both carers who are approved as foster carers by Health and Social Care Trusts and are caring for a looked after child or children. An approved kinship carer is a family member or friend of a looked after child who has been approved as a foster carer and provides their care. They are treated differently for the purposes of tax and benefits than informal kinship carers whose needs are not addressed within this briefing.

2 See <http://www.dwp.gov.uk/docs/ucpbn-8-foster-carers.pdf>

to be space in the system. Matching a child with the best carer possible for them means we should ideally have more carers than placements required so that we have space to choose properly for children and to ensure carers are not over-loaded with too many placements.

3. There are also on-going concerns about the demographics of foster and kinship carers. Many carers are older and have been caring for a significant period of time and may be unable to continue caring. The ability to recruit new foster and kinship carers is critical to the ongoing needs of the most vulnerable children who come into care.
4. The vast majority of foster carers in NI are recruited by Health and Social Care Trusts, with only around 8% recruited by independent or voluntary foster care providers.
5. Unlike the position in England and Wales the very vast majority of carers in NI are voluntary and are not paid a fee. We have a small percentage of fee paid carers but most carers only receive an allowance to cover the costs of feeding and clothing a child and covering the cost of pocket money and birthdays, Christmas and one holiday per year.
6. In both Britain and NI there are many foster and kinship carers who rely on the tax and benefit system to support the work they do. However, given that NI has a substantially lower number of fee paid foster carers than any reduction in their access to benefits will have a substantially higher impact.
7. The Welfare Reform Bill as it currently stands could have a significant impact on the ability of Health and Social Care Trusts to recruit foster and kinship carers and by default a significant impact on the most vulnerable children in NI.

4. Impact of 2011 Changes on Single Room Rents

1. In January 2011 there were changes to Local Housing Allowances that have already begun to impact on foster and kinship carers and their ability to provide care for children.
2. New regulations came into force that meant for single people under 35 years of age their housing benefit claim would be restricted to the cost of shared accommodation, regardless of the kind of accommodation they currently occupied.
3. The Fostering Network is aware of a number of cases where single carers, who have no children of their own but are providing a foster or kinship placement have had their Housing Benefit reduced and have had to find the difference themselves. In one case this amounted to having to find almost £40 per week. Clearly shared accommodation was not an option for this carer and yet there is no exemption under the new regulations. (SR2011 No 293 – the Housing Benefit (Amendment No 2) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2011.
4. The potential impact of further reducing access to housing benefit for approved foster and kinship carers could have a hugely detrimental effect on our ability to provide family based placements for children who need them.

5. Impact of Welfare Reform

1. As the Welfare Reform Bill was making its way through Westminster it became clear that it could have a significant impact on the ability of foster and kinship carers to offer a home to some of the most vulnerable children and young people.
2. A number of assurances were provided by the Westminster government in-relation to the impact of the Act on foster carers. These were:
 - Fostering Income would continue to be disregarded for the purposes of benefit calculation
 - The sole or main carer of fostered children under 16 would not have to seek work outside of fostering
 - Other exceptions may be made to reflect exceptional need

- Benefit payments would run on for a period of eight weeks after a fostered child leaves the placement.
3. The provisions under the Welfare Reform Bill in-relation to under- occupancy could both prevent people becoming foster or kinship carers and make it more difficult for those who currently are carers to continue.
 4. There was some recognition of this as the Bill passed through Westminster and it was agreed to create a ring-fenced fund that would provide additional support to carers.
 5. An additional sum was to be added to The Discretionary Housing Fund which would be applied to local authorities in Britain and was estimated to help 5,000 foster carers.
 6. Current evidence from the Fostering Network suggests that the discretionary nature of this support has not worked well. The response is patchy with some foster carers having access to the Fund and others not. The impact of this on foster placements is a significant cause of concern.
 7. The Discretionary Housing Fund does not operate in Northern Ireland. Therefore a compensation based solution is not possible and there is already a lack of parity.
 8. The Fostering Network calls on the Committee to insert an exemption into the clause in the Bill which removes entitlement to all rooms that are under-occupied for approved foster and kinship carers.
- 6. Priorities for DSD Committee
- 6.1 The Fostering Network in NI would ask the DSD Committee in their scrutiny of the Welfare Reform Bill to write to the Minister and ask him to clearly outline the impact of the Bill on Foster and Kinship Carers and to provide similar assurances as were given in Westminster.
 - 6.2 The Fostering Network would ask the DSD Committee to seek clarification from the Minister in-relation to the under occupation rule and its impact on approved foster and kinship carers. It would also ask the Committee to raise with the Minister inserting an exemption to the under occupation rule for approved foster and kinship carers.
 - 6.3 The Fostering Network would further ask the Committee to clarify with the Minister if he is unwilling to give an exemption to the under occupancy rule for approved foster carers and kinship carers how will he ensure they are compensated in a similar way to England.
 - 6.4 The Fostering Network would also ask the DSD Committee to write to the Minister regarding the impact of the single room rent on foster and kinship carers since its introduction.

Housing Policy Forum

Welfare reform Bill (Northern Ireland)

The Housing Policy Forum (HPF) is an open network of voluntary sector organisations that have an interest in housing legislation and policy. The HPF aims to enhance the capacity of the voluntary and community sector to make policy responses and influence policy development in housing and homelessness.

HPF representation consists of core housing and homelessness organisations working in the Community & Voluntary sector throughout Northern Ireland. Membership includes: Council for the Homeless NI, Chartered Institute of Housing, De Paul Ireland, First Housing, Housing Rights Service, NICVA, NI Federation of Housing Associations, Shelter NI, and the Simon Community NI.

This response is informed by our collective knowledge and expertise as housing professionals and frontline practitioners working directly with individuals and families on low incomes and in vulnerable circumstances.

Introduction and general comments

The HPF welcomes this opportunity to consult on the Welfare Reform Bill and the intention of the Westminster Government to make the Welfare System simpler, more efficient and to support people to return to work. However, the Welfare Reform Bill proposes a fundamental structural change to the Welfare System which we are concerned may disproportionately impact on homeless people. We also believe that the Welfare Reform Bill will result in major changes to the housing system in Northern Ireland with housing policy having to adapt to mirror welfare policy. This may not necessarily generate the best possible housing outcomes in the long-term. There is a real risk that housing policy and practice has not moved at the same pace as the welfare changes and that the solutions that are needed to manage and mitigate the impact of welfare reform are not currently in place.

We also believe a number of provisions in the Bill and their supporting regulations could lead to an increase in homelessness in Northern Ireland, as has been acknowledged by the DWP in relation to England¹. It should be noted that homelessness presentations have risen in England by 18% on the previous year².

Monthly payments of Universal Credit in arrears, the disparity between appropriately sized Social Housing stock and the determination of the appropriate maximum housing cost, increased sanctions for non-compliance and a reduction in the number of claimants eligible for PIP, will all impact on the ability of vulnerable people to access and maintain affordable housing.

While we agree that those who are capable of working should be supported to do so, many homeless people are distant from the workplace due to their complex needs. Consideration must be given to understanding these barriers, ensuring sanctions are sensitively applied, and do not lead to a further destabilisation of vulnerable individuals' return to or maintenance of independence in the community.

Failure to address these complexities of need, by investing in comprehensive advice and assistance, may mean the cost to the public sector (in terms of health, criminal justice, and temporary accommodation) is greater than the savings from benefit changes.

The HPF acknowledges the need to retain parity, but believes that where possible, due to a number of particular circumstances, the NI legislation should be amended. We would also urge operational flexibility in terms of payment schedules, direct payments to landlords on request, and split payments as highlighted by Minister McCausland.

Key concerns

- Most of the changes will take place through regulation. It is our understanding that there is no legal duty to consult on these, and there will be no provision for debate or amendment once the Bill is passed. We would therefore ask that the GB regulations be scrutinised as part of the Committee Stage and that amendments in regard to Housing Benefit changes be made in the body of the Bill.
- We welcome universal credit in principle but are concerned about how it will work in practice. We believe that it may in actuality be a very complex new because of the many elements it contains making it difficult to administer and deliver.
- The housing costs element of Universal Credit must reflect real housing costs. The move from RPI to CPI will result in reduced availability of affordable Private Rented Sector accommodation and increased homelessness. The DWP estimate that CPI will rise by 2% a year and rent by 4%¹.
- The benefit cap should not be applied to those living in temporary accommodation. This will be more easily achieved if, as is proposed in England and Wales, housing costs are removed from Universal Credit for all those living in supported housing to be administered separately.

Specific issues

(a) Universal Credit

- Many homeless people have difficulties in both accessing online technology or in using it. Sufficient alternate means of application must be provided for vulnerable people, as well as support and training.
- The need to provide all requested documentation before a claim is accepted, rather than use the date of engagement as a starting point has particular relevance for those in temporary accommodation. Often homeless people have lost documentary evidence, National Insurance Numbers, Birth and similar Certificates. It is likely this population will be more disadvantaged if the impact of homelessness in this area is not recognised.
- Suggested Amendment: That nominated third party verification can be considered in the first instance to activate a claim, while supporting documentation is collected.
- It is difficult for those living in temporary accommodation to open a bank account. This is particularly difficult for individuals with mental health or addiction problems. Steps must be taken by Government on behalf of these individuals to ensure equal access to banking products that will allow the deposit and withdrawal of Universal Credit by all claimants.
- Monthly payments of Universal Credit are likely to cause hardship to homeless people with chaotic lives. Weekly budgeting can be problematic for those with addictions or mental health issues. We recommend that, at the very least, claimants are proactively risk assessed and that there is provision for claimants with low financial capacity to be paid weekly.

(b) Determination of the Maximum Amount

This clause (69) indicates that the Department will bring forward regulations that will introduce size criteria into the amount of benefit allowed for housing costs. In many cases this will have significant impact on tenants' ability to pay their rent. Initial indications are that this will have an adverse impact on approximately 6500 housing association tenants who will have to pay an additional £9.00 per week if under occupying their home by one bedroom or £17.00 per week if under occupying by 2 or more bedrooms.

The reduction in benefit will bring financial hardship to many families who are already experiencing shortfalls elsewhere in their income. We have strong concerns that many tenants may be penalised by having their benefit reduced without being able to address this by moving to a smaller home because of the lack of suitable accommodation.

We would ask that consideration be given to

- Exempt disabled people living in social housing properties specifically adapted for their needs
- Take account of the local housing market and ensure that those who cannot move to smaller accommodation in their local community are not penalised by a reduction in their housing costs under Universal Credit
- Phase in this part of the Bill to enable social housing allocation policies and new provision to reflect the size of households being accommodated in social housing

(c) Extended Payments

- 1.1 The Welfare Reform Bill does not allow for housing costs run-ons, also known as extended payments, when claimants start work. Under the current system housing benefit (or support for mortgage interest) continues for four weeks after an individual has found employment which helps claimants to transition from benefits to wages. We already know that the universal credit regulations being drafted in Westminster plan to abolish extended payments. HPF believes that the decision to abolish the current system of extended payments contradicts the government's objective of improving incentives for the long-term unemployed to take up work. Given the high levels of long-term unemployment in Northern Ireland the Assembly may wish to consider continuing extended payments upon the introduction of universal credit and write this provision into the Bill.

Suggested amendment

Clause 11 (5) Regulations may: (c) provide for housing costs to continue for a period of four weeks after a claimant has found employment

(d) Exempt Accommodation

Supported housing is vitally important for many vulnerable people in Northern Ireland and changes to how housing benefit is administered and paid could have significant impacts on the accommodation and services that are available to them. The Housing Policy Forum welcomes DWP's decision to remove the housing costs for supported housing from universal credit as it recognises the higher costs for this form of accommodation and the need for greater flexibility in providing support to tenants. However, this does still leave a number of issues to be worked out in relation to supported housing. For example, will removing these housing costs from universal credit mean that they are no longer demand-led and therefore mean a reduced pot of money if claimant numbers increase in the future.

- 8.1.2 We would suggest that a working group of supported housing providers and representatives is set up to work with officials in the Social Security Agency on how housing costs for exempted accommodation are to be managed within the new benefits context.

Conclusion

The HPF are concerned to ensure that housing remains high on the agenda and is an integral part of on-going deliberations on the Welfare Reform Bill. We wish to work in partnership with Government to make certain changes to the Welfare System are adapted and modified to reflect the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland .

Social Development Committee Submission: Welfare Reform Bill

Presented by Nicola McCrudden (Policy & Communications Manager) October 2012

Housing Rights Service (HRS) welcomes the opportunity to comment on the Welfare Reform Bill. The Bill allows for significant changes to the benefits system to be introduced mainly by regulations. We are concerned that some areas of policy detail are not yet sufficiently developed to allow adequate scrutiny at this stage. The Universal Credit (UC) regulations have not been drafted in NI but the equivalent, the Draft Universal Credit Regulations 2012, have been published in Britain. We have serious concerns about the content of the draft regulations which we highlight in this submission. The Social Security Advisory Committee (SSAC) has completed its scrutiny of the draft UC regulations and is due to report shortly.

- HRS recommends that the Social Development Committee (the Committee) plays close attention to the content of the UC Regulations in Britain and to the SSAC's scrutiny report.
- HRS recommends that the Committee seeks clarification from the Department for Social Development (the Department) regarding the timetable for the publication of the draft UC regulations and requests that the Department outlines the scope for NI specific amendments.
- HRS recommends that provision is made within the Social Protection Fund to protect people who, as a result of cuts to assistance with their housing costs, are directly at risk of losing their home.

This submission focuses on the clauses that relate to, or impact on, people's accommodation. In addition, it touches on the areas of concern that we have in relation to the content of UC regulations in Britain and their application in a Northern Ireland context.

WELFARE REFORM BILL CLAUSE		AREAS OF INTEREST TO COMMITTEE
Clause 7 Basis for Awards This clause relates to the payment period for UC which will be calculated by calendar month, in arrears.	Monthly payments will undoubtedly create budgeting challenges for most of our clients. Stretching low income budgets over four weeks could exacerbate budgeting problems and potentially lead to increased debt levels amongst people who are financially vulnerable. Additionally, the loss of a defined benefit for housing costs and a move away from a direct payments system to landlords will present major challenges for local tenant claimants. Benefit recipients and low income households are often financially excluded from mainstream financial services and affordable credit impacting on budget options. Households in Northern Ireland are less likely to have a bank account than households elsewhere in England, Wales & Scotland. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • 12% of households do not have a transactional bank account, compared to 5% in the UK as a whole. ('Price of Being Poor' Consumer Council 2011) • 2 out of 10 consumers do not have a bank account ('Price of Being Poor') • 36% of NIHE tenants do not have bank accounts (NIHE Draft Corporate Plan 2012). It would be fair to conclude that substantially more NI claimants are likely to be considered as "vulnerable" compared to Britain (where it's estimated to be around 10%). Under UC vulnerable tenants will continue to have their housing cost payments made directly to their landlords. HRS supports the continuation of offering a direct payment option to all tenants. However, it is important that NI Assembly protects the most vulnerable and ensures that adequate systems are in place to process these housing costs claims (whether technically or manually).
Clause 11 Housing Costs This provides for an amount to be included in Universal Credit (UC) for accommodation "payments". Regulations will specify: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • what is to be included which could be rent, mortgage costs or "other housing related costs" 	HRS recommends that Committee seeks confirmation of what will be included and excluded from housing costs. In particular clarification is needed around services charges. HRS has serious concerns about the content of the Draft UC Regulations which will introduce further cuts to assistance with housing costs for all tenants. The regulations also impact on homeowners. The UK Government is yet to confirm the waiting period for assistance with mortgage interest costs and is considering extending this from 13 to 39 weeks.

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • when a claimant is to be treated as liable/not liable • circumstances where a claimant it to be treated as occupying/not occupying including temporary absences • how the amount will be calculated and • when entitlement to housing costs will commence and cease (e.g. to prevent someone from receiving support for mortgage costs for a period at the beginning of their claim or limit how long a claimant may receive support for mortgage costs.) 	Draft Universal Credit Regulations Concerns Overlapping entitlement Current law provides for a number of strict criteria where housing benefit can be paid on two properties or a property which they are not technically occupying. These circumstances will be narrowed under UC regulations and in some cases will be disallowed. As a result some households will be disadvantaged namely: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • claimants who have moved but remain liable for rent on their old home for up to one month (e.g. family moving from private rented sector into social housing where tenants are often expected to move promptly to avoid void periods) • tenants waiting for a social fund payment to furnish a new property (e.g. moving from a homeless hostel into permanent housing) • households at risk of violence other than domestic violence (i.e. those forced to move temporarily because of fear of violence from neighbours, paramilitaries etc). Temporary absence Housing benefit is payable during periods of temporary absence, if the claimant intends to return to live in their home and the period of absence is unlikely to exceed 13 or 52 weeks. Under a UC claim the maximum amount of time eligible for assistance will be 6 months. Whilst this will favour some claimants, it will penalise others who would normally qualify for up to 52 weeks including e.g. those admitted to hospital, in respite care or imprisoned on remand. Loss of 13 week and 52 week protection Under current Housing Benefit (HB) rules a household is exempt from LHA restrictions or from 2013 under occupancy penalties where: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - for 13 weeks if they could previously afford their rent and they were not receiving HB in the past 52 weeks (e.g. made redundant) - for 52 weeks if anyone in the household has died in the previous 12 months and claimant remains in the property. These protections will be removed under UC. The 52 week protection will be replaced by 3 month benefit run on.
--	---

Clause 69 Housing Benefit: determination of appropriate maximum This provides DSD with powers to bring forward regulations to <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • set out the eligible rent which may be determined by reference to either the bottom 30th percentile LHA rate as set by NIHE or CPI – whichever is lowest; and • introduce size criteria for working aged tenants in social-rented housing. (under occupancy deduction) The Draft UC regulations in Britain state the under occupancy deduction will be 14% where the claimant under occupies by one room and 25% for two or more rooms. A claimant is entitled to 1 room for each of the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • a couple • an adult • two children of the same sex • two children less than 10 years old • a child and an additional room for an overnight carer.	Support for Mortgage Interest (SMI) Our primary concerns for homeowners centre on direct payments and the waiting period before support is payable. We welcome recent confirmation that SMI payments will continue to be made directly to lenders via Mortgage Interest Direct Scheme. However, the UK Government is yet to confirm the waiting period for SMI. It has been considering extending this from 13 to 39 weeks. We feel this would have disastrous consequences for new claimants including people who lose their jobs locally. HRS urges the Committee to be mindful of the affect this policy change would have on NI families particularly given the depressed local housing market. We recommend that that Committee seeks clarification regarding the UK Government's policy intentions in this area.
HRS opposed the move to up-rate Local Housing Allowance by CPI rather than local rents. This breaks the long established principle of linking HB payments with actual or representative housing costs in the private rental market. HRS would like to see the impact of CPI formally reviewed with a commitment to re-linking LHA to at least the 30th percentile if necessary. HRS disagrees with the introduction of size criteria for social housing. According to NIHE approximately 32,000 households will be affected (26,000 NIHE and 6,000 Housing Association). The average loss for NIHE tenants will be £8.25 (1 room) and £14.70 (2+rooms). The average loss for Housing Association tenants will be £9.42 (1 room) and £17.48 (2+ rooms). An extra £3.4m has been allocated to the Discretionary Housing Budget for social housing tenants (£2.5m NIHE and £0.9m HA). DHPs are awarded for a minimum of 6 months after which time they are reviewed. HRS acknowledges that NI is very likely to adopt this change, and recommends that the Committee considers the possibility of amending the occupation entitlement. The allocation of social housing in NI differs to the size criteria being proposed by Westminster. Under the Housing Selection Scheme two children under the age of 7 are expected to share. Under the draft UC regulations two children under the age of 10 are expected to share. Given the shortage of suitably sized accommodation, HRS recommends that the Committee considers maintaining the current system to ensure that those allocated housing today are not penalised at a later date for under occupying. Alternatively, it will be important to ensure that funding is secured to transitionally protect families who are approaching critical ages (i.e. 10 or approaching retirement)	HRS opposed the move to up-rate Local Housing Allowance by CPI rather than local rents. As HRS clients often rely on crisis loans for rent in advance for private rented accommodation, we recommend that the Committee seeks assurances that similar payments will be available under any new scheme. The Housing Benefit (Benefit Cap) Regulations will come into force in April 2013 when any working age households who receive more than the cap will have their HB reduced to the cap level. It is much more likely to affect larger families with children. Details about how it will be administered locally and how many people will be affected are yet to be confirmed. HRS is extremely concerned that the benefit cap will increase the risk of homelessness. The number of families affected may be small in comparison to the overall number of claimants. However the impact on those households will be great. Many will struggle to meet their contractual rental payments and if they lose their accommodation may be entitled to homelessness assistance provided by NIHE. HRS recommends that the Committee seeks clarification from the Department regarding the numbers likely to be affected broken down by tenure. This should include temporary accommodation (which tends to be more expensive than other forms of accommodation). We would like to see temporary accommodation excluded from the final regulations.

Re: Proposed amendment to the Welfare Reform Bill

13 February 2013

Dear Mr. Phelan

Include Youth has followed the legislative progress of the Welfare Reform Bill closely in recent months. We have had serious concerns from its outset as to how it will impact on the young people we work with, young people who are extremely disadvantaged and vulnerable. Over three quarters of these young people come from a care background, 80% are from areas of social and economic disadvantage and two thirds will have mental health problems and literacy and numeracy difficulties.

Among the wide range of concerns Include Youth has in relation to the Bill and the potential impact of its proposals on these young people and others like them are the frequency of payment; direct payment of housing costs to the landlord; the under occupancy tax and its potential impact, including on foster carers; the 'digital by default' approach; the replacement of DLA with PIPs and the accompanying assessment process and the abolition of youth ESA and its replacement and the replacement of the Social Fund with a Discretionary Support Service.

Linked to the Welfare Reform Bill we also have concerns regarding the proposed Employment Programme, concerns we have highlighted in evidence submitted to the DEL consultation on the same.¹

In view of these concerns we had hoped that the Ad Hoc Committee on Equality and Human Rights Compliance would have reached a different conclusion regarding the compliance of the Bill with equality and human rights requirements.

Despite this we still believe that there are a number of steps that the Assembly can take, which will not break parity but which will help to ameliorate the negative consequences of the Bill on those who are most vulnerable in our society, which includes young people such as those whom Include Youth works with.

In this context we would urge the Social Development Committee to support the proposal presented to it by Advice NI² that it proposes an amendment to the Welfare Reform Bill that would highlight a statutory right to independent advice for those who are negatively affected by the Bill.

We believe that such an amendment could have a real practical effect, providing those most vulnerable with advocacy support and representation when they may most need it. We know that the voluntary advice services are stretched to capacity as is tribunal representation.

One real difficulty we can already foresee is the issue of Universal Credit being 'digital by default'. Given that IT literacy is a common problem for the young people we work with we are very concerned about them not being able to cope with the IT requirements of the system and thereby not accessing the benefits they may be entitled to.

2 NI Assembly (Hansard) Welfare Reform Bill Advice NI Briefing 23 October 2012 pages 3-4

We would urge the Social Development Committee to give serious consideration to this proposed amendment as we believe it represents one practical way in which, without breaking parity, our Assembly can attempt to ensure that those most vulnerable in our society are protected from the most negative impacts of the Welfare Reform Bill.

Yours sincerely

5th October 2012

Dear Dr. Pelan

Re: Parliamentary Passage of the Welfare Reform Bill

I am writing to you on behalf of the Northern Ireland Committee Irish Congress of Trade Unions, NICICTU, concerning the timetable of the parliamentary passage of the Welfare Reform Bill.

Congress is the single umbrella organisation for trade unions in Ireland representing a wide range of interests of almost 850,000 working people, both in the Republic and in Northern Ireland. There are 36 affiliated unions in Northern Ireland representing over 215,000 members. Our affiliates regularly represent workers suffering discrimination and/or harassment, work with employers in raising awareness of equality issues in the workplace and in developing policies and practices to prevent discrimination occurring. NICICTU has a long history of campaigning for equal rights and fighting discrimination both in the workplace and in wider society.

Congress supports an equality and human rights-based approach to the provision of social security which demonstrates an understanding of and focus on the needs and choices of all in receipt of benefits.

We understand that the Welfare Reform Bill will be referred to the Committee for its consideration stage from 10th October until 27th November, where scrutiny will take place two and a half days a week. Standing Orders allow 30 days for a Committee to consider a Bill, however, extensions can be sought.

We are seeking confirmation from the Committee that the commitment given to Congress for full line by line scrutiny will be honoured.

We are seeking reassurance the committee will request an extension to 90 days to allow for a full debate to occur on the practical consequences of any proposals within the Bill and to discuss potential options to mitigate impacts. It is vital that a real appraisal of the effect of these proposals locally is achieved. The welfare reform changes are likely to last a generation and any attempt to hasten the timetable will prove counter-productive.

Congress believes it is appropriate to tailor a Northern Ireland approach to issues presented by the Welfare Reform Bill. Given the wide range of reforms, the implementation of the changes will impact upon a significant percentage of the working age population in Northern Ireland. Different arrangements could be made and we argue that, in previous circumstances, different arrangements have been made that reflect the very different challenges that face society in Northern Ireland.

Furthermore, despite the legislation being passed in Great Britain, there remains a high level of uncertainty around the finer detail of Universal Credit. It is clear from the regulations that a number of important issues have yet to be decided, for example the level of the assumed minimum income floor which will be set of the self employed and the question of whether to pay monthly or fortnightly.

The challenge posed by these proposed reforms provides the NI Assembly with a unique opportunity to demonstrate the positive value of a devolved government and to impact on the formation of social security policy here for the next generation. We hope that this opportunity is seized and maximized and we look forward to working with the Committee on this important task.

We look forward to hearing from you.

Yours sincerely

Irish Congress of Trade Unions Northern Ireland Committee Welfare Reform

October 2012

1. Congress welcomes the opportunity to respond to call for consultation and evidence for the Committee stage of The Welfare Reform Bill.
2. Congress expects the NI Executive to give the Welfare Reform Bill full scrutiny in order the NI Executive understand the full ramifications of this Bill on your constituents and on the wellbeing of society in NI. Congress believes that these proposals are not steeped in Equality and Human Rights, Congress urges the committee to look at the proposals in this context. Congress believes that as they stand the proposed welfare changes are predicted to make poverty worse. We are of the view that just to remove the most drastic aspects of this Bill is not enough as the remainder will impact negatively on thousands of citizens in NI. Our views on this are also reflective of the concerns of major organisations among the Voluntary and Community Sector and the Churches. Congress is responding in opposition to the this Bill which is predicated on cuts.
3. Congress is the central body for trade unions in Northern Ireland. There are 34 affiliated unions in NI representing over 215.000 workers who are employed in the full range of economic and social activity in our society. These workers also cover all of the S.75 categories and currently over 50% of trade union membership is female. Congress has a long history of campaigning for equal rights and fighting discrimination both in the workplace and in wider society.
4. Congress it should be noted has given particular attention to those workers with disabilities and has continued to work closely with the relevant Government departments to promote educational and job opportunities in the labour market. Congress has a core function in enhancing the lives of the unemployed and other social and economically disadvantaged groups by providing education, training, advice, representation and counselling to the unemployed and citizens of NI.
5. Congress provides information and campaigns on the issues, problems and social benefits affecting the employed and unemployed.
6. Congress promotes and conducts research into the causes of unemployment, strategies for employment and structures of the labour market.
7. Congress campaigns against and exposes the broader issue of poverty and its depilating impact on our society.
8. We are aware that 64,000 people are currently unemployed in Northern Ireland with a further 51,000 being economically inactive but who are willing to work if there was suitable employment opportunities. Congress believes that, at the current time, there are neither the jobs nor employment opportunities available to address the objectives of the proposals contained in the bill and we are seriously concerned that the safety net of the Welfare State will be removed at a time when it is needed more than ever.
9. Congress has responded to previous consultations and availed of opportunities to make direct representation to the Minister and Committee. It is regretted the views expressed by Congress have not been reflected into the bill to meet the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland.

10. The table below and the attached documentation relate the views of Congress to the clauses of the bill before the committee. We would ask the committee to consider the documents in their entirety.
11. Congress welcomes the opportunity to provide evidence to the Committee. We trust you will find our comments helpful. If there is any further way in which we could contribute to this process we would welcome the opportunity to do so.
12. The Bill contains 7 Parts, 7 sub chapters, 134 clauses and 12 schedules.

Housing Benefit. We believe that the impact on older people in particular is not only unfair but cruel. People will be forced to give up their 'family home' or be penalised, tenants cannot be treated as commodities. Congress believes that families will also be disadvantaged where people are returning to the family home due to loss of work, illness, relationship breakdown etc.

11/7.1;

(i) Universal Credit

Universal Credit will be introduced in October 2013 yet there is little or no detail available in relation to how it will be implemented. This is concerning as the lack of detail at this stage would suggest that DSD are not in a position to implement these reforms in NI. That said we believe that Universal Credit is a punitive regime predicated on sanctions and conditionality. The claim that it will make work pay is hard to accept when the number of people currently looking for work in NI is close to 115,000, yet there are fewer than 5,000 vacancies. This is compounded by the fact that the social security budget will reduce by £500 million in NI (£1.8 billion overall), making these proposals actual cuts dressed up as reforms. On that basis we would argue that the adverse impact in NI across the categories will be real and detrimental to health and well being due to the potential to increase poverty.

It is proposed to calculate Universal Credit with reference to a standard allowance for persons who fall under the Section 75 Groups, including those with caring responsibilities or a severely disabled person. Can you confirm if the Severe Disability premium and the Carers premium will be paid simultaneously as they are now? Should this not happen then there will be adverse impact on those groups. How will this element be dealt with under Transitional Protection?

We believe that carers who are predominately women will be adversely impacted by your proposals.

There is no detail in relation to the rates of Universal Credit to allow us to understand maximum amounts when combined with certain other benefits outside Universal Credit. In the absence of knowing what the other benefits are, we cannot determine any potential adverse impact and therefore the Department. Would not be able to identify or mitigate when so much information is absent.

Question 5: What are the potential advantages and disadvantages for claimants, delivery agents and advice services of changing the eligibility criteria for passported benefits under Universal Credit?

Advantages

If done correctly changing the eligibility criteria could streamline and simplify the passported benefits system. It could lead to better and more widely available information for claimants on the availability of passported benefits which would increase access.

Disadvantages

Congress is deeply concerned about the possible withdrawal of access to a range of passported benefits which provide important assistance to individuals and families alike. Any change to the eligibility criteria immediately raises concerns that fewer people will qualify for passport benefits. We recognise that with more claimants on Universal Credit the existing passport benefits may be more thinly spread. On balance the solution should still ensure those most in need receive greatest help. We recognise this poses challenges for keeping the arrangements simple. We would be concerned by any further moves to restrict access to support via passport benefits for people on benefits.

Congress urges the introduction of safeguards for those not eligible for UC such as Asylum Seekers who currently qualify for some passported benefits.

The intention to taper UC will result in the withdrawal of support leading to crises. The option favoured by Congress is to passport all entitlement to all families on UC.

Question 6: How might passported benefits under Universal Credit be designed to enhance work incentives at no extra cost? How might this need to vary by type of passported benefit?

Congress believes the key to this may be about providing clear information about what passport benefits are paid on Universal credit and how a move into work will affect this. A passport calculation should be available to claimants from their Personal Adviser.

Work incentives cannot be enhanced using passported benefits unless there is significant investment. Ensuring entitlement reaches those in low paid work involves funding. Congress is opposed to measures that take money away from the poorest and most vulnerable households.

To ensure work incentives are not reduced by the way passported benefits are withdrawn, it may be necessary to integrate those of most significant financial value into Universal Credit. By extending access to everyone claiming Universal Credit this disincentive to work will be removed and parents will find returning to work easier. This will provide the exchequer with additional revenues from income tax and national insurance contributions which over time will offset additional costs from increased access to passported benefits.

Question 7: How could passported benefits be simplified under UC at no extra cost? What would be the advantages and disadvantages of simplification?

Congress recognises the desire to simplify access to passported benefits under Universal Credit, but this must be done correctly and not at the expense of the actual needs met by existing passport benefits. It is vital that passported benefits are considered in the simplification of the benefit system under Universal Credit. Delaying any change to passported benefits until after the roll out of Universal Credit can only lead to confusion and additional cost. Under the ideology of Universal Credit passported benefits should form part of the benefit assessment process. Individuals will then be made aware of what passported benefits are available to them at the point of claim. This will allow for more eligible people to claim and will also be a more efficient system for delivery staff.

Question 8: What would be the implications if in-kind passported benefits became cash benefits under Universal Credit? How, if at all, would these implications differ for different in-kind passported benefits?

While we appreciate that providing in-kind passported benefits as cash benefits would be the simplest option we have considerable concerns about this approach. Additional cash may be welcomed by some claimants and we understand that this does offer greater independence for individuals in receipt of passported benefits. However, this proposal could have a significant impact on some families in receipt of benefits. Many passported benefits are designed to guarantee real practical assistance to families and to children in particular. The removal of the actual service of passported benefits could have severe implications on the physical and mental wellbeing of children.

There are no guarantees if a cash benefit is paid that the same benefit will be realised. Further the Bill proposes that in joint applications Universal Credit is to be made as a single payment to one nominated person; we assume that the cash benefit in lieu of the passported benefits will be included in this single payment. It is likely that the nominated person will be the man for most claiming families. If so, this will severely limit the economic independence of women and could have a negative impact on children as money going into a family via the mother is more likely to be spent on the children.[4] The potential impact on child poverty cannot be underestimated.

The Bill and policy behind it focus on getting people into work but it fails to address the extent and complexity of poverty. Child poverty stands at more than one in four children, with Northern Ireland the only part of the UK to have increased child poverty figures by 2 percent in 2009/10. [5] Moreover 21 percent of children live in persistent child poverty [6] which is more than double the GB rate, and severe child poverty stands at 40,000 or almost 10 per cent. [7] Therefore, if the guarantee associated with passport benefits for children's needs is lost the already grim situation could deteriorate further.

Question 9: If passported benefits were to be withdrawn as earnings increased and UC entitlement decreased, how might this be done? How, if at all, would this vary by type of passported benefit and what interactions between different passported benefits need to be considered?

Given the aim is to make the changes in a cost neutral way, it may be that some passport benefits are lost straight away while others are withdrawn more gradually.

Question 10: Can you please provide us with details of any research or other evidence, including case studies and specific examples, relevant to our enquiry?

For further information on the potential impact in Northern Ireland consideration should be given to the following research:

IFS Briefing Note 114, The Impact of Tax and Benefit Reform to be introduced between 2010/11 and 2013/14 in Northern Ireland

Save the Children, Severe Child Poverty in Northern Ireland, Feb 2011

Women's Resource and Development Agency, The Northern Ireland Economy, Women on the Edge, July 2011

We are not aware of any specific research work into what motivates people into work which is Northern Ireland focused.

Question 11: Are there any other issues relating to passported benefits that you wish to draw SSAC's attention to? Please give details.

Consideration should be given to whether the effect of the withdrawal of passport benefits will be shielded by the principle that nobody shall be worse off under Universal Credit. We would also welcome further information about the way in which passport benefits will be administered outside of Universal Credit, for example, in relation to Pension Credit.

Changes to DLA also have a large impact on passported benefits. While that is not within the Terms of Reference of this consultation, it must not be forgotten about and the Committee must investigate these changes when the legislation is written. DLA and Attendance Allowance allow access to a range of other benefits which are vital to claimants, such as Motability, Free Road Tax, Blue Badge etc. When simplifying the rest of the system, this must be taken into account as the aim is to make savings of up to 20 percent as a result of the introduction of the Personal Independence Payment.

4. Conclusion

Welfare reform needs to take account of specific Northern Ireland circumstances. Congress encourages the Committee to consider the different circumstances in Northern Ireland for example, the lack of an equivalent to the Work programme, greater incidence of physical and mental ill health, lack of childcare, the predicted slower rate of economic recovery and greater incidence of large families. This needs to be considered when assessing the objective ramifications of any change to passported benefits for claimants in Northern Ireland.

Congress welcomes the opportunity to provide evidence to the Committee. We trust you will find our comments helpful. If there is any further way in which we could contribute to this process we would welcome the opportunity to do so.

(ii) Benefit Cap

It is proposed to implement a household benefit cap from April 2013; this pre dates the planned introduction of Universal Credit in Oct 2013. In our view this is a cut that will impact on households already struggling to survive. We disagree with a cap that will adversely impact on families with multiple roles i.e. carers, parents and the disabled. We believe that households claiming Carers Allowance should not have a cap imposed. This is because this group of people are carrying out an important role in caring for disabled persons and in doing so are actually saving the Government millions of pounds per year. Therefore this cap has the potential to leave households vulnerable and having to make decisions as to whether they can continue to be carers. This therefore will adversely impact on both the Carer and the Disabled person.

Lone Parent Conditionality. Congress believes that this will have a direct impact on women. Congress does not believe that there is an adequate childcare strategy in place to support this proposal Congress further believes that lone parents with a child with a disability/ies may be doubly disadvantaged. Congress is concerned that this proposal will increase the stress on those who are already struggling to cope and who are likely to be already living in poverty.

Conditionality, Sanctions And Hardship. Congress again raises concern about a properly resourced and accessible childcare strategy. Congress is also concerned about the proposals for a 3 tier sanction strategy, which may in affect be more complex. Congress believes that imposing sanctions without putting in place proper and appropriate support mechanisms will lead to a spiral of poverty if people are forced to live below the standard set as a reasonable amount to live on.

25/7.7; 26/7.8

7.7 Lone Parent Conditionality

The document states that Lone Parents with children aged 5 and over will move either to Jobseekers Allowance or Employment and Support Allowance dependant on their circumstances. The movement of Lone Parents into the full conditionality group of Jobseekers Allowance will have an adverse affect on this group and this has a direct impact on women as more than 96% of Lone Parents are women. The document talks of an agreement under Jobseekers Allowance but this will be replaced by a commitment and the stringent conditionality requirements will apply to this group under Universal Credit.

The document refers to increased opportunity and equality of opportunity between men and women but as Northern Ireland has no childcare strategy and Lone Parents are already dealing with cuts applied to the help for childcare this mitigation has no tangible credibility.

The document also refers to the fact that Lone Parents who have responsibility for a disabled child over 5 will remain entitled to Income Support but Income Support will no longer exist and there is no mention of how long this exemption will apply nor how they will categorise this group under the new system: i.e. work preparation, keeping in touch with the labour market or no conditionality.

The economic crisis has created a rise in unemployment and there is an increase in job losses from the public sector where there would be greater flexibility for working lone parents. Lone parents face many difficulties and barriers in gaining employment and this will only be exacerbated in these tough labour market times. Congress is concerned that this conditionality could lead to greater increased stress and tension for lone parents, many of whom are already struggling to cope. Congress urges the NI Executive to work together to provide the childcare that is desperately needed and to ensure that lone parents are not disadvantaged through financial sanctions.

This section totally contradicts the next section which explains the conditionality requirements of customers. There is no mention of any easement for Lone Parents with children over the age 5 as they will fall into the full conditionality group. The impact of these changes on this group which is predominantly women has not been fully explored and the data used in the document is over a year out of date.

7.8 Conditionality: Sanctions and Hardship

Under the Welfare Reform EQIA Lone Parents of children over 5 will have full conditionality, while a partner on a couples claim can have reduced or restricted conditionality on the basis that they have responsibility for a child between the ages of 5 and 13? Therefore Lone Parents with children in this age category (5-13) will be adversely impacted as opposed to couples in the same category. Also at present NI doesn't have a child care strategy and the while the impact of childcare will be a consideration for couples conditionality, the impact on Lone Parents is ignored. The document on the whole with regards to conditionality, sanctions and hardship excludes Lone Parents by the very fact of not addressing their needs.

The paper states that all those who fall into the full conditionality category must sign a commitment to partake in any activity deemed reasonable by the governing department.

There are 3 tiers of sanctions applied in ascending order of conditionality and offence. The lower level sanction is applicable to both the ESA WRAG group and the group whose conditionality is limited capability for work under Universal Credit. The middle level sanction is applicable to Job Seekers actively seeking employment but excludes the use of the term Disallowance or Disentitlement within the labour market decision. The higher level sanction is applicable to those who refuse a reasonable job offer.

The new sanctions regime has the potential to be more complex than the existing one. Overall in our view it will be a wider ranging and harsher regime. Unlike the stated low rate percentage of people sanctioned previously under JSA the new regime could see rising levels of sanctions imposed.

From the figures in the document it appears that those in the age group aged 18-24 as the highest recipients of JSA would be more adversely affected by the changes proposed in the bill. These figures however are not accurate as they are only taking account of 52,414 unemployed and the actual current unemployment rate is not included. It also does not take into account partners on JSA claims with dependants under 16, Lone Parents or partners on IS claims. It follows therefore that the overall impact on various age groups will be greater than the data used would suggest.

Hardship is a reduced level of benefit which is deemed necessary as the customer and their family would be at risk if it was not paid. The Hardship payment exists within the benefit system as a safety net for customers who find themselves in this situation. In the current benefit system a customer who is sanctioned can apply for Hardship.

In the new system a customer will have no option but to take what now would be a Hardship loan to cover the period of their sanction. This loan would then be recoverable at the end of the sanction period. This in itself creates a spiral of poverty as customers/families are being forced to continuously live below the standard set as a reasonable amount to live on.

Employment Support Allowance. We believe that this proposal will have severe impact on those with disabilities. We are concerned that this change will affect adversely those who are terminally ill. Those who have chronic illness, older people and younger people. We believe that at what may be a person's most challenging and stressful time in their lives to take away financial independence is likely to be discriminatory and is most unfair. Congress also wishes to raise the issue that an individual could have paid into the National Insurance Scheme for 30/40 years whilst in employment yet all they can now expect to receive back is one year's contributory benefit, this is a fundamental change to the National Insurance Scheme and would beg the question where does the rest of the money go from that individuals contributions paid over 20/40 years?

7.4 Time-Limiting Contributory Employments and Support Allowance to one Year for those in the Work Related Activity Group

Currently if a person pays the appropriate National Insurance Contributions and satisfies the Contribution Conditions of Employment and Support Allowance, they remain entitled to Contributory Employment and Support Allowance until they are found capable of work following a Work Capability Assessment, carried out by a professional healthcare worker. Under the revised rules, regardless of the fact that it has been determined at a medical assessment that they are unfit for work, customers benefit will cease after receiving Contributory Employment and Support Allowance for only one year.

This seems to be based on the assumption that customers claiming incapacity benefits are fit to return to the workplace within one year of falling ill. Is there any evidence to support this assumption? Long-term Incapacity Benefit customers who are currently being assessed under the Work Capability Assessment in order to transfer to Employment and Support Allowance are in the main being found incapable of work - only 18% of 4500 assessed were disallowed benefit.

The proposed change will have a severe affect on "people with disabilities" covered by Section 75 – people whose disability or loss of functionality is significant and due to their on-going condition are not fit to work and need continued support of the welfare state.

The limiting of Contributory Employment and Support Allowance to one year for customers in the Work Related Activity Group will disproportionately affect older people as 47% of people in this group are aged 50 or over. This group have already limited job prospects in what is already a very small and competitive area. It is also likely that a higher proportion of older people will not qualify for Income Related Employment and Support Allowance and thereby further reduce their standard of living.

Customers with terminal illnesses with a life expectancy of more than 3 months or those that require regular dialysis will be placed in the Work Related Activity Group and subsequently denied financial support in what is a very challenging and stressful time of their lives. Macmillan Cancer Support say 70% of cancer patients face financial worries as a direct result of their disease and have estimated they will be £94 a week worse off. This is obvious discrimination against this section of society. These people who will have paid into the National Insurance scheme for most of their working lives and are now excluded for it after one year.

A person with a chronic illness should be able to have financial independence and not have to rely on the financial support of partners, many will be a carer who may also be the sole provider and who as we pointed out will be disadvantaged on multiple levels by your proposals. Expecting a person with a chronic illness to rely on the support of their partner after just a year of illness may put that person at a disadvantage compared to a person who does not have a partner because that person may be more likely to be entitled to income related Employment and Support Allowance. It may also discriminate against a Person with Dependants and people, who may be working whilst caring for the disabled or terminally ill partner.

The figures in the consultation paper relate simply to those customers currently in the work related activity group receiving Contributory Employment and Support Allowance. It does not take into account the potentially very large volumes of customers who enter the work related activity group as a result of Incapacity Benefit/Income Support Reassessment.

Reference is made in the EQIA that individuals who do not qualify for income related Employment and Support Allowance will have access to the support of the Work Programme. This is not available to any customer living in Northern Ireland.

7.5 Abolition of Concessionary Employment and Support Allowance ‘Youth’ National Insurance Qualification Conditions

The proposal to abolish Employment and Support Allowance for Young People is being made without access to any data relating to Employment and Support Allowance for Young People. All the data relates to Incapacity Benefit in Youth so this is at best inaccurate, and at worst deeply flawed.

Employment and Support Allowance in Youth is a support mechanism for the most vulnerable young people in society, specifically “young people who have severe mental or physical disabilities”. To remove this step into benefits would have a severely detrimental impact on this group.

Employment and Support Allowance Youth enables incapacitated young people to qualify for contributory Employment and Support Allowance when due to their age and disability they would not have had the opportunity to qualify for the benefit under the normal contribution conditions.

The mitigation states that the abolition of the ‘youth’ provisions will put this group on the same contributory footing as everyone else. Simply put, the young people who now qualify for employment and Support Allowance Youth would not be able to qualify for Employment and Support Allowance as they would not have had the opportunity, due to their age and their disabilities to pay enough contribution to satisfy the contribution conditions and therefore qualify. Although it may seem to be putting people on an equal footing it is deeply discriminatory against disabled young people under Section 75.

Lone Parent Conditionality. Congress believes that this will have a direct impact on women. Congress does not believe that there is an adequate childcare strategy in place to support this proposal Congress further believes that lone parents with a child with a disability/ies may be doubly disadvantaged. Congress is concerned that this proposal will increase the stress on those who are already struggling to cope and who are likely to be already living in poverty.

Entitlement to Work Condition – Contributory Benefits and Statutory Payments. Congress is concerned that this proposal may discriminate against migrant workers. Congress is not satisfied that all support mechanisms are in place to assist with documentation particularly when the person may have a disability or when English is not their first language.

24/7.6

7.6 Entitlement to Work Condition – Contributory Benefits and Statutory Payments

Currently anyone subject to immigration control does not qualify for means tested, non-contributory benefits, however it is possible that illegal workers could be paying enough National Insurance Contributions (NI Cons) over an appropriate period to qualify for contributory benefits or statutory payments.

The proposed change in policy is the introduction of the entitlement to work rule to contributory benefits and statutory payments.

The proposed introduction of the entitlement to work aspect to contributory benefits would essentially mean that workers who have paid NI Cons would have paid for a service provision that they would never be able to receive.

It seems reasonable that if you pay into an “insurance” scheme then you should be able to avail of the benefits of that scheme.

There are no figures available according to the report, regarding the number of people working illegally (i.e. without an entitlement to work) in Northern Ireland so simply to assume that this change would only affect a limited number of people would be wrong.

It is our contention that the introduction of this policy would disproportionately affect young migrant workers who have come to Northern Ireland to look for work and to enjoy a better life. To exclude them from receiving the contributory benefits that they paid and qualified for would appear to us to be deeply discriminatory.

Housing Benefit. We believe that the impact on older people in particular is not only unfair but cruel. People will be forced to give up their ‘family home’ or be penalised, tenants cannot be treated as commodities. Congress believes that families will also be disadvantaged where people are returning to the family home due to loss of work, illness, relationship breakdown etc.

Industrial Injuries Benefit. Congress is concerned about proposed removal of the right to apply for an accident declaration. What are the committee’s views on this?

8/20;

1. Social Fund. Many of those claiming from the Social Fund are those who are most disadvantaged and vulnerable. Many also have been affected by the conflict.

19/7.2-7.3;

7.2 Restriction of Housing Benefit Entitlement in the Social Sector

It is clear this proposal is aimed at seeking to reduce the overall budget for Housing Benefit. This policy would impact negatively on the older person who because of this change may be forced to move to smaller accommodation purely because their children have left home. This will impact negatively on individuals whose “home” will effectively be removed from them because they can no longer live in their home because of the reduction in Housing Benefit. Is it not a right that older people (even less than State Pension Age) should be able to live in dignity and not be forced to give up their “family home” for the reasons set out in the EQIA? Similarly male single Housing Benefit claimants will be negatively impacted upon. While the data does not show the reasons for the larger proportion of single males claiming Housing Benefit it is likely to be because of family and relationship breakups which mean that more males are single than females. It is therefore not acceptable to force a single male to move home because of this element.

A tenant and their families should not be treated like a commodity which can be hived off or moved from their home which they may have lived in for many years because of a downsizing of their family unit. Tenants are real people who deserve to be treated with dignity.

The proposal also does not take account of children and others returning to the family home in cases of having worked abroad (and perhaps returning home due to job loss in the world economic crisis), returning from university, in the event of relationship breakdown, illness or a whole host of other reasons which mean that the home and family support is vital.

7.3 Housing Benefit Up-Rating Local Housing Allowance by Consumer Price Index

This is a general issue which impacts on all categories. Congress believes the Government’s decision to up rate benefits by the CPI rather than the RPI is an error and will have a long term effect on the value of all benefits including the proposed Universal Credit. Congress is strongly opposed to the up rating of benefits by CPI rather than RPI.

31/7.10;

7.10 Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit

The Consultation document states the removal of the right to apply for an accident declaration will not result in financial loss and is often a nugatory process. The Accident

Declaration is used by workers to have it on record that they have suffered an accident in the workplace, but may not at that time be incapable of work for more than 90 days and therefore not entitled to Industrial Injuries Benefit. However, having the accident recorded, they will be covered should their health deteriorate at a later stage and they then need to make a claim to Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit. It is also used by workers who may want to claim through their employers' schemes. How will this be done if this process is removed and how does a worker prove an accident occurred? Clearly the absence of a declaration has the potential to impact adversely on "people who may develop disabilities" through an injury or disease in the workplace.

32/7.13;

7.13 Social Fund

Under proposed arrangements will the Treasury continue to provide adequate funding to a scheme to replace the existing Social Fund that will provide for the most vulnerable in Northern Ireland?

Unemployment in many parts of Northern Ireland has reached a peak and continues to rise creating a greater need for Social Fund payments as many struggle to pay debts. There has been a greater need for alignment awards as time for JSA appointments has increased due to the workload and increase in the JSA register.

Age - Crisis Loans

Table 23 Figures of June 2010 show that there were 150,380 Crisis Loans awards made in year 2009/10 of which 34% was from 18-24 year olds and 29% from 25-34 year olds. Many of this group will be Lone Parents and young people with a disability. Many have little qualifications while others have a learning disability. Some come from areas of deprivation associated with the conflict and where the current education system has failed them. This is also fuelled with unemployment being at an all time high. This age group find it difficult to get work as there are no jobs and even when there are jobs they tend to be unsuccessful as they don't have experience.

The support mechanism for this age group has decreased over the years mainly due to the fact that Northern Ireland is coming out of conflict with all its consequences of deprivation and associated problems unique to Northern Ireland.

Many in the 18-34 age groups suffer from Post Traumatic Stress Disorder and associated problems which stem from the conflict and troubles in Northern Ireland and continue to be fuelled by residual issues, for example:

- alcoholism,
- drugs,
- attempts to establish themselves in the community after custodial sentences and discharge from institutional and residential accommodation

Many of this age group for various reasons come from broken and single parent households. Many are estranged from their parent(s) and lack a stable environment.

- Figures produced by the Peace and Reconciliation Office in NI prove that issues associated with the legacy of the troubles and conflict are unique to Northern Ireland and that the same problems do not exist in other regions of the UK. Statistics showing the level of intimidation and threat amongst this age group continue to escalate. The victim depends solely on Social Fund to meet the urgent need at the time for example – to help them get out of the area to avoid paramilitary attack.

- This vulnerable group often have no access to credit facilities and depend on Social Fund for basic living expenses and payment of bills which others take for granted. Quite often they have no one to turn to for support.
- Crisis Loan customers require Social Fund for basic living expenses as they struggle to pay off the deficit between Housing Benefit and the rent for their accommodation.
- Customers on discharge from prison and institutional or residential accommodation depend on crisis loans to enable them to establish themselves back into the community.
- Crisis Loans are also used as an attempt to alleviate the group from the fuel poverty trap. Energy fuel prices in Northern Ireland are significantly higher in comparison to those in other regions.
- Many claim crisis loans for the purchase of heating oil especially due to the last 2 harsh severe winters. Pensioners get an annual fuel allowance payment. They and customers who are disabled and those with children under 5 get a Cold Weather Payment if the conditions are satisfied whilst the 18-34 years old making up the majority of the crisis loans applications have to rely on a loan to purchase heating energy. This leads to fuel poverty amongst the young in our society.
- They are often estranged from their families and have no means of support, savings or access to credit facilities. The Social Fund was their only protection from ending up on the streets as homeless.

Table 24 shows that 73% of the age group 18-24 year olds Social Fund Crisis Loans had a favourable decision and 76% of 25-34 year olds.

- These groups are largely made up of Lone Parents, young people with learning difficulties and mental illness with many of the issues stemming from the conflict.
- 36% of 18-24 group and 45% of 25-34 year olds have children under 5 making it difficult for them to work even if they had the necessary skills and qualification.
- They don't have access to proper and reasonable child minding or built in support mechanism from family and friends. It is argued that there is a pandemic of teenage pregnancies and young single mothers in Northern Ireland.
- Erosion of Social Fund crisis loans would have a detrimental effect on the age group of 18-34 year olds for the reasons listed above. Older customers have a better chance of getting a Community Care Grant as they satisfy the criteria more than the younger age group.

Gender - Crisis Loans

- 55% of crisis loans in year 2009/10 was made to single males in comparison of 39% to single females.(Table 27)
- The majority of applications were made by unemployed JSA customers
- It could be argued that females have a better chance of getting a Community Care Grant as opposed to a crisis loan as females tend to be Lone Parents with young children under 5.
- Another reason for the contrast in the number of crisis loans between males and females is possibly due to the economic recession and loss of jobs in the Construction industry (mainly male jobs).
- Males tend to claim crisis loans on discharge from prison and institutional or residential accommodation to enable them to establish themselves back into the community.
- Figures produced by Peace and Reconciliation office in NI prove that issues associated with the legacy of the troubles and conflict are unique to Northern Ireland and that the same problems do not exist in other regions of the UK. Statistics showing the level of intimidation and threat amongst males in society continue to escalate. These males often have no access to credit facilities and depend on Social Fund for basic living expenses and payment of bills which others take for granted. Quite often they are estranged from their families and have no one to turn to for support.

- Males tend to apply for crisis loans for rent in advance and household items to set up home whilst a female with children is more likely to be awarded a Community Care Grant.
- Males require Crisis Loans from Social Fund for basic living expenses as they struggle to pay off the deficit between HB and the rent of their accommodation.
- They also use Crisis Loans as an attempt to alleviate fuel poverty. Energy fuel prices in Northern Ireland are exorbitant. Females with young children get a Cold Weather Payment if the conditions are satisfied whilst the male has to rely solely on a crisis loan.

Disability - Crisis Loans and Community Care Grants

There were no figures for crisis loans for year 2009/10 available from the Social Fund data scan for people with a disability.

However we do know that 96.8 % of Lone Parents are females (Page 58) and 22% of Lone Parents in comparison with 19% of working people has a disability as defined under the DDA and can be included in the group with disabilities. These disabilities include many different groups including those suffering from;

- Mental and Behaviour problems.
- Patients/residents being discharged from institutional and residential accommodation.
- Musculoskeletal problems.
- Post Traumatic Stress Disorder and associated problems stemming from the troubles in Northern Ireland , for example:
- Alcoholism.
- Drugs.
- People with a disability find it difficult to find work and employers may be biased and discriminate against this group.
- This group depend on crisis loans to meet their short term need and how will they manage if crisis loans were stripped away. They are often not entitled to Budget Loans or Community Care Grants as many are in receipt of Incapacity Benefit which does not qualify them.
- People with a disability often have a greater need in comparison to those without a disability.
- They normally feel the cold and require extra heating.
- Up to last year they had to pay for their medication.
- Depending on their disability their mobility may be limited resulting in extra travel costs as often they will have to travel by taxis rather than walk or public transport.
- They normally have more hospital appointments incurring travelling expenses which aren't refundable if they are not in receipt of a qualifying benefit.
- They often need help with caring and daily living issues such as housework, preparation of meals, shopping, washing etc.

Age - Community Care Grants (CCGs)

The loss off CCGs will have an adverse affect on the most vulnerable in our society. CCGs are non payable grants paid for a range of expenses including household equipment and the intent is to keep people in the community rather than enter institutional or residential care. Payments are also made to allow customers to attend a relative's funeral and visit sick relatives and care call alarms for the elderly.

24,936 awards were made in year 2009/10 year totalling £13.67 million. The majority of those accepted for CCGs are the over 45 year olds and the elderly.

If the CCGs scheme was eroded it would have detrimental impact on both the elderly and single parents of which most are female falling into the 18- 34 age bracket. This proposal will greatly affect their health and safety by putting more and more pressure on the home and families resulting in many incidents and potential admission to residential accommodation.

This group of young females is made up of single parents with young children and others with unplanned pregnancies of whom many are estranged from their parent(s). The CCG is their only life line or else to be admitted into care.

Gender

52 % of CCGs awarded in 2009/10 was paid to single females compared to 32% of single males, the reason being primarily that females are more likely to be caring for children and satisfy the criteria easier than males. Any dilution of this provision will have an adverse impact on this group.

Disability

There are no statistics for people with disabilities claims and awarded CCGs but office statistics would indicate that pensioners with a disability are more likely to be paid CCGs as there may be a risk of entering residential accommodation compared with younger people with disability.

As we see it the government is planning to strip away any help from social fund for people in genuine need. Lone parents need help to keep their family together and protect their health and safety. The elderly are scraping by on what little pension they already have. Even now most pensioners are faced with the daily choice of whether to heat their homes or whether to eat. These are the people that need help. Overall, NIPSA are concerned that the proposals in the Welfare Reform Bill will impact adversely on the above mentioned groups.

Age - Alignments

The age group 18-24 years old will suffer and be discriminated against if Social Fund alignments are abolished and replaced with Universal Credit interim payments.

- The majority of Crisis Loan applications were made by unemployed JSA customers in the age bracket 18-34 years old.
- 39% of crisis loans for alignment purposes were paid to 18-24 year olds and 26% to those aged 25-34.
- Many of these young people have ongoing issues and are estranged from their parents.
- This age group normally move between training and JSA and ESA and JSA They depend on an alignment award to meet their basic needs until their JSA/ESA is awarded.
- They have no access to credit and have no savings. They are less likely to have a partner to rely on for short term assistance until their benefit is processed.

We have are concerns about what might happen if a benefit application to Universal Credit is complex and the Decision Maker decides not to make an interim payment, for instance:

- There will be a greater movement of customers moving between being sick and unemployed. Many of these customers from the younger groups will fail the capability test yet not satisfy the conditions as being able to work. What will happen to these vulnerable customers and what will they do for basic daily living expenses.
- If the Interim Payments are stripped away how will the person starting work and not receiving their first wage until the end of the month and in some case the following month manage as with the current system they could be paid an alignment to their wages. This again could affect 18-24 year olds and lone parents.

- How will the person manage leaving benefit to start work as currently if not entitled to a job grant they could apply for an alignment to their wages. Many of these customers are estranged from their parent(s), have no savings or access to credit

Section 75; if the current Social Fund crisis loans are stripped away there could be potential discrimination against the young and disabled in our society. These groups are unlikely to have savings or access to credit facilities or have a partner on whom they can depend on for financial assistance in the short term.

If the Social Fund is replaced with a scheme delivered by an organisation other than the SSA will there be consistency in the decisions? Will there be a possible conflict of interest? If it is delivered by local authorities or Social Services will the decision be neutral or will the decision be influenced by local knowledge rather than making decision based on the evidence ensuring that the law is satisfied.

If the scheme was delivered by Social Services would it impact on custody of children etc issues? Would the customer be entitled to a review/appeal if not satisfied with the outcome? Overall we are concerned that if there is a diminution of the services the vulnerable groups highlighted in the above paragraphs will be impacted. Congress are of the view that Social Fund services must remain within the Social Security Agency/DSD as our members are the experts in delivering this vital support to those vulnerable and disadvantaged in our communities.

1. Dla/ Personal Independence Payment. Congress is concerned that one of the purposes of PIP is to reduce spend on those with disabilities. Congress urges the committee to take into account the level of disabilities including mental health conditions in NI due to the conflict. The committee may be aware of the recent World

Mental Health survey carried out by the University of Ulster and Omagh based trauma treatment experts, who concluded that NI has the world's highest recorded rate of post traumatic stress disorder. The survey showed that violence had been a distinctive cause of mental health problems and suggested that 40% of the population have had a conflict related traumatic incident. Further to that the lead researcher stated that "the report provides policy makers with the most reliable available information upon which they will be able to base their choices".

28/7.9

7.9 Disability Living Allowance Reform

As yet the final decision on the replacement of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) by the Personal Independence Payment (PIP) has yet to be determined. Therefore exactly how the new benefit will function in relation to any EQIA cannot be commented on.

However it is clear that part of the purpose of PIP is to reduce the number of benefit recipients and then to reduce the current DLA spend by 20%. Evidently this will, by its very nature, have serious consequences on "people with disabilities" and there are widespread concerns about the impact this will have on the largest group of DLA customers, those with "mental health problems".

- There is no indication that the new benefit will make the new assessments more consistent or transparent.
- The levels of benefit payable for the two components has yet to be determined, therefore, it is difficult to assess how groups will be affected.
- Eligibility for PIP will increase the qualifying period from 3 to 6 months. This will have an adverse impact on those with disabilities.
- Moving away from automatic entitlement based upon certain conditions such as visual impairment or deafness will have an adverse effect on customers with this entitlement.

From March 2013 withdrawing the mobility component from PIP customers if they go into a care home will have an adverse affect not only on the customer but also on family who may be availing of the mobility scheme.

There is no evidence that the new benefit will enable disabled people to overcome barriers to lead full independent lives. With less money how will this be possible?

Our current understanding is that disability charities and user led organisations have grave concerns on the effect of this new benefit will have on disabled people.

Age

There are widespread concerns that, while these new proposals will only apply to working age customers, PIP will roll out to under 16's and over 65s.

Gender

Our current understanding of the new benefit is that the low rate care component will be removed and based on current statistics more women than men will be adversely affected.

Persons with a disability and persons without

There is no evidence to show that this new benefit is better focused in supporting people to overcome barriers to participation. There is also no indication as to what these barriers to participation are.

Mitigation

There is no indication that this new process will remove any barriers to the disabled.

How can this new process be a fairer benefit when the number of components is being reduced and the knock on effect on the rest of the health service has not been taken into consideration?

As the knock on effects on passported benefits such as carers allowance and the disability premium has yet to be determined therefore cannot be commented on. But with a reduction in the amount of people entitled to the new PIP there will be a subsequent reduction in entitlement to carers allowance and the disability premium.

Benefit Cap. We believe that this will adversely impact on families with multiple roles i.e., carers, parents and those with disabilities. We are also concerned about the issue of Housing Benefit and how the proposal will work. We are unclear of how the benefit will work on the grounds of age. We are concerned that the cap will have a negative affect on women and children, particularly those living in poverty. Will the cap adversely affect larger families? We are concerned and unclear about the calculation which may be used for the cap. Will it be the GB median wage or not? We remain concerned also about the NI childcare strategy or lack of one, which is a major barrier to assisting mainly women into work.

Fraud Penalties and Sanctions. Congress is concerned about the phrase 'attempted fraud' Congress is concerned about this proposal which includes a charge if people are found 'negligent' with their claim. Congress raises the issue of the poor educational attainment particularly amongst those most disadvantaged which lead to forms and policy documents etc not being fully understood or properly filled in. Congress also raises these concerns in relation to those with disabilities and those who have little or no English. Congress believes that this proposal has the potential to create a vicious cycle of debt.

8/21;

Congress also has concerns around the issues of payment on account of benefits, revision before appeal, child maintenance and parity.

41/7.15;

7.15 Consideration of Revision Before Appeal

The current policy is that if a customer is unhappy with or disputes a decision made, they can either ask for an explanation of the decision, ask for the decision to be looked at again i.e. a reconsideration or appeal against that decision or all of the above.

There is at present no requirement for a customer to ask for an explanation or reconsideration prior to the lodging of an appeal.

Based upon the figures provided, during the year 2010 – 2011 there were 14,333 appeals registered with The Appeals Service (TAS). Of the 14,333 recorded by TAS, 12,428 (86.7%) were in connection to sickness or disability benefits.

Of the 12,428 appeals relating to sickness or disability benefits, 5538 or 44.56% were appeals against Employment & Support Allowance decisions. The vast majority (85%+) of ESA appeals are in connection with negative outcome decisions after the Work Capability Assessment (WCA).

Currently if a customer has a negative WCA outcome decision, their payments stop immediately. If a valid appeal against this decision is received then payments can be reinstated pending the outcome of the appeals process. Forcing customers to go through at least 1 and possible 2 more steps will greatly delay the resumption of payments to customers who have doctor certified incapacities or disabilities.

Based on the figures provided 1463 (26.4%) of the ESA appellants won their appeals once they had been heard by a full independent tribunal and is simply wrong to intentionally make incapacitated and disabled people have to wait longer on their benefits, which is frequently their only source of income, being reinstated.

The figures in the Equality Impact Assessment do not take into account the ongoing Incapacity Benefit/Income Support reassessment which is moving customers from IB & IS to Employment Support Allowance. This will greatly compound the number of people affected. Whilst the EQIA does reference IB appeals, this number is not robust as during the past number of years IB medicals had been deferred due to the introduction of ESA.

This policy will greatly disadvantage “disabled and incapacitated” customers at a period in their lives when they need more support from the government and the state, not less.

Much of this new policy is also unnecessary as “The Harrington Report” into ESA and the weaknesses of the WCA process has already made recommendations that reconsideration is automatically carried out as part of a more robust and expansive appeals process. The appeal writer will look critically at the original outcome decision and will carry out a reconsideration based on all the available evidence. It is our contention that not only is the introduction of this policy discriminatory towards disabled peoples it is also wholly unnecessary.

7.17 Child Maintenance

In April 2011 NIPSA, one of our affiliates, submitted a response to the Green Paper “Strengthening families, Promoting Parental Responsibility” which detailed proposals to change the future delivery of Child Maintenance.

Among the concerns that were highlighted at the time, reference was made to a number of issues and these included observations on the possible impact on equality. We would like to take this opportunity to develop the points made at that time.

31/7.11

7.11 Fraud Penalties and Sanctions

The proposed changes in the Welfare Reform bill plan to make the penalties for fraud more stringent. It is also intended to “widen the punishments available for attempted fraud”. It is not clear what “attempted fraud” actually is.

It is stated that Hardship payments at a reduced rate will be available for vulnerable groups who are subject to penalties and sanctions. Hardship payments are currently a reduced rate of benefit usually 60%. It is not clear if this is what is meant by a reduced rate or if Hardship payments will be reduced even further.

It is claimed that these changes will not discriminate against any one group. It states that hardship payments at a reduced rate will be available for vulnerable groups and for those who would be left in hardship if they did not receive any benefit payment. However anyone not in a vulnerable group will have to pay these hardship payments back from future benefit. This means the customer will be surviving on a reduced rate of benefit. This will cause more hardship to the customer forcing them to claim social fund and sending them into a vicious cycle of debt they will not easily recover from. They will also be charged £50 if they have been negligent with their claim which could be most if not all of their weekly rate.

It is claimed that the circumstances for all benefit fraud will be looked at before introducing the penalties. Mitigation factors such as serious illness or disability will be considered under the public interest test. Who will administer this test? Will it be the department or the public prosecution service?

The penalty's that are proposed in this bill are harsh and extreme. They will only cause more hardship to customers who are already vulnerable. Further information about implementation of the new regime is needed before adverse impact on Section 75 groups can be properly assessed

Summary

The main proposals put forward in the Green Paper include the provision of a new IT system, a simplified calculation process, a “gateway” whereby parents would be provided with assistance in making their own family based arrangements and finally the introduction of charges for some aspects of the new statutory service.

The initial response broadly welcomed the provision of an improved IT system which had been highlighted in the Henshaw Report (2006) as one of the Agencies failings at that time.

We have a number of serious concerns surrounding the introduction of charges for calculating the liability and also the collection service that will manage cases where the parents have been unable to reach their own private agreements.

Other issues that were highlighted were mainly relating to the delivery of the advice and guidance and who might provide this service and additionally it was queried that the validity of some of the “assumptions” underpinning the whole approach was questionable.

We believe that the current Child Maintenance and Enforcement Division has made significant progress in a number of key areas including the number of children benefiting, amount of maintenance collected and the cost of each £1 collected. It is our belief that this progress should be continued and that the provision of a new, improved, IT system and simplified, more transparent calculation process would see significant further improvements.

The CMED’s greatest asset is the skills and knowledge of its staff however the recruitment embargo coupled with higher than average attrition has had the effect of reducing staffing levels significantly and been detrimental to the progress of the CMED in general.

The main components of the proposed new service and our comments are detailed below.

The Gateway

It is anticipated that the Gateway process will enable families to reach mutual agreement and that this will then have a beneficial effect on the children involved reducing the number of cases managed by the Agency. Given that the Options Service has been in operation since 2008, by March 2010 an estimated 13% of parents who availed of this service subsequently went on to make their own arrangements and a similar number went on to use the statutory service. What evidence is there that this has proven to be a cost effective service?

A concern shared by not only by Congress but also the Women’s Support Network and Gingerbread among others is that many lone parents will be pressurised into making inappropriate agreements rather than pay the charges that the new system proposes. With the vast majority of Parents with Care (PWC) being women, 93% in NI, and given that there is ample evidence that they are a group who are particularly vulnerable to poverty, what guarantees are there that the proposed changes will not exacerbate this known problem?

Calculation Only Service

Once an initial calculation of liability has been carried out, any further calculation will be subject to additional charges. The initial calculation has been estimated as being between, £20-£25 with reductions for PWC’s on benefits. Previous estimates had estimated this charge might be higher and it has been anticipated that it should have no significant Gender impact. Given that only 7% of lone parents are male and the PWC in the vast majority of cases makes the initial contact how can it be construed that it will have no adverse impact on Gender when clearly women will be paying more often?

Maintenance Direct Policy

This element of the new scheme is one of the most worrying from a Gender standpoint. Where previously both parents had to agree to Maintenance Direct it is now proposed that the Non Resident Parent (NRP) will be able to pay directly without the PWC consenting. It is suggested that this will incentivise parents to make and maintain their own arrangements as neither would incur the charges that accompany the statutory collection service. In reality, it may cause PWC's to accept reduced and or missed payments rather than pay for the collection service and/or possible calculation fees. What mechanisms will be put in place to ensure that children are protected in these arrangements and parents are not being pressurised into inappropriate arrangements.

Will means tested benefits take into consideration the possibility that the lone parent may not, in some cases be in receipt of any financial support but at the same time be unwilling to revert to the statutory system due to the expense?

Age

There are no obvious elements contained in the proposals that would cause concern in relation to the ages of either PWC's or NRP's. There is however some concern in relation to another area of the Bill, namely that which refers to the age of the Qualifying Child. It is proposed that once a child reaches 5 years the lone parent will be actively encouraged to re-enter the employment market. Parents with care will be moved onto JSA or ESA. What guarantees are in place to ensure that this does not impact on those who are receiving less than the calculated amount of maintenance in an arrangement that the Agency has encouraged them to accept?

Law Centre NI

Submission to the Committee for Social Development: Welfare Reform Bill

Introduction

The Law Centre's submission to the Bill is set out in a clause by clause format as sought by the Committee. At this point, amendments to the Bill have not been drafted as we would prefer to receive a sense of the areas in which the Committee would like to receive possible amendments. Moreover, many of our comments relate to proposed regulations which will be drafted following the Bill.

The Law Centre has considerable concerns about the implementation of major items contained in the Bill for example, the introduction of Universal Credit and Personal Independence Payment. Nonetheless, we start from the premise that there is neither the time, money or IT within Northern Ireland to devise an alternative social security system. As a result, our response is aimed at improving the proposals designed for Great Britain taking into account the specific circumstances and needs of Northern Ireland.

The Welfare Reform Bill is in large measure an enabling Bill with much of the detail left to regulations. There are a number of critical issues being left to regulations including the essential details governing entitlement to housing credit within Universal Credit, the final level of earnings disregards for the various category of claimants on Universal Credit, the details of what exactly will be required of people in the all work related requirements, the rates of benefit payable, the details of daily living activities and daily mobility activities which will govern entitlement to Personal Independence Payment etc.

We do want to flag up issues which we think require scrutiny by the Committee and further clarity from the Department. The DWP has signalled its intentions on some issues and published draft regulations following the passing of the Welfare Reform Act in Britain.

The Committee should ask the Department to provide a draft plan including a timetable for publishing the regulations due to be made under the Bill.

Many of the key regulations are to be made under the confirmatory resolution statutory rule procedure. We understand this entails making and laying the regulations before the Assembly setting out the date of coming into effect. These regulations can be brought into effect, albeit they will cease to have effect after six months unless the Assembly has approved the regulations by way of a resolution.

Many of the areas where things can be done differently in Northern Ireland will be contained in regulations, or accompanying guidance, or different operational arrangements. As a result, the scrutiny process must find a way of addressing where legislatively the exact scope for specific flexibilities actually lie.

Part 1 Entitlement and Awards

Clauses 1 and 2: Universal Credit claims

Universal Credit may be awarded to a couple or an individual who is not a member of a couple. Clause 2 provides the power to make regulations to specify circumstances in which a member of a couple may claim for a single person.

It is important that consideration is given to ensuring that there are powers to award Universal Credit to a single person who remains a member of a couple (for example, if only one member of a couple is willing to sign the claimant commitment see clause 14). The Committee should seek an assurance from the Department that there is sufficient flexibility to award Universal Credit to one member of a couple only in appropriate circumstances. This is separate from the issue of whether some or all of the Universal Credit should be paid to the primary carer.

Clauses 3 and 4: Universal Credit entitlement

These clauses govern the basic conditions of entitlement to Universal Credit. Clause 4 provides powers for regulations to determine the details of rules governing when a person is treated as being or not being in Northern Ireland; circumstances in which temporary absences from Northern Ireland will be allowed and what is receiving education when excluding entitlement to Universal Credit. The regulations will also provide for exceptions to the requirements.

The issues for the committee to follow up include:

- (i) the intention is that both members of a couple must be above qualifying age for a couple for state pension to be paid otherwise couples must claim Universal Credit. With pension age being equalized for men and women by April 2018 this means that one member of a couple could be well above pensionable age and still face work related requirements and claimant commitment conditions. A woman aged 61 with a male partner aged 70 who has already retired claiming a means-tested benefit for the first time in October 2013 will move to Universal Credit rather than Pension Credit.

The arrangements for seeking work etc in these types of cases should be explored with the Department.

- (ii) will the existing rules regarding absence from Northern Ireland, being in Northern Ireland, when able to study and retain benefit be altered from current arrangements for Income Support (IS), income related Employment and Support Allowance (ESA and Jobseeker's Allowance) (JSA)? If so, what is the rationale for such changes? It is worth noting the introduction of income related ESA led to more restrictive conditions for studying and retaining benefit.

The DWP has signalled its intention to allow for up to one month and up to 26 weeks absence from home in specific circumstances. This includes payment of housing credit for up to 26 weeks where a person is in residential care or hospital. This contrasts with housing benefit rules which allow up to 13 weeks absence in some circumstances and up to 52 weeks where other conditions apply (for example, due to going into hospital or residential care on a temporary basis).

Entitlement to UC for 16 and 17 year olds to Universal Credit in certain circumstances is to be retained. The Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) has set out five circumstances in which 16-17 year olds may qualify for UK namely:

- those with dependent children – lone parents or couples;
- sick or disabled young people who have satisfied the Work Capability Assessment or are waiting to be assessed with medical evidence;
- those who are caring for a severely disabled person;
- young women who are pregnant between 11 weeks before and 15 weeks after the expected date of confinement;
- young people who are without parental support.

Young people coming out of care will continue to be supported outside the social security system as currently. Under the current rules, payments can be made on a discretionary basis where severe hardship occurs. We believe this provision should be retained.

Clause 5: financial conditions

This introduces a savings rule for Universal Credit which we understand will match the current capital limit for IS, JSA and ESA ie £16,000 with a tariff income for savings between £6,000 and £16,000.

This is a significant change for some claimants as tax credits and pension credit have no upper capital limit. Pension credit applies a tariff income on savings above £10,000 and tax credits ignores savings but, takes account of any taxable income generated by savings subject to a £300 per year disregard.

The new capital rule is likely to affect older claimants who have had more time to save towards retirement. There are two issues. First, will tax credits claimants transferred to UC be able to remain entitled under transitional protection arrangements? An assurance should be sought that such protection will be provided. Secondly, would the capital threshold be appropriate for people on Universal Credit where the claimant or one member of the couple has reached 60 years of age. This would recognise the importance of savings for people who are close to retirement age. The recent Joseph Rowntree Foundation report into 'Monitoring Poverty and Social Exclusion in Northern Ireland 2012' noted a rise in pensioner poverty in contrast to a fall in Great Britain. A significant contributory factor was the far less reliance on occupational pensions in Northern Ireland. Some claimants are likely to have modest savings yet low income. As a result, consideration should be given to an amendment confining the capital rules to people less than 60 years of age.

Clause 6: restrictions on entitlement

This clause allows for regulations to be made to exclude entitlement in specific circumstances. We understand this will apply to members of religious orders and prisoners. This applies to current means-tested benefits. The committee should seek clarity from the Department whether the regulations intend to go any further than the current exclusions provided for in IS, JSA and ESA.

Clauses 8 – 10: calculation of awards

These clauses cover calculation of awards including standard allowance and payments for children.

The DWP has signalled that it may restrict certain EU nationals (ie work seekers) entitlement to the standard allowance only.¹ Any such arrangement would be a retrograde step and possibly unlawful both under domestic law and European Union law. The Committee should seek clarity on the intention for Northern Ireland. In our view, there is no objective justification to paying EU migrants lower rates of benefits than those payable to UK and Irish nationals.

New standard allowance rates for Universal Credit will be paid based on the following categories

- single claimants under age 25
- single claimants aged 25 or over
- couples where both members are under age 25 and
- couples where one or both members are aged 25 or over.

DWP Explanatory Memorandum Universal Credit regulations June 2012 see SSAC website

This is a simpler structure than applies for IS, ESA and JSA. However, we understand that some young people under 25 claiming UC will receive lower rates of benefit than under existing benefits. The Committee may wish to seek clarity on this point.

A significant new feature of UC is that the self-employed will be treated as having a deemed minimum income which will reduce entitlement to UC. The DWP has yet to announce the amount of the deemed income. This 'minimum income' will not be applied during a one year period from the date of claim where on actual reported income will be applied. The DWP has also recently suggested it will only allow one start up period for self-employment every five years. Further, present proposals expect self-employed people on UC to report on income on a monthly basis. These arrangements if applied will have a substantial disincentive to try out or continue in self-employment. The proposals make no provision for people in self-employment falling ill or facing a downturn in orders or income by still applying the deemed minimum income. Moreover, most small self-employed businesses manage their reporting on a six monthly or annual basis and a monthly reporting requirement is unduly onerous. Monthly reporting for self-employed business where income ebbs and flows is likely to lead to constant changes to UC. In Britain, small employer organisations have made substantial representations to the Department that the current proposals are unworkable and likely to the original policy discourage rather than promote self-employment as a route out of benefit. The Committee should consider questioning the Department closely as to how they see Universal Credit working for people in self-employment.

The actual rates of allowances have yet to be announced for Universal Credit. Nonetheless, based on the information provided to date the recent report by Disability Rights UK and others has identified specific groups who will be worse off under Universal Credit². First, there are families with disabled children who currently receive additional financial support of £57 a week through the disability element of Child Tax Credit. Under UC this will be reduced to £28 a week unless the child is registered blind or on the high rate component of DLA.

Secondly, severely disabled adults who either live on their own, with another disabled adult or only with dependent children may be eligible for a severe disability premium of £58 a week within IS, income based JSA or income related ESA. The DWP has said that this support is being abolished in order to redistribute money to the most disabled adults. However, as the Disability Rights UK report notes the redistribution will still leave people with the most severe level of impairment who have no adult to assist them substantially worse off. Thirdly, disabled people working more than 16 hours a week are entitled to the disability element of Working Tax Credit worth up to £52 a week. Under UC any person requiring additional support because of a disability will have to undergo the Work Capability Assessment (WCA). Anyone found fully fit for work following a WCA will receive no equivalent additional financial assistance to the disability element of WTC. There is clear evidence that people with disabilities who are in work face additional costs (as recognised by DLA and PIP benefit paid whether in or out of work). While transitional protection provides temporary respite it will inexorably be eroded inexorably while young people with disabilities reaching adulthood will not be able to avail of such transitional protection. We would urge the committee support the recommendations of the Disability UK report.

Clause 11: housing costs

Almost all of the essential detail about the payment of housing credit is being left to regulations. The payments are essentially rent, mortgage interest and other owner occupation payments and service charges.

One key change being signalled by the DWP is that an owner occupier on Universal Credit will lose help with housing costs if doing any paid work (the zero earnings rule see paragraph 82 of the DWP Explanatory Memorandum for Universal Credit regulations). As a result, for example, a lone parent who takes a mini-job one day a week on a temporary basis will lose all help with mortgage interest. This is likely to undermine the financial incentive to work for many owner occupiers with outstanding mortgage liabilities. As a result, the Committee should ask the Department to set out its intentions and the ramifications of any such approach for claimants in Northern Ireland.

2 Holes in the Safety net the impact of Universal Credit on disabled people and their families – Disability Rights UK, Citizens Advice Bureau and the Children's Society (2012)

The waiting period before housing costs are paid to owner occupiers who claim UC is still to be determined. There used to be a waiting period of up to 39 weeks for claimants on IS, JSA and ESA. This was modified to 13 weeks for new claimants from January 2009. Tax credit only claimants do not get help with mortgage payments. Early clarity of the waiting period is important.

The limit of help with mortgage interest to two years for income related JSA claimants only is being transferred to Universal Credit. This will affect potentially much larger numbers as it effectively extends this provision to former IS and ESA claimants. The Committee should explore with the Department the likely numbers involved and what can be done to protect households affected by these provisions.

Chapter 2: Claimant Responsibilities

Clause 14: claimant commitment

A claimant or both members of a couple will be required to enter into a claimant commitment as part of a claim for UC.

Our understanding is that both partners must sign the 'claimant commitment' for UC to be paid. As a result, if one partner signs the commitment and the other refuses (for example, due to relationship tensions, or one partner's addiction or mental health problems) then, no UC is paid. This appears to penalize both the partner willing to meet the condition and any children in the claim. As a result, we recommend that powers be taken and provision made to pay UC at the single person rate with child allowances in such circumstances.

Clauses 15 – 24: work related requirements

There will be four types of work requirements that will be imposed on claimants depending on their circumstances namely:

- work focused interviews: attend periodic interviews to discuss plans and opportunities for returning to work (immediately or in the future);
- work preparation: actions to prepare for work – such as attending training courses, preparing a CV or taking part in the work programme;
- work search – take all reasonable action and any particular specific actions to find work – such as applying for suggested vacancies or registering with a recruitment agency;
- work availability – be available and willing to immediately take up work.

In certain circumstances for example, where a woman is about/has recently given birth there will be no work requirement.

The following issues need to be scrutinized by the Committee.

Clause 16(4) introduces a work focussed health-related assessment. This was originally part of the requirements for claiming ESA but, was suspended it was designed to look at employability though not part of establishing entitlement to ESA. There does not appear to be any need to reintroduce this additional assessment.

The Committee may wish to explore whether it is being restored and, if so, on what basis.

Clause 22 the all work requirement is the most onerous commitment and applies to all those who do not fall into the other categories. The DWP has signalled that most claimants will be expected to spend 35 hours a week looking for or preparing for work. In practice, this appears almost impossible to meet on an ongoing basis. While CVs can be updated, employers written to, jobs and benefit offices visited, websites and newspapers perused for vacancies etc there will come a point where all this work searching has been done and a claimant is waiting on a response. To continue to spend 35 hours a week searching for work over a period of months is not practical. This is an area where proportionate operational arrangements need to be put in place. The corollary of not spending 35 hours a week in work search activities is the possibility of sanctions being applied.

Clause 22 the DWP has stated that EU workers or jobseekers will always be placed in the 'all work related requirement' group. This is provided for in Schedule 1 para 7 of the Bill (see page 15). This is clearly discriminatory, appears to be based on a particular Ministerial view of EU migrant workers within the DWP. It is likely to be unlawful and serves no reasonable purpose. The Committee should ensure that no such prejudicial arrangement are introduced in Northern Ireland.

Clause 22 all work requirements can be imposed on claimants in work who earn below a specific threshold. This is new. Claimants in part time work on tax credits are currently not expected to seek work on top of their part time commitments. It is unclear how this will work in practice. The DWP has said it wishes to pilot approaches from October 2013 onwards. The Committee should determine what approach will be taken in Northern Ireland.

The clauses introduce significantly increased sanctions for claimants who fail to meet the conditionality requirements under Universal Credit. There are higher level sanctions and effectively medium, low and lowest level sanctions.

Existing JSA sanctions of one to 26 weeks which apply to employment related requirements are replaced with new provision of 13 weeks within the all work related requirements for a first failure, 26 weeks for a second failure (within 52 weeks of the first failure) and three years for a third failure within 52 week period. The new sanction regime applies to failure to apply for a particular vacancy without good reason, to take up an offer of work without good reason, leave work through misconduct or voluntarily without good reason or lose pay voluntary or through misconduct without good reason. The actual periods are to be covered in regulations.

Medium level sanctions can be imposed on claimants subject to all work related requirements. Those sanctions cover failure to undertake all reasonable work search action, or fails without good reason to be able and willing immediately to take up work (or more paid work or better paid work). The sanction anticipated is 28 days for a first failure, and 13 weeks for a second and subsequent failure within 52 weeks of the first failure.

The lower level of sanctions will apply to claimants subject to all work related requirements, work preparation and work focussed interview requirements. The lower level sanctions include failure to undertake specified work action without good reason, failure to comply with a work preparation requirement without good reason, failure to comply with a requirement to provide evidence or confirm compliance without good reason and failure to comply with a work focussed interview requirement without good reason.

The level of sanction anticipated is

- (i) an open ended sanction until the claimant complies with the condition plus
- (ii) a fixed period of seven days for a first failure, 14 days for a second failure within a year of the first failure and 28 days for a third failure within a year.

A lowest level sanction will be introduced for claimants with work focussed interview (WFI) requirements who fail to participate in a work focused interview or a connected requirement. The sanction will be open ended until the required condition is met.

A summary of the arrangements is included in the table below:

UC sanction durations

Sanction	Applicable to	Duration
		1st failure	2nd failure	3rd or subsequent failure
High level eg failure to take up an offer of paid work	Claimants subject to all work-related requirements	91 days	182 days	1095 days
Medium level eg failure to undertake all reasonable action to obtain work	Claimants subject to all work related requirements	28 days	91 days
Low level eg failure to undertake particular, specified work preparation action	Claimants subject to all work related requirements Claimants subject to work preparation and work-focused interview requirements	Open ended until re-engagement plus
		7 days	14 days	28 days
Lowest level Failure to participate in a work-focused interview	Claimants subject to work-focused interview requirements only	Open ended until re-engagement

There are a number of issues for the Committee to consider. They include

- (i) is the increased level of sanctions proportionate given its impact on the rest of the household including children? We would suggest the increase is disproportionate and sanctions of 13 weeks, 26 weeks and 3 years is too long.
- (ii) regulations in Britain only provide five working days for a claimant to establish good reason before a sanction is applied. The penalty for non-compliance will be increased sharply to should a longer period to provide details of a good reason also be provided. The Law Centre would suggest an increase to at least 15 working days to show reasonable cause.
- (iii) the DWP has introduced some of the increased sanctions arrangements for JSA and ESA in advance to broadly align with UC. This seems unnecessary given that the apparent advantages of Universal Credit are not available to claimants in the interim.
- (iv) a sanction for failing to take up more paid work or better paid work is new and raises questions of the appropriateness of such a provision.

Sanctions arrangements is also an area where operational flexibilities could be put in place and the Department should be pressed hard on this issue with specific undertakings given. These could include specific safeguards for people with mental and physical health problems, with learning disabilities. Research has shown that people in these groups are disproportionately prone to being sanctioned³.

Clause 28: hardship payments

This provides a power for regulations to provide hardship payments for a claimant who has been sanctioned.

A new feature of hardship payments is that they will be recoverable (in effect loans). The DWP has signalled that the hardship rate will be 60 per cent of the daily amount by which the claimant's UC has been reduced by a sanction.

The Law Centre recommends that the hardship payments should not be recoverable. Evidence on sanctions has revealed that around 20 per cent of claimants did not know they had been sanctioned until after the event.⁴ The loss of a significant amount of benefit is a sufficient punishment without a claimant having to pay additional money back. The preponderance of sanctions applied to people with mental health problems for example, is likely to create even greater difficulties in circumstances where hardship payments are made recoverable.

Chapter 3 – Supplementary and General

Clause 31 – regulation making powers

This clause and Schedule 1 provides powers for regulations to cover income and savings rules including what is to be taken into account as income and savings and what it to be ignored.

The DWP has said the rules on savings are not going to change significantly. One change signalled by the DWP is that a claimant who spends savings reasonably and moves on to benefit will no longer be caught under 'deprivation of capital' rules. The Committee should seek clarity as to what, if any other changes will be made.

Schedule 1 paragraph 6 provides for regulations to pay all or part of UC through vouchers. The Committee should seek information about when a voucher will be paid to claimants. The Law Centre can see no immediate basis for paying UC through vouchers.

Schedule 1 paragraph 7 allows for regulations to provide that claimants from the EU with a right to reside who fall into the no work-related requirements, work focussed interview requirement only and work preparation requirement only can instead be made subject to the all work related requirements. We would recommend that this clause be deleted from the Bill. The provision is likely to prove unlawful. Article 14 of the European Convention of Human Rights provides for freedom from discrimination. The right is not free standing and must be invoked alongside another substantive right in the Convention. Article 1 of the Convention provides for a right to property. In Sec v UK (2005) the Grand Chamber of European Court of Human Rights held that social security benefit whether funded on a contributory or non-contributory basis were covered by Article 1 or Protocol 1. This leaves the Department having to provide an objective justification for treating EU nationals adversely. We can see no objective basis for such discrimination.

Clause 32: regulation making powers

This clause allows other regulation making powers under Schedule 2.

The scheme provides for amendments to allow some UC claimants to receive free school meals or legal aid. The relationship between UC and passport benefits remains unclear and the Committee should press the Department for clarity on this issue as it potentially impacts on incentives to take work.

⁴ op cit

Paragraph 49 of Schedule 2 amends the State Pension Credit Act to ensure couples with one partner under pensionable age cannot receive pension credit. This may be an area where the Committee want to consider an amendment to safeguard older claimant couples forced to remain on UC.

Clause 37: migration to Universal Credit

This covers the provisions for transitional protection when moving from IS, JSA or tax credits onto Universal Credit and also provides for a short gap in benefit to not automatically lead to a loss of transitional protection. The Committee has already sought details of the arrangements for transitional protection and this will need to be carefully scrutinized. We understand that the transitional protection is likely to be eroded as benefits are uprated each year.

Clause 42: pilot schemes

This provides for pilot schemes to be introduced for specific purposes as part of the implementation of UC. The Committee should ask the Department what pilot schemes if any, are envisaged.

Clause 43: regulations

Sub-paragraph (6) allows for regulations to be made for different provision for housing costs and other additional needs to be made in different areas. The Committee should seek clarity from the Department as to what is the purpose of this provision.

Clause 44: statutory rules procedures

This sets out the statutory rules procedures for regulations. The committee should seek a plan with a time frame for the regulations as they remain a critical part of the scrutiny process.

Clause 47: sanctions

This clause introduces the anticipated new increased sanctions arrangements for Universal Credit into JSA in advance of the introduction of UC. As the improved earnings disregard arrangements will not be implemented in advance of UC we can see no justification in implementing a more punitive sanctions regime in advance. It also implements new hardship payments in advance of UC including turning these payments from grants into loans. The Committee should consider not implementing this clause.

Clause 52: Employment and support allowance: restriction of entitlement

This clause limits entitlement to contributory ESA for people in the work related activity group to 52 weeks. The provision is to be applied retrospectively in that claimants on contributory ESA for before enactment of this clause will have that period of entitlement counted towards the 52 weeks. In effect, many people will lose contributory ESA immediately. Claimants affected by this clause can move to income-related ESA if satisfying the means-test or alternatively lose benefit altogether where the claimant has a partner in work or savings above £16,000. Figures available from the DWP Equality Impact Assessment showed that almost half of those affected in Britain were aged 50 years of age or older. The implementation of this clause may be contrary to Article 1 Protocol 1 of the European Convention of Human Rights. In Kiartan Asmundsson v Iceland (2004) the Court held the removal of an industrial injury benefit from existing claimants was contrary to the right to property under Article 1 Protocol 1. The Court held if the pension had been reduced proportionately rather than terminated altogether then there would have been no breach. The Bill envisages that claimants already receiving contributory ESA for 12 months prior to the introduction of the clause will lose benefit immediately, this clause is introduced. We understand the Department is likely to introduce this clause shortly after the Bill receives Royal Assent giving claimants on contributory ESA for 12 months little notice of the change.

The Committee should consider either not implementing this clause or amending it. There is a cost to such action which is currently estimated at £12.25 million in 2012/2013, £52.88 million in 2013/2014 and £56.92 million in 2014/2015. It is not clear if this is a net cost ie after taking into account the displacement costs of some claimants moving to income-related ESA or not. The Committee may wish to seek further information from the Department. In the alternative, an amendment to tie this provision to the age of a claimant eg those under 50 or 55 years of age or arrangements for the 12 months period not to commence until actual implementation might be considered.

Clause 54: ESA in youth

This abolishes ESA in your which is payable to young people under 20 (and in certain circumstances under 25) without the normal national insurance contributions conditions being satisfied. Existing claimants who are in the work related activity group will lose the benefit after 12 months. The Committee should consider not implementing this clause. The current cost is estimated at £390,000 a year. It is not clear whether this is net of the displacement costs of claimants moving to other benefits eg JSA.

Clause 57 and 58: hardship payments/claimant responsibilities

These clauses introduce the new claimant responsibilities, sanctions and hardship payment arrangements (including loans) for Employment and Support Allowance.

The new claimant responsibilities will not be introduced until the introduction of Universal Credit. The higher level sanctions arrangements associated with the 'all work requirements' do not apply to ESA. However, the increase in sanctions in other work related categories will be introduced in advance of Universal Credit to broadly align with the UC arrangements.

The Work Programme equivalent will not be introduced until October 2013 at the earliest and the improved work disregards will not be made available in advance of Universal Credit. As a result, it would be inequitable to introduce the increased sanctions in advance of Universal Credit.

Once UC is introduced the increased sanctions will only be relevant to claimants on contribution based ESA.

Clauses 61, 62 and 63 entitlement to work: JSA and ESA

These clauses create new requirements for claimants to have an entitlement to work for contributory JSA, contributory ESA, maternity allowance, statutory maternity, paternity and adoption pay.

Current immigration rules provide that people 'subject to immigration control' are excluded from income related JSA and income related ESA. These provisions will be extended to Universal Credit. The exclusion does not extend to contributory benefits where a person has paid his or her tax and national insurance contributions.

We can see no basis for creating this new provision. Moreover, a person whose legal status may have changed and who is legitimately challenging the situation will be denied a contributory benefit despite lawfully working during the period of building up contributions. Moreover, under the old A8 work registration scheme it was possible to lose the 'right to reside' status almost overnight in some circumstances.

These clauses should not be passed. The Department should be asked to provide likely numbers affected and cost savings. The figures (if available) will be very small though the impact on individuals will be significant.

Clause 69: housing benefit – determination of the appropriate maximum

This is a significant clause which allows the Department to set the local housing allowance by reference to the lower of either the Consumer Price Index or bottom 30th percentile of private rented sector and to introduce the new public rented sector size related criteria into the calculation of HB for people of working age.

The calculation of the LHA by the lower rate of CPI or 30th percentile of private rented sector will have a considerable impact. The average increase in CPI since 1997 is around 2 per cent compared with a 4 per cent increase in 30th percentile rents in the private rented sector. At present, claimants on HB are expected to find accommodation in the cheapest 30 per cent of rents. Based on past evidence, the new arrangements will lead inexorably to HB claimants having to find accommodation in an even more restricted bottom end of the market or pay the difference in cost. This change needs to be considered as part of the wider cumulative impact of HB savings already implemented. This estimated savings for this £1.3 million in 2013/2014 rising to £7.92 million in 2014/2015.

In areas where demand for private rented sector accommodation is high, HB claimants will not be able to access accommodation. We recommend that this clause is not passed.

This clause also introduces the new size related element of housing credit for people of working age living in public/rented sector housing. This will lead to a reduction in maximum eligible housing credit of 14 per cent where a claimant is deemed 'over-occupying' by one bedroom and a 25 per cent reduction where deemed 'over-occupying' by two bedrooms or more. Draft regulations suggest that there will be few exceptions to this rule. The provision is unlikely to apply to accommodation registered

As a result, the new proposed arrangements will affect significant numbers of households in Housing Executive and Housing Association accommodation. The Housing Executive stock includes 44.3 per cent of homes with three bedrooms or more which have three bedrooms or more. The Housing Executive and Housing Association movement has yet to come up with alternative proposals to manage the difficulties created by this provision.

Moreover, the significant proportion of 'single identity estates' contained within the Housing Executive stock will also make moving tenants to smaller accommodation even less straightforward. These proposals are likely to face legal challenges on a number of fronts. First, in Burnip v Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (SSWP) 2012 Trengrove v SSWP (2012) and Gorry v Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (2012) the Court of Appeal considered similar provisions which had been applied to HB in the private rented sector. The Court of Appeal held that the provision was indirectly discrimination which was covered by Article 14 of the ECHR and that HB was covered by Article 1 Protocol 1 of the Convention. In two of the cases, the applicants were severely disabled and required an extra bedroom for full time carers. This circumstance was resolved by an amendment to the HB regulations introduced in April 2011. The exemption in the size related criteria in the public sector covering the need for an extra bedroom for a full time carer has been included in draft regulations. However, in the third successful appeal (Gorry) the issue concerned two daughters aged 10 and 8 who both had disabilities which meant it was impractical for the children to share a room. The Department has not added this to the exemptions in either the private sector HB regulations or the draft proposed public sector size-related regulations. This omission is unlikely to survive a further legal challenge bearing in mind that discretionary housing payments were also available in the cases before the Court of Appeal.

A further challenge is also likely to arise under the right to a home, family and private life under Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights in cases where an extra room is provided for legitimate family reasons during temporary absences or in circumstances where a family is prepared to move to accommodation of a reduced size and no such transfer is forthcoming the private rented sector provides less secure tenure and a reduction in housing credit is applied.

As a result, the Law Centre would recommend that a delay in implementing this clause is made until firm and clear proposals for dealing with the issue are in place. In the alternative, additional exemptions from the provisions should be provided in the regulations including for families with children under 10 years of age with disabilities where sharing a room is not appropriate, foster carers who are between fostering placements and other circumstances where an additional bedroom is retained for legitimate family purposes.

The savings anticipated from this provision is £15.51 million a year from 2013/2014 onwards. The Committee might wish to get more details of how this has been calculated and what additional discretionary housing payments are expected to be paid as a result of the new arrangements.

Clause 70: ending of discretionary payments

This clause paves the way for the end of the discretionary part of the Social Fund (ie community care grants, budgeting loans and crisis loans). In Britain these payments will be administered by local authorities from April 2013. In Northern Ireland a replacement scheme will be introduced alongside the existing discretionary housing payments scheme administered by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. Awards in advance of payment of benefit will be covered by Universal Credit. We understand the Department is considering the retention of the Social Fund beyond April 2013 as any replacement scheme will have to be consulted on, developed and may also require legislation. This will not therefore be completed by April 2013. As a result, this clause is unlikely to be introduced immediately. The Committee should ask the Department to clarify its intentions and timetable for replacing the Social Fund.

Clause 71: purposes of discretionary payments

This allows the discretionary Social Fund to pay loans for maternity expenses. Access to social fund maternity grants has been curtailed and the average social fund maternity grant (£506.87 in 2009/2010) and funeral expenses payment (£967.86 in 2009/2010) does not cover the actual costs associated with a birth or death.

Clause 74: state pension credit carers

This clause appears to extend entitlement to the additional amount of the guarantee credit beyond claimants receiving carer's allowance. It is not clear what the extension will be as this is being left to regulations.

Clause 75: state pension credit: savings rules

This introduces a savings limit for housing credit which will be paid as part of Pension Credit. The existing arrangements for Pension Credit claimants with housing costs involve claiming HB which also has a savings limit. For owner occupiers with outstanding mortgages, the capital limit is new as help with mortgage interest in Pension Credit is not subject to a capital limit. The Committee may wish to ask the Department to provide details of the numbers affected by this provision.

Chapter 4: Personal Independence Payment

Clauses 76 – 94 Personal Independence Payment

These clauses introduce the framework for Personal Independence Payment (PIP) which will be replacing Disability Living Allowance for working age claimants.

The new benefit is due to be introduced from June 2013 onwards. The Treasury Report produced at the time of the announcement of PIP stated the aim to save 20 per cent over projected expenditure on DLA. In Northern Ireland savings of £22.19 million and £65.94 million are projected from 2013/2014 and 2014/2015.

PIP will have two components – a daily living component and a daily mobility component. The details of both will be contained in regulations. The details of the components and the scores attached to satisfying the conditions have been the subject of consultation but, remain to be finalized.

The new benefit will also entail more regular medical assessment which will be provided outside of the DSD. The Committee may wish to press the Department on the terms of any new contract including any penalty clauses for poor quality assessments bearing in mind the problems associated with the delivery of the ESA medical assessment contract by ATOS Healthcare.

Changes to the framework between the DLA and PIP which have been confirmed by DWP include the following:

a claimant must satisfy the conditions for PIP for three months before the date of entitlement and six months afterwards. This compares with periods of three months before and six months afterwards for DLA. We would recommend amending clause 80(1)(b) and 80(3)(b) to six months where an award has ended and a claimant's condition has deteriorated then, where a new claim is made within 12 months, the new three month waiting period does not have to be served. This is a reduction from the 2 years that applies to DLA. This will be dealt with in regulations.

a new residence/presence test is being introduced. The new past presence test will be much more restricting than the current test. The new past presence test will expect claimants to have been in the UK for two of the past three years. The previous residence/presence test was unlawful in European law terms (see ECJ C 503/09 Stewart v United Kingdom). The new test is also unlikely to survive a challenge in the European Court of Justice. This issue will be dealt with in regulations.

PIP will not be paid to prisoners or people held on remand after 28 days.

If a person is held on remand and there is no sentence of imprisonment or detention, or any change is dropped or any conviction is quashed then no arrears will be paid. DLA is not paid to prisoners or those held on remand, however, if released without charge or a conviction is quashed then arrears of benefit are paid. The arrangements for PIP are unfair to people wrongly held on remand. We would recommend amending clause 86 to restore the position that applies to DLA.

The rules on temporary absence from the UK are being made tougher. They will allow entitlement to PIP for only four weeks or up to 26 weeks where a claimant goes abroad for treatment. For DLA temporary absences of up to 26 weeks do not normally affect entitlement and temporary absences for treatment do not have a specific time limit. This will be dealt with in regulations.

Part 5: Social Security General

Clauses 95 and 96: benefit cap

These clauses pave the way for the Benefit Cap. Regulations will set out the level of the cap, how the cap will be calculated, the benefits which will be taken into account, how any reductions in benefit will be applied and exceptions from the cap. The cap will be set at a level designed to match the average weekly wage after tax and national insurance payments. A separate figure will be set for single people (£350 a week) for lone parents and couple households (£500 a week).

The numbers affected by the benefit cap is likely to be small in Northern Ireland due to lower housing costs. Nonetheless, those affected will find it difficult to deal with what will be a significant loss of income. The Department should be asked to provide detailed figures of the numbers likely to be affected. The saving that will be made as a result of the cap is estimated at £7.26 million in 2013/2014 and £8.58 million in 2014/2015. We would be interested in how these figures were calculated. In the meantime, the Law Centre recommends that carer's allowance, Widow's and Bereavement benefits and contributory based ESA are added to the list of proposed benefits exempt from the application of the benefit cap. Current exemptions proposed from the cap include households where DLA, Attendance Allowance, PIP, industrial injuries benefits, the support component of ESA and War Widow or Widowers Pensions are payable.

Clause 98: powers to require information relating to claims and awards

This clause amends the Social Security Administration (NI) Act 1992 to provide wider powers to require individuals or others to provide information or evidence which is relevant to a potential claim or an existing claim or award for benefit. Regulations will set out who is to be covered by this provision. We would suggest the Committee asks the Department which individuals and organisations will be covered by the regulations drawn up under this provision and the specific purposes of the wider powers beyond the examples provided in the explanatory memorandum.

Clause 100: payments on account

This clause provides for payments on account to be made in cases of need and in circumstances where the Department considers that prescribed criteria are met and a payment can reasonably be expected to be recovered.

It is not clear whether or not this is the legislation vehicle for the introduction of a replacement to the Social Fund. The Committee should seek clarity on this issue and also ask for a detailed process, timetable and substantial plans for any replacement to the Social Fund (see also clause 70).

Clause 101: mandatory revision before appeal

This clause provided for changes to appeals procedures so that all appeals are initially treated as applications for revision. Where the application is not changed as a result of the mandatory reconsideration the claimant must then seek a further appeal in writing. The Law Centre would suggest three changes to the proposals where have been separately consulted on. First, that where a mandatory revision does not provide the claimant with what has been requested then, the original application should be automatically treated as an appeal without the claimant being required to lodge a further appeal. Secondly, provision should be made to proceed straight to appeal in cases which are urgent (for example, in right to reside disputes where the decision often leaves a claimant without any income). This would not prevent the Department looking again at the issue in the interim. Thirdly, time limits are applied to claimants to deliver both the initial application for mandatory reconsideration and further appeal. A time limit should be applied to the Department to ensure an appeal is dealt with in a timely fashion. The Department of Work and Pensions and HMRC are both considering a 42 day time period in Britain. The Committee should seek an assurance that similar provision will be enacted in Northern Ireland.

Clauses 103-104: recovery of overpayment of certain benefits

This clause significantly changes the law governing the recovery of overpayments of JSA, ESA and UC and housing credit payable within state Pension Credit.

Currently, an overpayment of JSA and ESA is recoverable where the claimant or someone acting on his or her behalf fails to disclose relevant information or misrepresents circumstances (accidentally or otherwise) and the failure to disclose or misrepresentation causes the overpayment. In effect, the claimant must have caused or contributed to the overpayment.

The new clause replaces this concept with a right to recover any amount of Universal Credit, JSA, ESA or housing credit in SPC. In practice, this can include where the overpayment is the fault of the Department and the claimant could not reasonably have realised there had been an overpayment. This is broadly in line with powers currently taken by HMRC to recover overpayments of tax credits.

The Committee should ask the Department for details of the circumstances in which a recovery of an overpayment will not be made. In addition, for tax credits the details of when a recovery is not sought is contained in a code of practice document COP26. The Department is likely to produce its own equivalent and details of the Code of Practice and what it will contain should be requested.

This clause also provides the Department with powers to recover overpayments through employers (including social fund loans and HB overpayments) without having to go to court and to add court costs to the sum recovered from benefit where court action is taken. The clauses also require employers to comply with the obligation to deduct money from an employees earnings and a failure to do so can be a criminal offence. An administrative charge (to be specified in regulations) can be levied for paying money over to the Department. All of these provisions are new.

Clauses 109 -111: benefit penalties for benefit fraud not resulting in over-payment

These clauses introduce additional powers to issue benefit penalties. At present, a benefit penalty can only be applied where there has actually been an overpayment. The benefit penalty as an alternative to prosecution is 30 per cent of the actual overpayment. The new powers allow for a benefit penalty to be introduced even where no overpayment has resulted and will increase the penalty to £350 or 50 per cent of the overpayment whichever is the greater up to a maximum of £2000. Where no overpayment has arisen the benefit penalty will be £350. At present, there is a 28 day cooling-off period to decide whether to accept the alternative to prosecution. This will be reduced to 14 days.

The Law Centre's view is that a minimum penalty of £350 is disproportionate particularly where no overpayment has arisen. In cases where there has been an overpayment the increase of a penalty from 30 per cent to 50 per cent of the overpayment (on top of the recovery of the overpayment itself) is also disproportionate. We would recommend not introducing those changes.

Clause 112: civil penalties for incorrect statements and failure to disclose information

This introduces an additional penalty over and above recovering any overpayment in specific circumstances. A similar provision is available to HMRC for tax credits but is new for covering UC and other social security benefits. The civil penalty was introduced in Britain on 1 October 2012 and is £50.

Clauses 113 – 115: benefit offences – period of sanction

These clauses increase the sanction periods imposed on social security benefits (save for certain exempted benefits) where a conviction or benefit penalty as an alternative to prosecution or caution instead of prosecution is secured. This is sometimes known as the 'one strike rule'. Where a second benefit offence occurs within five years a further period of sanctions is applied under the two strikes rule. The increase in the loss of benefit period increases proposed is as follows:

	One strike rule	Two strike rule	Serious organized or identify fraud
Current provision	Four weeks	13 weeks	No specific provision
Proposed changes under the WR Bill	13 weeks (or four weeks if accepting benefit penalty or formal caution)	26 weeks or three years if within five years of a two previous offences including benefit penalty	Three years

The Law Centre does not condone fraud. However, we believe the increased provisions are disproportionate. For example, a person whose actions have led to no overpayment and who accepts a benefit penalty will now have to both repay £350 and a loss of benefit of up to four weeks. Furthermore, a three year loss of benefit for repeated or serious offences of fraud is likely to have a severe impact on the rest of a benefit household including children who have not been involved in the subterfuge. We believe it would be better to use the extensive criminal law powers already available to deal with offenders rather than punishing innocent parties.

Clause 115 will lead to an end to cautions as an alternative to prosecution. Instead the more severe administrative penalty will be applied instead.

Clause 130: rate relief schemes

The Law Centre would recommend the Committee seek clarity from the Department as to what changes, if any, will be made to the Rate Rebate Scheme. In Britain, Council Tax Benefit (CTB) has been passed to local authorities allowing them to implement their own schemes. The money transferred to local authorities included a ten per cent reduction from the money spent on CTB. The Law Centre is unclear whether a similar ten per cent reduction is being made in Northern Ireland and if so, how this reduction in funding is being realized.

Law Centre (NI)

October 2012

Suggested Amendments to the Welfare Reform Bill 2012: A Paper for the Social Development Committee

The Law Centre would recommend the following amendments to the Welfare Reform Bill.

Amendment 1: Clause 11 Housing Costs

Page 5, clause 11 line 31

5(b)(ii) add the words 'not exceeding 13 weeks'

rationale

From 5 January 2009 modified rules were introduced for income support, income related JSA and income related ESA to protect claimants from losing their homes by normally requiring only a 13 week waiting period before help with mortgage interest and other payments become available. Prior to this claimants had to serve either a 26 week or a 39 week period before receiving help with mortgage and other costs. The DWP has yet to announce what waiting period will apply under Universal Credit. The initial grounds for the modification in January 2009 have not significantly changed with repossessions currently on the rise. The amendment to clause (5)(b) will ensure the preservation of the current provision.

Add 5(c) 'provide for the calculation of an award under subsection (1) to be made according to different criteria for the first 13 weeks of a claim in such circumstances as may be prescribed'.

rationale: 13 – week rule amendment

Under current housing benefit rules, a claimant has a period of 13 weeks during which they may receive benefit equal to their full rental liability before broad rental market area restrictions apply from 14 weeks onwards. This is to allow a claimant time to find and move to a new address that is within the LHA and broad rental market area restrictions or a person who loses a job to find other work. It will confirm that the 13 week rule will continue under UC.

Amendment 3: Clause 14 claimant commitment

At the end add

(b) regulations shall prescribe circumstances to allow payment of a modified amount of a standard allowance and amounts under section 10, section 11 and section 12 where only one member of a couple accepts a claimant commitment.

rationale

We understand that where only one member of a couple agrees a claimant commitment no Universal Credit will be paid. This in effect penalises the claimant willing to sign up to the claimant commitment and also any children who are part of the household. The regulations published in Britain do not provide an exemption to entitlement where the other partner refuses to make a claimant commitment for example, due to a family dispute or other dispute with the Department. The amended clause would allow for example, the Department to pay the partner an amount to cover a single person only plus an amount for children and housing costs. Without such an option a partner would be forced to leave the relationship to obtain any benefit. In some circumstances, this may not be appropriate or wise (for example, due to fear of domestic violence).

Amendment 4: Clause 26 higher level sanctions

Page 13 line 13

Replace the words 3 years with '26 weeks'

rationale

This would ensure that the maximum period of disallowance that currently applies to income support, income related JSA and income related ESA is maintained. Current sanctions apply from one to 26 weeks depending on circumstances. A sanction of loss of benefit for three years for a third failure to comply with a requirement within a year is disproportionate. Evidence suggests that people with mental health problems, learning disabilities and people with literacy problems are more prone to face sanctions. A three year loss of benefit combined with a backstop of a new hardship payment regime with tougher conditions and making payments through loans will particularly affect any household with children. The impact of a reduced income which is repayable for such a long period for households with children is counterproductive to the Northern Ireland Executive's aim of reducing severe child poverty.

Amendment 5: Clause 26 higher level sanctions

Add

(9) 'a claimant shall be provided with at least fifteen days to provide a good reason for not complying with any requirement in this section.'

rationale

The Department has reduced the time to show good cause for failing to meet a requirement for income support JSA and ESA to five days in current regulations. Given the intention to significantly increase the period of sanctions there should be a more reasonable period to allow a claimant to show good cause. The Department in Britain does not appear to be willing to extend the time to show good reason. Five days is insufficient in a variety of circumstances for example, the death of a close relative, family emergency, serious ill health. Fifteen working days is a more reasonable minimum.

Amendment 6: Clause 27 other sanctions

Add

(10) 'a claimant shall be provided with at least fifteen days to provide a good reason for not complying with any requirement in this section.'

rationale

see amendment

Amendment 7: Clause 28 hardship payments

Line 35

Delete (2)(f) whether hardship payment are recoverable

rationale

The Department for Work and Pensions has confirmed that a hardship payment will be a fixed rate of 60 per cent of the daily amount by which the claimant's UC has been reduced by a sanction. This is a significant reduction in entitlement.

The additional condition of making the payment a recoverable loan is disproportionate. To qualify for a hardship payment a claimant has to demonstrate a need for a payment to meet the most basic and essential needs, in effect, accommodation, heating, food and hygiene needs. To make the payment a loan will only create longer term difficulties. A household with children where a sanction is applied will face prolonged financial difficulties and hardship. The Northern Ireland Executive has set a target to reduce severe child poverty and sub paragraph (2)(f) runs counter to this aim.

Amendment 8: Clause 45 claimant commitment for jobseeker's allowance

(ii) regulations shall prescribe circumstances to allow payment of a modified amount of benefit where only one member of a couple accepts a claimant commitment.

rationale

This ensures where only one member of a couple agrees to enter a claimant commitment for jobseekers allowance then some benefit is payable. Regulations could provide for example, that a single person rate is payable.

Amendment 9: clause 47 sanctions

rationale

This clause is designed to introduce the increased sanctions powers and the new hardship payments including paying such payments by loans. The government in Westminster has argued that claimants will be helped back into work through improved earnings disregards and a comprehensive Work Programme tailored to claimants needs. In return, claimants are expected to take additional responsibilities and the failure to do so will lead to greater sanctions. The improved earnings disregards will not be in place within jobseeker's allowance and the programmes to support claimants back to work are not as comprehensive as those available in Britain. Moreover, the earliest any new programmes will commence is October 2013. This clause applies the stick part of the new arrangements in advance of the introduction of Universal Credit without the carrot. It is therefore unfair and unreasonable.

Amendment 10: clause 50 claimant responsibilities for jobseeker's allowance

In 5(b) replace 3 years with 26 weeks

rationale

This maintains the current maximum length of sanction of 26 weeks as a sanction covering three years is disproportionate (see amendment 4).

Amendment 11: clause 50 claimant responsibilities for jobseeker's allowance

Page 36 line 26 add

(10) A claimant shall for any purpose of this part be provided with at least fifteen days to provide a good reason for not complying with any requirement in this section.

rationale

As per amendment 5 this provides a claimant with more time to offer an explanation to the Department and to avoid a sanction being applied.

Amendment 12: clause 52 – period of entitlement to contributory allowance

rationale

This would allow claimants entitled to ESA in youth to continue to be entitled to benefit.

People who have become severely disabled in youth should be entitled to a sustainable income to support the transition from dependent young person to independent adult without being affected by decisions about work, education and relationships at a vulnerable age.

Currently, people who are disabled from birth or early in life may claim contributory ESA in youth from age 16. This kind of support has been a feature of the social security system in different guises since 1975.

The availability of contributory ESA is also of particular importance to:

- young disabled people who have been temporarily in and out of care as it provides a secure, independent income;
- young disabled people who have built up savings to be used for an adapted car, disability equipment, deposit on a property or future care needs. In the absence of non means-tested support, using savings for basic daily living costs, will have long-term implications for the future expenditure on care needs when their carers (usually elderly parents) are no longer able to provide care and accommodation;
- young disabled people who may be vulnerable to forming unsuitable relationships, and exploitation, due to fears about losing an independent income;

The retention of ESA in youth provisions has a modest additional cost of £390,000 a year which could be met for example, within the Social Protection Fund.

Amendment 13: clause 52 – period of entitlement to contributory allowance

Amend subparagraph (b)

After allowance delete the rest of the sub paragraph and replace with the words ‘only days occurring after the coming into operation of this section are to be counted’.

rationale

This amendment provides that the removal of entitlement to contributory ESA for people in the work activity related group will not be applied retrospectively. This provides time for claimants already on benefit to prepare for the loss of entitlement including adjusting financial commitments etc and recognises that when originally claiming contributory ESA there was no limited period of entitlement attached to the benefit.

There will be a cost to such a provision but, this could be met through the Social Protection Fund and be part of any additional welfare protection fund which should be introduced to protect claimants from the impact of welfare reform. The extra costs will be for those claimants who cannot transfer to income related ESA due to having a partner working or savings over £16,000. This will be offset to an extent by savings made on tax credits for some claimants who would have lost ESA(C) earlier would also have seen an increase in WTC and/or CTC.

Amendment 14: clause 54 conditions relating to youth

Page 40 line 15 for clause 54 substitute the following:

54 In section 1 – 4 of Schedule 1 of the Welfare Reform Act (Northern Ireland) Act 2007 (employment and support allowance after subsection (3) insert

3A the third condition is that;

- (a) the claimant has limited capability for work-related activity; and
- (b) he was under 20 when the relevant period of limited capability for work began; and
- (c) he has had limited capability for work for at least 28 weeks.

rationale

To make provision for young people to be eligible for contributory ESA where they have not had a chance to build up national insurance contributions and are in the support group.

This allows contributory ESA in youth to remain at least for those in the support group. Given that people in the support group are to be exempt from the one-year limit on contributory ESA entitlement, there is good reason to maintain eligibility to ESA in youth for those in the support group.

Amendment 15: clause 55 claimant commitment for employment and support allowance

(7) Regulations shall prescribe circumstances to allow payment of a modified amount of benefit where only one member of a couple accepts a claimant commitment.

rationale

This ensures that where only one member of a couple agrees to enter a claimant commitment that some benefit is payable, Regulations could provide for example, that a single person rate is payable.

Amendment 16: clause 58 claimant responsibilities for employment and support allowance

Page 50 after line 8 add

(d) after paragraph 102A there is inserted

102B 'Regulations shall for any purpose of this part provide for at least ten days to provide a good reason for not complying with any requirement in this section'.

rationale

As part amendment 5 this provides a claimant with more time to provide an explanation to the Department and will help avoid claimants with health problems facing sanctions.

Amendment 17: clause 60 claimant commitment for Income Support

(7) Regulations shall prescribe circumstances to allow payment of a modified amount of benefit where only one member accepts a claimant commitment.

rationale

This ensures where only one member of a couple agrees to enter a claimant commitment for income support then some benefit is payable. Regulations could provide, for example, that a single person rate if payable.

Amendment 18: clause 61 entitlement to work: jobseeker's allowance

rationale

This clause created new requirements for a claimant to have an 'entitlement to work' for contributory JSA, contributory ESA, maternity allowance, statutory maternity, paternity and adoption pay.

Current immigration rules provide that people 'subject to immigration control' are excluded from income based JSA and income related ESA. These provisions will be extended to Universal Credit. The exclusion does not currently extend to contributory benefits where a person has paid his or her tax and national insurance contributions.

We can see no basis for creating this new provision. As a result, a person whose legal status may have changed and who is legitimately challenging the situation will be denied a contributory benefit despite lawfully working during the period of building up contributions. Moreover, under the old A8 work registration scheme it was possible to lose the 'right to reside' status almost overnight in some circumstances.

This clause should not be passed. The Department should be asked to provide likely numbers affected and cost savings. The figures (if available) will be very small though the impact on individuals will be significant.

Amendment 21: clause 69: determination of appropriate maximum

Line 15 delete clause 69

rationale

This is a significant clause which allows the Department to set the local housing allowance by reference to the lower of either the Consumer Price Index or bottom 30th percentile of private rented sector and to introduce the new public rented sector size related criteria into the calculation of HB for people of working age.

The calculation of the LHA by the lower rate of CPI or 30th percentile of private rented sector will have a considerable impact. The average increase in CPI since 1997 is around 2 per cent compared with a 4 per cent increase in 30th percentile rents in the private rented sector. At present, claimants on HB are expected to find accommodation in the cheapest 30 per cent of rents. Based on past evidence, the new arrangements will lead inexorably to HB claimants having to find accommodation in an even more restricted bottom end of the market or pay the difference in cost. This change needs to be considered as part of the wider cumulative impact of HB savings already implemented. This estimated savings for this £1.3 million in 2013/2014 rising to £7.92 million in 2014/2015.

In areas where demand for private rented sector accommodation is high, HB claimants will not be able to access accommodation.

This clause also introduces the new size related element of housing credit for people of working age living in public/rented sector housing. This regulation in Britain shows that this will lead to a reduction in maximum eligible housing benefits credit of 14 per cent where a claimant is deemed 'over-occupying' by one bedroom and a 25 per cent reduction where deemed 'over-occupying' by two bedrooms or more. Draft regulations in Britain suggest that there will be few exceptions to this rule. The provision is unlikely to apply to accommodation registered

As a result, the new proposed arrangements will affect significant numbers of households in Housing Executive and Housing Association accommodation. The Housing Executive stock includes 44.3 per cent of homes with three bedrooms or more which have three bedrooms or more. The Housing Executive and Housing Association movement has yet to come up with alternative proposals to manage the difficulties created by this provision.

Moreover, the significant proportion of 'single identity estates' contained within the Housing Executive stock will also make moving tenants to smaller accommodation even less straightforward. These proposals are likely to face legal challenges on a number of fronts. First, in Burnip v Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (SSWP) 2012 Trengrove v SSWP (2012) and Gorry v Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (2012) the Court of Appeal considered similar provisions which had been applied to HB in the private rented sector. The Court of Appeal held that the provision was indirectly discrimination which was covered by Article 14 of the ECHR and that HB was covered by Article 1 Protocol 1 of the Convention leave is being sought to appeal further to the Supreme Court.

In two of the cases, the applicants were severely disabled and required an extra bedroom for full time carers. This circumstance was resolved by an amendment to the HB regulations introduced in April 2011. The exemption in the size related criteria in the public sector covering the need for an extra bedroom for a full time carer has been included in draft regulations. However, in the third successful appeal (Gorry) the issue concerned two daughters aged 10 and 8 who both had disabilities which meant it was impractical for the children to share a room. The Department has not added this to the exemptions in either the private sector HB regulations or the draft proposed public sector size-related regulations. This omission is unlikely to survive a further legal challenge bearing in mind that discretionary housing payments were also available in the cases before the Court of Appeal.

A further challenge may also arise under the right to a home, family and private life under Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights in cases where an extra room is provided for legitimate family reasons during temporary absences or in circumstances where a family is prepared to move to accommodation of a reduced size and no such transfer is forthcoming the private rented sector provides less secure tenure and a reduction in housing credit is applied.

As a result, the Law Centre would recommend that either a delay in implementing this clause is made until firm and clear proposals for dealing with the issue are in place or a phased approach is applied with a penalty only applying to households over occupying accommodation by two bedrooms. As an additional alternative, therefore exemptions from the provisions should be provided in the regulations including for families with children under 10 years of age with disabilities where sharing a room is not appropriate, foster carers who are between fostering placements and other circumstances where an additional bedroom is retained for legitimate family purposes. It is clear that discretionary housing payments will not fill this gap. Moreover, it is clear that discretionary housing payments are not intended as anything other than a temporary solution to individual cases.

The savings anticipated from this provision is £15.51 million a year from 2013/2014 onwards.

Amendment 22: clause 95 – benefit cap

Page 66 after line 30 after subsection (4) insert new subsection

(4)(a) ‘The regulations under this section must not impose a benefit cap to the welfare benefits of claimants with entitlement to carer’s allowance or additional amounts within universal credit for claimants with regular and substantial caring responsibilities’.

rationale

This amendment would ensure that where a claimant or partner is providing full time care of at least 35 hours a week to a disabled person then the benefit cap would not apply. In practice, such carers save the state a considerable cost in not having to provide alternative care to that provided in the home. Applying the benefit cap which is designed to move people into work is likely to push a carer into giving up this role and the savings from the benefit cap may well be displaced by additional expenditure elsewhere.

Amendment 23 – clause 95 – benefit cap

(c) child benefit under the Social Security Contributions and Benefits (Northern Ireland) Act 1992.

(d) employment and support allowance under the Welfare Reform (NI) Act 2007 or an additional amount in universal credit based on having limited capacity for work or limited capability for work related activity because of their physical or mental condition.

rationale

These amendments ensure that the payments of child benefit to meet a child’s needs and ESA and the additional sum paid in universal credit to people with significant health problems can be used to meet their purpose. The needs of children and additional costs of having serious health problems should not be eroded through the benefit cap. In addition, those people recognised as having limited capability for work or limited capability for work related activity are unlikely to be able to enter employment in order to avoid the impact of a benefit cap.

Amendment 24. Clause 101: powers to require consideration of revision before appeal

P70 after line 8 insert

101A payments pending appeal

In Section 5(1) of the Social Security Administration Act (NI) 1992 (regulations about claims and payments) after paragraph (r) insert (s) for the making of a payment pending appeal.

Rationale

This amendment provides for payment pending appeal. This is necessary to enable claimants to financially survive while waiting for social security appeals, which are currently taking months to be heard. The motivation for this amendment is natural justice. A high number of appeals are decided in favour of appellants, and it is unjust and unfair for appellants and their families to be left without benefit while they are waiting for their appeals to be heard. In the case of appeals relating to housing costs, this could result in, at best, rent or mortgage arrears, and at worst, possession proceedings and homelessness. In the case of appeals relating to personal allowances for claimants or their children, this could result in severe hardship, and in the worst case scenarios, destitution, or children being taken into care. Under the current system, there is provision for payment of the basic level of employment and support allowance pending an appeal about work capability assessment. We believe this provision should be carried forward into universal credit and extended to appeals relating to other elements of universal credit.

Amendment 25: Clause 103 recovery of benefit payments.

P71 after line 30 insert

(8) For the purposes of this section, “entitlement” means the amount that would have been awarded to the claimant had the claim been correctly represented and all relevant material facts disclosed for the period to which the overpayment applies.

Rationale.

To apply to Universal Credit the rules on the recovery of overpayments that reflect those currently applying to most benefits namely that official errors by the Department that a claimant could not have known about are not recoverable and to provide for the offset of ‘underlying entitlement’ from overpayments.

The current rules on recoverability of overpayments that apply to income support, JSA, ESA, DLA, pension credit and other benefits is that overpayments are recovered where there has been a misrepresentation, or failure to disclose a material fact, by a claimant or any other person.

This is a fair and just test, which has been in place for many years. Its purpose is to allow recovery of an overpayment which arose as a result of a claimant’s actions or failures (whether innocent or fraudulent) but protects the claimant in cases where the overpayment arose because of official error by the Department. This balances the responsibilities of claimants to correctly notify their circumstances when claiming benefit, and the Department to correctly calculate and pay awards based on the information available to them.

Clause 103 of the Bill proposes to allow recovery in all cases, regardless of culpability. This alters the balance of responsibilities and justice unfairly in favour of the Department. It would mean, for example, that a claimant could be presented with a large bill for repayment amounting to many thousands of pounds, many years after an overpayment occurred, even though the overpayment was entirely due to the errors of the Department. This is unfair and unreasonable. The Department of Work and Pensions has recognised the justice of such a contract by indicating that it would provide for non recovery in cases of official error in a code of practice on recovery. We believe that it is essential that this provision is statutory, so that a wronged claimant has a right of appeal against recoverability to an independent tribunal. It should be noted that the Government has expressed its confidence that the introduction of universal credit will significantly reduce the scope for official error (see chapter 5 of the White Paper, Universal Credit: welfare that works Cm7957 November 2010). If this is the case, the administrative burden of retaining protection for the claimants unjustly prejudiced by official error overpayments should be greatly reduced.

The system of automatic recoverability (supplemented by a non statutory code of practice) being proposed by Clause 103 mirrors the system which applies to tax credits. This system has injustice and hardship, and has been condemned in reports by the Parliamentary Ombudsman and Select Committees of the House of Commons. It has also resulted in thousands of complaints to MPs, the Revenue Adjudicator and the Ombudsman.

The proposed amendment provides for the offset of underlying entitlement when calculating overpayments. Underlying entitlement means the entitlement that would have been paid to the claimant had a claim been correctly made at the time. For example, an overpayment may arise if a claimant had separated from their partner and the claim continued to be paid as a couple claim for several weeks after the date of separation. The claimant had not declared the change of circumstances immediately and had told their personal adviser that they were not aware that they needed to because they had hoped the separation was temporary. The claim is cancelled from the date of separation and the claimant must make a new claim. However, had he or she immediately declared the change, then the claim would have been reassessed as a single claim, so it would have given rise to the entitlement as a single claimant which could be offset against the overpayment as ‘underlying entitlement’.

This mirrors the approach taken in the housing benefit regulations which ensures that only the true amount of excess entitlement is recovered.

This provision is particularly needed in relation to universal credit because there is a requirement for the benefit to be claimed by with either a single claimant or by both members of a couple, which, as the case with tax credits, results in many notional overpayments when there is a change of status from single to joint claims, and vice versa. HMRC belatedly recognised the needs for the offset of underlying entitlement in such cases and has introduced non statutory provision for this from January 2010-. This Bill gives the opportunity of providing for offsetting on a statutory basis, ensuring that if applied fairly, openly and consistently.

Amendment 26: Schedule 1 Universal Credit: Supplementary regulation – making powers

P99 line 5

Delete subparagraph 7 work related requirements.

Schedule 1 subparagraph 7 allows for regulations to provide that claimants from the EU with a right to reside who fall into the no work related requirements, work focused interview requirement only and work preparation requirement only can instead be made subject to the all work related requirements. We would recommend that this clause be deleted from the Bill. The provision is likely to prove unlawful. Article 14 of the European Convention of Human Rights provides for freedom from discrimination. The right is not free standing and must be invoked alongside another substantive right in the convention. Article 1 of the Convention provides for a right to property. In Stec v UK (2005) the Grand Chamber of European Court of Human Rights held that social security benefits whether funded on a contributory or non contributory basis were covered by Article 1 of Protocol 1. The UK government has accepted this ruling in a number of cases concerning the status of social security benefits under Article 1 or Protocol 1. This leaves the Department having to provide an objective justification for treating EU national adversely. We can see no objective basis for such discrimination. It is also arguably contrary to age discrimination legislation as it will require EU claimants of pensionable age to meet work conditions requirements while making no such provision for British and Irish nationals. The Department for Work and Pensions has stated that “claimants from the European Union who are workers or jobseekers and are entitled to Universal Credit will always fall into the all work related requirements group (see paragraph 233 Explanatory Memorandum for the Social Security Advisory Committee Universal Credit Regulations 2012). In effect, this provision enables the Department to treat an EU national who has a right to reside to meet all work requirements which will entail normally looking for work 35 hours a week. The right to reside test will already exclude work seekers or new arrivals from other EU member states. Instead it will impact on people from the European Union who have worked from Northern Ireland for example, where the claimant:

- has earnings above the individual conditionality threshold
- has caring responsibilities for a severely disabled person
- is a lone parent with a child under 12 months old
- is a nominated foster parent or adopter of a child under 12 months old
- is pregnant and within 11 weeks of the baby being due or for the first 15 weeks after birth
- above state pension age

This provision proposes to do something contrary to European Law and the Human Rights Act 2000 and is therefore unlawful. As the Welfare Reform Bill is secondary legislation under the Human Rights Act the courts have powers to strike down the clause. As a matter of law and principle the clause should be deleted.

Universal Credit Case studies

Case Study 1 – Conditionality

Tom suffers from MS, which is reasonably controlled with medication, but sometimes it will flare up causing him pain and to become debilitated. He used to work in an office, but became unemployed and has been claiming Universal Credit for some time. He has been assessed under the Work Capability Assessment of ESA as having limited capability for work. He recently attended a work focused interview and was told that he must attend a two month computer course to improve his computer skills. He feels that this is inappropriate for him, as he already is fully skilled using computers.

The options available to him are either to attend the course (which he feels is inappropriate for his needs) or not to attend and face the prospect of a sanction being imposed on him. The sanction would be a low level sanction and he would continue to be sanctioned until he complies with the requirement. He can appeal the Department's decision to sanction him but he would continue to be sanctioned while waiting for the appeal (and mandatory revision process) to be resolved.

Context

Low level sanctions are applied where there is a failure to undertake a specific work search requirement, work preparation requirement or attend a compliance interview. The sanction will normally be loss of the standard personal allowance (or 50% of a joint couple allowance) until the requirement is met plus a further fixed period of 7 days for a first failure , 14 days for a second level failure within a year , and 28 days for a subsequent failure within a further year.

It is intended that hardship payments should become recoverable. They will only be paid during a sanction where a claimant is unable to meet immediate, basic and essential needs for accommodation, heating, food and hygiene. In addition, claimants must also have made every effort to access alternative sources of support and to cease to incur other expenditure. They will also have to reapply for hardship payments every month.

As currently, there will be no right of appeal to a tribunal against the work requirement direction to attend the course. Disputes will have to be addressed with the claimant's personal adviser or their manager. There will be a right of appeal against a Department decision to impose a sanction, including whether there was 'good reason' for not complying with a requirement, but claimants will have to apply for an internal revision first.

Case Study 2 - Monthly awards

Examples

Monthly assessments

Megan has a child two days before the end of her assessment period. The child allowance will be included in UC award for the whole month. As a result she gains considerably.

Ian's daughter leaves the family home 29 days into his assessment period. He will lose the child allowance for the whole month. If his daughter had departed one day later then Ian would have retained the full monthly allowance for her.

Susan moves into more expensive accommodation and is entitled to more housing costs just before the end of her assessment period. If she notifies the change immediately, she will receive the extra payment for the whole of the month. If she fails to notify the change until after the end of the assessment period (i.e a few days later), she will only receive the increased payment from the start of the following assessment period, unless she can establish that there were grounds for late notification.

Context

Universal Credit will be assessed on a monthly basis, with changes of circumstances normally taking effect from the first day of the period in which they occur. It means that claimants will have to wait up to a month for an award to be changed to reflect a change in circumstance, but also that any change is treated as occurring from the beginning of the month, regardless of when it actually occurred. This whole month approach will benefit claimants where the change increases entitlement, but lead to rough justice and losses for claimants whose entitlement reduces or ends.

It also opens up the prospect of claimants and advisers planning the most advantageous time to effect changes in order to be maximise entitlement. Where a change of circumstances is advantageous, it must be notified before the end of the assessment period in which it happens for it to be treated as occurring at the start of assessment period. If it is notified late, it will only take effect from the start of the assessment period in which it is notified, unless the claimant can establish grounds for late notification.

Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) – Committee Stage Evidence from the Low Incomes Tax Reform Group

1. Who we are

- 1.1 The Low Incomes Tax Reform Group (LITRG) is an initiative of the Chartered Institute of Taxation (CIOT) to give a voice to the unrepresented. Since 1998 LITRG has been working to improve the policy and processes of the tax, tax credits and associated welfare systems for the benefit of those on low incomes.
- 1.2 The CIOT is a charity and the leading professional body in the United Kingdom concerned solely with taxation. The CIOT's primary purpose is to promote education and study of the administration and practice of taxation. One of the key aims is to achieve a better, more efficient, tax system for all affected by it – taxpayers, advisers and the authorities.

2. General Comments

- 2.1. We are pleased to have the opportunity to submit evidence to the Committee about the provisions contained in the Welfare Reform Bill.
- 2.2. The Bill is very much a framework Bill that sets out the broad structure of Universal Credit (UC) with enabling powers but provides very little other detail. This makes it difficult to give detailed comments and it is therefore important that Committee members have available to them a full set of draft regulations to inform their deliberations.
- 2.3. We are generally supportive of many of the aims of UC such as administration under one Government department rather than two, a single withdrawal taper for earned income rather than many and one set of rules governing what were previously several different benefits. However, we are concerned that many of these positive aims will be lost if UC becomes complex in its rules and is not adequately resourced (when many of the proposals seem to rely on face to face intervention).
- 2.4. The proponents of UC refer to the fact that it will ensure that people are better off in work than on out of work benefits. However without taking into account things like passported benefits and travel to work costs, as well as acknowledging that some people will face higher marginal deduction rates under UC, we are not convinced that the reality will match the intent.
- 2.5. Our evidence is primarily concerned with the proposals in the Bill that impact on those who are self-employed. Based on our experience of the current tax credits system, we are also concerned about how the civil penalty provisions will impact on all claimants of UC.

3. Self-employment (Schedule 1, Para 4(4))

- 3.1. There are more than 4 million self-employed people in the UK, over 100,000 of whom are in Northern Ireland. The self-employed are a diverse body of people, ranging from budding entrepreneurs to those with little or no business acumen, and all sorts in between. Self-

- employment can also be an important option for people for whom traditional employment may not be suitable (eg for reasons of health or disability). Finally, it is a real alternative for those living in Northern Ireland who are finding employment opportunities scarce due to the current difficult economic climate. As a result, those figures are likely to continue to rise.
- 3.2. Self-employment can be precarious and carries a great deal of risk. It can also be a long time before it begins to generate a profit. Given the importance of self-employment in the economy, and for those where employment is not a realistic option, it is crucial that work incentives in the tax and benefits system encourage those who are self-employed at least as much as the employed worker.
- 3.3. There is also an argument that support from the State should be more generous for the self-employed, given the advantages enjoyed by the employed in return for their NI contributions – reduced rates where an employer contributes to their pension, holiday pay, protection during illness, and paid leave for maternity, paternity and adoption – none of which are available to the self-employed.
- 3.4. To do this effectively, it is imperative that welfare systems, like tax, should aim to reflect the economic reality of a business. It is right that as a business becomes more profitable, welfare support for the entrepreneur should diminish; equally, declining profits, trading losses and substantial investment in or expenditure on essential equipment can be a drag on the performance of a business and welfare provision for the entrepreneur should reflect that.
- 3.5. At present this is broadly achieved through the structure of working tax credit (WTC). As the basis of assessment of WTC is the tax year, and the measure of income is broadly the profit or loss for income tax self-assessment purposes, the tax credits award simulates how the business is doing financially. Relief for losses through tax credits operates in much the same way as for income tax, with adjustments to reflect the fact that tax credits are awarded jointly to couples, and to remove the facility for carrying losses back to earlier assessment periods that are closed for tax credits purposes. Crucially, as for income tax, loss relief is only granted where a business is ‘carried on upon a commercial basis with a view to the realisation of profit’¹ – thus manipulation and avoidance can be countered, and support directed towards those whose business activity is genuine and not simply a (possibly extended) hobby.
- 3.6. As the tax system recognises, and as is currently reflected in the WTC, periods of little or no profit, or of substantial investment in the wherewithal to carry on a business, are not confined to the early years. It is important to note that a business can experience difficulties at any time, not just when it is starting out. For example, a one-person business can easily dip into loss when the proprietor decides to take on a new employee, perhaps for the first time. A state that helps and encourages people into work should equally support new employers to provide that work. The current system recognises the economic reality of self-employment.
- 3.7. The 2010 White Paper² stated that the Government proposed a ‘minimum income floor (MIF)’ so that under UC the self-employed should be deemed to have earnings at least equal to the national minimum wage for the hours they work.
- 3.8. Schedule 1, para 4 (4) of the Bill allows this MIF to be implemented. The justification for this MIF was to deal with claimants (of which we are told there are some in the tax credits system) who under-declare their income, or are carrying on a hobby rather than trade or are not working the hours that they declare. That is a justification for targeting those who manipulate their accounts to maximise their UC claim or who are not honest about the hours they work, not for denying support to the majority of genuine cases who really need it.
- 3.9. The notional income rules in tax credits, the enabling provision for which is replicated in para 4(3)(a) of Schedule 1, already give protection against such abuse through under-declaring of income. Similarly, the tax credits legislation requires hours worked to be 'for payment or in expectation of payment' which ensures that only those who are genuinely self-employed receive support for the actual hours they are working.

1 Tax Credits (Definition and Calculation of Income) Regulations 2002, SI 2002/2006, reg 3(1) Step 4.

2 <http://www.dwp.gov.uk/docs/universal-credit-full-document.pdf>

- 3.10. Creating an additional power to impose an MIF adds nothing to the powers that already exist; it is otiose. We firmly believe that implementing the MIF for all self-employed claimants will mean that self-employment will no longer be a viable option for many. This includes those who cannot find any other form of employment or people with disabilities who may not be able to take on an employed job but would be able to work as self-employed.
- 3.11. We therefore recommend removal of Schedule 1, para 4(4). If the MIF is to be implemented it is crucial that those who are starting out in self-employment and those who find themselves hitting difficult times (for example through the loss of a client) are protected and not subject to the MIF.
- 3.12. Along with removal of the MIF, it is essential that any regulations enacted under the Bill also support those in self-employment by ensuring that the definitions of self-employment and income from self-employment are aligned to those in the tax system, that recognition is given for genuine business expenses and that genuine trading losses are fully taken into account.

4. Civil penalties – Clause 112

- 4.1. Clause 112 of the Bill introduces new clauses 109C and 109D to the Social Security Administration Act 1992. The clause seeks to implement a penalty for claimant error, with no parallel clause relating to official error even though in the current system claimant and official error are roughly equal.
- 4.2. The imposition of a civil penalty on claimants without any similar recognition of official error would create an unfair balance of responsibility on claimants, many of whom struggle to understand and meet their responsibilities due to language, literacy or sickness and disabilities. Claimants should not be subject to penalties for 'innocent' errors in addition to the recovery of the overpayment that arises from the error.
- 4.3. The Impact Assessment claims that the aim of introducing a civil penalty is to deter errors and place greater emphasis on personal responsibility for errors that could have reasonably been prevented. However, overpayments that arise from errors are likely to be higher than £50 and sufficient in themselves to encourage those genuinely negligent to take more care in the future. UC claimants will include some of the most vulnerable members of society who may make frequent numerical or clerical errors, or fail to understand and put right errors made by the Department, through ignorance and inability to understand or deal with complex matters rather than through deliberate non-compliance.
- 4.4. According to their 2011 annual report³, HMRC imposed only 1,221 penalties issued to tax credits claimants under similar legislation in 2010/11. These figures also include penalties for fraud – and 70% were in fact waived. These statistics suggest that HMRC have not in fact found these powers of widespread value in improving claimant responsibility.
- 4.5. We do not think the use of a £50 penalty is warranted in innocent/genuine error cases. The liability to repay substantial overpayments will itself be sufficiently penal and therefore the additional penalty is unnecessary and ineffective. Penalties should be reserved only for cases of deliberate error.

Macmillan Cancer Support

WE ARE MACMILLAN. CANCER SUPPORT

Macmillan Cancer Support response to DSD Committee Consultation on Welfare Bill

From: Heather Monteverde, Macmillan Cancer Support

Date: 19 October 2012

Key Points on the Bill:

Macmillan worked hard to reform the Bill as it went through Westminster. However, we are still concerned over two particular aspects for cancer patients:

- 1) We were pleased that the UK Government backed down on increasing the time people had to wait to receive PIP to 6 months – (although we are still concerned that 3 months can be a long time to wait before support would be available).
- 2) We were disappointed that the UK Government stuck to its' 12month time-limit on ESA before means testing – and would prefer this to be taken out of the Bill in Northern Ireland
- 2a) However, as the Bill was going through, we also worked with the UK Government over the last 3 years on the Harrington Review of ESA – and believe that if what the government say about the proposed new guidelines are true and implemented properly; then cancer patients should not be subjected to unnecessary face-to-face work assessments or deemed to be fit to work before they are properly ready – therefore greatly reducing the number of cancer patients effected by the impact of the 12month means test.

Work to be done:

Macmillan believes the UK Government have moved a long way since the beginning of this review process - and they have accepted that more cancer patients going through or just finished treatment, including those receiving radiotherapy and oral chemotherapy would be 'presumed' to be in the 'Support Group' of ESA than before.

We still await the actual UK Govt regulations and guidelines to how this is meant to work in practice - and when we have them we will want to work with DSD and the Health service in NI to ensure they are implemented properly on a day-to-day basis. The aim will be to ensure fewer cancer patients are asked to go for face-to-face assessments - and fewer cancer patients are placed in the 'Work related activity' ESA group.

Macmillan believes that Stormont Ministers and Members have shown real understanding and concern around the difficult issue of welfare reform and are well placed to make the best of a difficult situation for cancer patients (attached press release from DSD Minister Mr McCausland).

We urge MLAs:

- To ensure the Social Security Agency and Health Service in Northern Ireland are ready to implement the new system for cancer patients.
- To work with Macmillan to train health & social care, & advice staff in Northern Ireland, including decision makers and ATOS staff.
- To ensure that cancer patients have access to Financial Information and Benefits Advice to help them navigate the new complicated welfare system at such a vulnerable time in their life

Latest Northern Ireland Executive Position on ESA:

On 20 September 2012 – a press release from DSD Minister Nelson McCausland welcomed the UK Government rule change to support cancer patients:

“New proposals, published by the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) in Great Britain, will mean that hundreds more people in Northern Ireland, and across the UK, who are awaiting, receiving, or recovering from any form of chemotherapy or radiotherapy for cancer will be placed in the Support Group for Employment and Support Allowance (ESA). Here they will get the financial support they need while unable to work.

Minister McCausland said: “This is a very welcome step and it is one that I have been calling for, for some time.

“I am pleased to see that our efforts have been well received, that the DWP has listened to our concerns, and that people suffering from cancer will now be properly supported by our benefit system.”

The simpler process will mean that all types of cancer treatment are seen as having the potential to be equally as debilitating, rather than the current rules which distinguish between different forms of treatment.

This means more people should qualify for the ESA Support Group, where before they may have been placed in the Work Related Activity Group (WRAG) and expected to make efforts to return to work.

Other changes being made to support cancer sufferers include:

- Removing the condition that treatment must be continuous for six months;
- Acceptance that it is the impact of the treatment, not the duration, which should be considered; and,
- The development of a new ‘light touch’ evidence gathering process which will see claimants with cancer being directed to a dedicated part of the ESA50 form, negating the requirement to complete the whole questionnaire.

Nelson McCausland added:

“I have no doubt that people who can work should work, but similarly, I believe that those who are unable to work, or who are unable to carry out work-related activity because of their ill-health should not be forced to do so; nor should they be in fear of being forced to do so.

“These proposals will make a difficult time a little easier for those who are having treatment for cancer.”

Illegality of measures.

The Welfare Reform Act has at its core an unlawful element.

It is without legality in respect of the following :

The Human Rights Act Article 8. Right to privacy.

In seeking from anyone requiring poor relief the Government are wishing to make legal the need and requirement for an individual to disclose their medical condition as determined by the Medical Practitioner responsible for their treatment.

It is an A priori fact that the information between any Doctor and the Patient shall remain Confidential.

It is a fundamental practice in operation since the Hippocratic Oath was developed and under which ALL medical practice is administered.

The General Medical Council rules of Medical Confidentiality are the Laws under which the practice of Medicine and treatment is practiced in these islands and beyond.

It would not be possible for a system to work without this basis of privacy being in place for everyone.

It cannot be set aside for pecuniary reasons.

I believe this to be a fundamental requirement essential in the proper delivery of treatment and anything not related or causal in treatment to be in breach of Human Rights.

There will be a point when this reality is properly asserted and to undermine treatment is itself of great harm until a fair system is in place.

Yours faithfully

Welfare Reform Bill

Bill Number: Bill 13/11-15

Dear Members of the Committee

In 2008 I was diagnosed with Chronic Lymphocytic Leukaemia (an incurable blood cancer). My condition is progressive and incurable. Last year I underwent a course of chemotherapy. The treatment is palliative and I will require further chemotherapy at some stage.

In 2009 I was diagnosed with Transitional Cell Carcinoma of the renal pelvis and underwent a nephroureterectomy (removal of right kidney, ureter and excision of bladder cuff).

I accepted medical retirement in 2011 after many years working in the media and in local government. I receive DLA and ESA. In addition to a small occupational pension. As a person living with cancer and struggling financially as well as emotionally, due to the condition, I would like to ask the Committee to consider how the proposed adoption of certain clauses of the Welfare Reform Bill will affect those of us facing the daily challenge of living with this devastating illness.

Personal Independence Payment (Part 4)

Disability Living Allowance has been a huge part of increasing equality for disabled people.

It has been our means of working around the problems of a disabling world, our means of, at least partially leveling the playing field and doing it ourselves - not relying on charities or government organisations to determine exactly what we need in the way of transport or help at home. I believe that the introduction of Personal Independence Payments threaten this for a great number of people.

People with cancer, and the parents of children with cancer, are very worried about how the Welfare Reform Bill will affect them. Living with cancer is expensive and many people rely on benefits to make ends meet. I hope you will ensure that your reform of the welfare system works for people with cancer, so that cancer patients receive the support they need when they need it the most.

Clause 77 - Daily Living Component

I am concerned about the levels at which the rates for the daily living components will be set; many cancer patients will lose out because of the reduction from three to two rates.

If simply the lower rate of care is removed it will be cancer patients who need help for part of the day and help with cooking who are most likely to lose out. In these circumstances financial support provided by the lower care rate is often used to retain independence by, for example, paying for online deliveries, cleaners, pre-prepared vegetables, microwaves etc.

Removing the lower rate care component would have a particular impact on, for example, breast cancer patients who have had the lymph nodes removed and as a result experience restricted arm movement or cancer patients who continue to experience severe fatigue and have difficulty doing many tasks, such as many patients with cancer of the head and neck. As well as the direct financial support provided by DLA, removing lower rate care will also mean that many cancer patient will lose related passported benefits.

As a result of treatment cancer patients often experience a sudden onset of daily living and/or mobility needs that can result in significant additional costs that are often long-term.

Thousands of cancer patients rely on DLA to help meet these costs at a time when their income has often decreased significantly. Without this support we fear that many cancer patients will be unable to meet the additional costs of living with their condition, which will exacerbate existing issues that contribute to cancer poverty.

Currently, there are two million people living with and beyond cancer in UK and this figure is rising by three per cent each year. As cancer survival rates continue to improve, people diagnosed with cancer will increasingly join people with other long term conditions in living with ongoing support needs. Some people living with and beyond cancer have serious physical, emotional, social problems that need addressing. As a result of these reforms it seems inevitable that thousands of cancer patients who are living with additional costs as a result of their conditions will be left without the crucial financial support that is currently offered by DLA.

Gateway Benefits

I wish to express my unease and deep concerns over people losing passported benefits as a result of UK wide changes in the wake of this legislation. DLA is a Gateway Benefit. For example, if you are in receipt of the middle or higher rate Care Component of DLA, then a partner, friend or family member who is unable to work full time because of their caring responsibilities may be able to claim Carer's Allowance. Receiving some rates of DLA can mean VAT exemption on some essential equipment. If you are in receipt of the higher rate Mobility Component of DLA, you are eligible for a Blue Badge. There is a very real danger that many disabled people will lose out on the important gateway aspects of DLA which help to make their difficult lives more bearable.

Fluctuating conditions

I believe it is crucial to ensure that those carrying out the PIP assessment consider how a person's condition fluctuates over the course of a day. We know that due to severe fatigue that can result from cancer treatment many cancer patients' ability to carry out everyday tasks will change dramatically over the course of a day. For instance, a cancer patient who is able to prepare a meal in the morning may be unable to prepare a meal in the evening.

With regards to applicants who are awaiting treatment the technical briefing note states that the descriptor choice will be based on the "likely continuing impact of the health condition or impairment as if any treatment or further intervention has not occurred". Although I understand the difficulties in predicting the likely impact of treatment this approach could be particularly problematic for cancer patients, who often experience significant debilitation as a result of their treatment. Unless their situation is reviewed following the start of treatment it is likely that their real needs will not be captured accurately and they may not receive the rate of PIP that they are entitled to.

Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) Chapter 2

I was dismayed at the Government's decision to overturn a Lords' amendment that would protect sick and disabled people including cancer patients from losing a vital out of work benefit – Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) - after 12 months. Ciarán Devane, Chief Executive of Macmillan Cancer Support, said:

"We are bitterly disappointed on behalf of the thousands of cancer patients that the Government has today failed to protect. They will now be forced to bear the brunt of the economic crisis. "Despite mass opposition from Lords, the public, their own supporters and the whole cancer community, the Government has pushed through an unfair proposal which means thousands of cancer patients – still recovering from their illness and therefore too sick to work - will see their income drop by up to £94 a week from April."

I urge the Committee to give close consideration to the additional hardship the imposition of such a time limit will have on people in Northern Ireland who live with cancer. A diagnosis of Cancer is devastating emotionally, physically and financially. I implore the Committee to work with bodies like Macmillan Cancer Support and pay attention to its concerns on welfare reform.

Yours faithfully

Member of the Public 3

Dear Alex Maskey

This is my submission to your committee over the Welfare Reform Bill.

It regards personal independence payment PIP

Currently 182,000 people are in receipt of DLA. The majority use this money to live on and a significant number have had to fight to get their allowance by going through the appeal process of tribunals right up to the Social Security Commissioner.

Let me give you two examples of the stain people are put through the present system. This will be no different under PIP

A friend had an incurable brain tumor which affected her mobility and mentally and affected her sensory abilities to she had to be looked after at all times. She was up for review of her DLA and was turned down. She came to me and I told her she must appeal the decision. She was very depressed because of this. She went with her husband to the appeal tribunal and presented her situation to them. The chairman of the tribunal stopped the proceedings and told her she shouldn't have had to come before him and apologized and her benefit was reinstated. A year later she died.

Another example is a friend who has various disabilities has only just applied for DLA as the felt they didn't need it.

There are many people in the two above situations.

Two specific points I want to make about PIP

Firstly those in receipt of indefinite DLA awards should automatically be entitled to PIP They also should not be subject to a face to face assessment as many have been through the appeal process right through to the Social Security Commissioner and the Social Security Agency holds all the evidence about these people already, These claimants have already suffered enough without have to fight for PIP the same way they have had to to get DLA.

Finally the Equality Commission should have a role in monitoring the implementation and the effectiveness of PIP

Yours sincerely

Andrew Flavelle

Welfare Reform Bill – Committee for Social Development call for evidence

Mencap in Northern Ireland's submission

1.0 About Mencap in Northern Ireland

- 1.1 Mencap is the voice of learning disability. Everything we do is about valuing and supporting people with a learning disability, and their families and carers across Northern Ireland, England and Wales.
- 1.2 Mencap has over 60 year's experience of working alongside and representing the views and interests of people with a learning disability and their families. In Northern Ireland we deliver a range of service, support a membership network of local groups and clubs and campaign for equal opportunities and chances for people with a learning disability.
- 1.3 Through our employment and training services we provide help to young people and adults with a learning disability to prepare for, find and keep job. We help individuals with a learning disability to explore their options, provide skills training in the workplace and work to remove the barriers to work for each person.
- 1.4 We also provide independent advice and information through our helpline and community based advisor services, ensuring that people with a learning disability and families have the information about their rights and entitlements and can access the services they need.

2.0 About Learning Disability

- 2.1 A learning disability is a reduced intellectual ability and difficulty with everyday activities - for example household tasks, socialising or managing money - which affects someone for their whole life.
- 2.2 People with a learning disability tend to take longer to learn and may need support to understand complex information, develop new skills, and interact with other people. The level of support someone needs depends on individual factors, including the severity of their learning disability.

3.0 Welfare Reform Bill – Introduction

- 3.1 The particular set of circumstances in Northern Ireland in relation to welfare reform, we believe, needs to be considered when implementing any change to the benefits system. This includes the higher levels of poverty and disability, the requirements on public bodies outlined in Section 75 and the limited availability of community based services to support independent living.
- 3.2 Mencap draws attention to the proportion of the population claiming DLA, with double the amount of DLA claimants in Northern Ireland compared to the rest of the UK: over 180,000 claimants in 2010.¹ A report by The Institute of Fiscal Studies estimated that Northern Ireland, because it has a large population of households with children and higher levels of disabilities, will lose more income than any other region in the UK outside of London. Northern Ireland is likely to be disproportionately affected from the new restricted test for Personal Independence Payment than the announced budget in June 2010. We believe that this should be reflected in the EQIA and mitigating measures identified to minimise adverse impacts.

- 3.3 The completed Equality Impact Assessment (EQIA)² relating to the new Welfare Reform Bill was published by DSD in April 2012. The EQIA does not give sufficient information to adequately monitor the impact on disabled people and family carers. The report states that “the Analytical Services Unit will continue to work with DWP to develop a Policy Simulation Model which will better equip them to analyse the impact of policies across various section 75 groups”. This work is still to be published.

4.0 Claimant commitments and sanctions

Mencap believes that the Welfare Reform proposals must take account of the distinct impacts of learning disability on the individual concerned including significant difficulties with understanding, learning and communication. Many people with a learning disability do not have full control over their own lives and rely on others for assistance with everyday tasks.

Conditions placed on claimants should be reasonable and claimants with a learning disability will need extra support to help them understand and make decisions about the process they are involved in and what they have to do to meet any requirements.

Account should also be taken of the impact of learning disability on family carers who may wish to find and stay in employment but are unable to do so because of the lack of alternative care or support for their loved one.

Amendment allowing for consideration of impact of learning disability on claimant commitments and sanctions.

Safeguards to be put in place to protect people with a learning disability who do not understand what is being asked of them or have communication difficulties and who do not get the support they need.

5.0 Welfare Reform Bill – Part 1: Universal Credit

- 5.1 Mencap welcomes the stated principle behind the Universal Credit: to simplify the benefits system and make work pay. However, we are concerned about the potential loss of income for disabled people through the merger in Universal Credit of Tax Credits and disability premiums. In particular, there are two key areas of concern; the severe disability premium and children’s additions.

5.2 Calculation of Awards: Part 1, Chapter 1, Section 8

Under Universal Credit, the support currently offered by tax credits will be achieved through disregards which will allow certain groups to earn higher sums of money before their benefit starts to be withdrawn, thus raising the household income of these groups in a similar manner to tax credits. Disregards are to be established in regulations, but currently no specific mention is made of disability.³

2 http://www.dsdni.gov.uk/index/publications/other_reports/equality.htm

3 Disability Benefits Consortium: key amendments to the Welfare Reform Bill 2011(April 2011)

There needs to be more about couple entitlement to Universal Credit. Currently, couples in which both partners have an impairment can both qualify for the disability element of working tax credit. However, as Universal Credit is based on households not individuals, disabled couples will lose some of this additional support unless provision is made under the disability disregard for a further extension to the disregard for each additional disabled adult living within a household.

Mencap would ask the committee to consider amendments which would ensure that disabled couples do not lose out on additional support.

Amendment allowing for a disability disregard

Part 1, Chapter 1, Clause 8, line 23, insert:

‘(5) Regulations made under this paragraph must specify that a particular amount of income be disregarded when calculating entitlement to universal credit, including in the following circumstances: a) where the claimant is disabled; b) where the claimant is a lone parent c) where the claimant is the second earner in the couple.’

‘(6) Where the claimant’s eligibility for an amount of income to be disregarded, in accordance with subsection (6), is based on two or more sets of circumstances, the amount specified for each of these sets of circumstances shall be added together to calculate the total amount to be disregarded.’

5.3 Other particular needs or circumstances: Part 1, Chapter 1, Section 12

5.31 Children’s Additions

Currently, disabled children receiving any rate of DLA are entitled to the disability element of child tax credit, worth around £54 a week. Those children on high rate DLA also receive the severe disability element of child tax credit in addition. This is worth an additional £22.

Under Universal Credit these disability elements will be replaced with a disability ‘addition’ and ‘higher addition’ within the Universal Credit. Children who are in receipt of high rate DLA will continue to get a similar level of benefit. However, those children who were receiving the disability element (i.e. those on low or middle rate care) will now receive the disability addition which will be worth £27 instead of the current £54.

Mencap would ask the committee to consider amendments that would retain the current level of children’s addition for those receiving low or middle rate care component of DLA. We have suggested an amendment below.

Amendment to maintain current level of children’s additions

Part 1, Chapter 1, Clause 10, line 36, insert:

“Such additional amount to be paid at either a higher rate, or a lower rate, which shall be no less than two-thirds of the higher rate as may be prescribed”

5.32 The Severe Disability Premium (SDP)

Currently, disabled people on means tested benefits can receive premiums which help meet some of the extra costs they face. Of particular importance is the Severe Disability Premium. This is currently worth £53.65 a week for a single person and aims to meet the extra costs experienced by a disabled person living alone.

Under the Welfare Reform Bill, there is no intention to continue this payment under Universal Credit. Instead, under Universal Credit, extra support for disabled adults (or ‘additions’) will be based on disregards and eligibility for the Employment and Support allowance (ESA). In some instances this will lead to some people being less well off under the Universal Credit.

Mencap would ask the committee to consider amendments which would retain the current level of severe disability premium. We have suggested an amendment below.

Amendment aiming to replicate existing premiums

Part 1, Chapter 1, Clause 12, line 41, insert:

‘(d) The fact that a claimant is a disabled or severely disabled person.’

6.0 Welfare Reform Bill – Part 2: Working Age Benefits

6.1 Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) was introduced in 2008 to replace Incapacity Benefits, Income Support (because of a disability) and Severe Disability Allowance. Those eligible for ESA are put into either the ESA work-related-activity group (for those who need support to prepare to move towards work - WRAG) or the ESA support group (for those whose disability prevents them from working).

6.2 The Bill proposes a time limit for contributory Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) to a maximum period of 365 days for those in the work-related activity group. Contributory ESA applies to those people who have paid sufficient tax and National Insurance and are deemed to be able to carry out some work related activity to move towards work.

6.3 We believe that it is unfair and unjustified to time-limit benefits for people with a learning disability who have paid into the system, and who have a right to expect that they will be supported as they move towards work. Ultimately, we would ask the committee to remove time limits from the bill. We are suggesting, however, an amendment to the legislation should time limits be introduced.

Amendment to remove provisions for time limiting contributory ESA

Part 2, Chapter 2, Clause 52, line 10, leave out ‘365’ and insert:

‘a prescribed number of days, which must be at least 730,’

6.4 The time limiting of Contributory ESA for those in the Work Related Activity Group will have significant impact, particularly because the time limiting is effective straight away. So if you are in this group and have already received this benefit for 365 days then you will lose this benefit and will have to apply for other benefits. There is little evidence to show what support has been given to those on the WRAG group in the time period, the reasonable adjustments made due to a person’s disability and how effective support has been in people gaining and retaining employment. Evidence needs to be provided to demonstrate that effective support will be available for those people in the WRAG group.

Mencap would ask the committee to consider an amendment to ensure that the 365 days of the time limit for the WRAG group is continuous. We have suggested an amendment below.

Amendment to ensure that the days are continuous

Part 2, Chapter 2, Clause 52, Line 24 leave out ‘to be counted’ and insert ‘not to be counted’

6.5 The Bill also provides for a time limit for contributory ESA for those with a youth entitlement and further abolishes the youth condition in contributory ESA completely. The youth entitlement allows claimants under the age of 20 (or 25 in some circumstances) to qualify for contributory ESA without having met the usual national insurance contribution conditions – for example those people who have been unable to pay contributions from childhood. This supports those people with severe and lifelong disabilities, such as those remaining in education beyond 16 years.

Mencap would ask the committee to consider an amendment which would continue Youth entitlement to ESA. We have suggested an amendment below.

Amendment(s) to continue Youth entitlement to ESA

Part 2, Chapter 2, Clause 52, line 24, after “2007” insert “, and subject to section 52,”

Part2, Chapter 2, clause 54, line 15, leave out clause 54 and insert the following new clause:

“Condition relating to youth

In paragraph 4 of Schedule 1 to the Welfare Reform Act 2007 (condition relating to youth), after sub-paragraph (1)(d) insert-

“(e) After the assessment phase has ended, the claimant has limited capacity for work-related activity.””

7.0 Welfare Reform Bill – Part 3: Other Benefit Changes

7.1 New Size criteria

7.11 The proposed new size criteria in the social housing sector will apply local housing allowance rules for the private rented sector to social housing. In effect, this, in many cases, will reduce the number of bedrooms that an individual is entitled to. As a result, some tenants will receive a reduced amount of Housing Benefit or be forced to move accommodation.

7.12 The reasoning behind this policy is to contain growing housing benefit expenditure and make better use of available social housing. There is a shortage in suitably sized properties available to people who would, under the new rules, be deemed to be under-occupying their home. In addition, many homes may have been adapted to meet individual need, meaning that – should the individual have to move – new adaptations would have to be paid for. Additionally, there are issues for people with a learning disability who may access their package of support or have built up support networks within the area in which they live which could not be maintained if they were forced to move out of the area.

7.13 The proposals do not take into account other factors relating to learning disability or the importance of living in a particular area, for example, being close to family or friends that provide support, accessing community services, transport and being a part of the community. The limited provision of accessible housing options may already significantly reduce the choice a person with a learning disability has over where to live. By implementing the housing criteria as it currently stands people with a learning disability may not have the opportunity to live independently in their own community.

7.14 Mencap would ask the committee to consider an amendment to exclude DLA/PIP claimants from the new size criteria. We would also ask the committee to consider amendments which ensure that in the case of someone with a disability or families with a child with a disability where an adaptation is in place, additional space is needed for treatment or equipment or services are only available in a specific area that they will not be required to move and will not have their benefit reduced (clauses 11 and 69).

8.0 Welfare Reform Bill – Part 4: Personal Independence Payment

- 8.1 The Bill provides for the introduction of a new Personal Independence Payment (PIP) to replace Disability Living Allowance. PIP will continue to be a non-means tested, extra costs benefit but everyone receiving it will have to undergo a new assessment (including people currently receiving DLA).
- 8.2 When reform was first announced the ambition was a 20% saving of the DLA expenditure with a commitment to focus resources on “those with the greatest need”. In Northern Ireland this would mean that 24,000 people could potentially lose this benefit under PIP. We believe that the UK Government has not fully considered the huge and detrimental impact that the proposed changes will have on the lives of the UK’s most vulnerable individuals and their families.
- 8.3 Mencap conducted a survey entitled ‘DLA: why it matters’ in 2010 to explore the usage of DLA by people with a learning Disability. The key findings are as follows:
- 66% of respondents were in receipt of social services in addition to their DLA.
 - 84% of people with a learning disability said that they spent their DLA on paying for care and support, including help around the home and support with leisure activities and transport needs. One respondent said, “I use my DLA to pay for taxis. I do not like using buses. I have been teased on buses.”
 - 61% of respondents commented that they spent more money on ‘everyday’ things as a result of their learning disability.
 - 71% of respondents commented that DLA made a difference to their lives. One respondent said, ‘Without DLA allowance my daughter would become very isolated she would lose a lot of her independence.’
- 8.4 The survey’s findings highlight the central role DLA plays in the lives of people with a learning disability, helping them to afford the support they need to live an independent and fulfilling life. Mencap believes access to all rates of DLA must be protected otherwise people with a learning disability will be left socially and financially vulnerable and isolated.
- 8.5 It will introduce face-to-face assessment for most PIP claimants, stricter criteria and a shorter timeframe for the claiming process. The changes proposed to the assessment process will put people with a learning disability and their families under considerable stress and increase their reliance on independent advice providers and organisations that provide support.
- 8.6 The new process will also require disabled people to provide independent medical evidence. The majority of this evidence will come via a medical professional. With GP appointments estimated to cost the NHS up to £60 per visit⁴, therefore based on this, the PIP reassessment process of the current 188,600 DLA claimants could cost the health service in NI up to £11 million.
- 8.7 The aim of the reforms is to ‘reduce dependency and promote work.’ It is estimated, however, that less than 10% of people with a learning disability are in paid employment due to the difficult barriers that they face when trying to find work. The proposed changes to welfare do not address any of these barriers and instead may lead to some disabled people in work being forced to give up their jobs because they can no longer afford support without DLA. In a survey by the Disability Alliance in 2011⁵, 56% of disabled people said they would have to stop or reduce work if they lost DLA. This could potentially result in 1200⁶ disabled people in Northern Ireland becoming unemployed which would lead to a loss of £6 million, based on the average NI salary⁷, in income tax and national insurance to the treasury.

4 Royal College of Nursing based on 2009 NAO statistics, see http://www.rcn.org.uk/__data/assets/pdf_file/0008/317780/003598.pdf

5 http://www.disabilityalliance.org/r68.doc#_Toc285815634

6 Figure of 1200 based on calculating that if 24,000 DLA claimants do not receive PIP and using the government figure that 9% of claimants are in paid employment, this equals 2,178. Using the Disability Alliance figure of 56% potentially leaving employment this equals 1,219.

- 8.8 Some of our other main concerns are that “Life-time” or “indefinite” awards will no longer be available, even for those with progressive or life-long conditions. Also, under PIP, families will lose the right to retain Motability vehicles if they spend 28 days or more as a hospital in-patient in any 365 day period. This fails to recognise just how families depend on these vehicles, often as the only vehicle in the family, and just how often many disabled people with complex needs have to stay in hospital. Losing their Motability vehicle could be devastating for families.
- 8.9 As the responsibility will be on the individual, once they receive correspondence from Social Security Agency, to make a claim to PIP there may be implications for people with learning and communication disabilities. If people cannot read or have difficulties in reading, or if they do not realise that they have been asked to apply for PIP they may not realise the impact of not engaging in the process. The level of support needed for people with a learning disability must be recognised and resourced by SSA.
- 8.10 One of our main concerns is the changes to entitlement for enhanced rate mobility component. Currently under DLA an individual can be awarded high rate of mobility component if they: have severe mental impairment, are in receipt of high care component or have significant challenging behaviour. Under PIP this criteria, for receiving high rate mobility component, will be removed. Several people with a learning disability, that Mencap supports, meet this criteria under DLA and are currently in receipt of high rate mobility. The removal of this award will have a huge financial impact for the individual, their family and carer. Having funding for a mobility car or to pay for transport is a life line and the removal of this will have a devastating effect on their lives.
- 8.11 There was no consideration given to the knock-on impact on family carers’ finances or the likely increase in caring responsibilities in the existing impact assessments. Carers currently depend on the person they look after receiving DLA to be eligible for receipt of Carers Allowance. Therefore the loss of PIP/DLA will directly impact on carers’ income.
- 8.12 The majority of changes to Personal Independence Payment will be in the regulations and we would like to use this opportunity to highlight possible measures to mitigate the negative impact of the changes on people with a learning disability:
- Ensure that the descriptors and thresholds are amended to reflect a true understanding of learning disability and the context in which people with a learning disability live. The list of daily activities must be located in the context and environmental (both physical and attitudinal) in which the individual with a learning disability lives.
 - The customer journey must be based on a rights based approach and ensure that people are given additional information and support that they require to complete the process including reasonable adjustment and where necessary advocacy and advice from externally organisations.
 - Retain the current time limit of 2 years for reclaiming that exists with DLA, rather than the suggested 1 year for PIP
 - Remove the 28 day restriction in relation to hospital inpatient and Motability Scheme.
 - Review the effectiveness of face-to-face assessments when sufficient written evidence exists and the additional costs incurred when sourcing additional medical evidence.
 - Publish policy simulation modelling results and clearly state mitigating actions where the impact on people with a disability and carers is required.

7 NI Annual Survey of hours and earnings 2011, DFP

- 8.13 Mencap would ask the committee to put in place protections for those people who may not meet the criteria for PIP and their carers in relation to poverty and social exclusion. We would also ask the committee to consider an amendment to ensure a review after the first year of PIP being introduced into Northern Ireland and a review every two years after that.

Amendment to ensure yearly review of PIP

Part 4, Clause 88, line 25, remove line 25 to 27, and insert:

“(a) Within the 1 year beginning with the date on which the first regulations under that section come into operation

9.0 Final comments:

- 9.1 We would like to thank the committee for the opportunity to present written evidence on the Welfare Reform Bill and would welcome an opportunity to discuss any of the points or suggested amendments in more detail.

Some more information re: Disability Disregard from the Disability Benefits Consortium briefing on the Bill

Calculation of awards (support for disabled people in work): Part 1, Chapter 1, Section 8

Under Universal Credit, the support currently offered by tax credits will be achieved through disregards which will allow certain groups to earn higher sums of money before their benefit starts to be withdrawn, thus raising the household income of these groups in a similar manner to tax credits. Disregards are to be established in regulations, but currently no specific mention is made of disability.

More clarity is also needed about couple entitlement to Universal Credit. Currently, couples in which both partners have an impairment can both qualify for the disability element of working tax credit. However, as Universal Credit is based on households not individuals, disabled couples will lose some of this additional support unless provision is made under the disability disregard for a further extension to the disregard for each additional disabled adult living within a household.

Welfare Reform Bill

National Deaf Children's Society (NDCS) briefing: Committee for Social Development, Northern Ireland Assembly

Date: 19/10/12

About NDCS

NDCS is the national charity dedicated to creating a world without barriers for deaf children and young people. We represent the interests and campaign for the rights of all deaf children and young people from birth until they reach independence. NDCS believes that the family is the most important influence on a deaf child's development. We support the deaf child through the family as well as directly supporting deaf children and young people. NDCS estimates that there are approximately 1,400 deaf children and young people in Northern Ireland.

1.1/ Design of PIP for young people (16-24)

NDCS believes that there is a valid case for the design of PIP to be different for 16-24 year olds. We support the view of others including the Every Disabled Child Matters Campaign and Clic Sargent, that disabled young people aged 16-24 are a distinct group with specific and unique needs. This must be recognised in the benefits system if PIP is to successfully meet their needs.

1.2/ The assessment process and young people (16-24)

We are concerned about how the proposed PIP assessment process will work for this age group. Face-to-face assessments for benefit can be very stressful and are likely to harm the self esteem of many young deaf people. It is unrealistic to expect most deaf young people under 18 to present accurate information on the impact of their disability to an unfamiliar professional in a single face-to-face meeting. NDCS Family Officers report that they and parents regularly find inaccuracies in questionnaires which have been completed by young deaf people with a professional who either has limited knowledge of the young person themselves, or of deafness, or both. We know that 40% of deaf young people will already experience mental health problems. Subjecting this vulnerable group to a stressful assessment process will exacerbate this.

1.3/ Recommendations for PIP

For PIP assessment to be easily accessible for deaf young people the assessment questions must be tailored to their needs, there is also a need for assessors' to be given deaf awareness training. If these conditions are not met deaf young people could be faced with considerable additional stress at a key transitional time in their lives. There would also be serious question marks over the accuracy of any information attained through such assessments. Such requirements should be included in the regulations as a result of welfare reform.

NDCS would call for the NI Executive to ensure that assessment for PIP is adapted to reflect the additional support and costs disabled Northern Irish 16-25 year olds need during transition.

2.1/ Changes to disability additions

Currently, families with deaf children, who receive Disability Living Allowance (DLA) for the child, are entitled to a top up of their benefits. This 'addition' is currently worth £53.62 per week. Families with a child in receipt of the high rate care component of DLA also receive a 'top up addition' worth £21 per week.

Proposals under the Universal Credit will see lower benefit 'additions' halved. The majority of deaf children, who receive DLA (but not at the higher rate) will see their addition reduced to £26.75 per week. This could cost a vulnerable family with a profoundly deaf child nearly £1,400 per year.

Deaf children do not generally qualify for higher rate of the care component of DLA. This is not because deafness is not a serious disability, but rather they often don't have significant night time care needs. Deaf children have significant care needs at other times and their families face many and varied related costs. Parents also sometimes have to give up work to care for their child, as highlighted by what parents have told us below.

What parents have told us-

A mother with two deaf children told NDCS that accessing sign language classes alone for her family incurred huge cost - £7,500. This was accompanied by over 30,000 miles worth of diesel in order to travel to these classes, as the family live in rural area – that would cost over £3,000 today*. But without this the parents would not be able to communicate with their sons, and their hearing daughter would not be able to communicate with her brothers.

Sarah, mother to Will, a profoundly deaf 12 year old says,

Over the years, by the far the biggest financial cost to us has been lost earnings. I had to pretty much give up work for three or four years when Will was very young because we had so many home visits and therapy and hospital appointments to attend – at least two or three a week (which also cost us in train fares, etc.) ...and he needed so much daily language and communication support at home... It was simply impossible to continue working and support him properly during those years. I still don't think we have recovered from the financial losses of that time, even now, ten years down the line.

2.2/ Recommendations to disability additions

The National Deaf Children's Society (NDCS) believes that proposals in the Welfare Reform Bill will mean that vulnerable families with deaf children stand to lose £1400 a year, risking pushing them in to poverty.

NDCS therefore supported Baroness Meacher's amendment to Clause 10 of the Bill which was passed by the House of Lords. The amendment is detailed below.

Page 4, line 36, at end insert

"Such additional amount to be paid at a higher rate, a middle rate or a lower rate. The middle rate shall be no less than two-thirds of the higher rate as may be prescribed. The lower rate shall be no less than one third of the higher rate"

NDCS Northern Ireland would like the Welfare Reform Bill to ensure that the disability addition contained in the Universal credit sufficiently recognises the considerable care needs and costs attached to childhood deafness. An amendment similar to that tabled in the House of Lords by Baroness Meacher would go some way to doing that.

3/ Summary

NDCS Northern Ireland is concerned that the Welfare Reform Bill could disproportionately affect deaf children and young people. If the Bill as currently proposed is introduced deaf young people could ultimately receive a service not tailored to their needs. As the majority of deaf children are not in receipt of the higher rate of DLA, most deaf families will be losing around £1,400. NDCS Northern Ireland do not believe this reduced disability addition to the universal credit sufficiently recognises the additional costs incurred by childhood deafness.

Clerk, Committee for Social Development

19th October 2012

Dear Dr Pelan

Welfare Reform Bill

Thank you for inviting the Northern Ireland Housing Council to comment on the Welfare Reform Bill.

Unfortunately, due to the limited timescale for responding, the Housing Council was unable to have an opportunity to debate the Bill or prepare a response to each clause of the legislation.

This response therefore is a summary of the main issues of concern for the Housing Council based on discussions at previous Meetings.

Members' main areas for concerns are as follows:

Universal Credit and direct payment to tenants

The introduction of Universal Credit, paid monthly in arrears directly to those on benefits, raises concern with regard to the ability of families and individuals to budget their income and manage household expenses. This is a retrograde step in terms of the management of Housing Benefit and rent collection for Public Sector landlords.

Furthermore, it is understood that where the total benefit has to be capped, the Housing Benefit amount will be the sum adjusted downwards.

Members have also highlighted an anomaly unique to Northern Ireland with regard to the Equality legislation where difficulties may arise where a public sector tenant, in financial hardship, has the rent on their property reduced, whereas there is no reduction on the rent of a property occupied by a tenant who is in a position to pay.

The Housing Council strongly recommends that consideration is given to the viability to pay the housing component of Universal Credit direct to landlords.

Under-occupancy in properties

One of the major changes in the Welfare Reform Bill will affect people under 35 receiving the shared room rate, with the potential to lose between £20 and £40 per week in benefit. This change may also affect some of the most vulnerable in society who may be unable to remain in their private accommodation, and, as a consequence, may find themselves homeless.

Housing Benefit changes will also affect those people, below pensionable age, under-occupying their homes. There is the potential for these people to lose between £7 and £14 per week in Housing Benefit. Given that 40,000 tenants could potentially be affected by these changes, this could have a significant effect on the level of debt for rent charges.

This will impact on the demand for suitable, affordable housing in both the public and private sector. More funding will need to be made available for the provision of more affordable housing.

Administration of the Universal Credit

The Housing Council feels that it is vital to ensure that tenants receive as much information as possible on the implications of the proposed reforms at the earliest opportunity.

With regard to the administration and the complexities of Universal Credit and the proposals for the system to be administered by the Social Security Agency, Members expressed concern about the potential lack of experience of SSA staff in the assessment of Housing Benefit. Also this will have a significant impact on staff resources.

The Housing Council are also concerned about the 20,000 public sector tenants who pay full rent as there is no indication as to how the reforms and the continuing economic crisis in Northern Ireland will affect them.

New Build Programme for Social Housing

Members have expressed concern regarding the potential increase in demand for social and affordable housing in Northern Ireland. Waiting lists are already at their highest level since the 1970's and the indications are that the implications from Welfare Reform will increase the demand especially for smaller units of accommodation.

Caution must be taken however, if the new build programme concentrated on building smaller units of accommodation, this could potentially lead to a legacy of problems in future years as cycles of housing need change.

The Housing Council receives regular updates from the Housing Executive on the proposed Welfare Reform Bill. During the next 3 months the Housing Council's sub-committees will be focusing on the implications of the new legislation for the people of Northern Ireland.

Representatives from the Housing Council have joined the Housing Executive's Working Group to analyse the proposals and the implications of the introduction of the Welfare Reform for housing in Northern Ireland. Members' views will be fed back through this forum on a regular basis.

The Housing Council requests that their views and concerns are passed on to the Committee for Social Development for Committee as part of this consultation.

Yours sincerely

J Brown

NI Human Rights Commission

NORTHERN
COMMISSION

Response on the Welfare Reform Bill 2012

Summary

- A. The Commission has prepared this advice to assist the Northern Ireland Assembly as it scrutinises proposed reforms to the social security system for rights holders in Northern Ireland. International human rights law recognises that it is legitimate for Governments to reform their social security provision. However it stipulates the parameters within which these reforms must take place.
- B. The Commission is concerned at the absence of detailed human rights analysis of the Bill and its potential implications. A full assessment of the potential implications of the Bill is particularly complicated by the heavy reliance on secondary legislation.
- C. The Commission supports the aim of the Bill to assist people into work. The right of people to work is recognised in the European Social Charter and the Commission advises that the NI Executive must ensure access to the training and experience necessary to obtain employment is made available to people seeking work.
- D. The establishment of Universal Credit as an all-encompassing benefit payment is welcomed in principle. The Commission raises concerns regarding the payment of Universal Credit to one member of the household which may compound the difficulties faced by vulnerable families.
- E. The Commission notes the proposed replacement of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) with Personal Independent Payments (PIP). These payments are intended to assist disabled people in overcoming societal barriers and to enable their full participation in the community. Whilst costs savings is a legitimate aim of Government the Commission is concerned that achieving the required 20% reduction in spending on DLA/PIP has led to a focus on the medical model of disability rather than the social model of disability, which focuses on overcoming the societal barriers faced by people with disabilities.
- F. The Bill proposes that those in receipt of benefits will be subject to various work related requirements, failure to comply with which may result in the imposition of a sanction. The Commission advises that the sanctions regime must be proportionate and procedurally fair. Furthermore, the Commission advises that the imposition of a sanction must not result in any individual being destitute.
- G. In respect of work related requirements the Commission raises a particular concern regarding women with child care responsibilities. There is a potential disparate impact on such women due to the absence of affordable childcare. The Commission advises that this issue be given specific consideration.
- H. The Bill proposes the abolition of the Social Fund which currently serves to assist individuals and families in maintaining an adequate standard of living. The Commission advises that the Committee examines the sufficiency of the proposed alternative emergency payment arrangements.
- I. The Bill proposes changes to the level and nature of support for housing costs under the Universal Credit, with the amount payable to be relative to household size and circumstances as well as actual rent. The Commission raises concerns regarding the potential implications of this proposal on tenants with disabilities currently in adapted accommodation within a supportive community. The Commission highlights the need to have regard for the particular characteristics of the Northern Ireland housing stock.

The Bill envisages a role for private and voluntary sector providers in the assessment of claimants. The Commission advises that when carrying out activities of a public nature, private and voluntary sector providers must be required to comply with the Human Rights Act 1998.

Introduction

1. The Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission ('the Commission') pursuant to Section 69 (4) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 advises the Assembly whether a Bill is compatible with human rights. In accordance with this function the following statutory advice is submitted to the Committee for Social Development ('the Committee').
2. The Commission bases its position on the full range of internationally accepted human rights standards, including the European Convention on Human Rights as incorporated by the Human Rights Act 1998 and the treaty obligations of the Council of Europe and United Nations systems. The relevant international treaties in this context include;
 - The European Convention on Human Rights, 1950 ('ECHR') [UK ratification 1951];
 - International Labour Organisation Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 [UK ratification 1954];
 - European Social Charter, 1961 [UK ratification 1962];
 - The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966 ('ICCPR') [UK ratification 1976];
 - The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 1966 ('ICESCR') [UK ratification 1976];
 - The Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women, 1979 ('CEDAW') [UK ratification 1986];
 - The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child, 1989 ('UNCRC') [UK ratification 1991];
 - The United Nations Convention on the Rights of Disabled Persons, (UNCRPD') [UK ratification 2009].
3. The Northern Ireland Executive is subject to the obligations contained within these international treaties by virtue of the United Kingdom's ratification. The Commission, therefore, advises that the Committee scrutinises the proposed Bill for full compliance with international human rights standards.
4. In addition to these treaty standards there exists a body of 'soft law' developed by the human rights bodies of the United Nations. These declarations and principles are non-binding but provide further guidance in respect of specific topic areas. The relevant standard referred to in this context is;
 - United Nations Declaration on Social Progress and Development, 1969.
5. The Commission has provided this advice in the timeframe available to it. There are a number of issues which merit further analysis however this is not possible in the time available.

Human Rights Analysis

6. By virtue of Articles 12 and 13 of the European Social Charter and the International Labour Organisation's Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952, the Northern Ireland Executive is obligated to maintain a system of social security at a satisfactory level and should endeavour to raise progressively the system of social security to a higher level. International human rights law recognises that it is legitimate for Governments to reform their social security system. However standards also stipulate the parameters within which these reforms must remain; for instance an individuals' right to an adequate standard of living¹ must not be undermined.

7. The Commission recalls that Section 24 (1) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 requires that all acts of the Northern Ireland Assembly are compatible with the ECHR. In addition, Section 26 also requires compliance with international obligations.
8. The Commission notes that during the passage of the Welfare Reform Bill through the House of Commons the Joint Parliamentary Committee on Human Rights (JCHR) was critical of the absence of a detailed human rights memorandum and, in addition, the JCHR raised numerous concerns regarding human rights issues. The Commission notes with regret the absence of a detailed human rights memorandum accompanying the Welfare Reform Bill, and in particular the absence of any consideration of the human rights issues raised by the JCHR.²
9. Recalling the human rights concerns raised by the JCHR, the Commission refers the Committee to section 35 of the Standing Orders, which makes provision for the establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee to consider and report on whether the draft Bill is in conformity with the requirements of human rights law.
10. The Bill has significant implications for the enjoyment of socio-economic rights as recognised in the ICESCR and European Social Charter. International standards, ratified by the UK Government and binding on the NI Executive, require the removal of barriers so as to ensure the progressive realisation of socio-economic rights.

Particular Circumstances of Northern Ireland

11. It is important that the Committee give detailed consideration to the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland many of which emerge from the legacy of the conflict. The Committee should note the high levels of socio-economic deprivation and reliance on welfare benefits. For example, 1 in 10 people in Northern Ireland claim Disability Living Allowance.³ In addition, the level of religious segregation in social housing restricts housing choice. The Commission advises that the Committee considers both the implications of the Bill on individual households and the cumulative impact on communities.

Use of Regulations

12. The Bill permits the Minister for Social Development to set down Regulations as regards claims and entitlement for benefit, basic conditions for award, exclusion from restrictions, claimant responsibilities, and capability for work or work-related activities. A full assessment of the potential implications of the Bill is particularly complicated by the heavy reliance on secondary legislation. The Commission advises that the Committee consider whether those Regulations proposed by the Bill subject to the negative resolution procedure should in fact be subject to either the affirmative resolution procedure or confirmatory procedure to ensure human rights compliance.
13. The Commission advises that the Committee also considers the implications will wish to consider the implication of this Bill on parallel reforms to the health and social care system, such as the proposals contained in 'Transforming Your Care'.

Supporting Rights Holders into Work

14. ICESCR recognises the right to work under Article 6 which states that;
- “(1)The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right to work, which includes the right of everyone to the opportunity to gain his living by work which he freely chooses or accepts, and will take appropriate steps to safeguard this right.*
- (2) The steps to be taken by a State Party to the present Covenant to achieve the full realization of this right shall include technical and vocational guidance and training programmes, policies and techniques to achieve steady economic, social and cultural development and full and productive employment under conditions safeguarding fundamental political and economic freedoms to the individual.”*
15. The European Social Charter also recognises the right to work and obligates the NI Executive to ensure adequate support for rights holders in exercising this right. There are a number aspects of this Bill which could potentially assist rights holders in obtaining work. However, to do so they must be implemented appropriately with regard to the particular circumstances of the individual concerned.
16. Article 9 of the European Social Charter “to provide or promote, as necessary, the technical and vocational training of all persons, including the handicapped”. The Commission advise that the Committee in considering the impact of the Bill consider the adequacy of current investment in vocational training provision.

Payment of Universal Credit

17. The Universal Credit (‘UC’) is to replace the current benefits system which encompasses working tax credit, child tax credit, housing benefit, income support, income-based job seekers allowance (‘JSA’) and income-related employment and support allowance (‘ESA’).
18. The Commission acknowledges that UC is intended to be a single regular payment encompassing a range of benefits, and emulating a salary payment. This is designed to ease the transition into employment and afford a greater degree of financial autonomy to recipients.
19. The Commission notes that in the case of a joint claim by a couple, the benefit will be paid to one person only. Clause 99 provides that the Department will have the power to determine whether payment is made to a nominated person or to a person ‘irrespective’ of a nomination. This raises a concern with respect to instances of abuse within the home and the possibility of a nomination under duress.
20. The Commission notes that men are the primary earners in the majority of households in Northern Ireland.⁴ It seems, therefore, that men may be more likely to be the nominated recipient of UC. This may impact upon a women’s access to resources and control over her own finances. International law prohibits discrimination on the grounds of sex. The CEDAW focuses solely on the issue of discrimination on the grounds of sex and Article 13 requires that;
- “States Parties shall take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women in other areas of economic and social life in order to ensure, on a basis of equality of men and women, the same rights, in particular:*
- (a) The right to family benefits;*
- (b) The right to bank loans, mortgages and other forms of financial credit;*
- (c) The right to participate in recreational activities, sports and all aspects of cultural life. “*

4 Women’s Resource and Development Agency (2011) The Northern Ireland Economy: Women on the Edge? A Comprehensive Analysis of the Impacts of the Financial Crisis, pg122

21. Children are particularly vulnerable and Article 27 of the UNCRC recognises that children are entitled both to an adequate standard of living and a right to social security under Article 26, which states that;

“1. States Parties shall recognize for every child the right to benefit from social security, including social insurance, and shall take the necessary measures to achieve the full realization of this right in accordance with their national law.

2. The benefits should, where appropriate, be granted, taking into account the resources and the circumstances of the child and persons having responsibility for the maintenance of the child, as well as any other consideration relevant to an application for benefits made by or on behalf of the child.”

21. The Commission is concerned that payment of UC to one member of the household may result in restrictions on the more vulnerable member of the household, inhibiting their autonomous decision-making in respect of their financial needs and investment of their benefits. The Commission draws particular attention to the obligations of non-discrimination under CEDAW and the paramouncy of the best interests of the child under UNCRC. The Commission advises that the Committee apply the international standards when examining the arrangements for payment of UC in light of the potential implications on the rights of women and children.

Personal Independence Payments

22. Personal Independence Payments (PIPs) will replace the current Disability Living Allowance. It is a specific benefit intended to assist disabled persons with the additional financial pressures they face. This is an important measure in ensuring that disabled people are able to exercise their right to independent living as protected by Article 19 of UNCRPD.
23. Clauses 77 and 78 of the Bill set out basic entitlement conditions for the Daily Living component and Mobility component. The Bill provides the Minister for Social Development with the powers to introduce Regulations on qualification criteria for PIPs. It is noted that the Department of Social Development has engaged in two public consultations on the assessment criteria.⁵
24. The UNCRPD requires the NI Executive to adopt the social model of disability. The social model of disability identifies systemic barriers, negative attitudes and exclusion by society (purposely or inadvertently) that mean society is the main contributory factor in disabling people. It is the society as a whole which is responsible for creating barriers to full participation of persons with disabilities, and it is the society as a whole which has the responsibility to remove them.
25. The Commission advises that the Committee assess the proposed basic entitlement conditions contained within the Bill to ensure they adequately reflect the social model of disability. The Commission notes that the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister is currently developing a Disability Strategy which has the social model at its core. The Commission refers the Committee to a concern raised by the House of Commons Select Committee for Works and Pensions that an earlier version of PIP assessment criteria was reflective of the outdated medical model, which sees disabled people as having needs and requiring treatment.⁶ Qualification criteria for PIPs should be based upon the social circumstances of the individual.

5 Initial draft of the Personal Independence Payment assessment criteria – published May 2011 DSD, Second draft of the Personal Independence Payment assessment criteria – published 14 November 2011

6 House of Commons, Work and Pensions Committee, Government support towards the additional living costs of working-age disabled people (19 February 2012) pp. 34-41

26. The stated objective for the introduction of PIPs is to reduce expenditure by 20%.⁷ There is a strong presumption against retrogression in international human rights law, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in its General Comment No. 3 stated:

“Any deliberately retrogressive measures...would require the most careful consideration and would need to be fully justified by reference to the totality of the rights provided for in the Covenant and in the context of the full use of the maximum available resources.”⁸

27. The Commission advises that the Committee assess any retrogressive measures of the Bill in line with this General Comment, in particular provisions relating to PIPs.

Sanctions Regime

28. The Bill establishes a range of claimant responsibilities, which are principally connected to work-related requirements. It further permits sanctions to be imposed for non-compliance without good cause.
29. Requiring benefit claimants to comply with certain conditions prior to the payment of benefits does not in principal raise human rights issues. The European Court of Human Rights (‘ECt. HR’) has held that the ECHR;

“places no restriction on the Contracting State’s freedom to decide whether or not to have in place any form of social security scheme, or to choose the type or amount of benefits to provide under any such scheme.”⁹

30. It is important that the conditions are reasonable and proportionate to the aim. The ECt.HR recognises that the national authorities are in a better position to determine public interest on economic or social grounds and it represents;

“the legislature’s judgment as to what is “in the public interest” unless that judgment be manifestly without reasonable foundation.”¹⁰

31. The Commission notes that the imposition of financial sanctions on a benefit recipient who fails to comply with certain work requirements is not incompatible with international human rights standards. The UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has also stated that “[t]he withdrawal, reduction or suspension of benefits should be circumscribed, based on grounds that are reasonable, subject to due process, and provided for in national law.”¹¹
32. Contributory and non-contributory benefits are proprietary rights and are, therefore, protected under Article 1 of Protocol 1 of the ECHR. Any interference with a proprietary right must be in accordance with the law, for a legitimate aim and proportionate to that aim.
33. Reducing a benefit does not, in principle, violate Article 1 of Protocol 1; however, the ECt. HR has found a violation in the case of Asmundsson v. Iceland.¹² The key consideration for the Court was whether the claimant faced an excessive and disproportionate burden as a consequence of the withdrawal of benefit. The Commission advises that the Committee assess the proposed sanction regime in light of this ruling.
34. The removal, or reduction, of benefits engages the right to an adequate standard of living which is protected under Article 11 of ICESCR which states that;

7 Department of Work and Pensions, Disability Living Allowance Reform, Equality Impact Assessment (March 2011) paras 18-20

12 Asmundsson v Iceland (2005) 41 EHRR 42

“The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right of everyone to an adequate standard of living for himself and his family, including adequate food, clothing and housing, and to the continuous improvement of living conditions.”

35. Where the claimant is a parent, it is important to consider the impact of a reduction in benefits upon the family as a whole. Article 3(1) of the UNCRC requires that in all matters concerning a child, “the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration”. The UNCRC also requires under Article 26 that;

“States Parties shall recognize for every child the right to benefit from social security, including social insurance, and shall take the necessary measures to achieve the full realization of this right in accordance with their national law.”

36. The UNCRC further states that children have the right to an adequate standard of living and that;

“States Parties, in accordance with national conditions and within their means, shall take appropriate measures to assist parents and others responsible for the child to implement this right and shall in case of need provide material assistance and support programmes, particularly with regard to nutrition, clothing and housing.”¹³

37. Any measure which would impact upon the above rights would not be considered to be in a child’s best interests. The Committee must ensure that ‘best interests’ considerations are taken into account when imposing a sanction, given that it may have a wider impact upon children in the family.

38. The Commission advises that the Committee must assess the proposed sanction regime to ensure that it is procedurally fair and proportionate to the legitimate aim which it pursues. Carrying out this assessment is complicated by the absence of the relevant draft Regulations which must also be subject to scrutiny for full human rights compliance.

Hardship Payments

39. The Bill provides for hardship payments, under clauses 28 and 57, in circumstances where a sanction has been imposed.

40. It is not clear at this point if a hardship payment will be made immediately or if there will be a delay between the imposition of the sanction and the availability of relief. It is also unclear how a claimant will demonstrate hardship. The Commission advises that the Committee consider these issues in light of the international standards.

41. The impact of a disproportionate reduction in benefits may engage Article 3 ECHR, which prohibits inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. The NI Executive is under a positive obligation under Article 3 to prevent hardship at a level that may amount to inhuman or degrading treatment.

42. For treatment to fall within the scope of Article 3 it must reach a minimum level of severity, and the assessment of that threshold will be relative and dependent on the circumstances of the case. The House of Lords have found that treatment resulting in the severe poverty and social deprivation of a group of individuals may amount to inhuman and degrading treatment.¹⁴

43. The reduction in benefits, as a result of a sanction, may risk a claimant being exposed to destitution, with a hardship payment being the only means to improve their situation. At this point a violation of the positive obligation under Article 3 may have already occurred. The Commission advises the Committee to ensure that, in order to act as a safety net, the hardship payment needs to prevent destitution from occurring in the first instance rather than

13 UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, Article 27(3)

14 R. (on the application of Adam, Limbuela and Tesema) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2005] UKHL 66 seeking to remedy the problem. The risk of destitution should be taken into consideration prior to the imposition of any sanction.

Child Care Responsibilities

44. Article 18 of the UNCRC requires the Executive to:

“render appropriate assistance to parents and legal guardians in the performance of their child-rearing responsibilities and shall ensure the development of institutions, facilities and services for the care of children... [AND] take all appropriate measures to ensure that children of working parents have the right to benefit from child-care services and facilities for which they are eligible.”

45. The United Nations Declaration on Social Progress and Development, 1969, also provides at Article 22(c) for;

“the establishment of appropriate child-care facilities in the interest of children and working parents.”

46. The Commission notes the potential requirement on those with a child over the age of one to attend a work focused interview (Clause 21(1)(a)) and the potential requirement on those with a child over the age of four to engage in work preparation (Clause 21(5)). The ability of those with child caring responsibilities to comply with such requirements will be heavily restricted by the need to secure childcare, both in terms of its cost and availability. In addition, sanctions for failure to comply with requirements will disproportionately impact upon those with caring responsibilities and may be considered indirectly discriminatory against women.

47. In England and Wales the Childcare Act 2006 imposes a duty on local authorities to identify and meet childcare needs. NI has no corresponding childcare legislation, no lead Government department charged with developing a childcare strategy for NI, and no strategy agreed by the Executive. As the Social Security Advisory Committee states, “[m]any of the UK welfare reform proposals for both lone parents and working age couples with children are underpinned by the assumption of sufficient readily accessible and affordable childcare. This underpinning is simply not in place for Northern Ireland.”¹⁵ Whilst the Commission notes a number of positive policy developments the provision of childcare in Northern Ireland remains inadequate.¹⁶

48. Article 8 of the ECHR protects the right to private and family life. The ECtHR has found that the right to private and family life extends to a right to seek employment and acknowledged that “[i]t is, after all, in the course of their working lives that the majority of people have a significant opportunity of developing relationships with the outside world”.¹⁷ The ECtHR has found that where a measure has a disparate impact on certain groups, this may be considered to be discriminatory and a breach of Article 14.¹⁸

49. Article 1 of CEDAW defines discrimination as;

“[A]ny distinction, exclusion or restriction made on the basis of sex which has the effect or purpose of impairing or nullifying the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by women, irrespective of their marital status, on a basis of equality of men and women, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural, civil or any other field”.

50. The imposition of unreasonable work related requirements on those with child care responsibilities may lead to a significant number of carers failing to meet these requirements and incurring sanctions due to the absence of adequate child care provision. In light of the fact that it is principally women who bear child care responsibilities this is likely to have a disparate impact on women. The Commission advises that the Committee considers what additional measures can be taken to assist women with child caring responsibilities and to mitigate against any potential legal challenge. This is an example of the need for a co-ordinated approach to welfare reform which takes into account societal barriers faced by rights holders.

Social Fund

51. The Bill proposes to abolish payments of crisis loans, community care grants and budgeting loans from the discretionary Social Fund. A range of alternative emergency payments are to be introduced to replace the Social Fund.
52. The Commission notes that the availability of these measures has provided a safeguard for families and individuals who find themselves in financial difficulties. The Commission further notes that people with disabilities account for approximately 45 percent of all applications for community care grants, followed by pensioners (24 percent) and lone parents (21 percent).¹⁹
53. The Social Fund currently safeguards the right to an adequate standard of living, as protected by Article 11 ICESCR, through assisting families and individuals who have encountered unexpected financial difficulties. It also safeguards disabled people's right to an independent living, as protected by Article 29 UNCRPD, by offering financial assistance for unanticipated costs.
54. The protections offered by the Social Fund are significant and the Commission advises that the Committee examine the sufficiency of the proposed alternative emergency payments.

Housing Benefit

55. ICESCR recognises that the provision of adequate housing is essential to ensuring the right to an adequate standard of living. In its General Comment No. 4, the Committee for Economic, Social and Cultural Rights observed that all "individuals, as well as families, are entitled to adequate housing regardless of age, economic state, group or other affiliation or status".²⁰ Furthermore, all persons should possess a degree of security of tenure which guarantees legal protection against forced eviction, harassment and other threats.²¹ The European Social Charter similarly recognises that the provision of family housing is a necessary condition for the full development of the family under Article 16.
56. Clause 11 sets out the intention to provide for an amount to be included in UC to cover housing costs. It does not provide for benefit entitlement to be related to actual rents in the local housing market. This has the potential to cause disconnect between housing costs and actual rents and, over time, this could create hardship.
57. Clause 69 of the Bill empowers the Department to set an approximate maximum housing benefit. For the private rented sector, the Department will be empowered to set rents at the lower end of either Consumer Price Index or the bottom 30th percentile of private sector rents. This change from the current approach where payments are linked to the 50th percentile.

20 Committee for Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, General Comment 4 on The Right to Adequate Housing (Art.11 (1)): . 13/12/1991

21 Ibid, para 8(a)

58. For the social housing sector, the Department will bring forward regulations setting out the process for determining the approximate maximum housing benefit. It may introduce size criteria into the calculation of housing benefit for working age tenants in social housing. While the Bill does not currently provide detail on how these changes would be introduced, should the department take a similar approach to that taken in England, housing benefit payments for social housing tenants would be reduced by 14% of their rent for under-occupation by one bedroom, and by 25% for under-occupation by two or more bedrooms.²²
59. Taking an average rent, a tenant on full Housing Benefit who is under-occupying by one bedroom would see their benefit reduced by £8.25 per week and for a tenant occupying by two or more bedrooms, the figures would be £14.70 per week.²³ The Commission is concerned at these figures and advises that the Committee examine the level of hardship which may be felt among low income households as a result.
60. The Commission advises that the Committee consider the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland and the segregated nature of housing stock. It is likely that changes to housing benefit will result in households that face shortfalls seeking to move home. In social housing, where the stock is highly segregated, choice is restricted. The Commission recalls the continued prevalence of sectarianism and the threat which this poses to human rights.²⁴
61. Northern Ireland's housing stock has traditionally been dominated by larger dwellings which should be taken into account when determining eligibility on the basis of size.²⁵ The Commission understands that there is a scarcity of smaller housing units in Northern Ireland and this may lead to difficulties in respect of the introduction of size criteria into the calculation of housing benefits.
62. The Committee for Economic, Social and Cultural Rights have outlined that effective monitoring is an obligation of immediate effect, requiring that;
- “for a State party to satisfy its obligations under article 11 (1) it must demonstrate, inter alia, that it has taken whatever steps are necessary, either alone or on the basis of international cooperation, to ascertain the full extent of homelessness and inadequate housing within its jurisdiction. In this regard, the revised general guidelines regarding the form and contents of reports adopted by the Committee (E/C.12/1991/1) emphasize the need to “provide detailed information about those groups within...society that are vulnerable and disadvantaged with regard to housing”. They include, in particular, homeless persons and families, those inadequately housed and without ready access to basic amenities, those living in “illegal” settlements, those subject to forced evictions and low-income groups.”²⁶*
63. The Commission advises that the implementation of this proposal must be monitored closely. The impact on disabled persons must in particular be considered. Article 19 of UNCRPD states that;
- “Persons with disabilities have access to a range of in-home, residential and other community support services, including personal assistance necessary to support living and inclusion in the community, and to prevent isolation or segregation from the community.”*

25 Northern Ireland Housing Executive (2009) Housing Condition Survey - The 2009 House Condition Survey found high proportions of larger homes- bungalows (22%); terraced houses (31%); semi-detached houses (20%); detached houses (19%) with apartments and flats accounting for just 8%- approximately the same size as 2001- indicating that the proportion of these homes should not have been expected to dramatically increase since 2009.

26 Ibid, para 13

64. The Commission advises that the Committee consider providing for monitoring to ensure that changes to Housing Benefit do not result in disabled persons moving into accommodation that is not suited to them and away from supportive communities and individuals upon whom they rely.
65. The Commission notes that concerns have previously been raised regarding a proposal to abolish provision for direct payments to landlords. It is noted that the Minister for Social Development indicated an intention to retain provision for the direct payment of landlords. This is welcomed.

Private and Voluntary Sector Contractors

66. Clause 30 of the Bill allows for contracted providers in the private and voluntary sectors to exercise functions of the Department of Social Development or the Department for Employment and Learning relating to work-related and connected requirements. The Commission notes the significant role which assessment relating to work-related and connected requirements may have on an individual's entitlement and benefits and, by extension, on their right not to be treated in an inhuman or degrading manner and their right to an adequate standard of living.
67. The duty to comply with the Human Rights Act 1998 extends not only to public authorities but also 'include[s] bodies which are not manifestly public authorities, but some of whose functions only are of a public nature'.²⁷ This was reiterated in March 2012 during debate on the Health and Social Care Bill when Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Quality, Lord Howe reiterated that, *'the Government's view is that all providers of publicly funded health and care services should indeed consider themselves bound by the [Human Rights] Act and the duty.'*²⁸ This is the position that we expect private and third sector providers to follow'. The Committee for Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has further reiterated that the state must take responsibility for the effective administration of the social security system.²⁹
68. The Commission advises that the Committee give consideration to inserting a clause in the Bill requiring contracted private and voluntary sector providers must be required to comply with the Human Rights Act 1998.

Dear Dr Pelan,

Welfare Reform Bill

Thank you for the opportunity to comment on the Welfare Reform Bill, currently being considered by the Committee for Social Development. NIACRO is a voluntary organisation, who has been working for over 40 years to reduce crime and its impact on people and communities. We provide services for, and work with, children and young people; with adults in the community and with people in prison and their families, whilst working to influence others and apply all of our resources effectively.

NIACRO receives funding from, and works in partnership with, a range of statutory departments and agencies in Northern Ireland, including criminal justice, health, social services, housing and others.

Given our experience of working with some of the most vulnerable and marginalised groups in society, we are keen to share our knowledge and provide our views on this particular piece of legislation, which will have far-reaching implications for many people in Northern Ireland. To that end, and notwithstanding the importance of maintaining the principle of parity, we are keen to ensure that the legislation introduced by the Northern Ireland Assembly has due regard for, and cognisance of, the particular needs of our society, which include higher rates of both unemployment and disability than other regions. We, therefore, strongly urge the Assembly not to miss this opportunity to develop legislation that responds appropriately to our needs, and protects the most vulnerable people in our society.

Attached you will find our substantive response, which addresses some clauses directly as well as providing more general commentary on the principles underpinning the legislation and its practical implications. We hope this is helpful and should you require anything further from us, please let us know.

We look forward to observing the Committee's further deliberations on this matter.

Yours sincerely,

Olwen Lyner

Chief Executive

NIACRO Position Paper: Welfare Reform Bill

Welfare Support - First Principles

NIACRO believes that, in terms of first principles, we need a welfare system that is flexible, that considers individuals' needs, and facilitates claims in advance of critical events, such as redundancy, retirement or release from custody. Such a system should be able to react to changing events, including offers of employment, in real time to ensure a smooth transition from benefit dependency to waged independence. We are concerned some of the current proposals will either hinder or prevent that, and that many are based on unrealistic assumptions about peoples' capacities or needs.

Date of claims

Briefings supplied by the Department of Social Development (DSD) indicate that the date of claim for Universal Credit will in future be determined by the date that the completed benefit form is accepted by DSD, and not the date of first contact as is currently the case with Disability Living Allowance and Jobseeker's Allowance. NIACRO believes this is inherently unfair, as it will disadvantage those claimants who are less technically able and struggle with digital and online applications, as well as those with literacy and numeracy issues or learning disabilities.

Online claims

Whilst we understand the pressure to move towards online applications and claims, which can often be more efficient for both claimants and staff, there are very real issues in Northern Ireland in terms of access to the internet. In both disadvantaged and rural areas, there are people who simply do not have regular or reliable access to such services. The new system requires claimants who apply to check their Universal Credit online accounts regularly for messages and instructions. In many cases, our service users will be able to make their initial applications online with our support, but this would then require people who use a centre such like NIACRO to check in regularly with NIACRO for messages. This is both unfair and unrealistic, and we recommend that the Department considers inviting applicants to indicate on their claims forms how they wish to be contacted.

A further issue with the online application format for Universal Credit is that the questions boxes provide no room for free text to add additional information material to the application, in a further departure from the current procedures. As well as restricting the capacity for individuals' particular circumstances to be taken into account, this presents further difficulties given that Section 112 of the Bill introduces penalties for incorrect statements and failures to disclose information. We recommend that, in order to ensure people are given the maximum opportunity to disclose information to be taken into consideration, the forms are amended to include the capacity to provide free text.

Monthly payments

We are aware that officials have been attempting to negotiate some flexibility in the system to protect the provision of weekly and fortnightly payments, and avoid a uniform move to one monthly payment in all cases. We strongly support this approach as we know many of the people we work with simply do not have the skills to manage a monthly budget. We deliver training in financial capability in a range of settings and that experience demonstrates to us that such skills are seriously lacking in Northern Ireland, particularly amongst the marginalised groups with whom we often come into contact.

To that end, we recommend that consideration is given to including some of the people we work with, such as people who have been in custody, within the exceptional circumstances group (payments exception service), to ensure that they receive payments on a weekly or fortnightly basis.

Bank accounts

While bank accounts are the preferred option for the payment of Universal Credit, we are keen to highlight the hesitancy that remains within the banking sector to engage in a process with the Northern Ireland Prison Service to facilitate people in prison to open bank accounts. Many of these people have minimal experience of continuous employment, and as a result enter prison without ever having opened a bank account in their own name. There is a range of barriers that exist for such people, who can't give a proof of address or utility bill, to actually opening an account either prior to or immediately after release. We would, therefore, argue that until banks are required to co-operate and facilitate a scheme for people who have been in prison, an alternative to payments directly into bank accounts must be maintained. We would welcome any leverage the Department can use with the banking sector to move this issue forward to a positive conclusion, to enable people planning for release to open a basic bank account for their immediate use upon release.

The "bedroom" tax

We are strongly opposed to any reduction in Housing Benefit to Housing Executive or Housing Association tenants who reside in a property that is deemed to be under occupied. Introducing such a tax would punish those people who need housing support for the inadequacies of, and lack of flexibility in, the social housing stock available in Northern Ireland. We know that many recipients of Housing Benefit are single people, but there are very few single bedroom properties available, and claimants should not be penalised as a result. We also know that there is a distinct lack of Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMOs) available outside the urban hubs and Greater Belfast area, which again is no fault of any claimant.

There is also a wide range of legitimate reasons why people may need to reside in a property with additional bedrooms, such as:

1. Families of people in prison who intend to return to the parental or family home upon release;
2. Families of students who may move out of parental accommodation during term time and return during holidays or after course completion;
3. Separated couples who have custodial access to children on a regular but infrequent basis;
4. People who are hospitalised for short periods;
5. Foster-carers or respite carers who are required to have a spare bedroom for people to stay for short periods; and
6. People with disabilities who have a carer stay over on a regular but infrequent basis.

For these reasons, we urge the Committee to consider amending this element of the legislation to ensure tenants are not unduly penalised.

The Bill

Turning to the legislation as currently drafted, we also wish to make a number of comments on specific elements therein.

Section 4 - Basic conditions

The Bill requires that in order to claim Universal Credit a person must be at least 18 years old. Section 4 (3) allows for a lower age limit to apply in specific circumstances, such as lone parents under 18 or young people estranged from their family. We recommend that 16 and 17 year olds who are registered for training with the Employment Service but have not secured an immediate placement should also be added to this list of specified groups, to mirror the current provision for discretionary Jobseekers' Allowance.

Section 11 - Housing Costs

Section 11 (1) states that the calculation of an award of Universal Credit is to include an amount in respect of any liability of a claimant to make payments in respect of the accommodation the claimant occupies as his or her home. We are concerned about this aspect of the Bill as it places responsibility on the benefit claimant to pay their landlord directly from their lump sum payment.

We urge the Department to amend this section of the Bill to allow the option of direct payments to landlords. As we have noted elsewhere, we have concerns for many of the people we work with who are simply not financially capable of managing money or budgeting; who have learning disabilities and mental health issues; who have addictions to drugs and/or alcohol and who will ignore their responsibility to pay their rent and misuse the housing costs element of their benefit. Given the consequences of persistent non-payment, which can eventually lead to eviction and homelessness, we urge the Department to help such vulnerable people to maintain their tenancies by facilitating payments for accommodation costs directly to landlords.

Section 16 - Work preparation requirement

We recommend that engagement with NIACRO employability services, and other similar programmes offered by voluntary and community organisations, is recognised as contributing to work preparation in fulfilment of these requirements.

Sections 70–73 - Social Fund

Provision is made in these sections of the Bill for the repeal of crisis loans, community care grants and budgeting loans under the discretionary social fund. The Office of Social Fund Commissioner and the Independent Review Service are also repealed. We understand that work is ongoing to develop a replacement Discretionary Support Scheme but we are keen to emphasise the importance of the availability of support for assisting the resettlement needs of people moving from prisons or hostels into independent living arrangements in the community. Without more detail on the qualifying criteria for the new scheme, it is hard to be more definitive on its impacts, but we recommend that these particular circumstances are recognised in the regulations governing the Discretionary Support Scheme.

Section 86 - People in prison

As currently drafted, the legislation is not clear as to whether payment of the daily living component of Personal Independence Payment (PIP) will continue for the first 28 days of custody, as is provided in Sections 84 and 85 for people entering a care home or hospital respectively to meet ongoing costs.

Further to that, we recommend an amendment is inserted to Section 86 to take account of people who spend lengthy periods on remand in prison, only to be released without charge, as well as those who serve long sentences only to have their convictions quashed on appeal. We believe that in these instances, where a person was in receipt of PIP prior to their period in custody and where medical evidence substantiates that they satisfied the qualifying conditions of PIP during their incarceration, a backdated award of PIP should be made to them for the entire period of imprisonment.

Section 95 - Benefit cap

We are aware that there has been considerable controversy over the suggestions that payments would be limited on the basis of the number of children in a household. Given the current economic crisis, in which record numbers of people previously in stable employment are suddenly finding themselves unemployed and reliant on welfare payments, we strongly urge more detailed consideration be given to this proposal. There will be many parents who had always been able to financially support their family, and who could be penalised simply for having more children.

Section 97 - Claims and awards

Subsection (2) amends section (5)(1)(d) of the Social Security Administration Act 1992. Section (5)(1)(d) allows for the making of advance claims to benefit where a claimant does not presently but soon will meet the conditions of entitlement for a benefit. Throughout the new proposals, significant emphasis has been placed on access to, and competence in, digital access with the preferred method of application for Universal Credit being online.

We know from our experience of providing resettlement services that access to financial support within the first few days after release from prison is a critical determinant in preventing reoffending. We, therefore, ask that people are facilitated in making claims for Universal Credit in advance of their release from custody, and that DSD works closely with the Northern Ireland Prison Service to ensure that appropriate resources and equipment are made available to permit advance claims for Universal Credit from prison.

Section 99 - Payments to joint claimants

This section sets out to whom a benefit is paid in the case of a couple claiming jointly. We are mindful that some relationships are defined by domestic abuse and financial abuse and recommend that the regulations require that the views of both claimants are ascertained, to establish to whom payment should be made. Furthermore, we recommend that an amendment is introduced to provide that an appropriate third party, such as social services, may alert the Department to the need for an alternative payment arrangement to be made, and that this be treated both sympathetically and efficiently. Universal Credits could be comprised of Jobseeker's Allowance, housing costs, Child Tax Credits, etc., and a claimant may also be eligible for Child Benefit and Personal Independence Payment. In order to serve the best interests of children and vulnerable young people we ask that further flexibilities are introduced to the Universal Credit system to ensure that payments can be paid to the person in the household who has the main caring duties.

Given the extent of imprisonment for fine default in Northern Ireland, we also wish to highlight potential problems for such a system of large single payments to only one individual within a household. In some households, one partner will be named on utility bills and television licences, etc. If that same person is not able to access the money being paid into their partner's account, in order to pay the bills on time, they could quickly end up in a debt situation, with potential consequences that could include eventual imprisonment. We believe this is inherently unfair, as it creates clear risks that those named will be held accountable with their having any real power.

In cases where payment is made to one member of the household, we also emphasise the disproportionate impact that this will have on the families of people who may enter prison for varying periods of time. In the event that payments are made to the husband, for example, and such payments would be immediately suspended on committal to custody, a wife may be left alone and with additional caring responsibilities on the outside, without access to any financial assistance or support. We recommend that specific provision is made to ensure that a work-around is quickly identified in such cases to provide ongoing financial support for families who have a member in prison.

Section 100 - Payments on account

NICARO welcomes this element of the legislation as a payment of this kind will bridge the gap between custody and the community while an individual is waiting payment of Universal Credit. Given its importance we ask that released prisoners awaiting the outcome of benefit decisions are specified in subsection 5 (1) (ii) "cases in need".

Conclusion

In conclusion, we request that the Committee uses its power to influence this legislation to include additional safeguards and protections for the most vulnerable. In particular, we must stress that many of the people we work with, whether on supervision in the community, in custody or people who have historical convictions, have lower levels of literacy and numeracy and higher levels of mental health and substance abuse issues. As a result, they are often among the most marginalised groups in society and we believe the legislation, as currently drafted, creates further barriers to their successful integration. We do not expect any blanket provisions to be made for any particular groups, but request that greater evidence of flexibility be introduced within the system, to allow for the very complex needs of people in exceptional circumstances.

NIAMH

The Welfare Reform Bill 2012

Submission of Evidence to the Social Development Committee

by

Niamh (the Northern Ireland Association for Mental Health)

22 October 2012

Executive Summary

i Introduction

Niamh is the largest and longest established mental health charity in Northern Ireland. We deliver community based mental health services in every Assembly constituency through Beacon and Carecall. Welfare reform will significantly impact the lives of our service users (members). We note Minister McCausland's assertion that the first principle of welfare reform is to protect the vulnerable in our society. We welcome the cross party recognition that welfare reform will have specific impacts on persons who experience mental ill-health.

Northern Ireland is distinct from other parts of the UK not only because of the higher prevalence of mental ill-health recognised as a consequence of the conflict, but also because of the human rights and equality protections provided to this group through the unique legislative framework under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. Our views have been informed by legal analysis on the Bill's human rights compliance and justiciability.

We note that the policy simulation modelling results have not been published. Consequently it is not possible to present detailed figures about those impacted by the various components of the Welfare Reform Bill.

This submission is structured in three sections. In this Executive Summary we present the recommendations made in each section. Sections One and Three deal respectively with the overall Bill, and key themes in the implementation of the legislation. Section Two contains reference to specific clauses that we seek to have amended.

1. Section One Recommendations: Human Rights Compliance and Justiciability

We recommend that the Assembly applies the Northern Ireland Act 1998 mandatory legislative provisions to the Welfare Reform Bill so that the Bill is both human right compliant on the face of the legislation and moulded to the particular needs of those seeking welfare assistance in Northern Ireland, in particular those individuals who experience mental health problems.

2. Section Two Recommendations: Amendments to the Welfare Reform Bill

2.1 Evidence

We recommend that there is a mandatory requirement to seek independent, mental health expert opinion from health professionals and / or voluntary organisations with which the claimant has an established relationship at all stages of the welfare reform process including before sanctions are imposed.

2.2 Sanctions

We recommend that an individual has access to independent advice and representation in order to compile and present his / her evidence in situations in which sanctions are being considered.

2.3 Employment and Support Allowance

We recommend the removal of the time-limiting of Contributory ESA for WRAG claimants.

We recommend that individuals are able to re-qualify for ESA if they meet the eligibility requirements for either the Support or Work Related Activity Group at the end of the 365 day period (if this is retained) or subsequently, should their condition fluctuate or deteriorate.

2.4 Personal Independence Payment

We recommend that the arbitrary rotating 12 month assessment period is amended to allow for discretion in relation to persons experiencing mental ill-health.

2.5 Advice and Representation

We recommend the inclusion of mandatory access to independent advice and representation for persons experiencing mental ill-health through accredited organisations within the voluntary sector.

3. Section Three Recommendations: Implementation of the Welfare Reform legislation

3.1 Regulations

We recommend the timely publication of draft Regulations to ensure full scrutiny including human rights compliance.

We recommend the passage of regulations by affirmative resolution of the Assembly.

3.2 Public Information

We recommend an effective public information campaign for vulnerable groups.

We recommend that all individual and public communications regarding welfare reform are reviewed in order to minimise anxiety and harm.

3.3 'Digital by Default'

We recommend the development of a short form to register an application for welfare benefits, which would be used as the commencement date for the claim i.e. the full application form does not need to be completed before the commencement date is registered.

We recommend that supports are put in place for non-digital application by persons who have no or limited digital access or who do not have the skills to undertake their application online by themselves.

We recommend clear guidance regarding the completion of applications with the assistance of third parties.

3.4 Stigma and Welfare Reform

We recommend that there is MLAs agree to avoid the use of stigmatising and inflammatory language about welfare reform and benefit claimants.

We recommend that MLAs use their influence to promote a measured and informed debate about welfare reform that recognises the necessity of social security provision for vulnerable members of society.

3.5 Procurement

We recommend that there are stringent performance requirements linked to the quality of medical assessments; and that mental health assessments are specified within this.

We recommend the inclusion of mandatory monitoring and review systems for private sector contracts including the use of proportionate, escalating and timely sanctions such as financial levers for poor performance.

i. Introduction

This is a submission to the Social Development Committee on the Welfare Reform Bill by Niamh (the Northern Ireland Association for Mental Health). We note that we issued a briefing of mental health and welfare reform on 9 October when the Bill had its Second Reading and that this was circulated to all MLAs and political parties.

Niamh is the largest and longest established mental health charity in Northern Ireland. We have been providing community based mental health services through Beacon to persons with experience of significant mental ill-health since 1959. In 2011 – 2012 Beacon delivered support for people with experience of mental illness, through supported housing (351 places), day support (accessed by 1139 people) and advocacy (totalling 5600 cases). Through our Carecall service we cover 435 842 lives in workplace and further education settings. In 2011 – 2012 Carecall provided counselling and psychological therapies through 19 000 sessions to 4 500 people, as well as mental health and wellbeing programmes.

We have a research unit, which generated evidence on which this submission is based. In 2010 our research unit conducted a needs assessment of our housing support services; and in 2012 it conducted a review of our day support services. We have a public affairs and policy unit, which compiled this submission.

Welfare reform will have a direct impact on the people that we work with across Northern Ireland. In our Beacon Housing Support Services research in 2010 found 75% of residents were in receipt of DLA, 36% Incapacity Benefit, 10% State Pension, 50% Income Support, and 10% Housing Benefit. In our Beacon Day Services research in 2012 found 95.8% of members are in receipt of state benefits; this includes: 79% DLA, 50% Income Support, 39% Housing Benefit, 19% State Pensions, 11% Incapacity Benefit (and 2% Employment Support Allowance), 5% Tax Credits, 5% Child Benefit, 3% Job Seekers Allowance, and 7% Statutory Sick Pay. (2012) Carecall's clients include those in low paid work and further education for whom welfare benefit payments form an essential part of their income.

Niamh is a member of the Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Group (NIWRG). In this submission of evidence we focus on specific issues related to persons who experience mental ill-health. We concur with the broader issues and recommendations made by the NIWRG in its submission of evidence for example with regard to frequency of payments, payment of housing benefit directly to landlords, and splitting the payment of benefits.

While the call for evidence from the Social Development Committee has directed a specific format for response in so far as each response must be on a clause by clause basis, it is our considered view that it is essential that certain matters of general applicability to the entirety of the Bill are highlighted at this stage so that a view may be taken by the Committee as to the appropriateness of the overall context, applicability, human rights compliance and justiciability of the current provisions of the Bill.

We consider that this particular approach to be crucial as it is evidential that people experiencing mental ill health will be impacted by many of the proposed changes. Therefore, our overarching concern that the Bill, as drafted, is not human rights compliant must be viewed as permeating all our concerns throughout this submission. This is dealt with in Section One.

We consider that the provisions of the Welfare Reform Bill will have significant impacts on individuals who experience mental ill-health. We focus on a number of specific clauses that we recommend are amended. This is dealt with in Section Two.

We consider that there are a number of matters regarding the implementation of the legislation, which it would be valuable for the Committee to take a view on. This is dealt with in Section Three.

1. Section One: Human Rights Compliance and Justiciability

This section is informed by legal analysis on the human rights compliance of the Bill.

1.1 Overview and comments of general applicability to the Bill

- 1.1.1 The Bill makes provision for the welfare landscape in Northern Ireland corresponding to provision in the Welfare Reform Act 2012, applicable in England and Wales.
- 1.1.2 As such, the Bill is deemed to be part of the ongoing process of welfare reform and modernisation of the benefit system. This objective is consistent with the ethos of many international human rights instruments, which recognise the right to work, and the right to an adequate standard of living.
- 1.1.3 In seeking to justify the human rights compliance of the Bill, each proposal must be considered to be reasonable and necessary and in pursuit of a legitimate (in this case, social welfare) aim.
- 1.1.4 It is inherent on the government that, in seeking to utilise the law to advance more widely applicable human rights standards, they act compatibly with both national and international human rights law.
- 1.1.5 This notion of advancement of human rights is inherently linked to the legal concept of retrogression. This requires that once acquired, rights should not be removed or limited so as to result in a move away from a previously more beneficial position.
- 1.1.6 This presumption against retrospective measures, and indeed a states continuing obligation under human rights principles, is viewed within the context of available state resources. However, we at Niamh consider that the Bill as currently drafted identifies significant areas of retrospection vis-à-vis people with mental health problems. These will be highlighted below in the 'Comment on selected clauses' below (1.5).
- 1.1.7 It has in the past been the case that Bills seeking to reform matters relating to social welfare are accompanied by human rights memorandum.¹ These memorandums highlight the informed parliamentary scrutiny process undertaken to ensure that the relevant Bill(s) are human rights compatible, which in turn suggests that they are more likely to withstand judicial scrutiny. The outward matching of legislative proposals with human rights obligations would serve to demonstrate both a commitment towards and an ongoing awareness of national and international treaties and conventions to which the UK is a signatory state.
- 1.1.8 It is our view at Niamh that the absence of such transparent scrutiny will make any subsequent legislation vulnerable to judicial review, both on fact specific cases as well as general challenges to the compatibility of such legislation with human rights law.

1 For example the Child Poverty Bill and the Education Bill.

1.2. Responsibilities under the Northern Ireland Act 1998

- 1.2.1 While the UK government did not attach a human rights memorandum to the Welfare Reform Act 2012, there is nothing to prevent the devolved government in Northern Ireland carrying out such an exercise.
- 1.2.2 It is our view in Niamh that it is in fact mandated by the Northern Ireland Act 1998 that an analysis of impact and obligation viewed through the lens of existing human rights provisions is carried out when the proposed legislative provisions are to impact in a wide ranging way throughout in relation to those most vulnerable in society.
- 1.2.3 We further consider that discussions around parity requirements should be informed not only by the different characteristics of Northern Irish society including its experience of conflict, levels of socio-economic deprivation and high rates of mental ill-health, but also the distinct legislative framework provided by the Belfast Agreement and Northern Ireland Act 1998.
- 1.2.4 We note that equality is a fundamental commitment within the Belfast Agreement. The Northern Ireland Act 1998 sets down the politically agreed and socially mandated legislative framework within which the Assembly must operate.
- 1.2.5 The 1998 Act requires the Assembly and the Ministers to uphold and protect the rights guaranteed under the European Convention in Human Rights Act. This is implicit in the provisions of the 1998 Act, which mandate that the overarching ethos of legislative standards be derived from the provisions of the ECHR.
- 1.2.6 For example, in the 1998 Act:
- Section 6 provides that a provision is outside the legislative competence of the Assembly if it is incompatible with any of the Convention rights;
- Section 24 provides that a Minister or Northern Ireland Department has no power to introduce subordinate legislation or to do any act in so far as that would be incompatible with any Convention rights; and
- Section 75 requires a public authority to have due regard to the need to promote equality of opportunity between categories of persons, which includes matters surrounding disability.
- 1.2.7 These specific provisions within the 1998 Act focus attention on both the human rights compliance requirements of the legislature in Northern Ireland while also, under section 75, enabling specific emphasis to be placed on the particular context of Northern Ireland when considering human rights obligations.
- 1.2.8 The 1998 Act also served to create the Equality and Human Rights Commissions in Northern Ireland, and it is our view that these two bodies should have a significant role in participating in and scrutinising the human rights implications of the Welfare Bill within the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland.
- 1.2.9 At present, there is no evidence to indicate that any or any detailed analysis has been carried out into the impact of the Welfare Reform Bill on individuals who experience mental ill health.
- We recommend that the Assembly apply the Northern Ireland Act 1998 mandatory legislative provisions to the Welfare Reform Bill so that the Bill is both human right compliant on the face of the legislation and moulded to the particular needs of those seeking welfare assistance, in particular those individuals who experience mental health problems.

1.3 The international framework

- 1.3.1 As well as considering their human rights obligations under the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) and any impact the welfare reform provisions may have on protected rights (most notably Article 3, protection from inhuman or degrading treatment, and Article

8, respect for private and family life), the Assembly must also take cognisance of a variety of international treaties and conventions to which the UK, as the member State, is a signatory.

- 1.3.2 There would appear to be a complete absence of any analysis of compatibility having been carried out under the ECHR, the International Covenant on Economic and Social Rights (ICESR) and the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Disabled People (UNCPRD).

1.4 Absence of Regulations providing legislative certainty

- 1.4.1 We at Niamh are concerned that a significant level of detail as to the administration of Schemes and the way in which discretionary powers are to be exercised under the Welfare Reform Bill will manifest in secondary legislation in the form of Regulations.

- 1.4.2 The absence of draft Regulations to be considered and assessed concurrently with the draft primary legislation makes it impossible to properly scrutinise, from a human rights perspective, the likely impact of the outworking of the Bill's reforms.

- 1.4.3 This is all the more concerning if subsequent Regulations under the Bill are subject to negative affirmation rather than positive affirmation, as this will greatly limit any subsequent Assembly scrutiny. This concern also applies given the proposed 'confirmatory procedure' to which the Regulations are to be subjected.

- 1.4.4 We at Niamh are of the opinion that the planned provision of safeguards and the outworking of the primary legislation under the Welfare Reform Bill in secondary legislation, such as Regulations, are impossible to assess in a vacuum, yet may prove fatal to what may currently be considered human rights compliant provisions under the Welfare Reform Bill.

- 1.4.5 To this end, we would welcome a future opportunity to consult on the regulatory framework, which will serve to bring the provisions of the Bill to life.

1.5 Comment on selected clauses

The following are representational of our overarching concern that the Bill is not human rights compliant and are therefore illustrative rather than exhaustive.

- 1.5.1 Part 1, Chapter 1 – Universal Credit, Sections 1-12 (so referred to in the Bill)

- Payment of universal credit to only one member in a household could result in a reduction in the personal autonomy of individuals who suffer from mental ill health.

- 1.5.2 Part 2, Chapter 2 – Employment and Support Allowance; Sections 51-58

- The sanction of reducing benefits for individuals who fail to comply with work related requirements may result in destitution, arguably engaging Article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights. The positive act of the state in introducing provisions which restricts the availability of benefits coupled with a resulting situation which falls within the definition of "inhuman or degrading treatment" would serve to violate an individual's Article 3 rights. This would apply particularly to individuals with mental ill health who are, de facto, unemployable and who as a result of the manifestation of their mental ill health, lack the awareness or understanding of the need to inform the authorities within five working days of their "good reason" not to work. Such a test also inherently fails to take into account the fluctuating nature of mental ill health.
- In the absence of detailed Regulations, it is not possible to predict how the government may provide for vulnerable people to be assessed as to whether a particular activity is appropriate for that person or not. The complexity of factors affecting those with mental ill health negates against a Regulation being able to be significantly flexible and sensitively applied so as to allow a proper and appropriate assessment of that person to be carried out.

- 1.5.3 Part 4: Personal Independent Payment (PIP); Sections 76-94

- PIPs may result in a negative impact and a possible rights violation on the right of disabled people to independent living.
- PIPs fail to take into account the matrix of social, geographic and practical barriers experienced by those people whose interaction with society is limited through disability and mental ill health.
- PIP timeframes for qualification and assessment may leave people exposed at a very vulnerable time.
- The timeframes detailed throughout the provisions relating to PIPs seem arbitrary and without any evidence base.
- The absence of a discretionary power within the context of timeframes is unnecessarily harsh and practically challenging.
- Eligibility for PIPs continues to focus on the medical model of assessment rather than the social model, thereby resulting in significant factors such as social and practical issues, being delegated in significance or worse, ignored.

2. Section Two: Amendments to the Welfare Reform Bill

2.1 Evidence

We stress that full and fair assessment, decision making, appeals procedures and consideration of sanctions about persons who experience mental ill-health must be informed by independent and mental health opinion.

We note the misperception within the social security system that anyone with a health qualification is able to provide a valid opinion of a person with a mental health condition. Mental health is a specialist area of knowledge and many health professionals have only a basic training in this area.

We note the misunderstanding within the social security system that an individual's GP or statutory mental health team is always best placed to provide an opinion. If an individual's mental health has stabilised then the best source of current knowledge may be from a voluntary service which provides housing, day or other support.

As well as being fundamental to assessment, decision making and appeal, evidence is of central importance to the issuing of sanctions, discussed below.

We recommend that there is a mandatory requirement to seek independent, mental health expert opinion from health professionals and / or voluntary organisations with which the claimant has an established relationship at all stages of the welfare reform process including before sanctions are imposed.

2.2 Sanctions - The need for an evidence and advocacy based approach

Given the severity of the sanctions proposed in the Bill, we consider there is a need for an evidence and advocacy based approach to decision making.

We recommend that an individual has access to independent advice and representation in order to compile and present his / her evidence in situations in which sanctions are being considered.

Clause Specific Changes

Part 1, Chapter 2:

Claimant's responsibilities:

Clauses 26 and 27 - Relate to work related sanctions. It is clear from the wording of Clauses 26 and 27 that there is a requirement that “no good reason” should exist for a failure of a claimant to comply with requirements imposed under the Bill relating to work. Clause 25 provides for Regulations to make provisions for the circumstances in which a claimant may be treated as having complied with a requirement. The Explanatory and Financial Memorandum to the Bill does not indicate how the Regulations provided for by Clause 25 will be made, i.e. affirmative, confirmatory or negative resolution. We are of the view at Niamh that Regulations created under Clause 25 should be subjected to the affirmatory procedure for the reasons we have outlined above in light of the democratic and human rights benefits of this procedure.

In addition, we consider that possible “reasons” for failure to comply with work related requirements should specifically consider and address the particular vulnerabilities faced by people who suffer mental ill health and provide for a sufficiently flexible evidence base to allow for these vulnerabilities to be properly considered and given due weight. We also consider it essential that there is a legislative presumption, clear on the face of the legislation, that people with ill health be encouraged and facilitated to utilise independent mental health advocacy assistance in helping them prepare their evidential basis for seeking to establish their “reasons” for failing to comply with work related requirements. Such assistance should also be extended to allow independent advocate to assist the individual in the articulation of their case to the relevant authority, acting as the persons advocate should that be required.

Part 2, Chapter 1

Jobseeker Allowance

Clauses 46 - Interviews: Clause 46 amends Article 10 of the Jobseekers Order and requires attendance at and participation in an interview. People with mental ill health subjected to such interviews should be permitted to bring an independent advocate with them to assist them in participating fully in such interviews. The advocate should also be permitted, should the applicant wish it, to represent the views of the applicant at such interviews. We at Niamh are of the view that there should be a legislative presumption inserted into Article 10 of the Jobseekers Order 1995 as to the use of such independent mental health advocates rather than a discretionary power to allow them to be utilised in the way advocated for by us. A presumptive permission permitting the use of such advocates would limit any potential inconsistency in the use of discretionary powers as to when an advocate may or may not be used. This will provide legal certainty as well as arguably limiting the potential to challenge the Jobseekers Order by way of judicial review.

Clause 47, relating to Jobseekers Allowance, seeks to amend Article 21 of the Jobseekers Order. This should also include a regulatory presumption as to the use of an independent mental health advocate as both an assistant to create an evidence base for any reasons relied on and as an oral advocate at any subsequent hearing.

Clause 50 replaces provisions in the Jobseekers Order 1995 that relate to the responsibilities that JSA claimants must meet and the imposition of sanctions where JSA claimants fail to meet those responsibilities. The legislative intention for the amendments to the Jobseekers Order 1995 is to impose requirements on JSA claimants which are the same as for those who are subject to all work related requirements in universal credit. We therefore reiterate our previous request for the insertion of a presumption of advice and assistance to allow people with mental ill health to collate the necessary evidence base to enable them to fully articulate their position and to have access to the use of a mental health advocate to assist them in doing so, in whatever way is most effective for them.

Part 2, Chapter 2

Employment and Support Allowance

The above comments and recommendations, relating to the necessity to provide for legislative basis for facilitating a claimant with mental ill health prepare an evidence base and utilising an independent mental health advocate is also applicable to Clause 58, which deals with a claimant's responsibilities for employment and support allowance.

Part 4

Personal Independence Payment

The above comments and recommendations, relating to the necessity to provide for legislative basis for facilitating a claimant with mental ill health prepare an evidence base and utilising an independent mental health advocate, apply also to Clauses 79 and 80, which deal with the tests relating to a claimant's ability to carry out daily living activities and/or mobility activities.

An example of how the “particular circumstances” of NI may be reflected in the Regulations

The provisions of Clause 79 permit extensive use of regulatory powers to provide further detail required when assessing each individual claimant. For example, Clause 79 (3) (c) provides that Regulations “may” make provision about matters which are or are not to be taken into account in assessing a person. The use of the word “may” denotes a discretionary power to so act. It is, therefore, completely within the gift of the Assembly to ensure that Regulations introduced under the provision of Clause 79 (3) (c) reflect the particular mental ill health faced by people in NI as a result of the conflict and ensure these matters are dealt with appropriately and sensitively within the Regulations drafted.

A further example of how “particular circumstances” may be provided for within the legislation is Clause 79 (4). The wording of this Clause also includes the word “may” as it relates to Regulations detailing the information or evidence required for determining the questions when assessing a person's functioning relating to their activities of daily living and/or their mobility. This allows the Assembly to focus on particular on the type and methodology of data required and to ensure that people with mental ill health have access to the services they need to establish their individual evidence base. Clause 79 (4) (a) ostensibly provides a flexible approach which would also allow for the presumption of the use of an independent mental health advocate in the ways detailed previously.

2.3 Employment and Support Allowance (ESA)

We note that the policy intent of the one year time limit for contributory ESA Work Related Activity Group (WRAG) claimants is to underline the principle that it is considered as a short-term benefit and that claimants placed within the WRAG are expected to move towards work with the right support in place (EQIA p17). However we are concerned that this short time limit will not allow for adequate support for individuals experiencing mental ill-health to recover and stabilize their mental health to a level that enables them to seek work.

The focus of mental health care is on recovery, which is an individual journey that is influenced by the person's fluctuating mental health and well-being. Many individuals in the WRAG may have no or limited work experience, low educational attainment, and poor knowledge and skills that are necessary for employment. Such skills include self confidence, emotional regulation, problem solving, and inter-personal communication. The pressure of short timeframe may create undue stress and anxiety and undermine the individual's mental health.

The one year limit to the contributory ESA WRAG payment has been described as arbitrary, unfair and stressful, and without an evidence base. It provides an insufficient period of time for individuals to find employment. Coalition Government figures indicate that 94 per cent of people in the WRAG will need ESA for longer than 12 months. In the House of Lords debate, Lord Patel commented: “I believe that people with a disability or illness who have paid into the system should be able to receive support for as long as they meet the eligibility criteria for ESA and are unable to work due to their condition. What they need is enough time and the right support. What they do not need is to be penalised for not recovering quickly enough.” (Hansard House of Lords, 11 January 2012, Column 150).

Further, he noted that it is extremely important that a person in the WRAG who has been subject to the ESA time limit of 365 days is able to re-qualify for the contributory benefit at any time that they are subsequently assessed as eligible for the support group. This is very relevant to individuals with fluctuating conditions including mental ill-health. (Column 155)

It is noted that the Coalition Government acknowledged that it had not conducted a robust assessment about the impact that time-limiting ESA would have on the number of people in poverty, on health and social care budgets, and on the demand for benefits advice services. (Columns 153-4). This chimes with our concerns about the hidden costs of welfare reform for the health and advice sectors.

We recommend the removal of the time-limiting of Contributory ESA for WRAG claimants.

We recommend that individuals are able to re-qualify for ESA if they meet the eligibility requirements for either the Support or Work Related Activity Group at the end of the 365 day period or subsequently, should their condition fluctuate or deteriorate.

Clause Specific Changes

Part 1, Chapter 2

Employment and Support Allowance

Clause 52 inserts amendments after section 1 of the Welfare Reform Act (NI) 2007. The proposed new 1A (1) and 1A (4) (a) provide that the period for which a person is entitled to a contributory allowance must not exceed 365 days.

2.4 Personal Independent Payment

We note that the experience of ESA assessment, decision making and appeal foreshadows similar processes under PIP. It is difficult to have any confidence that these processes under PIP will cause any less anxiety and distress.

Niamh considers that the rotating 12 month assessment period appears to be an arbitrary period that does not properly reflect the subjective nature of mental ill health and its fluctuating character with regard to: manifestation, pattern and behaviour over a period of time.

The requirement that a person has their condition at the same level for three months prior to and six months following assessment is not appropriate for persons with fluctuating mental health problems and / or those who are trying to progressively recover their mental health. The requirement of a continuous level of mental ill-health is contrary to the principle of mental health recovery.

It is our view that, should flexibility in approach not be regulated for when considering people with significant mental ill health, then there exists a very real risk that such people may be made vulnerable and be exposed to factors which may serve to greatly exacerbate their condition.

We recommend that the arbitrary rotating 12 month assessment period is amended to allow for discretion in relation to persons with mental ill-health.

Clause Specific Changes

Part 4, Clause 80 - Niamh recommends the insertion of a provision in the Regulations relating to the “required period condition”, provision for which is made under Clause 79 (2), which gives cognisance to the likely impact of frequent reviews on persons with significant mental ill health. There is specific mandatory flexibility contained in Clause 80 (4) (a) and (b), which would allow discretion to be exercised in relation to this particular group of people.

2.5 Advice and representation provision

We at Niamh work closely with colleagues in the independent advice sector and recognise the essential work undertaken with local services and communities. The value of this advice and representation has been apparent in the successful rates of ESA appeal decisions. We note that there is not currently a clause providing mandatory access to independent advice and representation.

We recommend the inclusion of a clause(s) that establish mandatory access to independent advice and representation for persons experiencing mental ill-health through accredited organisations within the voluntary sector.

3. Section Three: Implementation of the Welfare Reform legislation

3.1 Regulations

The issue of Regulations is raised in Section One of this submission with regard to ensuring that the Welfare Reform legislation is human rights compliant. We note that much of the detail of welfare reform will be contained within the Regulations. It is difficult to anticipate the full implications of the provisions of the legislation without the draft Regulations.

We are concerned that the draft Regulations may be published so close to the commencement of the Welfare Reform legislation that it will not be possible to have full Assembly and public scrutiny. We are concerned that the Regulations will be a direct mirror of those introduced in the rest of the UK and will not reflect the specific characteristics of Northern Ireland, particularly with regard to the prevalence of mental ill-health, lack of employment opportunities, and the limitations on freedom of movement to access employment due to the sectarian geography of certain parts of the jurisdiction.

We recommend the timely publication of draft Regulations to ensure full scrutiny including human rights compliance.

We recommend the passage of regulations by affirmative resolution of the Assembly.

3.2 Public Information

Responses to discussions about welfare reform amongst our service users (members) range from acute distress and fear to assertions that 'it is nothing to do with me' by individuals who have been assured by social security staff that they are on DLA for life.

It is widely acknowledged that the welfare reform agenda represents the most fundamental change to the social security system since the establishment of the welfare state. We are seriously concerned at the lack of public information currently available about the scope of the reform, and the lack of planning for an effective public information campaign that will reach vulnerable groups. We consider that a public information campaign with specific supports of the scale and quality of the recent 'Digital Switchover' is required to ensure effective communication of welfare reform.

Niamh's Housing Needs Assessment (2010) and Day Services review (2012) found low levels of educational attainment, low levels of literacy and numeracy; in addition to the comprehension challenges of cognitive impairment associated with mental ill-health and the effects of some psychiatric treatments.

We recommend an effective public information campaign for vulnerable groups.

We recommend that all individual and public communications regarding welfare reform are reviewed in order to minimise anxiety and harm.

3.3 Digital by Default

The Niamh's Day Services Review provides an insight into the levels of digital access and competence amongst individuals experiencing mental ill-health. It found that almost one half (143, 46.9%) of Beacon members did not have access to or own a computer while more than a half (162, 52.9%) did not have access to the internet. Over two fifths are incapable of using a computer (41.8%, 127) or using the internet (48.6%, 148). Capability of using a computer and using the internet both decreased with age. (2012)

Concerns raised by the NIWRG regarding the 'Digital by Default' approach have included individuals low access to a private computer and quality of internet access; the lack of privacy and time limitations in accessing a public computer (for example in a library); the delay in registering a claim if the full form has to be completed; and the lack of clarity about the role of third parties in assisting individuals to complete the application form.

In terms of ongoing communication between the claimant and the social security office, we are concerned that this lack of access to computers and the internet, is compounded by individuals on low incomes and who are experiencing mental ill-health having access to a telephone.

We recommend the development of a short form to register an application for welfare benefits, which would be used as the commencement date for the claim i.e. the full application form does not need to be completed before the commencement date is registered.

We recommend that supports are put in place for non-digital application by persons who have no or limited digital access or who do not have the skills to undertake their application online by themselves.

We recommend clear guidance regarding the completion of applications with the assistance of third parties.

3.4. Stigma

Negative attitudes towards persons experiencing mental ill-health within neighbourhoods, workplaces and families have increased according to the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland's report 'Do You Mean Me?' (2012). Research by the Strathclyde Centre for Disability Research and the Glasgow Media Unit found increasingly negative reporting of disabled people with articles focusing on disability and benefit fraud; the alleged 'burden' disabled people place on the economy; and an increased of pejorative language to describe disabled people that reinforced the idea of disabled claimants as being undeserving (October 2011). Disability Rights UK's study 'Press portrayal of disabled people. A rise in hostility fuelled by austerity?' (August 2012) reported that such portrayal has led to disabled people feeling: hounded, humiliated, harassed, ashamed, depressed, inferior, degraded, devalued and scared. Persons who experienced mental ill-health reported deterioration in their condition.

We have launched Niamh's anti-stigma guidance for political representatives as part of our Change Your Mind campaign (October 2012).

We recommend that MLAs agree to avoid the use of stigmatising and inflammatory language about welfare reform and benefit claimants.

We recommend that MLAs use their influence to promote a measured and informed debate about welfare reform that recognises the necessity of social security provision for vulnerable members of society.

3.5 Procurement

We note the National Audit Office's report on DWP's management of the contract with Atos Healthcare: 'Department of Work and Pensions: Contract management of medical services'

(produced June 2012, published 18 October 2012). The report found that only 10% of the penalties triggered by poor performance had been applied; that the DWP had failed to check the accuracy of performance data submitted by Atos Healthcare; and that problems with the accuracy of forecasting data and the apparent lack of impacting the consequences of policy change hindered the Department's efforts to manage under performance.

We recommend that there are stringent performance requirements linked to the quality of medical assessments; and that mental health assessments are specified within this.

We recommend the inclusion of mandatory monitoring and review systems for private sector contracts including the use of proportionate, escalating and timely sanctions such as financial levers for poor performance.

NICCY 1

Submission by the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Children and Young People to the Committee for Social Development on the matter of the Welfare Reform Bill

Introduction

The Office of Commissioner for Children and Young People (NICCY) was created in accordance with 'The Commissioner for Children and Young People (Northern Ireland) Order' (2003) to safeguard and promote the rights and best interests of children and young people in Northern Ireland.

Under articles 7(2)(3) of this legislation, NICCY has a mandate to keep under review the adequacy and effectiveness of law, practice and services relating to the rights and best interests of children and young people by relevant authorities. In determining how to carry out her functions, the Commissioner's paramount consideration is the rights of the child and NICCY is required to have regard to any relevant provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.

The Commissioner has already put on record her deep concerns regarding the potential impact that the Welfare Reform bill will have on children and young people across Northern Ireland. The Office commissioned two reports on the issue of Welfare Reform which were launched in 26th April 2012 entitled "Welfare Reform Making Children Visible: Assessing the Impact on Children" and "Welfare Reform Making Children Visible: The Parity Question"¹. To complement this submission we also enclose a copy of the briefing we gave to the Committee at the time of the launch of these reports.

The Committee may be aware that I entered into correspondence with the Minister in November 2011 expressing my concerns that the Department had failed to meet their statutory responsibility under section 75 to assess the impact of these proposed policies on children and young people and asking him to review the EQIA conducted at that time. The Minister responded to me in December 2011 indicating that the draft EQIA document specifically stated that the "Department does not, as a matter of course, monitor certain s75 groupings for the purpose of administering the social security system in Northern Ireland, primarily because benefits are paid to individuals on the basis of entitlement and conditions which are in no way affected by affiliation to any of these Section 75 categories". I would reiterate that any change to the benefits system which is paid to any member of a family, irrespective of who the claimant is, would have an impact on the children of the family.

I would renew my call to the Minister to ask him to conduct a further EQIA of this bill now that it is at the legislative stage and in so doing to ensure that the deficiencies in the first EQIA process are remedied to ensure that the potential impacts on children and young people are assessed.

Since the publication of our reports, the Commissioner has met with Lord Freud, the head of the Social Security Agency and representatives of the children's sector. Further the office has sat as an Observer on the Welfare Reform group co-ordinated by the Law Centre NI who, we understand, are producing a clause by clause response to the bill.

1 <http://www.niccy.org/article.aspx?menuid=14265>

Clearly my focus is on the implications of this bill for both children and young people as direct recipients of benefits but also as indirect recipients and therefore my comments are confined to these areas.

In respect of Universal Credit and Personal Independence Payments at Parts 1-3 and 4 of the Bill, I have concerns regarding the impact of the proposals listed below on children and young people:

1. Conditionality and sanctions

Any sanction imposed on a claimant will have a detrimental impact on the children of the family. Children will have no control over their parent's compliance with conditions under the new system but will without question feel the impact of any sanction. Even the Westminster commitment to continue to pay the "child element" of benefits to "sanctioned" parents will not go far enough to protect the rights of children in "sanctioned" families as the removal of any income from household budgets will have a severe adverse impact.

I would therefore call on the DSD to ensure that the regulations which are to be issued on this matter ensure that no child suffers because of sanctions. The UNCRC is clear at Article 26 that a child's independent rights to social security and an adequate standard of living should never be affected by the imposition of benefit sanctions upon their parents or carers. In order to realise the rights of a child under Article 3 (best interests) the regulations should ensure that any decision to impose a benefit sanction upon a claimant with dependent children must take account of the best interests of the children of the family.

2. Proposed mechanisms to pay the benefit to the recipients.

My concerns focus on to whom the Universal Credit should be paid and also when it should be paid.

Under the current proposals Universal Credit will be paid to the main claimant, which is likely to be the male in a couple. There is evidence that money that goes directly to the mother is more likely to be spent on children than when it goes to the father. The Child Poverty Action Group has stated that "this transfer for thousands of pounds per family "from the purse to the wallet" will threaten allocation within household budgets to meet children's needs".²

Evidence would show that a move from weekly or fortnightly budgeting to monthly budgeting will cause serious difficulties, the consequences of which will be borne by children of the family. Further, given the reliance on one payment, any failure in the IT system or incorrect decision/delays/involvement in the appeals process could have severe consequences for families with children and could breach several Articles of the UNCRC including Article 26 (right to social security), 27 (right to adequate standard of living), 3 (best interest of the child) and 24 (right to enjoy the highest attainable standard of health").

I would call therefore that the Assembly should decide that the benefit should be paid to the main carer of the children of the family.

I have previously called for the Assembly to consult with groups of people bringing up children on low incomes and with other devolved governments for ideas on how these potential problems should be overcome.

I welcome the Minister's commitment to make representations to Lord Freud regarding the issue of "operational" flexibility for Northern Ireland in relation to the mechanisms for payment. It is my understanding that this should involve an IT amendment as opposed to any break in parity.

2 <http://www.cpag.org.uk/2011/120111.htm>

3. Benefit Cap.

As set out in my report above, we predict with confidence that 6,500 children in Northern Ireland will see their families lose money as a result of the benefit cap because they have 5 or more children. I would call on the Assembly to consider ways in which larger families can be supported to meet the needs of their children outside of the Universal Credit system.

4. Abolition of the Social Fund.

The Social Fund has long been a mechanism which has assisted families in urgent hardship. Figures from DSD in 2011 show that over half of the awards of Community Care Grants are made to lone parents. The Social Fund, if not replaced by a “ring-fenced alternative” protected in the Northern Ireland budget as an emergency fund for families, will result in a failure to provide for the best interests of the child, in accordance with Article 3 of UNCRC and is likely to result in breaches of the right to enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health (Article 24). Given that the Fund has previously been used to assist families fleeing domestic violence situations, any failure to guarantee crisis support could potentially put children at risk of abuse which would engage Article 19 of the UNCRC.

Crisis loans should also be available to claimants and families in need irrespective of whether these claimants have accrued debt or arrears of rent.

I would call on the Assembly to ensure that enough money is allocated to meet the basic material needs of families with children and that this money, however it is to be administered, is ring-fenced.

5. The Claimant Commitment.

As set out above in respect of sanctions, I have real concerns regarding the impact on children and young people of the Claimant Commitment. In particular where there are issues relating to the capacity of claimants to make the commitment on an informed basis and further for those with fluctuating conditions which may impact on their capacity to comply with the commitments. Any sanctions which would follow would inevitably have a detrimental impact on any children of the family.

I would call therefore for the Assembly to ensure that in regulating for this consideration is given, at all stages of the Claimant Commitment, from drafting the conditions through to the implementation and sanctioning of same that the best interest of the associated children of the claimant is taken into account.

6. Factors which are particular to Northern Ireland which could cause an impact on children and young people.

Childcare

Further, given the lack of a childcare strategy for Northern Ireland and an associated lack of accessible childcare there may be difficulties for parents to either go into work or to increase their hours as may be required by the Department.

Housing

There are housing factors particular to Northern Ireland also in relation to the type of housing stock in Northern Ireland both in the social and private rental sector in terms of a lack of houses of “multiple occupancy” and a lack of houses with certain numbers of bedrooms. Further there are the issues associated with the perception of housing being segregated in relation to religion/political opinion which would mean that a family’s choice of housing could be constrained.

DLA

It also cannot be overlooked that Northern Ireland has double the proportion of its population in receipt of DLA than in GB with recipients with mental health issues representing 23% of DLA claimants here compared with 17% in GB.

7. Changes to Housing Benefit.

The changes in the housing benefits system which have already been introduced, threaten children's rights – this will be compounded by Welfare Reform. NICCY has already called for NIHE accommodation which is deemed to be under-occupied but has children in it to be exempt from reductions in Housing Benefit.

NICCY has further previously highlighted the issue of non-resident parents who have contact with their children to be exempt from the shared room requirement in relation to housing benefit.

The potential for children to lose their home or have to move home and potentially schools, could infringe their rights under the UNCRC namely Article 3 (best interests) and Article 27 (adequate standard of living).

8. Changes to the Youth Employment and Support Allowance eligibility.

Youth ESA is a special arrangement which allows certain young people with long term significant or severe disabilities to qualify for contributory ESA without having to satisfy the usual National Insurance contribution conditions which require other claimants to have paid a minimum amount of contributions to qualify. If the Assembly confirm the proposed change then young people with severe disabilities will only be entitled to ESA if they satisfy the same requirements re contributions and income as everyone else. This is of particular importance to certain groups of disabled young people for example young disabled people who have been in the care system.

It is pertinent to highlight at this point that NICCY's remit extends to young people up to the age of 21 where the young person has a disability or has been care experienced.

NICCY would call for the Assembly to ensure that in regulating for this that the best interests of the children are considered and in particular that Article 23 of the UNCRC is respected. This provides that a child with a disability has the right to live a full and decent life in conditions that promote dignity, independence and an active role in the community. The numbers who receive "Youth ESA" are small enough to cost relatively little in breaking parity to maintain their rights.

9. Abolition of DLA and replacement by PIP.

Children under the age of 16 will be impacted by the abolition of DLA and its replacement by Personal Independence Payments in so far as their parents/carers are affected. However, due to the high rates of disability and ill-health among the NI population, many children with and without disabilities will risk a decrease in their family's income due to the changes.

As above, NICCY's remit extends to young people up to the age of 21 who are disabled. There are currently about 5,000 young people aged 16-20 receiving DLA. In particular the mobility element of DLA is vital part for the additional transport costs faced by many disabled young people. This relative independence will be threatened by the changes.

The rights of disabled children, or children of disabled parents are under threat. The Assembly has the power to protect the rights of these children and young people under Articles 2,3,6,23,24,26,27 and 28 and we would call on it to ensure that these rights are respected.

NICCY have previously called for the setting up of an expert group to examine the Work Capability Assessments (WCA) being carried out in regard to the new assessments for PIP. We have suggested that the expert group should include psychiatrists who work with people who have PTSD (due to legacy of the conflict issues) as well as pediatricians and other experts in childhood disability.

In conclusion, it is clear that a range of children's rights may be severely compromised by some of the provisions of the Welfare Reform Bill 2012. I would call on the Assembly to ensure that, in legislating, they ensure that the best interests of children and young people are a paramount consideration in their deliberations.

Research Reports on Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Proposals Briefing for the Northern Ireland Assembly

Social Development Committee

21 June 2012

This briefing paper provides an overview of two research reports commissioned by the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Children and Young People (NICCY) to inform the development and scrutiny of the forthcoming Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Bill. The paper:

- Outlines the role and duties of NICCY;
- Introduces the rationale for commissioning each of the reports; and
- Provides a summary of the key findings of each of the two reports.

1.0 The Role and Duties of the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Children and Young People (NICCY)

NICCY was created in accordance with The Commissioner for Children and Young People (Northern Ireland) Order 2003 to safeguard and promote the rights and best interests of children and young people in Northern Ireland. Under Articles 7 (2)(3) of this legislation, NICCY has a mandate to keep under review the adequacy and effectiveness of law, practice and services relating to the rights and best interests of children and young people by relevant authorities. The remit of the Office is children and young people up to 18 years or 21 years if the young person is disabled or in the care of Social Services.

In order to fulfil its duties, NICCY undertakes a broad range of activities. This includes responding to queries and complaints regarding services for children and young people and supporting them and their families in legal proceedings against public bodies, scrutinising legislation and policy and commissioning research into issues affecting children and young people. In addition, NICCY also creates effective participation opportunities for children and young people and actively supports good participative practices by other organisations.

In determining how to carry out her functions, the Commissioner's paramount consideration is the rights of the child and NICCY bases all of its work on the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC).

2.0 Report: 'A Child Rights Impact Assessment of the Impact of Welfare Reform on Children in Northern Ireland'.

Goretti Horgan and Marina Monteith, University of Ulster.

Purpose of report

The Minister for Social Development, in September 2011, published a draft Equality Impact Assessment on the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2011. Under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, the Department has a statutory duty to assess the impact of the proposed legislation on nine categories. The Commissioner was concerned to note that the EQIA did not assess the impact of the proposals on children, under the age category.

The EQIA process is an important way of protecting vulnerable groups from being adversely affected when Government Departments are carrying out their functions, in ensuring that any potential adverse impacts are identified and consideration given to alternative policies which might better achieve the promotion of equality of opportunity.

The Commissioner raised her concern with the Minister for Social Development, who responded by stating that any gaps in the EQIA was a result of a lack of data and that he welcomed any information we could provide on this matter. In response, NICCY commissioned an assessment of the impact of the proposals on children from Goretti Horgan and Marina Monteith of the University of Ulster. The findings of this research were provided to the Minister, and released publically, in April.

Summary of findings

Families with children are being hardest hit by welfare reform across the UK. But because Northern Ireland has a relatively large proportion of households with children and higher levels of disability, it will lose more income than any other region of the UK outside London. Households with children will lose about 7 percent of their incomes, some 2-3 percent more than childless households. The poorest families will lose most because:

- Benefit rates will progressively become lower and lower as the Consumer Price Index (CPI) is used to uprate them rather than the Retail Price Index (RPI)
- Child Benefit and Working Tax Credit have been frozen;
- Child Tax Credit will be withdrawn at lower income levels than before; and
- The weekly working hour's requirement in Working Tax Credit has been increased from 16 to 24 for couples with children – additional hours which are hard to get in the current economic crisis.

The most urgent issue that faces families with children in NI is the impact of changes to Housing Benefit that have already been introduced. These threaten a child's right under Article 27 to a standard of living which is good enough to meet their mental and physical needs. Many families with children will lose their owner-occupied homes; others will fall into growing arrears until evicted by private sector landlords, while other families will ration food or buy less healthy food in order to pay rent shortfalls. There are several ways in which the Assembly can make a difference without threatening parity:

- DSD can work with mortgage lenders to explore ways, e.g. co-ownership, or renting from banks, that families with children can remain in homes that are being repossessed.
- Households with children could be exempted from the move calculating LHA on 30th percentile.
- DSD could work with mortgage lenders and with landlords to bring down mortgage to rent ratios.
- Housing Executive accommodation that is deemed to be under-occupied, but has children in it could be exempted from reductions in Housing Benefit.
- The Assembly needs to make a clear decision about how older children are dealt with in the calculation of under-occupancy.
- The Assembly should exempt non-resident parents from the shared room requirement in relation to Housing Benefit.

The Assembly does not have power over tax matters, which are not devolved. However, working and child tax credits will be phased out with the introduction of Universal Credit and the Assembly will have the power to protect families with children, particularly those with a disabled member, in deciding how it will implement Universal Credit.

For example, it can explore ways to take into account of the very low paid nature of much self-employment in Northern Ireland and it can ensure that the criteria under which the disability elements of Universal Credit are triggered do not disadvantage children.

The Assembly should set up an expert group to ensure the Work Capability Assessments (WCA) being carried out to move claimants from IB to ESA and the new assessments which will be introduced as DLA is abolished and PIPs introduced take into account the particular issues of a region emerging from conflict where our high levels of mental ill-health are severely exacerbated by PTSD.

Benefit changes and the introduction of Universal Credit (UC) will also impact on children's rights in Northern Ireland. For example, families with three or more children where there is a severely disabled child are at risk of being affected by the benefit cap while families with five or more children will be hit by it whether or not there is a disabled child. The Assembly should examine how it can stop this effective limit on family size or find other ways of helping larger families meet the needs of their children.

The Assembly must ensure that the scheme to replace the Social Fund is allocated enough ring-fenced money to meet the basic material needs of families with children.

The Assembly can ensure that Universal Credit regulations around conditionality and sanctions take into account Northern Ireland's high levels of mental ill-health, its lack of accessible and affordable childcare and that the special rules currently applying to lone parents continue under UC.

The Assembly can also ensure that parents bringing up teenage children in areas of multiple disadvantage are allowed to give their children the care and supervision that parents living in better-off areas may not have to, or that better-off parents can buy through out-of-school activities.

Even where there is evidence that a parent could take paid employment but fails to, the evidence that children suffer even more deprivation as a result of overall household income falling indicates that the Assembly must ensure that children do not suffer as a result of such sanctions – while that means removing the sanction of benefit withdrawal from all claimants with dependent children, the amount that this breach with parity would cost would be relatively small as there is no evidence that there would be more than a handful of such cases.

3.0 Report: An Examination of Parity Principles in Welfare and Wider Social Policy

Barry Fitzpatrick, Independent Consultant and Professor Noreen Burrows, School of Law, University of Glasgow

Purpose of report

In Northern Ireland, while social security matters are devolved, the ability of the Northern Ireland Executive to determine its own approach to welfare provision is severely constrained by the 'parity principle'. This was explained by the Department for Social Development in its EQIA on the Welfare Reform (NI) Bill:

'the long standing principle of parity dictates that an individual in Northern Ireland will receive the same benefits, under the same conditions, as an individual elsewhere in the United Kingdom.'

Later the particular constraints were outlined, referring to computer systems and financial penalties, and the Department concluded that, as a result of these constraints,

'any departure from parity needs to be given the most careful and detailed consideration.'

The 'parity principle' has been alluded to quite a bit in discussions to date in relation to implementing Welfare Reform proposals, often without clarity on the degree to which flexibility can be applied. NICCY therefore commissioned Barry Fitzpatrick and Professor Noreen Burrows to produce a paper exploring the parity principle in welfare and wider social policy. This outlines the constitutional and practical context to parity, the factors that need to be considered when considering breaking parity and provides recommendations on how parity can be discussed in relation to Welfare Reform.

Summary of Findings

This report explores the operation of the parity principle in Northern Ireland (NI), drawing on experiences of Scotland. The focus is on the Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2012 (WR Bill), including Universal Credit (UC) and Personal Independence Payments (PIPs), although other areas of policy are also examined.

The report identifies a range of factors which must be taken into account in considering NI policy variations from parity with GB (or Scotland, England and Wales, as the case may be). These are:-

1. Whether statutory provisions require parity;
2. Whether variations from parity are desirable due to policy considerations;
3. What the financial impact might be on the NI block grant and other expenditure; and
4. Whether practical considerations, for example, compatibility of IT systems, preclude or limit variations from the GB systems.

In relation to the WR Bill, the statutory parity principle in section 87 of the NI Act 1998 is examined. This legislation requires consultation, at the earliest opportunity, between the Department for Social Development (DSD) and the Department of Work and Pensions (DWP) on proposals for changes to social security law, so that the DSD can include its input and consider possible policy variations in NI.

In relation to policy considerations, a number of existing policy variations are identified, demonstrating that, where the particular circumstances of NI justify it, such policy variations should be examined in relation to existing welfare reforms which need to be incorporated into the WR Bill and reforms which will be introduced through the Bill. Two such policy variations could include the payment of housing benefit element of UC to landlords and the payment of the child benefit element of UC to the primary carer.

In relation to the financial impact, 'no-cost' or 'low-cost' policy variations are easier to negotiate than ones which have significant financial implications.

On practical considerations, the development of new IT systems for UC and PIPs provides an opportunity to build NI-specific policy variations into the new systems, if they are negotiated early enough for this to be achieved.

Other areas of policy within the Commissioner's remit are also explored, including employment law, employment and training policy, equality law, education law and policy and children's rights more generally. There are areas of policy where there are also devolved powers in Scotland (and now Wales). The report suggests that policy-makers in NI should be more willing to examine devolved solutions in the other devolved countries, what is referred to as devolution triangulation, as well as relying on developments in England (or England and Wales). In welfare policy, this could apply to passported benefits and the operation of Social Fund payments.

The report makes the following recommendations:-

1. Although the Welfare Reform Act is already on the statute book in GB, the NI Executive should be fully involved in policy development surrounding secondary legislation required to implement the Act. It should also enter into discussions with the UK Government on a formal system of consultation on, and participation in, development of welfare policy, including opportunities for the identification of potential policy variations at an early stage of policy development, both in relation to social security matters and the consequential impact on more fully devolved matters.

2. It is recommended that the Welfare Reform Bill should not be progressed through the NI Assembly by accelerated passage. Instead full scrutiny should be made of all aspects of the Bill and consequential secondary legislation, with a view to the identification of potential variations in welfare policy to meet the particular circumstances of NI.
3. Therefore there may be arguments for a delay in implementing GB welfare reforms in NI until the implications of the reforms in NI (and GB) are more fully understood. However, there could be significant financial implications of such a stance.
4. While it would not be practical to lobby for a significantly different social security system for NI compared to GB, there is ample scope to lobby for the retention of existing variations from the GB model and also further variations to meet the particular circumstances of NI.
5. The NI Executive and Assembly should carefully consider the extent to which existing reforms, and their implementation, can be varied in NI as part of the introduction of the Welfare Reform Act.
6. The NI Executive and Assembly should carefully consider the extent to which existing variations in welfare benefits can be preserved.
7. The NI Executive and Assembly should carefully consider the extent to which variations can be made to Universal Credits and Personal Independence Payments which could alleviate the potential negative impact of these reforms on children and young people in NI.
8. The NI Executive and Assembly should carefully consider the extent to which existing expenditure on passported benefit payments can be preserved, so as to provide a system which meets the needs of children and young people in NI. In particular, they should look closely at policy development on passported benefits in other devolved countries such as Scotland.
9. The NI Executive and Assembly should carefully consider the extent to which existing expenditure on Social Fund payments can be preserved, so as to provide a system which meets the needs of children and young people in NI. In particular, they should look closely at policy development on Social Fund expenditure in other devolved countries such as Scotland.

4.0 Conclusions

The Commissioner for Children and Young People commissioned both these reports in order to inform the debate on the forthcoming Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Bill. The first report was commissioned to investigate the likely impact of the proposals on children in Northern Ireland, as this had not been addressed in the Department's EQIA. The purpose of the second was to bring clarity to discussions of 'parity' or 'operational flexibilities' in relation to the Welfare Reform proposals through exploring its application more widely.

It is disappointing to note that the final version of the EQIA is little changed from the draft produced in September 2011, and that there has been no further consideration given to the impact of the proposals on children. This is despite the Minister's commitment to giving serious consideration to the findings of the two reports. The Commissioner has met with the Minister on 12 June to discuss the findings of the two reports and the implications for the implementation of his Welfare Reform proposals. The Minister has agreed to arrange further meetings between Departmental officials and NICCY to discuss this in relation to the Bill when it is released.

The Commissioner hopes that the two reports she has commissioned will assist the Committee in its consideration of the Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Bill. The Commissioner will also draw on the findings of the reports in her analysis of the Bill, which will be submitted to the Committee in due course.

Submission to the Committee for Social Development on the Welfare Reform Bill 2012

October 2012

1. Introduction

The Northern Ireland Council for Ethnic Minorities (NICEM) is an independent non-governmental organisation working to promote a society free from all forms of racism and discrimination and where equality and human rights are guaranteed. As an umbrella organisation¹ we represent the views and interests of black and minority ethnic (BME) communities.²

Our vision is of a society in which equality and diversity are respected, valued and embraced, that is free from all forms of racism, sectarianism, discrimination and social exclusion, and where human rights are guaranteed.

Our mission is to work to bring about social change through partnership and alliance building, and to achieve equality of outcome and full participation in society.

NICEM sits on a number of consultative fora and networks dealing with human rights and equality issues in general and welfare reform (ICTU Welfare Reform group) in particular and fully supports the work of other organisations.

As already mentioned NICEM represents a number of BME communities and we have also been involved in providing bi-lingual client services over the last number of years. This submission has been informed by the challenges and difficulties faced by those clients in accessing social welfare on a day-to-day basis. NICEM has seen first hand the effect that the misapplication of EU law can have on EU migrants who have entitlements under EU law. We have also experienced the restrictive nature of the social welfare system as it currently stands in terms of non-EEA nationals living in destitution which is a clear breach of international human rights obligations.

Therefore, this submission does not purport to conduct a comprehensive legal analysis of the Bill. In that regard we would like to take this opportunity to endorse the Law Centre (NI)'s submission. Instead, this submission will look at the impact of the proposed changes to the welfare system would have on BME communities, in particular the experiences of clients in contact with the Belfast Migrant Centre.

2. The right to social security and legal obligations

The right to social security is enshrined in a number of international human rights instruments to which the UK is a party and the obligation to implement this right is one of a legally binding nature. This right appears in a number of United Nations (UN), Council of Europe and EU law instruments.

1 Currently we have 27 affiliated BME groups as full members. This composition is representative of the majority of BME communities in Northern Ireland. Many of these organisations operate on an entirely voluntary basis.

2 In this document "Black and Minority Ethnic Communities" or "Minority Ethnic Groups" or "Ethnic Minority" has an inclusive meaning to unite all minority communities. It refers to settled ethnic minorities (including Travellers, Roma and Gypsy), settled religious minorities, migrants (EU and non-EU), asylum seekers and refugees and people of other immigration status.

Firstly, at the UN level, the right to social security is enshrined in Article 9 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.³ The Covenant also refers to the concept of progressive realisation, which prohibits States from taking retrogressive measures or retrograde steps to row back on socio-economic rights, even in times of recession. It is submitted that the spirit of the Welfare Reform Bill itself represents a retrogressive measures.

The right to social security is also enshrined in other instruments such as the UN Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Secondly at the Council of Europe level, Article 1 of Protocol 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) (which has been incorporated into domestic law by the Human Rights Act 1998) recognises a right to property. At this juncture it is worth bearing in mind that Article 14 ECHR states that all rights of the Convention must be implemented without discrimination. Therefore, every individual's right to social security must be equally protected, irrespective of nationality for example. In addition, in accordance with case law it is arguable that the ECHR prohibits state-enforce destitution under Article 3 of the Convention.⁴

Thirdly, the right to social security is enshrined in the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. While the Charter only has legal effect when implementing EU law, it is highly relevant for the EEA migrant workers represented by NICEM because they are exercising their right to free movement and therefore the Charter comes into effect.

3. Access to social welfare

Migrants have increased difficulty in accessing social welfare in terms of lack of local knowledge and therefore, navigating the administrative system, sometimes without access to interpreters, lead to increased difficulties.

NICEM is deeply concerned by the Department of Work and Pensions indication that all applications for Universal Credit will now be processed online and claimants will need a bank account.⁵ Currently, it is quite difficult for non-British/Irish citizens to open bank accounts upon arrival due to anti-terrorism legislation.

Therefore, any move to administer payments in this manner would lead to increased barriers for migrants and could potentially lead to migrants living in destitution.

4. Rights of EEA nationals and compliance of the Welfare Reform Bill 2012 with EU law

Social security is coordinated by EU Member States on the basis of established principles of EU law such as the free movement of workers and equal treatment. Coordination is governed by Council Regulation (EC) No 1408/71 and Regulation (EC) No 884/2004.

While the Welfare Reform Bill is an enabling Bill and most of the details will be teased out in the regulations, we are concerned that Northern Ireland will adopt the same approach as that of Great Britain. There has been some indications by the Department of Work and Pensions which would lead to differential treatment of EU migrants or would potentially discriminate against EU migrants by paying EU migrants lower rates of pay or putting extra restrictions or requirements. If the same approach is adopted in Northern Ireland this would impact the following clauses in the Welfare Reform Bill:

- a. Clauses 8-10: calculation of awards

3 For further comment on the content of this right see, UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, General Comment No. 19: the right to social security (Article 9), 2007, available at: <http://daccess-dds-ny.un.org/doc/UNDOC/GEN/G08/403/97/PDF/G0840397.pdf?OpenElement>.

5 DWP, Universal Credit - FAQ, available at: <http://www.dwp.gov.uk/docs/universal-credit-faqs.pdf>.

b. Clause 22: work requirement

In addition we are concerned that clauses 61-63 may have ramifications for migrants who may experience a change in immigration status as they no exclusion in relation to contributory benefits has been provided for.

Furthermore, the DWP has indicated that a new residence test will be introduced. Such a test has previously been held to be in breach of EU law and it is therefore recommended that the Committee seek to ensure that this will not be introduced.

In our experience, cases where there are entitlements under EU law are often refused due to the misapplication of EU law. Indeed, at the moment the European Commission is in the process of infringement proceedings against the UK in relation to the application of the right to reside test⁶. NICEM strongly urges the Committee to conduct a thorough review of the Bill to ensure that EU law will be fully complied with and that EEA nationals will be able to access their entitlements without discrimination since otherwise this would inevitably lead to maladministration of EU social security law, which would inevitably result in litigation before the courts.

4. Clause 69 and potential impact of changes to Housing Benefit on BME communities

Clause 69 and the proposed changes to Housing Benefit may lead to increased difficulties for migrants accessing housing. The case study below illustrates the problems currently faced by migrants:

Case Study

2011

Nationality: Polish

Mr. L is a sixty five year old man who has been in Northern Ireland since 2005. When he arrived he worked for a few years before becoming ill. He was in receipt of Employment Support Allowance and Housing Benefit. He had a severe back injury and was not able to work or gain any other income. He was dependent on his Housing Benefit to keep him from becoming homeless.

After a routine assessment his ESA was stopped as they decided that he was no longer ill. Because his ESA was stopped his Housing Benefit was also stopped. He was now at risk of homelessness.

We appealed the ESA on the basis that they had not taken his hearing problems into account and he was lip reading at the assessment, which prevented him from having a full understanding of what was being asked.

We supported him with our crisis fund to pay for rent until the appeal went through. Upon appeal his ESA was successfully reinstated. After this we spoke with Housing Benefit which was restarted.

5. Clauses 76-94: Problems with current administration of DLA and potential impact of PIP on BME communities

Clauses 76-94 and the proposed changes to DLA may lead to increased difficulties for migrants with disabilities who are liable to suffer multiple discrimination. The case study below illustrates the problems currently faced by migrants:

6 European Commission, Press release, "Social security coordination: Commission requests United Kingdom to end discrimination of EU nationals residing in the UK regarding their rights to specific social benefits", http://europa.eu/rapid/press-release_IP-11-1118_en.htm.

Client came to the Clinic. She has low rate care DLA. She had applied for DLA in 2009 and received low care and low mobility. She asked for a supersession, which she was granted in January 2010. However in Feb/March 2010 they sent an examining medical doctor who determined that she wasn't in need of the mobility component. This doctor and the occupational therapist did not use an interpreter. The mobility was taken away.

The Tribunal supported the supersession. She now wants to appeal this decision, which has to go to the social security commissioner. We helped the client submit an appeal.

On appeal, the client has received a new DLA award and it has been increased to high rate mobility and middle rate care.

Consultation: Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Bill

Introduction

The Northern Ireland Federation of Housing Associations (NIFHA) represents registered and non-registered housing associations in Northern Ireland. Collectively, our members provide around 36,000 good quality, affordable homes for renting or equity sharing, as well as a wide range of community services. In 2010/11 registered housing associations developed a record number of social homes, with 2418 starts, and enabled almost 500 households to part-buy a home. Further information is available at www.nifha.org

NIFHA welcomes the opportunity to respond to the Welfare Reform Bill as introduced in Northern Ireland. We support the over-arching objectives of the legislation to simplify the benefits system and provide stronger incentives for people to move from welfare to work. However we also believe that many of the specific measures in the legislation are unfair and could cause major problems for vulnerable people and those on low incomes. Below we set out our concerns on specific clauses in the Bill, including those on housing costs, size criterion, discretionary payments and information sharing.

We recognise that much of the detail of the legislation is intended to be set out in the subsequent regulations. It is our understanding that there is no legal duty to consult on these, and there will be no provision for debate or amendment once the Bill is passed. We would therefore ask that the GB regulations be scrutinised as part of the Committee Stage and that amendments in regard to Housing Benefit changes be made in the body of the Bill.

Part 1 Entitlement and Awards

Clause 11 Housing Costs

Clarity on extent of housing costs covered

The clause outlines that housing costs covered could be in the form of rent, mortgage costs or other housing-related costs. Clarity is needed within this clause and the subsequent regulations with respect to the definition of rent and what may be included as part of housing costs. In particular the legislation needs to reflect the fact that service charges are a significant element of housing association tenants' overall housing costs.

Extended payments

The Welfare Reform Bill does not allow for housing costs run-ons, also known as extended payments, when claimants start work. Under the current system housing benefit (or support for mortgage interest) continues for four weeks after an individual has found employment which helps claimants to transition from benefits to wages. We already know that the Universal Credit regulations being drafted in Westminster plan to abolish extended payments. NIFHA believes that the decision to abolish the current system of extended payments contradicts the Government's objective of improving incentives for the long-term unemployed to take up work. Given the high levels of long-term unemployment in Northern Ireland the Assembly may wish to consider continuing extended payments upon the introduction of universal credit and write this provision into the Bill.

Clause 11 (5) should be amended to allow for regulations to provide for housing costs to continue for a period of four weeks after a claimant has found employment

Exempt Accommodation

Supported housing is vitally important for many vulnerable people in Northern Ireland and changes to how housing benefit is administered and paid could have significant impacts on the accommodation and services that are available to them. NIFHA welcomes DWP's decision to remove the housing costs for supported housing from Universal Credit as it recognises the higher costs for this form of accommodation and the need for greater flexibility in providing support to tenants. However, this does still leave a number of issues to be worked out in relation to supported housing. For example, will removing these housing costs from Universal Credit mean that they are no longer demand-led and therefore mean a reduced pot of money if claimant numbers increase in the future?

We endorse the Housing Policy Forum's call for a working group of supported housing providers and representatives to be set up to work with officials in the Social Security Agency on how housing costs for exempted accommodation are to be managed within the new benefits context.

Part 3 Other Benefit Changes

Clause 69 Housing Benefit Determination of Appropriate Maximum

This clause indicates that the Department will bring forward regulations that will introduce size criteria into the amount of benefit allowed for housing costs. In many cases this will have significant impact on tenants' ability to pay their rent. Initial indications are that this will have an adverse impact on approximately 6500 housing association tenants who will have to pay an additional £9.00 per week if under occupying their home by one bedroom or £17.00 per week if under occupying by 2 or more bedrooms.

The reduction in benefit will bring financial hardship to many families who are already experiencing shortfalls elsewhere in their income. We have strong concerns that many tenants may be penalised by having their benefit reduced without being able to address this by moving to a smaller home because of the lack of suitable accommodation.

We would ask that consideration be given to:

- Exempt disabled people living in social housing properties specifically adapted for their needs; and
- Phase in this part of the Bill to enable social housing allocation policies and new provision to reflect the size of households being accommodated in social housing

Clause 70 Ending of Discretionary Payments

We welcome the research undertaken to inform decisions with respect to a replacement scheme for future discretionary support services in Northern Ireland and we hope the suggestions made in our consultation response are reflected in the regulations.

The proposed increase in the discretionary housing payments budget to £3.4m is acknowledged, and we hope this will be of assistance to tenants in the social housing sector. However, the financial effects of the size restrictions in the social sector introduced by the Bill will result in benefit savings – and therefore lost income to tenants – of £15.51m during the same period. We therefore anticipate that there will be severe pressure on the comparatively small budget allocated to support these changes, and that this budget may need to be increased.

Part 5 Social Security General

Clause 116 Information Sharing in Relation to the Provision of Overnight Care

NIFHA welcomes that people with disabilities that require an overnight carer will be allowed the facility of an extra room (we assume bedroom) for use by a non resident carer or team of carers. However the wording suggests that NIHE housing benefit teams will receive information that will allow them to assess this. Does this mean that NIHE will retain all or part of the responsibility for the assessment of housing costs in cases of this type?

Housing associations should be added to this list as a 'relevant body' in sub-section (8).

This would enable full consideration to be given to the vulnerable tenant's welfare and benefits, allowing housing associations to provide appropriate support to these tenants.

Clause 117 Information Sharing in Relation to Welfare Services

Housing providers are a vital source of support and advice to their tenants on these welfare reforms. They need accurate real-time benefit information to assess which tenants will be affected by the changes to provide appropriate help, as well mitigate the risks to their revenue.

Housing associations should be added to the list of 'qualifying persons' in subsection 7 of this clause to allow a more effective welfare, housing and benefits service to be provided to tenants.

The sharing of appropriate information between housing associations, Supporting People and housing benefit teams would enable a joined up approach to be applied to individual tenants' needs.

NIHE

Briefing for Social Development Committee
25 October 2012

Introduction

The Housing Executive welcomes the invitation to make a submission to the Committee. This Bill represents an important piece of legislation for Northern Ireland which will significantly change the welfare reform system and have an impact on social housing in Northern Ireland.

We are aware that the Bill deals with the creation of Universal Credit, the replacement of Disability Living allowance with Personal Independence Payments, the reform of the Social Fund, Housing Benefit reforms, the benefit cap; and conditionality and sanction powers.

While this submission deals with the impact of the changes to Housing Benefit on social sector tenants in the main, we will also make reference to the impacts on other changes contained in the Bill.

The Housing Executive welcomes the concessions which Minister McCausland has secured for Northern Ireland. These operational flexibilities, particularly the continued direct payment of the housing costs element of Universal Credit to landlords will help to limit the impact on low income tenants, help to avoid rent arrears, with all the implications that can have for claimants and their families and help to prevent increases in homeless presentations.

Department

The Minister has asked the Housing Executive in its role as regional housing authority and also as a landlord to assess the implications of the Welfare Reform Bill on housing services in Northern Ireland.

The Department for Social Development has convened a number of Working Groups which the Housing Executive attends. The Housing Executive has also completed a detailed analysis of the indicative impacts on its applicants, tenants and business activities and is working closely with colleagues in the Department and Housing Associations to review policies and services in the light of the forthcoming reforms. Any changes, for example in the Housing Selection Scheme, will need to be consulted on and agreed and or approved by DSD in due course.

Key Issues

1. Regulations

The Welfare Reform Bill is enabling legislation and much of the detail will be in the regulations which we understand will be grouped into three packages depending on their operational date. NIHE would like to make a more detailed commentary on sight of the Northern Ireland regulations. Nevertheless it is possible to comment on some aspects of the Welfare Reform Bill itself with particular reference to how these may impact on NIHE.

2. Under occupation (Clause 69 Appropriate Maximum Housing Benefit AMHB)

Under-occupation level	Singles	Couples	Family	Totals
1 bedrooms	9,215	601	9,034	18,850
2 or more bedrooms	5,415	1,047	856	7,318
Totals	14,630	1,648	9,890	26,168

The table above shows that a substantial number of NIHE tenants (26,168) will be affected by the under-occupation rule. This represents around 60% of all NIHE tenants of Working Age claiming Housing Benefit. Of these, over 7,000 are under-occupying by more than one bedroom and would incur the higher restriction.

We are aware that the Minister is still discussing flexibilities in Northern Ireland with Lord Freud but the Housing Executive is also considering the ways in which we can mitigate under occupation for our tenants.

We are also aware that Discretionary Housing Payment is set to increase from £3.4 to £6.9million. The increase will be primarily used to help offset the impact of the under occupation rules.

3. Vulnerabilities

Significant changes will arise as a result of the personal independence payments in Part 4 and Chapter 4 which will influence overall levels of personal/ family finance in relation to households with disabled people. While other disability related benefits are not intended to be used for housing costs any reduction in housing benefit will impact on the overall usage of family income. The additional costs of living with disability are well documented.

The administration and targeting of a range of services, including DFG grants where eligibility is determined by passport benefits will require new arrangements. It may prove challenging to identify specific benefit strands within the combined universal credit system.

While older people will be exempt from these changes, it is difficult to see how inequalities in housing services for disabled people might not arise as a result of the introduction of welfare reform legislation and in particular deductions in housing benefit resulting from under occupation. While the House of Lords debate of the 15th October 2012 makes reference to the use of discretionary payments, there is real concern regarding the adequacy and sustainability of such provision.

We are still awaiting details on the households affected by the Benefit Cap which will be implemented through a deduction from the award of Housing Benefit from April 2013. When the information is available we will be able to model the impact.

Part 5: Sanctions

The Bill introduces a new civil penalty for giving false information to be administered by the Housing Executive. There could be significant costs in administering such Civil Penalties. The word “negligently” is used in relation to making an incorrect statement or giving incorrect information. This is a very subjective term and could lead to inconsistent decision-making.

NILGA

Welfare Reform

This paper is presented in draft form to the Social Development Committee in response to its Call for Evidence in relation to the Welfare Reform Bill. The NILGA Executive Committee is meeting with DSD officials on 9th November, after which this paper will be finalised and any further comments forwarded to the Social Development Committee.

Derek McCallan, Chief Executive

29th October 2012

Introduction

NILGA, the Northern Ireland Local Government Association, is the representative body for district councils in Northern Ireland, representing and promoting the interests of the 26 local authorities and supported by all of the main political parties in Northern Ireland.

We trust that our comments will be taken into account when developing the final proposals. This response has been developed further to a joint NILGA/DSDNI seminar held to consider the proposals contained within the Bill, held on 23rd October and attended by local government members and officers.

For further details on this response, please contact Karen Smyth at the NILGA Offices. k.smyth@nilga.org (028) 90798972.

Context

Although councils are not directly responsible for implementation of social security or welfare policy, this is a critical issue for many of our more vulnerable and disadvantaged citizens, and will have major impact on their lives for the foreseeable future.

Although the Bill hopes to help more people into or back to work, there will also be aspects of this legislation that will impact on children, particularly from poorer families, older people, young people seeking social housing, and those who have become known as the 'working poor'.

Addressing and combating poverty is a key focus for many of our members, who are fully aware that Northern Ireland already has a greater than usual percentage of the population who are forced to choose between heating and eating. It is hoped that any changes to the welfare legislation will not exacerbate this situation.

Although this is a UK wide initiative, it is important that we encourage the Committee to reflect on the different life experience of people in Northern Ireland, and to examine how variations to the national position might be made possible to lessen the negative impact on our most vulnerable.

As a society, we in Northern Ireland must reflect on the impact of our recent past on levels of physical disability and mental health, we must consider the facts in relation to our lack of childcare provision, our limited housing stock and our high levels of young people not in employment education or training. We must look at the reasons for our high levels of economically inactive citizens, and begin as a region, to address the problems we have, in addition to providing a safety net. There is a pressing need to ensure an integrated approach across government to begin to deal with the impact of Welfare Reform.

NILGA is keen to work with colleagues in the Assembly and on the various committees, to develop the vision outlined in the Programme for Government of “a shared and better future for all”, and to outline how local government can contribute to this overarching ideal.

With the advent of council-led statutory community planning, area planning and regeneration, it is timely to explore how local civic leaders should influence the policy and legislation directly affecting the disadvantaged.

In the next few years, the role of councils and councillors will develop further as we take on new functions, and it is vitally important that we are prepared to take on new challenges, including the challenge of improving the economic and social well-being of our citizens.

It is within this context that NILGA and the Department for Social Development held a policy discussion event in the NILGA Offices on 23rd October 2012 to discuss the Welfare Reform Bill and to develop a local government view.

At this seminar, members availed of the opportunity to discuss their concerns with the Chief Executive of the Social Security Agency. It became evident from the outset, that there is a high level of disquiet within local government in relation to the changes this Bill is likely to bring about, and also a serious lack of clarity as to the potential for an exacerbated impact due to the conflation of the Work Capability Assessment, Universal Credit and the Personal Independence payment.

Members and officers present at the seminar voiced serious dissatisfaction in relation to the operation and efficiency of the WCA, which will be forwarded to the Committee in a separate letter. NILGA is aware that a Judicial Review of the WCA is currently underway in GB and would encourage the Committee to seek an urgent review of the system in place, to address continuing concerns.

Specific concerns in relation to the Welfare Reform Bill are outlined below in sequential order:

Parity

It is appreciated that it is difficult for the NI Assembly to break with parity on Welfare Reform, but it is vital that protection is ensured for the most vulnerable. NILGA would encourage the Committee to have regard to the recommendations made by the NI Commissioner for Children and Young People, in the report; “An Examination of Parity Principles in Welfare and Wider Social Policy”, published in April 2012. The Committee is reminded of the special circumstances of Northern Ireland, with our higher than average levels of physical disability and mental health issues related to our recent past.

Part 1 - Universal Credit

Chapter 1 “Entitlement and Awards”

Clauses 1 – 10:

Introductory, Entitlement and Awards, Responsibility for Children and Young Persons

The principle behind Universal Credit (UC) is difficult to argue with, in that there is value in making the benefits system more efficient, but it must be ensured that the poorest benefit the most from the system. There is no doubt that the necessary behavioural change at the heart of this Bill is going to be a massive challenge, and that the education process will be vital, including the provision of budgeting training and advice. It is therefore noted with some consternation that the advice services currently established in Northern Ireland are unlikely to obtain any additional support from government in the face of this systemic overhaul.

The proposal to taper payments, to design out the current ‘cliff-edges’ is broadly welcomed.

The Minister’s efforts to tailor the proposals to suit the Northern Ireland social context are welcomed and should be strongly encouraged to continue.

- The agreement that the housing element of UC can be paid direct to landlords rather than the customer is strongly welcomed.
- Although a change from a monthly to a fortnightly payment is some progress, it is likely that a fortnightly payment will still cause a financial struggle for some households. In addition, NILGA would note that many employees in Northern Ireland, e.g. many local government technical services employees, are paid weekly. The committee is therefore encouraged to propose that the facility is made for payments to be allocated on a weekly basis to facilitate those most in need of a more regular payment and also to ease transition back into the workplace on a ‘like’ basis to the majority of people on lower wages, who are paid weekly. If a change to the computer system is envisaged to enable a fortnightly payment, then it is likely that instead, making a change to a weekly payment, would involve a similar resource.
- The agreement to the Minister’s proposal that payment might be split between two parties in the household is welcomed, but the practical outworking of this will be critically important. It will be vital to ensure that payments are made in a manner which protects any children in a household, and therefore, that there is a robust mechanism in place to ensure that the split is agreed beforehand.

NILGA would encourage the Committee to have regard to the views of the Women’s Resource and Development Agency on those issues that particularly impact on women and children within households.

Clause 11: Housing Costs

Further to the Minister obtaining agreement from DWP that benefits can be paid to the provider, the most pressing concerns in relation to the housing element of the UC proposals now centre on the ‘under-occupancy’ principles being introduced. This issue is dealt with in comments on Clause 69.

Clause 12: Other particular needs or circumstances

NILGA members, whilst noting the aim of re-integrating people into the workplace, are deeply concerned by the standard of implementation of the Work Capability Assessment, linked to the objectives of this clause. NILGA will be writing to the Committee separately on this matter.

It is noted that this clause provides a mechanism to include a payment for working claimants to provide for formal childcare in respect of eligible children. NILGA would encourage the Committee to consider this clause within the context of the significant shortfall of childcare provision available in Northern Ireland and to examine whether or not the proposed payment is likely to be adequate, enabling a return to work. The concerns of the Women's Resource and Development Agency are particularly noted here, and in particular their view that government policy in this areas is regressive, with a significant negative impact on women.

Chapter 2 "Claimant responsibilities"

NILGA's main concern is in relation to the WCA process of assessing that a person is fit for work. The claimant responsibilities outlined on the Bill are noted, and the view has been expressed by NILGA members that attitudes to work are in all likelihood similar to those in GB.

Clauses 19, 20 and 21

It is noted that:

- there will be no requirement to work places on the responsible carer for a child under the age of one;
- a claimant who is the responsible carer for a child aged at least one and is under a prescribed age (which may not be less than 3) will be subject to work-focused interview

NILGA is of the view that this prescribed age a child of whom the responsible carer is subject to work-focused interview should be raised to 'not less than 5'. The Bill proposes to reduce the point at which single parents will be required to seek work, to the date when their youngest child reaches their fifth birthday. NILGA is very concerned that compelling single parents to seek and take up any job as soon as their child starts school, will limit their long term prospects and ability to increase their income through work. The lack of childcare provision in Northern Ireland exacerbates this issue.

Clauses 26, 27 and 28

NILGA is concerned in relation to the potential for sanctions to be imposed, for example on lone parents (leaving children vulnerable), and is of the view that the regulations enabled by Clause 28 will require detailed consideration, once drafted.

Clause 30: Delegating and contracting out

NILGA has been monitoring with interest, the issues in relation to some of the private sector providers of Departmental services both in Northern Ireland and in GB. It is critically important that if a service is contracted out, appropriate monitoring arrangements, and review mechanisms are written in to the procurement process and contract. Relevant contracts should be of a short length particularly during the early days of the implementation of these changes, to enable flexibility and improved practice to be built into the system. If a contract is not being fulfilled satisfactorily, the department must reserve the right to revoke it.

Chapter 3 "Supplementary and General"

No comment to make on this section.

Part 2 – Working Age Benefits

Chapter 1 "Jobseeker's Allowance" and Chapter 2 "Employment and Support Allowance"

No comment to make on these sections.

Chapter 3 “Income Support”

Clause 59: It is noted that a lone parent whose youngest child has reached the age of 5 will be required to move from receiving Income Support, to JSA or ESA (depending on their capability for work). NILGA would restate the views outlined in the response above, to Clauses 19-21.

Chapter 4 “Entitlement to Work”

The Northern Ireland Strategic Migration Partnership has been notified of clauses 61-63 and may choose to respond to the Committee separately.

Part 3 – Other Benefit Changes

Clause 69: Housing benefit – Determination of appropriate maximum.

Local Housing Allowances

A potential cause of homelessness, raised by the NI Housing Forum, is related to rental and market values of properties. It will be necessary to review the position regarding rental values in social housing provided by Housing Associations (publically funded) to ensure they are in line with rental benefit rates. Local Housing Allowance rates must continue to be based on market rental values, as discrepancies could lead to homelessness or over-reliance on Discretionary Housing payments.

‘Under-occupancy’

Further to the Minister obtaining agreement from DWP that benefits can be paid to the provider, the most pressing concerns in relation to the housing element of the UC proposals now centre on the ‘under-occupancy’ principles being introduced. Greater flexibility is sought, for example to include families who care for foster children, or whose homes have been specially adapted to deal with a disability.

There is serious concern in relation to provision for parental overnight contact with children. Although it is appreciated that Discretionary Housing Payments are available in some circumstances, this will not provide for vulnerable children who require parent access or for children with complex disability related requirements.

NILGA would seek to retain the exception status for ‘supported housing’ properties. These are currently administered separately and are not under existing rent restriction.

In relation to current housing provision, it will be important for the Committee to cross-reference the Bill to existing housing policy. NILGA is deeply concerned by the potential change that will be required to the nature of rented housing provision across Northern Ireland. The current ethos for building social housing is to develop ‘lifetime homes’. The introduction of the Welfare Reform Bill will require a huge uplift in demand for houses in multiple occupation and single bedroom units, and has the potential to radically change the character of large areas of cities, towns and villages right across Northern Ireland. There is a strong likelihood that communities will be displaced. There is also potential for an increased incidence of homelessness as a result of a lack of ‘Welfare Reform Bill-compliant’ housing in some areas.

Clause 70: Ending of Discretionary Payments

The discretionary social fund is to be abolished, as is the office of the social fund commissioner. Instead, budgeting loans for advance payments of benefit will be absorbed in UC as will ‘sure-start’ maternity grants and cold weather payments. It is of note that the Social Security Agency has commissioned a research study to inform decisions about a replacement scheme for future discretionary support services in Northern Ireland. It seems somewhat premature that such proposals have been included in the Bill before a replacement mechanism has been agreed.

Part 4 – Personal Independence Payment

Clauses 76-94

The chief concern outlined by NILGA members at their recent seminar, centred on assessment, largely due to the experience of the introduction and implementation of the WCA assessment. There is concern in relation to the potential combined financial impact of WCA and PIP assessment on the disabled. It is also evident that there is a lack of clear information available on the new system and a great deal of confusion as to the proposed changes. The Committee is encouraged to consider Baroness Grey-Thompson's recent report "Holes in the Safety Net: The impact of Universal Credit on disabled people and their families" which contains accurate forecasting information in relation to the impact of the Welfare Reform changes on the disabled, with figures that take Northern Ireland into account.

It seems certain that fewer people will qualify for PIP than currently qualify for DLA, and that those who do may qualify for a shorter period of time.

Assessment Concerns

The qualifying period for DLA is currently 3 months, and NILGA would strongly oppose the proposal to extend the qualifying period for PIP to 6 months. PIP is intended to assist people with disabilities to meet additional costs faced as a result of that disability. There is no justification for doubling the current qualifying period. This extension is likely to result in unnecessary financial strain being placed on people with disabilities, for a mere administrative reason.

It must be ensured that the persons carrying out the assessments are appropriately qualified and have attained a recognised level of expertise. This is particularly important when assessing cases in relation to mental health conditions such as depression. It is currently understood that some legal work is underway regarding nurse-led assessments and that the outcome is pending.

Local councillors have highlighted major issues with the current medical examination assessments and centre locations. Feedback received from the SSA and the Minister has state that their analysis is that all of the centres in Northern Ireland comply with the Disability Discrimination Act and that customer satisfaction from their perspective is above the 90% target. Local analysis (e.g. in Dungannon) would suggest that this is not the case, and members are reporting issues in relation to DDA compliance in addition to other issues with performance.

NILGA notes with some concern that the PIP assessment contract is on the verge of being awarded, and can only hope that the issues raised in relation to WCA assessments have been 'designed-out' of this latest contract.

It is vital that those being assessed experience good practice that upholds their rights, including:

- right to representation at examinations
- right to seek clarity on what is being recorded
- right to take notes (for own personal use)

Provision of information

NILGA would request that the Committee places concern for local people at the forefront of its consideration of this part of the Bill, and that it ensures adequate resourcing for provision of information in relation to the changes, to ensure a good level of public understanding of moving from three levels of benefit to two.

Clause 92: Transition

NILGA notes that provision is made for transitional arrangements in relation to PIP, and trusts that appropriate mechanisms will be introduced.

Part 5 – Social Security: General

Clause 95: Benefit Cap

It is observed that the proposed ‘benefit cap’ is intended to ensure that a single person’s or household’s entitlement to welfare benefits for a defined period is no more than ‘estimated average earnings’ for the same period. The overwhelming impact will be on large families living in high rent areas, for which housing benefit changes will already make life significantly harder. It is worth noting that less than 1000 people in Northern Ireland will be impacted by the cap.

Clauses 116-120: Information Sharing

The proposals to enable information sharing between government agencies are noted. NILGA would query whether the computer systems of relevant agencies are currently compatible, and in addition, whether it will be ensured that the new system being designed to cope with welfare reform will be compatible with existing systems.

Data protection is a huge issue, and it must be ensured that sensitive personal information is not vulnerable to hackers and other ‘cybercriminals’, or otherwise vulnerable, particularly at the most exposed points of information exchange between agencies.

Part 6 – Miscellaneous

Clause 128: Dog Licenses

NILGA notes the proposal in relation to reduced dog licence fees for those in receipt of income-related benefits. This is a continuation of current concessions.

Part 7 – Final

No comment to make on this section

Other

Cash protection

NILGA would welcome the transitional protections to be introduced, in that the government has stated that no-one will be worse off at the point of transition on to UC. It is unclear however, as to how long this transitional ‘cash protection’ will last. If protection will only apply until someone’s circumstances change, this could be a matter of weeks (for example if hours of work fluctuate), meaning that many of those affected by a so-called notional decrease, will soon be impacted by a real decrease within a short space of time after transferring to UC. In addition, the transitional protection will only commence from October 2013, by which time many of the other social security cuts will have taken place.

Practical Outworking: 'Computer says no'

Members and officers within local government are deeply concerned by the proposal to move almost completely to an online system in relation to benefits, and the potential loss of a person-centred approach as a result. If the 'computer says no' there must be an adequate system in place to enable the claimant to appeal the decision, and it would be preferable for customers to be able to seek assistance in a holistic way to address their issues.

There are a number of issues in relation to IT provision for Northern Ireland, the lack of broadband coverage in some areas and the lack of proper consideration to the infrastructure that will be needed, for example, closure of rural libraries may remove access to computers entirely for some rural dwellers. Other social inclusion and equality issues will need to be taken into account in provision of this system.

Employment Prospects and integration with Economic Policy

NILGA would remind the Committee that we are in the midst of an economic downturn, in a period of rising inflation, cuts to benefits, budgets and public sector work. This Bill may set the scene for preparing people for work, but there may not be any work for them to go to, particularly in rural areas. For example, Northern Ireland is dependent on 10 companies for the majority of its exports. It is vital that the Northern Ireland Executive, and in particular, the three Ministers for Social Development, Enterprise Trade and Investment, and Employment and Learning are working close together to ensure we have a willing and suitably skilled employment base, and jobs for them to go to. Councils can, and will, assist in working in an integrated way at local level.

Conclusion

Northern Ireland presents particular circumstances in relation to welfare reform and arrangements to move people into employment that must be addressed as creatively as possible, within the bounds of parity.

It is vital to communicate the proposed changes to the public and in particular those who need most support. Clarity of message is key to ensuring that a sound understanding of the new welfare landscape develops.

There is an urgent need to ensure that advice services are well-informed and resourced to meet with what is certain to be an influx of requests for assistance. This should include a guidance pack, and training for elected members. There is likely to be huge demand for assistance with budgeting, debt advice, housing advice etc, and this must be planned for, with in particular, SSA staff trained to give a holistic view of entitlements, not just the 'bare bones' of customer need.

A review/redress system must be built into the process, to improve policy as it develops, and to ensure contracts are well-managed and delivered satisfactorily.

NIPSA

NIPSA Response to the Welfare Reform Bill

19th October 2012

NIPSA Response to the Welfare Reform Bill

1. Introduction

- 1.1 NIPSA as the largest public sector trade union in Northern Ireland with over 46,000 members welcomes the opportunity to respond to the NI Welfare Reform Bill.
- 1.2 NIPSA is in the unique position of having a significant interest in the social policy aspects of the Bill which will impact on society and on many NIPSA members who are currently in receipt of a number of existing benefits such as Child Tax Credits, Working Tax Credits and Housing Benefit. In addition the proposed changes also affect those who are unable to find employment or who are unable to work for a wide range of reasons including disability, unavailability of appropriate affordable childcare and unavailability of work.
- 1.3 In addition NIPSA represents the staff in the Social Security Agency and the NI Housing Executive, who currently deliver the majority of the benefits impacted upon by the Welfare Reform Bill. The Outline Business Case which has been produced by the Department of Social Development and accepted by the Department of Finance & Personnel indicates that by 2017 there will be significant job losses brought about by the introduction of Universal Credit and other benefits impacted upon by the Welfare Reforms. It is estimated 1,630 jobs (35% of the current workforce) will be lost across the SSA, NIHE and HMRC. For this amongst other reasons NIPSA are opposed to these welfare cuts. At a time of high unemployment, with NI at 8.2%, being the highest of all 12 regions with the staggering figure of 23.4% youth unemployment being well above the UK average of 19.3%. The promise of further public sector job losses will have a further negative impact on the economy and is not acceptable. NIPSA is calling on the NI Assembly to address this important issue and ensure there are no job losses as a result of any change to the social welfare system in Northern Ireland. NIPSA believes that at the current time there are neither the jobs nor employment opportunities available to address the objectives of the proposals contained in the NI Welfare Reform Bill and we are seriously concerned that the safety net of the Welfare State will be removed at a time when it is needed more than ever. We are of the view that just to remove the drastic aspects of this Bill is not enough as the remainder will impact negatively on thousands of citizens in NI and that is not acceptable. We are not alone in our views on this and other major organisations among the Voluntary and Community Sector and the Churches share one voice in our opposition to a Bill that is predicated on cuts. We are therefore responding on the basis that we are opposed to this Bill and our comments are an attempt to lessen the impacts of these proposals by removing and/or amending clauses. We attempt to provide clarity and information on the negative ramifications in order to aid the Committee's scrutiny of the Bill using the experience and expertise of our Trade Union Sides in the impacted organisations. This is in order that when the Committee are aware of the huge damage that these welfare cuts will mean for our society in Northern Ireland that you will refuse to implement them.
- 1.4 NIPSA are aware that the Department of Social Development are using the Family and Resource Survey figures for 2009/10 which in our view does not reflect the current economic circumstances and therefore will give a flawed picture of who and how many families will be affected by the changes which will come about if the Bill is enacted. NIPSA would insist that updated and relevant figures from the 2010/11 FRS data are used to test the negative impact, as this will best reflect the downward shift in the economy.

2. Consultation Arrangements

2.1 NIPSA is deeply concerned at the arrangements for consultation by the Social Development Committee whereby the draft Welfare Reform Bill was tabled in the NI Assembly on 1st October 2012 and the Social Development Committee are seeking comments on the draft Bill by 19th October 2012. Given the significance of elements of this Bill to NI society and the negative impact on the NI Economy, with approximately £500m being removed from the economy it is inappropriate for the Committee to give interested organisations and stakeholders less than 3 weeks to compile detailed and comprehensive responses. NIPSA would therefore formally request that the Committee extend the period by which evidence to the Committee can be submitted and heard.

2.2 This response is therefore prepared within the unacceptable constraints imposed by the Social Development Committee as our initial response. NIPSA reserves the right to raise further issues and evidence with the Committee beyond 19th October 2012.

3. Universal Credit – Part 1 [Clauses 1 – 44]

3.1 Clause 1 – While NIPSA is supportive of the simplification of the benefit system, NIPSA do not believe that Universal Credit will deliver a more simple and straightforward application process for claimants. Any new or revised benefit will require significant support from well informed and highly trained staff who can explain the process to applicants. Given it is envisaged that this benefit will primarily be delivered on-line NIPSA has serious reservations that those who are less IT literate, who don't have ready access to IT and those with physical and mental health issues will be severely disadvantaged. Indeed we have not seen any proposals by DSD to address these issues and we are aware of a previous PricewaterhouseCooper (PWC) report commissioned by the SSA, in relation to the Strategic Business Review that concluded that claimant's preferred face to face contact as opposed to Web based contact. This could be due to age; complexity of personal circumstances etc and claimants need to be able to have face to face interaction with the Benefit office.

3.2 Clause 2 - NIPSA has grave reservations regarding this clause. In the main the award of a payment to a "couple" will be paid to the male. There are significant issues with this proposal such as domestic violence, alcoholism, gambling etc. There is a significant body of evidence which shows that in the majority of cases the main responsibility for child care is predominantly carried out by the mother. Therefore if the claim is paid to the household, assuming that this is the male in the household, then it is of concern that both the mother and the children in the family may suffer. It is readily accepted that the mother generally takes responsibility currently for the payment of household bills and food. This clause is potentially discriminatory to women and children. NIPSA believes this clause should be subject to further scrutiny under Section 75 of the NI Act. NIPSA understands that this facility may be achieved through the IT systems.

3.3 NIPSA would wish to ensure that full consultation takes place on any Regulations in which a member of a couple may make a claim as a single person. The example in the explanatory memorandum which accompanied the Bill is very narrow eg "where one member of a couple does not have a right to reside in Northern Ireland". This is not acceptable and there will need to be many other "circumstances" when this would be applicable. NIPSA would strongly advocate that the default should be a single claim with the option of a household claim.

3.4 Clause 4 – NIPSA has concerns that to be eligible for Universal Credit an individual "is at least 18 years old". NIPSA believes there are a range of circumstances where this threshold needs to be lower to ensure that a young person, who is not currently living in a family unit, has access to Universal Credit. This could be where a young person is coming out of the care system or is estranged from their parents for a variety of reasons.

- 3.5 Clause 4 – NIPSA also have reservations regarding the claimant commitment which is commented on later in this submission [See 4.2].
- 3.6 Clause 5 – NIPSA welcomes the introduction of a proposed taper which means that an individual who finds employment is able to retain more of their earned income before their universal credit award begins to reduce. NIPSA however believes this should be set at the highest level possible and reserves our position on this matter pending the publication of the corresponding regulations.
- 3.7 Clause 6 – NIPSA reserves its position in respect of this clause until the Regulations are available.
- 3.8 Clause 7 – NIPSA is opposed to monthly payments of Universal Credit and believes that this should be the choice of the claimant. For those who have recently become unemployed and who had been used to monthly budgeting the payment of Universal Credit on a monthly basis may be appropriate. For others who have been used to weekly payment of wages or who have been in the benefit system for a period of time the transition to monthly payment is likely to cause serious financial hardship. NIPSA would therefore wish to ensure that there should be choice at the commencement of each period of new claim for an option to be exercised by each claimant for either fortnightly or monthly payment. In a recent survey 67% of those in employment are paid monthly; 4% paid fortnightly and 29% weekly. NIPSA would suggest that those in lower paid and potentially less secure employment are currently paid weekly and a move to monthly payment of benefits would cause financial hardship should they become unemployed. It is imperative therefore that the IT system is flexible enough to ensure that choice is given to those claiming and in receipt of Universal Credit. NIPSA would argue that choice is the default position. NIPSA understands that DWP have agreed to the amendments to the IT facility to allow for fortnightly payments.
- 3.9 Clause 8 - NIPSA is concerned that a household will have a cap applied irrespective of the circumstances within the household ie the number of children within that household. Northern Ireland has a greater number of larger families than the rest of the UK and therefore as child benefit is to be incorporated into the cap along with a range of other benefits then the cap [which has been published elsewhere as £26,000] will disadvantage those with larger families. Therefore the impact on children of larger families in relation to educational outcomes, health and wellbeing etc will be diminished. NIPSA believes this element therefore needs to be subject to the rigors of equality legislation as it has the potential to be discriminatory towards children.
- 3.10 Clause 9 – Standard Allowance - See earlier comments at para 3.2 (Clause 2) regarding the treatment of joint claimants.
- 3.11 Clause 10 – Responsibility for Children and Young Persons – Research has highlighted that there is a higher cost of living for disabled persons and on that basis the text in clause 10 (2) states that regulations may make provision for the inclusion of an additional amount if such a child or qualifying young person is disabled. It is difficult to judge without the detail of the regulations if this means that the Benefit Cap would be extended to allow for additional elements for children and young persons and if that were the case we would welcome that, indeed the same applies for Para (4) that may provide for exceptions.
- 3.12 Clause 11 – Housing Costs – NIPSA has serious reservations about this clause. It appears that those families living in the social rented sector are to be seriously disadvantaged. Currently the housing waiting lists are 40,080 with 22,156 in housing stress. Therefore it is difficult to understand how families who will be impacted upon by the “under occupancy” proposals are to be dealt with. One example could be where a young person is away from the family home for a period of time and is likely to return. This could be because the young person(s) are attending university or away from home to obtain work. In those circumstances NIPSA believes parents, or those with parental responsibility, should not be disadvantaged by the “under-occupancy” proposals. This proposal specifies that social tenants who under occupy a home by 2 or more bedrooms are to face a reduction in Housing Benefit by 25%. Those who under occupy by 1 bedroom are to face a 14% reduction in Housing Benefit. Clearly this will have a significant impact on these households and may force tenants to seek to move to a home with a lesser number of bedrooms which are currently unavailable.

3.13 In the NI context the housing stock is not available to realise the proposed legislation. Furthermore 90% of the social housing stock in Northern Ireland is segregated. Therefore NIPSA would suggest that as a different housing structure is in place in Northern Ireland then a different solution must be found for Northern Ireland which recognises the fact that we are coming out of over 30 years of conflict which has led to this segregation. While it is recognised that the NIHE is doing excellent work to address this and introduce new “mixed housing” this represents only 10% of the social housing stock.

3.14 It is also unclear how this clause will be applied and interpreted when it comes to families who do not live in the same household. Will a parent who has access to a child for a number of days or nights per week be penalised by the under-occupancy rules. In addition there are serious child protection issues whereby a child may be expected to sleep in the same bedroom as a male parent. Thereby this clause has the potential not to address the requirements of the Children’s Order which put the rights of the child at the centre. NIPSA supports the rights of the child in relation to the Children’s Order but also has serious reservations that the implications of Clause 11 could lead to the further breakup of families and access of parents to children because of under occupancy rules. Again NIPSA are concerned that there appears not to be any work carried out on how many, where and whom exactly this will impact upon. Without that this clause needs to be removed as in the NI context it will simply not work.

4. Chapter 2

Conditionality and Sanctions [Clauses 13 – 30] Claimant Responsibilities

4.1 General: NIPSA has significant concern over the clauses set out in Part 2 on the basis of the current economic climate in Northern Ireland. Currently there are over 63,000 on the unemployment register with another 50,000 deemed as economically inactive but who are willing to work if there were suitable employment opportunities. This means that there are approximately 113,000 people looking for jobs but only 3,000 vacancies (July 2012 DETI report).

As the Committee will be aware with unemployment in NI rising (currently at 8.2%) which is different from the rest of the UK then we argue strongly that it is inappropriate to put in place higher level conditionality which individuals will not be able to meet because of either the lack of jobs or lack of affordable childcare. Unlike the rest of the UK, Northern Ireland has no childcare strategy and on that basis, along with high unemployment and low vacancies rates, we strongly believe that the punitive measures contained within these clauses cannot work and to implement them without available jobs is reckless and the clauses should be removed.

NIPSA also has concerns that individuals may find it difficult to take up employment even if it is available depending on whether it is accessible from a transport perspective. Outside of the central Belfast area there is a lack of public transport which would allow someone to take up work as there may not be suitable transport links to ensure they could get to and from work within a reasonable period of time.

4.2 Clause 14 - Claimant Commitment - What happens in the circumstances whereby only one of a couple signs up to a claimant commitment? Does the sanction apply to the “couple/ household”? This could therefore impact on one of the “couple” and children. NIPSA would propose that this clause needs to ensure that in this set of circumstances there is no detrimental impact on the second adult in the couple or the children in the family unit.

In addition NIPSA has concerns regarding the claimant commitment and the work preparation, work search and work availability requirements in the current climate of high unemployment.

- 4.3 Clause 15 – Work Focused Interview – NIPSA reserves our position until we see the details of the regulations.
- 4.4 Clause 16 – Work Preparation Requirement - In the current economic climate it is unrealistic for individuals to be expected to obtain work at a higher rate of pay, additional hours etc. It is also of concern that the work preparation requirement may include taking part in a health-related assessment to be carried out by a health professional. It would appear this is aimed at those who are unable to work because they have a disability. This pigeon holes these individuals and focuses the individual on what they cannot do, not what they can do. This goes against all that those charged with responsibility for assisting disabled people have worked hard on. I.e that the person focuses on the positive rather than negative.
- 4.5 Clause 17 – Work Search Requirement - NIPSA believes that while it is realistic to ask someone to look for work while they are unemployed it is unrealistic to ask them to spend all of their time in seeking a job when there are severely limited job opportunities. For those who are unemployed for a longer period of time they can only fill in application forms, register with employment agencies, seek references etc for as long as it reasonably takes. NIPSA believes that rather than stipulate that the person must look for work on a full time basis that it should stipulate they are expected to take all reasonable steps to find work.
- 4.6 Clause 18 – Work-Availability Requirement – Similarly NIPSA believes in the current economic climate the ability of individuals to take up paid work, increase the number of hours they work or get paid work is severely restricted and therefore would recommend that this clause is not implemented until the economic situation significantly improves.
- 4.7 Clause 19 – Claimants subject to no work-related requirement - Para (1) states that the Department may not impose any work related requirement on a claimant falling within this section i.e. a claimant with limited capability for work-related activity. More people failing the Work Capability Assessment means that more people with health conditions have to claim Job Seekers Allowance and so will be subjected to an inappropriate requirement of work-related activity if the Department did not decide to exempt them. Similarly for a claimant with responsibility for a child under the age of one, support for childcare costs must ensure that work pays for a parent on minimum wage with childcare costs. But this is not addressed and there is no childcare strategy. If the system cannot guarantee that it can make work pay in these circumstances then the associated conditionality regime cannot be applied. We reserve our position to further comment when the detail in the regulations is known.
- 4.8 The above also refers to clauses 20 and 21.
- 4.9 Clause 22 – Claimants subject to all work – related requirements
- As far as we can understand where a claimant is able to take up full time work at 36 hours then these numbers of hours are to be used to find a job? It is not clear from the Bill if this is the case but we have gleaned this information from Hansard records of evidence provided by the Department. If this is the case we find it unrealistic. Particularly in the current circumstances of high unemployment this work related requirements that cannot be met may attract an unreasonable sanction which we will deal with under paragraph 26.
- 4.10 4.10 Clauses 23, 24 and 25 - Connected requirements, Imposition of requirements, Compliance with requirements
- There are many barriers to participation in the workplace for different categories of society. People over the age of 50 could find it harder to find work due to discriminatory practices yet there is no recognition of barriers but rather requirements and compliance which is deeply worrying given that Universal Credit is predicated on conditionality and sanctions.

4.11 Clause 26 - Higher Level Sanctions

NIPSA have already made the point about the barriers that exist that prevent claimants from taking up work - lack of jobs, lack of affordable childcare and health issues. Taking that into account we are alarmed that Universal Credit aims to penalise people who are victims of unemployment. A reduction of a claimant's award in the event of certain failures (barriers) could last up to 3 years. This will lead to hardship and in reality destitution. Whilst we find it reasonable to expect a job seeker to look for work this clause states that if a claimant fails to comply with a requirement imposed under a work search requirement to apply for a particular vacancy for paid work or by not taking up an offer of paid work then a sanction will apply. There could be issues with regard to the location of the job which may render it unsuitable due to no available public transport, but this clause could deem that as failure to comply and thus attract a sanction. There will also be sanctions applied to those claimants who by reason of misconduct or voluntarily and for no good reason ceased paid work or lose pay. It is NIPSA's experience that there are some rogue employers who by nature of their behaviour cause people to be ill and those people are eventually sacked for dubious reasons and NIPSA are concerned that they will fall into the category of being blamed for leaving work and a sanction being applied and NIPSA deem that unfair.

NIPSA would state that as it has been accepted that NI has unprecedented unemployment that where there is a precarious job situation with high levels of casual and part time employment then a sanction for not finding work or increasing hours or pay cannot apply and as such these clauses need to be removed. This is an operational issue and, in our view, does not breach parity arrangements on the rates of benefit and failure to have in place a safety net has the potential to remove people from the system altogether.

4.12 Clause 30 – Delegation and contracting out - NIPSA has severe concerns that these reforms and the parallel clauses are the platform which will lead to the privatisation of both front-line and back office functions. Which will lead to a system run for profit which forgets about those that it is there to provide for, we would point out the issues surrounding the ATOS contract. NIPSA are committed to a fully functioning social security provision that should be carried out by public servants.

5. Part 2 – Working-Age Benefits – Chapter 1 – Jobseeker's Allowance – Claimant responsibilities for interim period

5.1 Clause 45 - Claimant commitment for jobseeker's allowance - NIPSA is strongly opposed to the use of the phrase "other person" in line 11-14 of clause 45 where it states the commitment may be drawn up by "or other person as may be designated by the Department". NIPSA would contend that this is clearly a role for the Department of Social Development or the Department for Employment and Learning and is totally opposed to any other third party carrying out functions currently undertaken by members in the NICS departments.

5.2 Clause 46 – Interviews - NIPSA would ask for further clarification on what is meant by "conducting interviews remotely" as referred to on Section 220 of page 35 in the Explanatory and Financial Memorandum and page 25, line 4 of Clause 46 of the Bill where it states "participate in an interview in such manner, time and place" as the Department or Department for Employment and Learning see fit. NIPSA would require further clarification on the implications of this point and await the outcome of a proposed pilot by the Department for Employment and Learning currently being undertaken in the Employment Service.

5.3 Clause 47 –Sanctions - NIPSA would require more clarity on the detail of Higher Sanctions with regards to Misconduct as referred to in Clause 47, line 11, 2 (a) "through misconduct loses employment as an employed earner;" and in the Explanatory and Financial Memorandum section 230, page 37 "a sanction will not be applied if the claimant can demonstrate good reason for the failure (except in cases where the claimant loses a place on a training scheme or employment programme through misconduct)"- does this include disputed cases of dismissal via misconduct and cases where the claimant was dismissed but has a tribunal or other legal measures pending with regards to their dismissal?

NIPSA is further opposed to the Imposition of Sanctions on non work required benefit claimants who may voluntarily leave employment as outlined in Clause 26, Other Sanctions, lines 39-42 which allow for these claimants to be treated the same as full work group for the purposes of sanction if they cease employment. NIPSA is opposed to the mandatory work requirement for disabled people and therefore opposed to the sanctioning of benefits for disabled people who are already in work based, on their decision to voluntarily leave that work.

NIPSA would also be seeking further clarity around the role of the imposition of sanctions and who imposes the sanction on the benefit of the client.

NIPSA would also seek further clarity on the duration of sanctions as referred to in section 223 of the Explanatory and Financial Memorandum which states “a claimant’s award of jobseeker’s allowance or joint-claim jobseeker’s allowance to be reduced for up to three years in respect of any one failure where they have failed to meet the most important requirements placed upon them”.

6. Part 2 - Chapter 2 - Employment And Support Allowance

6.1 Clause 51 – Dual Entitlement -The dual entitlement arrangements could see a person not sanctioned under ESA but sanctioned under Universal Credit if they had dual entitlement.

6.2 Clause 52 - Period of entitlement to contributory allowance - “Time Limiting” of the Period of entitlement: This concerns the period for which a customer who qualifies for ESA under contributory rules is being reduced to 365 for those customers who have ‘Limited Capability for Work’.

This will mean that thousands of customers who have been assessed by a Health Care Professional (HCP) as having significant disability or reduction in function and therefore have limited capability for work will lose their benefit after only one year. This would disproportionately affect older people who have made some savings provision for their retirement and this in effect may remove their only source of income despite them being too unwell to work or indeed look for work. It would also impact on people medically retired from employment where a “Lump Sum” was paid to them.

Clause 52 also limits the amount of time a person currently claiming ESA “Y” (Youth) can receive ESA. This also is limited to one year if they are assessed to have a significant disablement. Customers on Contributory Incapacity Benefit (“C” IB) who are assessed only as having limited capability to work would not receive any ESA after conversion.

In all cases ESA “C” will stop after a year unless the customer is assessed as having a “severe” disablement or reduction in function and limits ESA to 365 days if not in the Support Group including claimants on IB.

These proposals are a fundamentally flawed concept punishing people who have been paying their contributions all their working life. The implications on family members who have to support them when benefit runs out are extremely serious. The proposals will also have the unwanted effect of removing the independence of sick/disabled people.

6.3 Clause 53 - Further entitlement after time-limiting - Allows for a customer whose contributory ESA has stopped to restart if their condition has deteriorated to such an extent that it is now considered or deemed severe. There is no scope within this for money or claims to be backdated. Any award under this clause lasts only as long as they are given by a Decision Maker (DM)/HCP before another assessment, after which another determination will be made. These periods even in cases of severe disablement can be for as little as 3 months.

6.4 Clause 54 - Condition relating to youth - ESA “Y”: Clause 54 removed ESA “Y” as a benefit for any new claimants and therefore disabled young people will no longer be able to qualify for ESA. Removal of Employment and Support Allowance for young people will disadvantage this vulnerable section of society in getting a helping hand to independence. This must be scrutinised under NI equality legislation.

6.5 Clause 55 Claimant commitment for employment and support allowance - has completely rewritten what obligations the Department will be placing on customers who have a Limited Capability for Work. These obligations can include a work placement which is essentially unpaid labour.

This clause also makes it clear that the customer obligations can be altered at the whim of the Department and that the customer must fulfil the requirements of the most recent update to their “obligation”. There is no similar obligation on the Department to find suitable and/or accessible placements that take into account issues such as mobility and accessible transport.

This clause also makes it clear that if the customer does not fulfil their obligation or provide enough evidence to the Department then sanctions can be placed on their benefit.

6.6 Clause 55(4) “Thinks Fit” is very open to interpretation and also the level of seniority of the person making this judgement is not defined.

6.7 Clause 56 - Work experience etc - Clause 56 allows for work placements to be included as part of the “Customer obligation”.

6.8 Clause 57 - Hardship payments – This clause allows for more stringent qualifying conditions to be placed on these people deeply in need and requiring a hardship payment. It also allows for the period for which anyone can qualify for a hardship payment to be reduced. There is no specific detail as to how this would be done. It is vital that clear and robust Regulations are framed to help this group.

6.9 Clause 58. - Claimant responsibilities for employment and support allowance Details requirements “obligations” that a customer will have to fulfil in order to continue receiving ESA. It states that the Claimant commitment “Customer Obligation” would include attendance at work focused interviews and it elucidates on the Work Preparation Requirement. The Work Preparation Requirement can include taking part in an employment programme and under taking work experience or work placement. Again their appears to be no matching obligation on the Department’s side to arrange suitable and/or accessible placements.

It should be noted that the new regulations will compel a customer who has been assessed by a HCP as having a significant disablement or reduction in functions to undertake an unpaid work placement.

It also states that a person on ESA who also has a child younger than 3 (but older than 1) will also have to take part in the work focussed interviews and further details when sanctions may be applied for “failure” to comply with these obligations. These sanctions can include suspension or a reduction in or a termination of benefit. The size and extent of any reduction is not detailed in this Bill.

Clause 58 also details that sanctions can be applied if the customer fails to show good reason for failure to comply with the obligations but gives no indication of what such good reasons may be. Given that these sanctions could remove a person’s sole source of income for a period of up to 26 weeks it is essential that there are clear and robust regulations supporting such decisions and a similarly clear robust and independent appeals process against decisions made by the Department.

None of these sanctions will take into account issues such as mobility, transport or availability of suitable public transport. Similarly the suitability and/or availability of work placement/experience is not considered.

Clause 58 (11L) also enables the future privatisation of functions connected to work focused interviews and other parts of the administration of the Claimant Requirement (“Customer Obligation”). This has the potential to lead to job losses in the NICS and other ramifications for Service Delivery, Data Protection and the export of jobs overseas.

Clause 58 (11L(7)) also changes the concept of Good Cause to Good Reason. It is unclear whether this is a substantive change which will lead to less scope for a decision to be made in the customers favour or whether it is simply a cosmetic change in wording.

7. Chapter 3 - Income Support

7.1 Clause 59 - Entitlement of lone parents to income support etc - NIPSA is opposed to changing the age threshold for lone parents claiming Income support from 7 to 5 years old without the associated childcare strategy being in place which has previously prevented the changes from entering legislation. NIPSA would further question this change given the lack of available work for claimants subject to current mandatory work requirements currently on Jobseekers Allowance and without the support structure of adequate childcare provision and a Childcare Strategy being in place.

7.2 Clause 60 - Claimant commitment for income support - NIPSA is opposed to the contracted out directions about work-related activity for claimants of IS may be notified to a claimant in such manner as the Department thinks fit. As referred to in section 60, 2(g) lines 19-22.

NIPSA would ask for clarification on section 307 of the Explanatory and Financial Memorandum with regards to “directions about work-related activity for claimants of IS may be notified to a claimant in such manner as the Department thinks fit.” NIPSA asks for further clarification on what is meant by the Department thinks fit and again state its opposition to the contracting out directions about work-related activity for claimants of IS may be notified to a claimant in such manner as the Department thinks fit.

7.3 Part 3 - Other Benefit Changes

Clause 68 - Industrial injuries benefit - This new clause is removing the ability and failsafe to have a declaration lodged at the time of the accident. It will therefore be more difficult for the accident to be proven and investigated at a later date – possibly many years later when the consequences of the accident affect their ability to work.

7.4 Clauses 70-73 – Social Fund

Ending of discretionary payments

Purposes of discretionary payments

Determination of amount or value of budgeting loan

Community care grants

These Clauses will result in the abolition of the current system of discretionary payments. In its place the apparent intention is to have a combination of new locally based provision that will replace Community Care Grants and Crisis Loans for general living expenses. Given that there were 360,000 applications and 267,000 payments worth close to £80million made in Northern Ireland in the last financial year it is therefore essential that a replacement is designed to provide assistance to most vulnerable individuals and families in distress in Northern Ireland. This scheme needs to be properly supported by legislation in the Welfare Reform Bill but whilst this legislation removes the discretionary elements of the Social Fund there is no consequent supporting legislation for a replacement scheme.

It is also essential that any replacement scheme is administered by the SSA in order to make use of the experience and expertise of Social Fund Officers and to protect jobs in the NI Civil Service. There must also be thought given to the consequences of the abolition of the Social Fund Commissioner (Clause 70(2)) and supporting legislation to ensure that a transparent and robust procedure for appealing decisions is given a legislative framework with supporting regulations.

Under Clause 72(2) there is no determination of the upper limit to such loans which again highlights the need for clear and robust regulations/guidance and the establishment of some route of independent appeal against Departmental decisions in light of the abolition of the Office of the Social Fund Commissioner.

This response also applies to Schedule 8, Social Fund, Discretionary Payments and Schedule 12 (Part 7) Repeals.

7.5 Clause 74 - State pension credit: carers - amends the State Pension Credit Act (NI) 2002 but instead of Invalid Care Allowance being the measure of entitlement it has changed to a definition of “regular and substantial caring responsibilities”. This has yet to be defined or prescribed.

7.6 Clause 75 – State pension credit – capital limit: “This capital does not exceed a prescribed amount” again this raises concerns as to whether this will be at the whim of the Department and with no further recourse to the legislature of Northern Ireland. Will these amounts be prescribed by DWP? Will a Minister of the NI Executive or Westminster legislature be involved in setting these limits? There may well be a case for a breach in parity given the different circumstances in Northern Ireland.

Under Clauses 43 and 44 Assembly scrutiny of regulations is enshrined and consultation on these must also take place to ensure the robustness and clarity of such regulations.

8. Part 4 - Personal Independence Payment

8.1 Clause 76 - Personal independence payment - It is NIPSA's opinion that the Habitual Resident Test is sufficient to provide the basis for ability to apply for Personal Independence Payment.

8.2 Clause 78 Mobility component - Subsection (4) Should be widened to include moving around indoors and the ability to use and cope with stairs.

The ability to plan and follow a journey should also pay regard to the time needed to do this. In many cases people with disabilities especially mental health difficulties would require far longer to plan and follow a journey and as such, some regard must be given to the length of time it would take a person to plan and follow a journey.

8.3 Clause 79 - Ability to carry out daily living activities or mobility activities - Subsection (4) - Allows regulations to specify which sources of information are appropriate. However, it is important that, the Decision Maker must have the power to decide where that information is sourced, and the power does not lie with the Independent Assessor. This would be in line with recommendations made by Professor Harrington in relation to Work Capability Assessments. It is essential that the Decision maker decides what evidence is appropriate eg GP report, Consultant report etc and a private supplier does not decide what information is appropriate. It should also be said at this point that GPs and Health Care professionals who are asked to provide evidence are paid appropriately for providing this evidence.

With regard to the assessments the regulations must state that the assessor is trained in the relevant area depending on the person's physical and/or mental conditions.

8.4 Subsection (5) - Regulations will provide for the consequences of failure without good reason to comply with a requirement imposed under subsection 4. It is important within this subsection that the person's condition especially in relation to mental health conditions is taken into account when 'good reason' is applied.

- 8.5 Clause 80 – Required period condition – further provision - This clause makes further provision about the making of regulations to determine whether a person meets the required period condition. The regulations need to state that during the previous 3 months and the subsequent 9 months the persons relevant ability had it been assessed at that time would have been limited or severely limited as the case may be. It is important that the majority of the time is included as this will ensure that persons with fluctuating conditions will not be denied Personal Independence Payment.
- 8.6 Clause 81 (5) - Terminal illness – Provides that where a claim is made on behalf of a terminally ill person, the terminally ill person is regarded as making the claim, notwithstanding that the claim is made without their knowledge or authority. A further amendment is required to ensure that when a claim is made by a person and subsequent investigations indicate that the person is terminally ill those cases can also be included under this clause.
- 8.7 Clause 86 – Prisoners - It is our determination that it is morally wrong to deny a person Personal Independence Payment if they are in detention and not been found guilty of any crime.
- 8.8 Clause 88 - Report to the Assembly - Given the concern from the public regarding the new assessments for Personal Independence payment it is important that the Department must lay before the Assembly an independent report on the operation of assessment under Section 79 annually and on a continual basis.
- 8.9 Clause 91 - Power to make supplementary and consequential provision -It is important under this heading that any changes made by the Department must be subject to the scrutiny of the Assembly and/or the Department for Social Development Assembly Committee.
- 8.10 Clause 92 – Transitional - As under the previous heading it is important that any provision the Department considers 'necessary or expedient' is subject to the scrutiny of the Assembly and/or the Department for Social Development Assembly Committee.

9. Part 5 - Social Security: General

- 9.1 Clause 95 – Benefit Cap – See comments under Clause 8 (para 3.9)
- 9.2 Clause 101 - Power to require consideration of revision before appeal

APPEALS: Compulsory Reconsideration

- 9.3 Clause 101 will compel all customers to apply for a reconsideration of any decision before they will be allowed to appeal against the decision. It is already standard practice for an appeals officer to carry out a reconsideration of a decision before writing an appeal submission. This is simply an additional level of red tape which will slow down the appeals process even further and could impact on a customer getting their benefit re-instated even though that benefit will no longer remain in payment whilst the appeals process takes its course.
- 9.4 Clauses 113 – 115 Benefit Offences: NIPSA does not condone fraudulent activity and would highlight the very low level of fraud in Northern Ireland. NIPSA are concerned that the clauses in the Bill seek to move directly to higher level penalty for even minor offences ie the removal of the "formal caution". NIPSA reserves the right to comment further whenever the Regulations become available.

10. Part 6 - Miscellaneous

- 10.1 10.1 General - Public Services and Commercial Services (PCS) and NIPSA continue in their campaign to protect, maintain and improve their member's terms and conditions.

PCS and NIPSA also believe that they have a wider responsibility to society and has, for many years, campaigned for significantly increased benefits for the poor, vulnerable, elderly and those in need. In that respect a joint response was provided to the Green Paper on the future of Child Maintenance. Strengthening Families, - Promoting Parental Responsibility.

The Barnardo Report, It Doesn't Happen Here- The Reality of Child Poverty in the UK highlights the disturbing statistics of child poverty in Northern Ireland . NIPSA believe the NI Assembly when endorsing the Welfare Reform Bill also has a wider responsibility to endorse a pledge made by the Government to end child poverty.

In March 1999 the Prime Minister made a historic and ambitious pledge to end child poverty within a generation, and in November 2006 the Northern Ireland Anti -Poverty and Social Inclusion Strategy – Life Time Opportunities, pledged the NI Assembly here to halving child poverty by 2010 and ending child poverty by 2020.

The NI assembly debated child poverty on 2 October 2012 so they are well aware of current child poverty statistics and their failure to implement a Child Poverty Action Strategy by the end of 2012 gives cause for serious concern. There are currently 122,000 children living in officially defined levels of poverty in communities across Northern Ireland. 122,000 children who will experience the lack of choice, lack of respect and dignity that poverty can too often bring. In Northern Ireland for many working families poverty is a reality – 47% of the children living in poverty live in a household with at least one parent working.

These are some of the most vulnerable children and children for whom the NI Assembly must make an extra effort to improve their life chances and lift them out of poverty.

10.2 Clause 121 - Supporting maintenance agreements - This clause allows the department to “take appropriate steps” to encourage parents to agree their own family based arrangements. NIPSA refer to the paragraph below, from our joint submission on the Green Paper-

“We agree with the concept of providing assistance to parents during and after relationships break down. We are however of the opinion that advice alone will not provide solutions to the problem of ensuring that children receive the financial support they need and have serious reservations about the Government’s willingness to provide adequate resources given that they allude to “investing stretched resources” “in these challenging times”

The concerns expressed above remain. NIPSA have serious reservations with regard to the priority given to child poverty and the amount of investment this government will be prepared to make to ensure that parents are fully aware of the consequences of accepting a less than favourable family based agreement. Where, for example, an agreement is not honoured by the Non Resident Parent (NRP), the parent With Care (PWC) may have no redress if payments are not made or are of lesser value. No arrears will accrue while the private arrangement is in place.

Many of our current PWC’s rely heavily on maintenance and the higher than average incidence of child poverty that pertains in single parent families makes this an especially important part of the bill.

NIPSA would maintain that the government has a duty to ensure that children are provided for and that no child should experience deprivation. It is therefore vital that parents are fully aware of the consequences of making a less than robust private arrangement. Previous initiatives by the Agency aimed at encouraging Maintenance Direct (MD), have had only limited success with many parents returning to the statutory service. It is imperative that no barriers or penalties are placed on parents who wish to use the statutory system. NIPSA’s submission to the Green Paper made the following observation, which we would contend is still unclear:

NIPSA would expect to see detailed analysis into the reasons why Maintenance Direct agreements have broken down in the past and what the contributory factors have been. This information will, we contend, be essential in providing the advice and guidance aspect of proposals.

10.3 Clause 122 - Collection of child support maintenance - Repeals some wording from Article 7(2) of the 1991 order and in addition, inserts a new paragraph, (2A). The combined effect of these changes may be to inhibit the collection of maintenance in some circumstances. Previously the Agency would have taken steps to ensure collection but now it is proposed that this will happen only where the NRP agrees or where the department is satisfied that the NRP is unlikely to pay. The net result may be children not benefiting.

10.4 Clause 123 Indicative maintenance calculations - The information necessary to make an estimate as to how much should be paid in child maintenance has been available for some time to anyone with access to a computer. Many parents have availed of this facility to check what is deemed a fair amount to pay or receive. It is hard to see how this amendment will increase the number of cases currently when an adequate arrangement is in place.

The volatile employment market that currently pertains in Northern Ireland and indeed across the UK has made the calculation of earnings appreciably more difficult. We pointed out in our Green Paper submission that there was evidence that huge numbers of people were coming off benefits and into employment, only to be back on benefits within a twelve month period. Each change will require a separate calculation since it will almost certainly mean a change of 25% or more. This will entail a large degree of trust between the parents who have opted for private arrangements. In many cases the nature of the break-up may mean this level of trust is simply not present.

10.5 Clause 124 - Recovery of child support maintenance by deduction from benefit - The most worrying aspect of this change is the possibility that fees may be deducted directly from benefits which in themselves may have been means tested. This aspect of the proposals could lead to a scenario whereby a privatised Child Maintenance service would have the right to make deductions from the benefits of an individual who may be receiving an amount that barely allows for subsistence. At present there is a flat rate £5 calculation for those whose sole income comes from benefits but arrears are not collected.

10.6 Clause 125 Fees This is perhaps the most worrying aspect of the proposals. The obvious potential for privatisation is clear. Without a revenue stream it would be difficult to see what attraction there would be for the private sector while any fees collected will be paid from monies that could be better used to tackle child poverty. Improvements to the existing IT system have had only limited success and a new system is now planned to deliver a quality service. We welcome this development wholeheartedly.

Huge strides have been made since 2006, towards providing an improved service and with the simplification of the calculation process we would expect those improvements to continue. We see the future of child maintenance as being best served as a part of the Welfare State and by extension here, as an integral part of the NICS. We have serious concerns that the service is being lined up for future privatisation with an inevitable loss of employment here.

A privatised service will charge fees that in reality will take badly needed funds from children and place this revenue in the hands of faceless investors who will be tempted to “cherry pick” the work that is most profitable. The effect of this will be to leave large numbers of families without support either because their case is viewed as “difficult” or too expensive to pursue.

NIPSA strongly recommend that no fees are charged to either the Parent with Care or Non Resident Parent.

10.7 Clause 126 - Exclusion from individual voluntary arrangements (IVA) - The NRP who owes arrears of child support maintenance will not be able to reduce his liability by means of an

IVA. Since any debt owed on a child support case is in fact owed to the children on that case, we are strongly in favour of this debt being protected and collected on their behalf.

10.7 Conclusions

Over the years the Agency has had critics and many valid complaints have been levelled at the old CSA. With the publication of the Henshaw Report in 2006 a number of areas came in for particular criticism. Among these the issues highlighted by Lord Hutton were the poor IT system, overly complicated maintenance calculations and poor management. Praise was reserved for the staff, who had to contend with these institutional failings and a highly stressful working environment.

NIPSA believe that the future of a child maintenance service is best served as a part of the public sector and fear that the charging element of the proposals presents a significant incentive to privatisation and it is clear that any element of charging fees will take money from the children either in the form of a levy on the NRP collections or as a deduction from the PWC payments. In either scenario it is the children who will inevitably lose.

Huge strides have been made in improving the collection and payment of child maintenance since 2006. In reforming child support, full and proper cognisance of the efforts of the staff, our members, needs to be made and their employment protected. The potential is there to deliver a top quality service which has the alleviation of child poverty as its principle aim. Too many of the proposals in this Bill are aimed at reducing the cost to the tax payer at the expense of the children it should be there serve. We hope the lessons of the past are learned and that Civil Servants, here in Belfast, are given the opportunity to deliver that alleviation of child poverty.

NIPSA ask for further clarification on the points raised and hope the NI Assembly will have the foresight to revisit the proposals and take our concerns on board as well as other bodies who provide their comments such as Gingerbread, Women’s Support Network (WSN), Child Poverty Action Group etc.

NIPSA are of the firm opinion that the Child Support Agency plays a vital role in tackling child poverty and addressing inequality. What is required is clear and comprehensive legislation, an adequate IT system and sufficient highly skilled and motivated staff. The experienced staff are in place, we await the delivery of the rest.

The Labour market statistics are relevant to this bill and indicate that it will not be easy to simplify the calculations facility in the current volatile economy. The rate of return to benefit has been increasing steadily during the recession.

NIPSA would ask for further clarification on the points we have raised and hope the NI Assembly will have the foresight to revisit the proposals and take our comments on board as well as other community and voluntary bodies who have a vested interest. NIPSA are of the firm opinion that there is still a vital role for the Child Support Agency to play in tackling child poverty and addressing inequality. What is required is clear and comprehensive legislation, an adequate IT system and sufficient highly skilled and motivated staff. The experienced staff are in place, we await the delivery of the rest.

11. Summary

- 11.1 It is clear that if the Assembly introduce the Welfare Reform Bill either in whole or part it will have a significant impact on the most vulnerable in society, but in work and out of work. It will remove £500m from the NI economy which will lead to further job losses and in turn a higher rate of unemployment. The spiral will maintain upwards and more and more individuals and families will rely on the benefit system which will be a very low safety net. It cannot be acceptable in any form and there are many, many things outlined above that this Committee and the Assembly can do to ensure those in our society who rely on the benefit system can be supported which does not put in jeopardy the issue of parity. However parity seems to be a moving object which Minister's and politicians turn off and on whenever the situation suits. This is much to an important issue for politicians to play politics with. It is real people, with real lives and real children and young people who this Bill will impact on most severely if it is allowed to be implemented.

Northern Ireland Anti Poverty Network

The Welfare Reform Bill Submission to; Committee for Social Development

Northern Ireland Assembly

From: The Northern Ireland Anti-Poverty Network

The Northern Ireland Anti-Poverty Network would make the following comments relevant to the introduction of the Welfare Reform Bill 2012.

The Northern Ireland Anti-Poverty Network (NIAPN)

The Northern Ireland Anti-Poverty Network (NIAPN) was established in 1990 as part of an EU-wide move to address poverty and social exclusion, and we were constituted in 1991. We are an umbrella organisation with a membership of 300 which includes individuals and organisations. The purpose of NIAPN is to relieve and improve the position of people who live in poverty and to advance education and conduct research into the effects and causes of poverty for the benefit of the community. In particular, we monitor the impact of the policies of the Westminster Government and the Northern Ireland Assembly on Northern Ireland and we work closely with other UK Anti-Poverty Networks to share experiences, knowledge and good working practices. NIAPN is a member of the European Anti-Poverty Network and monitors the effect the policies of the European Union has on the regions of the United Kingdom. NIAPN also develops and facilitates anti-poverty campaigns and lobbying activities at Northern Ireland, UK and EU levels, and we represent Northern Ireland in the general assembly of the European Anti-Poverty Network (EAPN).

The Welfare Reform Act 2012

NIAPN would agree that a less complicated Welfare Benefits system which would promote equality is not only desirable but essential. However the Northern Ireland Anti-poverty Network has serious reservations regarding the introduction of the Welfare Reform Act 2012 which has received its second reading at Stormont. The current recession is impacting upon all regions of the United Kingdom but Northern Ireland has particular circumstances which our organisation believes requires that policy variations are commensurate with the uniqueness of the Northern Ireland situation. Unfortunately there appears to have been no impact assessment carried out for the impact the Act will have upon the people of Northern Ireland. Other Regions, Scotland and Wales have carried out assessments prior to the launch of the Bill and have collated empirical evidence to support arguments relevant to how those regions will be affected. Unfortunately Northern Ireland does not have access to similar relevant collated and analysed data but however it is accepted that the introduction of this Welfare Reform Act, bringing the biggest change to the Welfare System for over sixty years, will impact more severely in Northern Ireland than in any other region of the United Kingdom. Reasons for this include:-

- The past conflict which has left a legacy of high levels of mental ill-health resulting in Northern Ireland having one of the highest rates of PTSD in the world and therefore contributing to the high number of people receiving Disability Living Allowance payments.
- The type of housing stock, three and four bedroom dwellings, built over the decades by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.
- The low level of wages paid to employees
- The high rate of unemployment.
- The high level of Child Poverty
- The high level of Fuel Poverty

Housing Issue

The Northern Ireland Housing Executive over the years concentrated on building three and four bedroom houses. This has contributed to the estimation that between 30 to 50,000 social housing homes are under-occupied. Potentially the tenants of these homes who may currently receive Housing Benefit will have this Benefit reduced or will be forced to seek alternative smaller accommodation. This at a time when there are already 23,000 on urgent waiting lists. Many will be forced into the private sector rental market which does not offer the same level of tenancy security and they may also be forced to live in areas where rental costs are lower but facilities and services are not adequate and they may be remote from family support relevant to child care. Not all receiving Housing Benefit are unemployed as there are currently 16,000 in employment who receive these Housing Benefit payments and many of these will also be affected by the proposed legislation. The impact of this Act upon communities will be severe as extended families which tend to live within close proximity providing the advantage of assistance with child care for those seeking or obtaining work will be forced to disperse owing to financial pressure. This will result in a break-up of family relationship and fragmentation of communities.

Unemployment

The unemployment level within Northern Ireland has now surpassed the United Kingdom average and there are 70,000 people out of work. An aim of the Welfare Reform Act 2012 is to "Make Work Pay" but the problem with this is that there are simply not enough jobs to reverse the current high unemployment rates. An added complication is child care as this is an important support mechanism for those seeking and or finding employment. There are not sufficient places for those requiring affordable child care and therefore many are simply prevented from actively seeking employment and those being forced to seek employment will not see any reward for entering employment owing to the cost of child care and travel.

Being in employment in Northern Ireland does not mean that working people cannot experience levels of poverty. In Northern Ireland it is estimated that half of the children living in relative poverty are in families where one parent is working. Northern Ireland has lower average, almost 11% lower, earning rates compared to the rest of the United Kingdom. Also many of the jobs being created in Northern Ireland are not full time but instead are part-time paying gross weekly wages of £150.

Nearly 24% of young people, aged 18 to 24 years in Northern Ireland are unemployed and although this is half the rate of some European Countries the figure in Northern Ireland is still rising.

Child Poverty

Last year in Northern Ireland 21% of children were living in relative poverty and this Region has a level of persistent child poverty twice that of the United Kingdom average. Furthermore, in Northern Ireland, approximately 12% of children live in severe poverty. Ministers have a statutory obligation to meet the targets set by the Child Poverty Act 2010 but the families and children experiencing poverty will be put under additional financial strain as a result of the proposed welfare reforms.

Disability Living Allowance

In Northern Ireland 100 out of every thousand receives Disability Living Allowance while in the United Kingdom this is 50 out of every thousand. This dramatic difference is believed to be related to the past conflict and the threat of renewed conflict as well as the stress of trying to make ends meet. Only Northern Ireland as Region of the UK is emerging from decades of conflict and NIAPN believes this makes Northern Ireland a special case when introducing economic policies which affects the benefit system. Already individuals are experiencing the assessment process for DLA which will become PIP (Personal Independence Payments) under the new Act. Medical evidence is not getting priority with the initial assessment involving computer programmes which depersonalize the process. The DLA issue is important in that it is the gateway to other necessary and needed welfare benefits and therefore if DLA is denied then the individuals access to those other necessary payments is blocked. Many individuals are being turned down at the first DLA assessment but do get it reinstated on appeal but this takes valuable time. There does appear to be a high rate of reversal of decisions at appeal level.

What Needs to be Done

NIAPN Government Departments need to work collectively and collaboratively on the issues which will arise as the debate continues and while there is time to alter processes.

Where Disability Living Allowance is concerned then Medical Evidence must take primacy to avoid delays.

Relevant to housing there needs to be more factual evidence gathered regarding the impact of reduced or denied housing benefits will have and if possible a hold put on implementing the actions to be taken, as a result of the implementation of the Welfare Reform Bill against households which are deemed under occupied.

Welfare to Work under this Bill will not succeed as there are simply not the jobs to reduce the level of unemployment. Effective and immediate strategies are require to ensure that there is investment in getting people into meaningful employment and not just shifting individuals from one category to another to give the impression that the rates of unemployment are being effectively addressed.

The Assembly must continue to address the child poverty level. This Bill must be examined with a view to understanding how it will adversely effect the incomes of the most vulnerable within pour society.

Where monthly payments benefits under the new Bill are envisaged the Assembly must ensure that this does not proceed and that weekly or where fortnightly payments are made they must be sustained.

The use of computers by those applying for Universal Credits is not being realistic. It needs to be understood that not all have access to a computer or indeed are able to use a computer. In some rural areas broadband is not available! It is reported that Social Security offices will be able to help those unable to access a computer but it is also thought that staff numbers at social security offices will be reduced. This could impact upon those requiring assistance to apply for benefits. Also it is important for claimants to have all necessary information available when completing online so it is important that they are aware which documents they require.

Departments need to publish an information booklet to make all aware of the content of the Welfare Reform Bill.

There should be a statutory right for each individual affected to have independent advice.

In Conclusion

NIAPN is not alone in believing that the Welfare Reform Bill is more about cutting costs than creating equality and making the system less complex. Unfortunately the Bill will be implemented but this organisation asks all elected representatives to examine it clause by clause and understand the impact the legislation will have on the people of Northern Ireland. NIAPN asks the elected MLA'S to work in the interests of the most vulnerable within our society and to see Northern Ireland as the special case which it is and to work to reduce the negative impact this Bill will have.

Written Submission from NUS-USI on Welfare Reform Bill to the Social Development Committee

(National Union of Students and the Union of Students in Ireland)

Information on NUS-USI

NUS-USI student movement represents the interests of students in Northern Ireland and campaigns on their behalf in many different fields such as student hardship, health, prejudice and accommodation. We also provide an infrastructure that helps individual Students' Unions in the North of Ireland to develop their own work through our research, training and development functions.

Introduction

It will be extremely important to consider the impact of any welfare reform changes on students. Whilst, in the absence of reliable statistics, it is virtually impossible to say with certainty how many students claim one or more of the benefits that would be subsumed into the Universal Credit, the consequences for those that do are likely to be far-reaching.

We would like to receive assurances from the Department that there is no policy intention to exclude any student groups able to access support at present, as we are concerned that such exclusion may arise due to unintended consequences of certain decisions.

Aside from the significant reservations we have in relation to the Welfare Reform Bill, NUS-USI would however like to take this opportunity welcome any changes which might be made by politicians here which could facilitate easier and better means of distribution of welfare measures than those originally set out in the reforms made by Westminster.

As the committee will be aware, full-time students were largely excluded from means-tested benefits in the late 1980s, but certain vulnerable groups – predominantly students with children and students with disabilities – still have some access to key benefits in certain circumstances and this can be vital income. Moreover, the increasing population undertaking part-time study or distance learning can be supported by benefits during study. For example, child tax credits play an important role in helping the students who are eligible to receive them.

Students who can claim do of course represent something of an anomaly in benefits policy: whilst they are usually of working age and have at least some capability to work, their study requirements, especially for full-time students, mean that they may not be available for work or able to undertake work-related activity.

Previous, more incremental, changes to benefits regulations have often resulted in a particular impact on students – for example, the withdrawal of income support entitlement for lone parents with older children, which saw some students who were lone parent lose benefit support as they could not claim JSA as a replacement.

The impact of welfare reform on students

The complexities of the rules around student eligibility, and the treatment of student income – made more complex still by the regular changes to the student support structure and the devolution of such policy, makes it extremely difficult for student claimants to understand what they can receive, and can result in the wrong information being issued by benefits offices, or potentially the wrong decisions being taken.

It is our aim to extend benefit support to students, particularly around housing and reforms to create universal credit offers does not do this. The reforms offer opportunity to simplify rules relating to welfare and we would like to see steps being taken to make easier for all concerned to understand student entitlement, without reducing the limited support available in the current system for those students who can claim.

Education will improve the skills and employment prospects of our citizens, and though this is not the only reason a person should look to undertake further or higher education, we believe that this legislation must recognise and support people who are involved in education and should not diminish the support within the welfare system which is available to students at present.

A potential illustration of concerns over benefits and eligibility as regards the system is that 271 enquiries were made as regards benefits alone the Queen's University Students' Union Advice Centre as in the 2011/12 academic year. Viewing this as a representation of concerns about the present system, one could speculate that significantly more students will face difficulties with benefits in the future, if the reforms as outlined are implemented.

We wish to highlight the issues arising in relation to student eligibility for universal credit, then the treatment of student income, and finally some further comments on the broader changes being made.

Eligibility

Definition of 'qualifying young person' (part 1 chapter 1, section 10)

One of the areas where NUS-USI has massive concerns and where we would seek reassurances is in relation the need to maintaining eligibility on the same lines as current regulation as regards the definition a of 'qualifying young person'.

If similar measures are implemented here as are potentially being implemented by the Westminster government, eligibility amongst young people could be very negatively impacted upon.

It would seem self-evident that the more that can be done to allow a young person to complete a course, the more likely they are to be able to secure employment and therefore they are less likely to claim further benefit entitlement as an adult. We therefore strongly recommend that any definition of a qualifying young person allows people to complete courses and does not exclude any student who is currently entitled to receive benefits.

Meaning of receiving education (part 1, chapter 1, section 4)

We would like to seek clarification as to whether the intention of these measures is to move away from set definitions of full and part-time courses, partly to reflect the flexibility of modern study patterns. We would support any moves to do so, although much would depend on the guidance provided in relation to this and how decision makers choose to interpret any legislation. There is an opportunity to allow for slightly more intensive evening courses, for example, that would not interfere with availability for work.

We would however not wish for this regulation to be used to exclude part-time students who can currently access benefits from doing so by allowing decision-makers to use courses of very few hours as reasons to refuse entitlement.

Limit to housing costs payments

We have significant concerns in relation to the impact of changes to housing benefit for people under 35. NUS-USI believes that changes like those outlined in the Westminster reforms could result in extreme difficulty for many people and does not meet the need for equality of provision for all.

We would be keen to ensure that it is made clear that claimants who are students would not see a break in their housing costs payment after two years, as this would not be enough to support those students who can claim through many undergraduate courses.

Students with disabilities

NUS-USI has very significant concerns about the impact of the Welfare Reform Bill upon students with disabilities. According to statistics from HESA in 2010/11 3,025 people enrolling at HE institutions in Northern Ireland had disabilities, and that illustrates the scale of the impact that any changes might have.

Child tax credit and support for children

Students with children are some of the most vulnerable learners and this support is crucial to their income and their ability to provide for their families. We would therefore seek assurances as to how this support will transfer to the new universal credit system and that no parent will be worse off under the new arrangements than they would be under the current system. Figures from HESA show that in 2010/11, 4,340 people enrolling at HE institutions in Northern Ireland had young people or child dependents, and this emphasises the importance of maintaining the current levels of support available with regard to welfare.

Treatment of student income

As we have mentioned above, it is extremely important that clarity is provided as to the treatment of student income and we believe that it is essential that assurances are provided that this bill will not disadvantage students.

We would therefore be keen to ensure that the same general principles in the current legislation remain: that grants, loans and other funding for specific purposes (tuition fees, course costs, childcare etc) should be disregarded, along with a suitable proportion of any general payment intended to support students in lieu of books, equipment and travel.

Students with self-employed partners

We also have concerns that any assumption that self-employed workers will have an income equivalent to at least the National Minimum Wage (NMW) may penalise families where the partner of a full-time student claims.

Other comments

Economic context

The current economic situation is extremely bleak for many young people, with youth unemployment current at around 24%. We want politicians and the media to ensure that the utmost sensitivity and understanding is demonstrated on this issue, and that support and protection for those in need is provided through this process of welfare reform.

Universal credit must be a safety net for young people and other citizens, and it is neither fair nor helpful for anyone to infer young people are to blame if they are unable to get into the workplace in the current climate. NUS-USI urges the committee to recommend a positive and open attitude from the Department and also benefits offices to ensure the highest possible standard of assistance for everyone who depends on welfare.

A strong and positive social security system is the hallmark of civilized society and it should be enabling rather than draconian.

Welfare for under-25s

We are opposed to the lower rates of universal credit for under-25s, especially any assertion that those aged under 25 have lower costs and lower wage expectations. This would be an incorrect and unfair generalisation. Support through universal credit should be based on need, rather than an arbitrary cut-off point that reinforces negative perceptions of young people and could push young people into unnecessary poverty.

Cap on benefits and student parents

We have very significant concerns about any proposals to cap benefit entitlements. Any cap on total benefit entitlement may impact on some of our members with larger families, who do not meet the criteria for any exclusion to such a measure.

If a cap is introduced, we would recommend that when the detail of student status in relation to welfare is developed, this counts as an exception to any cap on benefits.

Printable documentation

Finally, we would urge the committee to recommend that the department ensures all online documentation is printable, giving claimant details, the period of entitlement and the breakdown of the universal credit elements, because many students need such information in claims for student support.

Conclusion

Students are an important subset of benefits claimants and their needs should be met as far as is possible.

The lack of detail in regard to student claims in the bill is concerning and we are worried that students might end up as an after-thought in the process. We therefore are keen to receive clarification and further detail on student-related regulations.

Foreword

Dear Minister,

I am pleased to present my third Annual Report to you since my appointment as the Social Fund Commissioner for Northern Ireland. I report on the achievements of my staff during the year ending March 2012.

The calls on our service to provide an independent review have increased during the past year. We have continued to resolve cases quickly and effectively within challenging timescales; maintained high quality standards in our decisions; and as our customer survey demonstrates we have retained high levels of satisfaction on the part of customers and those acting for them. Whilst our primary responsibility is to ensure that we deliver a high quality service to a poor and vulnerable section of the community we are conscious of our accountability to the taxpayer in terms of securing value for money. I am pleased to report that our unit cost per case during this past year was £174, a reduction from £263 during the previous year, which we achieved without any decline in the quality of our decision making or service to the public.

The Welfare Reform Bill due to be introduced to the Northern Ireland Assembly will abolish the discretionary Social Fund and my office thus bringing an end to the independent review process. However this also provides an opportunity to have a Northern Ireland approach in this policy area for the first time. I believe that the experience and insights gained from our casework, which span more than two decades, represent a valuable legacy from which key principles can be drawn to underpin any successor arrangements. An effective, independent grievance mechanism should be a necessary component. The transition to new provision in Northern Ireland needs to occur in as seamless a way as possible, because the types of need met by the discretionary Social Fund will not disappear.

I would like to express my appreciation to all staff in the office. Our achievements throughout the year represent a highly commendable performance by them, during what has been a continuing period of uncertainty. Throughout my time as Social Fund Commissioner, I have been encouraged by their constructive approach, positive attitude and hard work, in meeting challenges as they emerge. I am confident that we will continue to meet our commitments to customers and to taxpayers for our remaining time in operation.

Yours sincerely

Karamjit Singh CBE
Social Fund Commissioner for Northern Ireland

Executive Summary

Work Activity 2011/12

- Social Fund Inspectors (“Inspectors” or “SFIs”) delivered 2,191 decisions.
- Overall Inspectors changed 31.7% of the decisions made by Reviewing Officers in the Social Security Agency (“the Agency” or “SSA”).
- Inspectors changed 35.2% of Community Care Grant (“Grant” or “CCG”) decisions and made 355 awards resulting in a spend of £145,417.64 from the CCG budget.
- Inspectors changed 27.6% of Crisis Loan (“CL”) decisions and made 222 awards resulting in a spend of £39,918.81 from the loans budget.
- Inspectors changed 9.8% of Budgeting Loan (“BL”) decisions and made 5 awards resulting in a spend of £1,275.89 from the loans budget.
- The Office of the Social Fund Commissioner (“OSFC”) delivered 6 workshops to 48 people.
- OSFC provided feedback to the Agency about the findings in each case an Inspector reviewed.
- OSFC provided quarterly Statistics Reports on decision making in each of the Agency’s Social Fund districts.
- I met with a range of stakeholder organisations with an interest in the Social Fund during the year, a list is provided at Appendix 7.

In 2011/12, 31.7% of the decisions reviewed by Inspectors were substituted, resulting in:

- 355 Community Care Grant awards at an average of £409.63 per award;
- 222 Crisis Loan awards at an average of £179.81 per award; and
- 5 Budgeting Loan awards at an average of £255.18 per award.

The Standard of Social Fund Inspectors’ Decisions

- Case readers examined 82 cases (equivalent to 5.3% of the cases registered in 11/12). 95.1% of the decisions were found to be correct.
- 98 requests for further reviews of Inspectors’ decisions were received. Of these 44 cases were reopened and 32 were changed.

The Standard of Administration

- Inspectors cleared 100% of routine cases within the 12 day target, 100% of complex cases within the 21 day target and 100% of express crisis loan cases within the 24 hour target.

In 2011/12, the average time taken by Inspectors to complete independent reviews was:

- less than 1 working day for an urgent crisis loan;
- 1.5 working days for a Budgeting Loan; and
- 8.4 working days for a Community Care Grant.

Resources

OSFC spent £380,167 during the year giving a cost per decision of £173.51. The cost per decision figure does not reflect the important training and social fund policy work undertaken by the Commissioner and OSFC staff.

About the OSFC

Our core business is to deliver independent reviews of discretionary Social Fund decisions made in the Agency. We also share information and expertise with those who have an interest in the discretionary Social Fund and the independent review. We participate in social policy research that contributes to the wider debate about the Social Fund and related issues.

The Social Fund

The Social Fund was introduced in 1988 and comprises two distinct parts; one regulated and the other discretionary. The Social Fund Commissioner and Social Fund Inspectors are concerned solely with the discretionary part of the Social Fund. This is a scheme of payments, by grant or interest free loan.

The Social Fund Commissioner

The Social Fund Commissioner is appointed by the Department for Social Development ("the Department"). The Commissioner has a duty to:

- appoint Social Fund Inspectors and other staff;
- monitor the quality of Inspectors' decisions and give advice, as he thinks fit, to improve the standard of their decisions;
- arrange appropriate training for Inspectors; and
- report annually, in writing, to the Department on the standard of Inspectors' reviews.

Social Fund Inspectors

Inspectors can only review decisions that have already been reviewed in the Agency, providing that an appropriate application for review has been made. The Inspector has the authority to:

- confirm the decision under review;
- substitute the decision of the Reviewing Officer; or
- refer the case back to the Reviewing Officer to make a fresh decision.

Our organisational structure and functions are explained further in Appendix 1.

Our Vision

To deliver independent reviews of discretionary Social Fund decisions providing a high quality and accessible service to all.

Our Values

- Be open and accessible to our customers.
- Treat all with respect and courtesy.
- Work for continuous improvement in our standards and the service we provide.
- Promote easy access to the Fund.
- Provide value for money.

Customer Experience

Customer Survey

During the period 2011/12 OSFC surveyed 239 applicants and received 56 responses (23%). As in previous years, half of the surveys issued were sent to those who have received an extra award following the independent review, and half were sent to customers who received no additional award at that stage. The survey helps us to monitor the satisfaction levels with our service and to identify areas where we could make improvements. This year's survey indicated:

- 93% found it easy to apply for an independent review;
- 95% indicated that their call to OSFC was answered promptly and efficiently;
- 88% found the questions asked by the Inspector easy to follow;
- 80% found the reasons for the Inspector's decision easy to follow; and
- 87% would use the OSFC again.

Over the previous 3 surveys, 70-74% of respondees had received an extra award due to the Inspector's decision. This figure dropped to only 53% of respondees for this year's customer survey. Despite this, the report for 2011-12 shows continuing high satisfaction rates with the service provided by OSFC. However, there remains room for improvement in each category and the management team and those delivering the service to customers at every level will be working to improve these results in 2012-13.

Stakeholder Survey

During the period 2011/12 OSFC surveyed 283 organisations it views as key stakeholders in the discretionary Social Fund. 37 responses (13%) were received. The survey helped us to understand how the independent review service we provide is viewed by these organisations, their level of involvement in supporting Social Fund customers so that we may better target our training workshops and to help improve the service we deliver, particularly when liaising with organisations which are acting as representatives of Social Fund customers during their application and review.

The responses received to this survey showed:

- 89% assisted at least 1 Social Fund customer per month (on average);
- 78% were aware of the OSFC;
- 76% were aware that the OSFC was independent from DSD/SSA;
- 97% of those aware of OSFC would recommend their clients apply for an independent review if they are unhappy with the SSA's decision on their case;

Case study 1

Ms A was in receipt of a qualifying benefit. She was estranged from her parents and had some physical and mental health problems.

Ms A had been living in a furnished, privately rented property, but had to leave as she was unable to meet a rent increase imposed by the landlord. She took up a new, unfurnished tenancy and applied for a grant for items including a bed, fridge freezer and seating.

- 59% had previously assisted someone in applying for an independent review by OSFC;
- 86% were satisfied with the time it took to complete the Inspector's review; and
- 81% of the organisations would be interested in receiving a free OSFC training workshop on the discretionary social fund.

The Stakeholder Survey also invited a response to a list of suggested reasons as to why their clients decide not to apply for an independent review of the Agency's decision by a Social Fund Inspector. The reasons and the degree to which they were supported by respondents are as follows:

- Client/representative believes the SSA decision is unlikely to change – 20 respondents agreed.
- Client has met their need having been given item(s), e.g. by a friend, relative, charity, etc. - 12 respondents agreed.
- Client/representative is put off by further time needed to carry out the independent review – 11 respondents agreed.
- Client made a fresh Social Fund application instead, rather than apply for an independent review of their earlier application - 11 respondents agreed.
- Client has instead borrowed money from a source other than the Social Fund to meet their needs - 11 respondents agreed.
- Client perceives OSFC is not independent from the Agency - 11 respondents agreed.
- Client/representative feels the independent review is too difficult to negotiate - 9 respondents agreed.
- Client has met their need by borrowing item(s) - 9 respondents agreed.
- Client/representative is unaware of Social Fund Inspector's independent review option – 8 respondents agreed.

Experiences of Social Fund Customers in Northern Ireland Report

In 2011, OSFC published an examination of 225 cases it had handled in a report entitled "Experiences of Social Fund Customers in Northern Ireland". It followed an equivalent report published in GB by the Independent Review Service. The report provides insights into the issues which some customers of the Social Fund in Northern Ireland face and enables comparisons to be made with the situation in Great Britain. The report presents information across a number of different criteria including health problems; debt; housing status; addiction issues and the items applied for and is available on the OSFC website.

Complaints

During 2011/12 OSFC received 5 complaints about our customer service, this does not include requests to have an Inspector's decision looked at again – statistics on such cases are shown on page 11. The Office Manager responded to each of these complaints within the OSFC customer service target (see Appendix 5), offering further explanations on decisions taken by Inspectors and arranging for further independent reviews to be carried out by a different Inspector, if appropriate.

Delivering the Review

Inspectors made 2,191 decisions during 2011/12. The overall number of decisions made by OSFC this year increased by 20.3%, compared to 2010/11. Chart 1 illustrates the demand for independent Social Fund reviews over the last 3 years.

Chart 1 – Decisions by Application Type

Table 1 shows the number of awards made by Inspectors this year and the average amount of awards.

Application Type	Total Scheme Expenditure	Number of awards by Inspectors	Total amount awarded by Inspectors	Average amount awarded by Inspectors
CCG	£13.54m	355	£145,417.64	£409.63
CL	£15.28m	222	£39,918.81	£179.81
BL	£48.49m	5	£1,275.89	£255.18

Chart 2 shows the outcome of Inspectors' decisions across all types of applications.

Overall, Inspectors found important errors in 23.9% of the Agency decisions they reviewed. The error rate for substituted decisions was 48.1% and the error rate for confirmed decisions was 12.1%. Appendix 2 shows a breakdown of the spread of decisions by month, District and type.

Community Care Grants

Community care grants again accounted for the largest proportion of our work (59.2%). Inspectors delivered 1,296 decisions of this type. Table 2 below shows the number of requests for review of grant decisions made by the Agency during 2011/12.

Table 2: Analysis of Community Care Grant activity 2011/12

1. Initial Applications to the Agency	47,066
2. Initial Refusals by the Agency	23,802
3. Applications for Reviewing Officer review	8,612
4. Applications unchanged on review	4,812
5. Applications changed on review but not wholly in the applicant's favour	3,687
6. OSFC Reviews	1,296
7. Number of grant awards made by Inspectors	355
8. Average amount of grant award	£409.63

Only 1,296 reviews of grant decisions made in the Agency were made in OSFC. This represents only 15.2% of the 8,499 cases which could have been independently reviewed, that is those which were either unchanged or not wholly changed in the applicant's favour by the Reviewing Officer.

This emphasises the importance of making applicants aware of the role of the OSFC and also of making our service accessible. This is underlined by the fact that 35% of the Agency's grant decisions reviewed by Inspectors were substituted (Chart 3 below refers).

Decision Outcomes

Chart 3 shows the outcomes of Inspectors' reviews on CCG decisions.

Crisis Loans

Crisis loans accounted for 38.5% of our workload this year. Table 3 below shows the number of requests for review of Crisis Loan decisions made by the Agency during 2011/12.

Table 3: Analysis of Crisis Loan activity 2011/12

1. Initial Applications to the Agency	152,464
2. Initial Refusals by the Agency	35,593
3. Applications for Reviewing Officer review	3,137
4. Applications unchanged on review	2,479
5. Applications changed on review but not wholly in the applicant's favour	454
6. OSFC Reviews	844
7. Number of crisis loan awards made by Inspectors	222
8. Average amount of crisis loan award	£179.81

Only 844 reviews of Crisis Loan decisions made in the Agency were made in OSFC. This represents 28.8% of the 2,933 cases which could have been independently reviewed, that is those which were either unchanged or not wholly changed in the applicant's favour by the Reviewing Officer.

Decision Outcomes

Chart 4 shows the outcome of Inspectors' crisis loan decisions.

Budgeting Loans

Reviews

Budgeting loans accounted for 2.3% of our workload this year. Inspectors delivered 51 reviews of this type. Table 4 below shows the number of requests for review of Budgeting Loan decisions made by the Agency during 2011/12.

Table 4: Analysis of Budgeting Loan activity 2011/12

1. Initial Applications to the Agency	156,687
2. Initial Refusals by the Agency	35,110
3. Applications for Reviewing Officer review	949
4. Applications unchanged on review	785
5. Applications changed on review but not wholly in the applicant's favour	133
6. OSFC Reviews	51
7. Number of budgeting loan awards made by Inspectors	5
8. Average amount of budgeting loan award	£255.18

Only 51 reviews of BL decisions made in the Agency were made in OSFC. This represents only 5.6% of the 918 cases which could have been independently reviewed, that is those which were either unchanged or not wholly changed in the applicant's favour by the Reviewing Officer.

Decision Outcomes

Chart 5 shows the outcome of Inspectors' Budgeting Loan decisions.

Standard of Administration and Social Fund Inspectors' Decisions

Article 37(5) of the Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1998.

The Commissioner has a statutory duty to monitor the quality of Inspectors' decisions and to give them advice and assistance to improve the standard of their reviews.

Case Reading

Case reading is the primary means by which I assess the standards of Inspectors' decisions.

Although the provision to seek judicial review through the High Court exists, in practice, the Inspector's review provides the final resolution for applicants to the Social Fund. It is vital, therefore, that Inspectors deliver high standards and our monitoring processes are robust. The overall quality standards required are set out in detail in Appendix 6.

As well as Social Fund law, Inspectors' decisions must comply with general legal principles, such as burdens and standards of proof, and natural justice. The people who use our service have a right to know the reasons for the Inspector's decision and in order to ensure this, they must be presented in plain language. Our case readers, therefore, also assess the clarity of explanation to ensure it respects the applicant's level of understanding and avoids jargon.

Our aim for 2011/12 was to read 5% of our total workload, selected at random. Our total case reading for the year was 82 cases (5.3% of cases registered in 2011/12). Chart 6 shows the results. 95.1% of cases were correct, in 2.4% the case reader could not tell from the papers whether the outcome was right or wrong and 2.4% were found to be incorrect.

Reviews of Inspectors' Decisions

"A social fund inspector may review a determination under paragraph (3) made by himself or some other social fund inspector".
Article 38(5) of the Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1998.

When a request for a review of an Inspector's decision is received it is examined thoroughly before being passed to a different Inspector for reconsideration.

During 2011/12 we received 91 requests for reviews of Inspector's decisions from customers or their representatives. As in previous years, most requests were about the amount of, or refusal of, an award. In the majority of these cases the Inspector's decision had been reached properly and was legally sound. 1 case was identified by the SSA and a further 6 cases were identified through our internal case reading.

Source	Number received	Number reopened	Number changed
Customer	82	32	20
Representative	9	5	5
SSA	1	1	1
Internal Checks	6	6	6
Total	98	44	32

In 2011/12 Inspectors aimed to clear reviews of Inspectors' decisions within 12 working days, and within 21 days in more complex cases. Of these 98 cases, 91 (92.9%) were cleared in 12 days and 5 (5.1%) in 13 to 21 days. 2 cases (2.0%) exceeded the 21 day target.

Completion Times

We recognise the need to complete reviews as quickly as possible since the people who use our service are generally in urgent need and have already had two decisions on their application made by the Agency. Nevertheless the Inspector has a duty to ensure natural justice is served. In order to do this, before he makes a decision he normally telephones the applicant or sends out a copy of the key papers, sets out the facts and issues to be decided, invites the applicant to comment on these, and asks any relevant questions.

We issued letters and made telephone inquiries seeking further information in 1,271 cases before proceeding with a decision, to which there were 1,087 responses (85.5%). This part of the process is included in the overall clearance times.

51.0% of these customers responded using our Freephone service. This reduces the time taken to reach a decision and enables the customer (or their representative) to provide greater detail when responding to the Inspector's questions.

Table 6 illustrates the number of decisions of each type and the proportion of our workload this represents, together with our time targets and achievements for each decision type. Appendix 3 shows the breakdown of our decision completion times by month.

Case Study 2

Ms B had mental health problems causing her to spend much of her time indoors. Her family gave her significant day to day help.

Ms B applied for a grant for sofa and mattress which needed replaced due to her incontinence.

Time taken for Inspector's review: 4 days

Decision type/Timescale	No. of decisions	% of decision workload	Target %	Achieved %
Community Care Grants: No enquiries/straightforward enquiries (to be completed within 12 days of receipt)	1,174	53.6%	95	100%
Community Care Grants: Further investigation /complex enquiries (to be completed within 21 days of receipt)	122	5.7%	100	100%
Budgeting Loans: No enquiries/straightforward enquiries (to be completed within 12 days of receipt)	51	2.3%	95	100%
Crisis Loan cases for items only (to be completed within 12 days of receipt)	660	30.1%	95	100%
Crisis Loan cases incorporating a request for living expenses (to be completed within 24 hours)	184	8.4%	95	100%

The Agency have a target for providing case papers within 4 working days of a request from OSFC. Their performance over the last 3 years is illustrated in Table 7 below.

Table 7 – Provision of CCG and BL case papers
District	% of CCG and BL case papers received within 4 working days
	2009/10	2010/11	2011/12
Belfast North and East Antrim	74%	79%	69%
Belfast West and Lisburn	81%	93%	96%
East Down	78%	75%	85%
North	89%	78%	90%
South	94%	95%	96%
West	93%	92%	88%
Total	86%	87%	87%

Building Relationships

Feeding Back on Standards and Policy

The OSFC works with the Department to improve the standard of first line decision making, by providing feedback on each case we review. We also provide regular feedback via quarterly statistics reports which give detailed information for each of the Agency's Social Fund districts and Northern Ireland as a whole about performance and operational issues drawn from all the cases that Inspectors reviewed.

During 2011/12 the most common problems identified in these reports included:

- misinterpreting the law, applying the wrong test or reaching a decision that was not a reasonable one on the evidence available; and
- failing to ask crucial questions where more information was needed.

I have had a number of meetings with the Department, the Agency and various welfare rights organisations during the year. A full list of these meetings is held at Appendix 7.

Improving Knowledge

One of our key objectives is to use our expertise and experience to provide advice to applicants, and their advisers and the Agency's staff about the Social Fund and the role of OSFC. We mainly do this by delivering training and information about the Social Fund. Social Fund information packs (detailed in Appendix 4) and leaflets can be accessed and downloaded via the OSFC website.

Examples of leaflets and information packs include:

- "The Social Fund – A Basic Overview"
- "Evidence in the Social Fund Context"
- "The Social Fund for JBO/SSO staff"

The OSFC has undertaken various activities to help improve the standards of decision making, improve the knowledge of advisers and raise awareness amongst those at whom the Social Fund is aimed. During 2011/12, we:

- Delivered 6 workshops to 48 people from 9 different stakeholder organisations;
- met a range of people with an interest in the Social Fund and wider social policy issues; and
- held 3 Best Practice Forums with Agency staff to discuss case issues and disseminate any learning points on cases to Social Fund staff in the Agency.

We also offer practical and informative advice about the Social Fund procedures and the independent review process for applicants, their representatives and the Agency. We have a dedicated team of Inspectors who deliver training workshops.

If you are interested in a particular Social Fund subject, we can normally tailor a presentation to meet your needs. We use practical examples and discussion to enable advisors to help their clients effectively. Feedback on workshops has been very positive and it underlines the importance of this area of work.

- The training is:
- free of charge;
 - delivered at a venue of your choice;
 - designed for a minimum of 6 people;
 - participative; and
 - designed to meet a range of needs.

“Hope to fill out forms more fully now and will appeal much more confidently now.” Armagh CAB/St Vincent De Paul Workshop, March 2012

“Fantastic insight provided” and “Very concise and clear” East Belfast Advice Centre, January 2012

“It was all incredibly informative and useful for me.” Larne CAB and Carrick CAB Workshop, January 2012

OSFC delivered 6 training workshops to a total of 48 people in 2011/12. Feedback questionnaires were completed at each workshop and a breakdown of responses is shown in Table 7 below.

Organisations which received OSFC training in 2011/12 were:

- Ardoyne Association;
- Armagh and District CAB & St. Vincent de Paul;
- Causeway Women’s Aid;
- East Belfast Advice Centre;
- Larne CAB and one person from Carrick CAB; and
- STEP (Dungannon) and 1 person from Sinn Fein.

“The workshop was handled in a very efficient yet informal and friendly manner.” Armagh CAB/St Vincent De Paul Workshop, March 2012

“Very useful and informative – will be helpful in day to day work with service users.” Causeway Women’s Aid, Feb 2012

“Very knowing lecturers, pleasure to attend the training.” STEP (Dungannon) and Sinn Fein Workshop, September 2011

Investing in Staff and Training

Advice to Inspectors

Social Fund Commissioner's Advice and Support Notes are made available to assist Inspector's with the interpretation and application of the law. These documents are reviewed and updated in response to changes made to the Social Fund scheme or to address issues which arise in casework. All the Commissioner's advice to Inspectors is accessible via the OSFC website.

Training

In addition, OSFC staff also attended various training courses to assist them with their other roles in the office.

- Go to www.osfci.org.uk
- Click on "About OSFC"
- Click on "Useful Links"
- Click on "Commissioner's Advice to Inspectors" (site will open as a separate window)
- Click on the topic required from the list provided

We continued with the provision of awareness sessions from outside organisations as an aspect of improving the knowledge of Inspectors. These are designed to provide an awareness of the wider issues facing some applicants to the Social Fund. These sessions were delivered by staff from the following organisations:

- Northern Ireland Chest, Heart and Stroke; and
- An Munia Tober.

OSFC had 10 staff in post on 31 March 2012, including the Social Fund Commissioner. In line with the OSFC commitment to deliver high standards to applicants £5,525 (1.5%) of our total spend in 2011/12 was on the training and development of staff. This includes the direct costs of providing the training (excluding training provided centrally through HR Connect) and the cost of staff time. Approximately 35 mandays were spent on training and development activities.

The in-house training consisted of courses related to the handling of case evidence, when to proceed straight to decision and Direction 4(a)(ii) qualification issues.

Investor in People

OSFC has been recognised as an Investor in People since November 1998. On 29th November 2010 we achieved iIP re-accreditation for a further 3 years. We continue to develop staff through regular and relevant training, provided both internally and externally.

Resources

Business Operating Costs	£63,000
Salaries	£317,167
Total²	£380,167
Cost per decision	£173.51

²The total excludes a separate budget of £30,000 for the Social Fund Commissioner's travel and subsistence costs and remuneration of c. £28,975 per annum for 4 days per month spent on Northern Ireland Social Fund issues.

Inspectors completed 2,191 decisions, giving a unit cost of £173.51 per decision. The cost per decision figure does not take account of the important other work carried out by OSFC staff, such as the provision of training workshops, providing information relevant to the reform of the discretionary Social Fund in Northern Ireland and various meetings with the Social Fund Commissioner.

Sick Absence

The sick absence rate in OSFC for the period 2011/12 was 3.9%.

Risk Assessment

OSFC continues its commitment to improving its risk management. Central to this commitment is a detailed Risk Register and Business Continuity Plan. These are reviewed regularly and discussed at team meetings. Quarterly reports and stewardship statements are made to DSD's Departmental Management Board. A series of internal controls are also in place, to these we have also added weekly checks of the OSFC website.

Security

OSFC took steps to minimize the amount of sensitive customer information it holds by safely disposing of sensitive data which was no longer required for business purposes, in line with our Document Retention and Destruction Schedule. We continue to seek improvements to our Certificate of Assurance processes to help ensure we keep retained customer and staff information secure. One such improvement in the period has been an increased effort to contact customers by telephone to reduce the risk of losing personal data being sent by post with the added benefit of reducing the time taken to carry out the review.

Section 75 Statutory Equality Duty

The OSFC's Equality Scheme was drawn up in accordance with Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 which deals with the promotion of equality of opportunity and good relations. The Scheme can be viewed on the OSFC website.

We provide some information in other languages, including:

- Arabic
- Chinese
- Latvian
- Lithuanian
- Polish
- Spanish
- Portuguese

Disability Action Plan

Correspondence from OSFC includes a Minicom number for the hard of hearing and leaflets can be provided in different formats such as Braille.

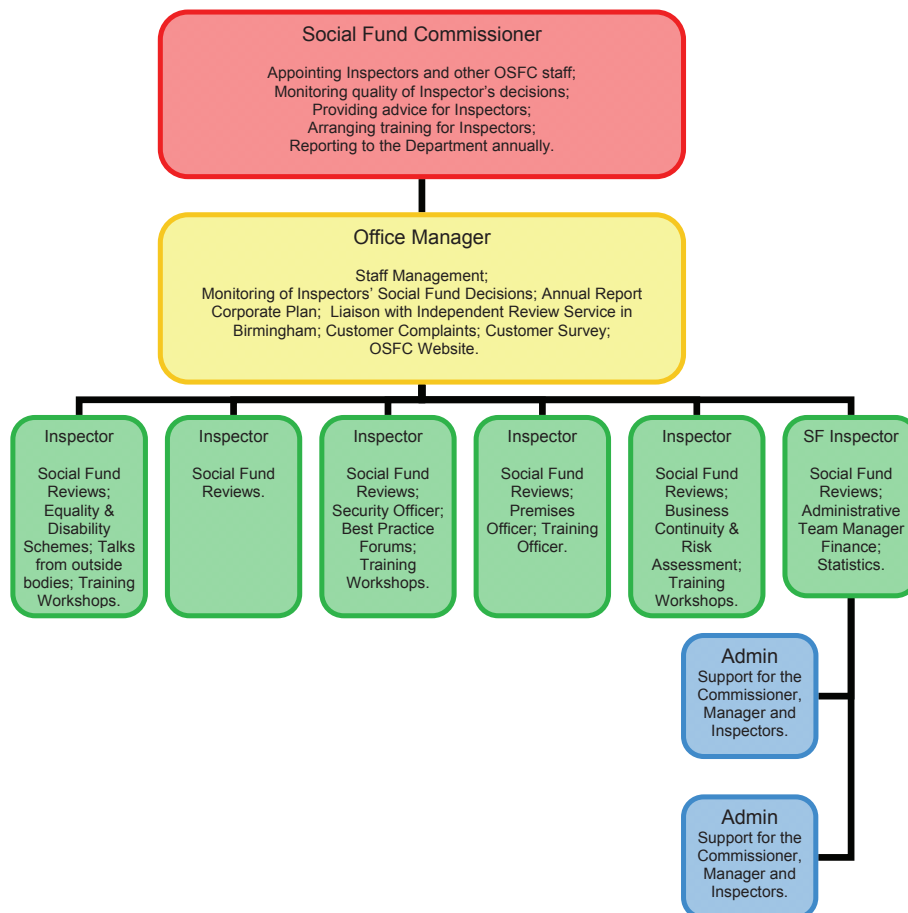

I am also committed to complying with the duties imposed by the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. In accordance with this the OSFC has drawn up a Disability Action Plan that details how we will fulfil our duties up to 2012.

Appendix 1 - Organisational Structure

There are two distinct strands to our work.

- The first relates to delivery of the independent review.
- The second draws on OSFC expertise and data to:
 - feed back to the Agency on operational and policy matters;
 - to provide training and advice to those actively involved in the Social Fund; and
 - to provide general information to the public.

Our organisational structure is designed around these strands and the following organisational chart demonstrates some of the work that we do.

Appendix 4 – Social Fund Self Instruction Packs

The documents listed below can be accessed via the OSFC website at www.osfcni.org.uk.

The Social Fund 'A Basic Overview'

A general guide to the Social Fund, covering the key features of the scheme.

Community Care Grants

A technical pack providing a thorough working guide to community care grants. Specifically designed for staff with responsibility for the Social Fund and organisations that advise or assist applicants.

Budgeting Loans

A brief summary of the changes to the budgeting loan scheme from 3 April 2006.

Evidence in the Social Fund Context

This is intended to provide the user with a thorough, but not overly technical, guide to competent handling of evidence in the context of Social Fund applications.

The Social Fund for JBO/SSO staff

This pack is designed for SSA staff in local offices who may be required to advise and assist customers, but who are not involved in Social Fund decision-making. It gives an overview of the conditions for payments and advice about the information customers should give to support their applications.

The Social Fund for Pension Service staff

Designed for staff in The Pension Service who may be required to advise and assist customers. It gives an overview of the conditions for payments and advice about the information customers should give to support their applications.

Decision Making and Reviews

This is a 'how-to' guide to making and reviewing decisions. It focuses on the processes by which decisions are made rather than the technical aspects of the various types of Social Fund payments. Primarily aimed at Decision Makers and Reviewing Officers, it may also be useful to advisers.

IRS Self Instruction Pack - Decision Making: The Inquisitorial Role

This pack is designed to help decision makers understand their role in gathering evidence, with pointers about when additional information is necessary and how best to go about collecting it.

Appendix 5 - OSFC Customer Targets 2011/12

We aim to deliver a high quality decision at the earliest opportunity. Our staff will deliver the following customer service standards:

Overall Customer Service Standards

Standard cases

- We will make a decision on 95% of standard cases within 12 working days. Standard cases are all applications to the OSFC, excluding express and complex cases. They form the majority of the work of OSFC.

Express cases

- We will make a decision on 95% of express cases within 24 hours of receipt of the papers. Express cases are applications for living expenses or other needs where a very urgent decision is required.

Complex cases

- We will make a decision on 90% of complex cases within 21 days. Complex cases are those that warrant extensive enquiry or investigation or where the nature of the case is exceptionally complex.

Administration

In order to deliver the overall standards the following internal targets will guide our work:

- Papers for direct applications will be requested on the day they are received.
- We will work towards obtaining 95% of direct application papers within 4 days.
- Applicants will be informed when their papers remain outstanding from the SSA for more than 10 days.
- Cases will be fully registered on the day they are received.
- Cases will be allocated and passed to the relevant Inspector by the morning of day 2.
- Written responses to papers or to requests for further information will be recorded and passed to a decision maker on the day they are received.

Decision Making

- Any necessary enquiries of the applicant, whether in writing by issuing a full statement or a letter, or by telephone, will be made within 3 working days of receipt of the papers.
- Where no further enquiries are necessary in order to reach a sound decision, it will be issued within 3 working days of receipt of the papers.
- No more than 10% of cases will fall into the Complex Case category.

Enquiries and complaints

- A full response or update as appropriate will be sent to the applicant within 12 working days of the receipt of an enquiry or complaint.
- Where a response has not been made by day 12, it should be sent on all cases within 21 working days.
- A response will be made on express cases within 24 hours. Express cases are applications for living expenses or other needs where a very urgent decision is required.

Telephone Service

- A telephone service will be provided for customers, at a free phone call rate, between 9.00 am and 4.30 pm, Monday to Friday. An answering service will be available at all other times.

Appendix 6 - OSFC Quality Standards for the Review

We will deliver Inspectors' reviews that are independent, impartial, fair and legally sound. In each case we will work to increase the applicant's ability to understand and participate fully and effectively in their review.

To achieve this, the review will meet the following quality standards.

Before the decision is made the Inspector will:

- Examine thoroughly all the evidence presented to decide the key issues, establish the relevant facts and identify all necessary enquiries.
- Ask the right questions, in the right way, to enable all the relevant facts to be established.
- Deliver the information to the applicant in such a way that clarifies the key issues the Inspector has to decide, the facts he already knows about those issues and the information he still needs.

In making the decision the Inspector will:

- Take full account of the relevant information provided in the case and reflect that in the decision.
- Correctly interpret and apply the law, including the Department's directions.
- Ensure the rules of natural justice are met: that the applicant knows the case he must answer and has been given a fair opportunity to put his own case; and that there has been no bias.
- Reach an outcome that is reasonable and is right in all the circumstances of the case.
- Tailor each letter and decision to the case ensuring, in particular, that the applicant's level of understanding is respected.
- Explain the law clearly, in a way the applicant can understand, avoiding legal terminology wherever possible.
- Apply the relevant Commissioner's Advice to Inspectors.

In doing this we will deliver the review:

- Promptly and within published Customer Service Standards.

Appendix 8 - The Statutory Framework

The Social Fund

The Social Fund was introduced in 1988 and comprises two distinct parts; one regulated and the other discretionary. The Social Fund Commissioner and Social Fund Inspectors are concerned solely with the discretionary part of the Fund. This is a scheme of payments, by grant or interest free loan, to meet the needs, other than those covered by the regulated Fund, of the poorest and most vulnerable in society. The Commissioner and Inspectors have no involvement in the regulated part of the Fund, which allows for payments for funeral and maternity expenses, periods of cold weather and winter fuel.

The Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1998
 The Social Security Contributions and Benefits (Northern Ireland) Act 1992
 The Social Security Administration (Northern Ireland) Act 1992

The Social Fund Commissioner

The Social Fund Commissioner is appointed by the Department. The Commissioner has a duty to:

Article 37 of the Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1998

- appoint Social Fund Inspectors and other staff;
- monitor the quality of Inspectors' decisions and give advice, as he thinks fit, to improve the standard of their decisions;
- arrange appropriate training for Inspectors; and
- report annually, in writing, to the Department on the standard of Inspectors' reviews.

Social Fund Inspectors

Social Fund Inspectors provide the independent grievance process, by means of a review, for applicants who are dissatisfied with the Agency's decisions on their applications to the discretionary Social Fund.

Jurisdiction

Inspectors can only review decisions that have already been reviewed by the Agency, providing that an application for review has been made in the time, form and manner prescribed in regulations. Applications for an Inspector's review must be made directly to the OSFC within 28 days of the date of issue of the Agency's review decision.

The Social Fund (Application for Review) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1988

Article 38(3), Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1998

Nature of the Review

The review is conducted in two stages in accordance with directions issued by the Department. At the first stage, the Inspector considers whether the Reviewing Officer has:

- interpreted and applied the law correctly, which includes taking into account all relevant considerations and not taking account of irrelevant considerations;
- acted fairly and exercised his discretion reasonably; and
- observed the principles of natural justice.

The Department's Directions 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 to Inspectors.

If the decision has been reached correctly, applying the tests of the first stage of the review, the Inspector conducts a second stage which:

- considers the merits of the case;
- decides whether the decision was a right one in the circumstances; and
- takes account of relevant changes in circumstances and new evidence.

Depending on the outcome of the second stage, the Inspector exercises the appropriate power on review – see below.

Where the decision has not been reached correctly, applying the tests of the first stage, the second stage does not take place. Instead, the Inspector exercises the appropriate power on review.

Powers on Review

On review, the Inspector has the power to:

- confirm the Reviewing Officer's decision;
- refer the case back to the Reviewing Officer to make a fresh decision; or
- make any decision the Reviewing Officer could have made (these are referred to as substituted decisions).

Article 38(4) of the Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1998.

Reviews of Inspectors' Decisions

Article 38(5) of the Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1998.

The Inspector has a discretionary power to review his own or another Inspector's decision. Inspectors generally use this power to correct a decision that was wrong in law or fact, or where new relevant evidence has come to light.

There is no statutory right to this type of review. This is a matter for the discretion of the Inspector, who must decide whether to conduct a review of the earlier decision. Where the Inspector conducts such a review, the outcome may or may not change. The only recourse from an Inspector's decision is to the High Court on judicial review.

Experiences of Social Fund Customers in Northern Ireland

Foreword

This is the first time that a systematic examination of the Office of the Social Fund Commissioner's ("OSFC") case work has been undertaken in several years. The methodology of this report and its content broadly follows that of the "Experiences of Social Fund Customers" report which I published in Great Britain in July 2010. The material provides insights into the lives of some of our poorest and most vulnerable citizens based on an analysis of 200 Community Care Grant and 25 Crisis Loan cases which were received for review in the OSFC between January and June 2011.

The report presents information on a range of criteria, including health problems; debt; housing status; addiction issues and the items applied for. It is recognised that the circumstances which lead to applications to the Social Fund will not be identical given the circumstances in differing areas. To illustrate this and enable a greater understanding of the particular pressures and issues affecting Social Fund customers in Northern Ireland the equivalent percentages from the GB report have been shown where possible to give additional context and enable broad comparisons between the two jurisdictions to be made. Some figures, such as those showing the levels of Social Fund debt, are markedly different to the GB position. This and other areas of divergence between the two jurisdictions may require particular consideration when future policy initiatives in Northern Ireland are developed.

My hope is that this report is timely given the context of anticipated changes to the discretionary Social Fund scheme in Northern Ireland from April 2013 onwards. This illustration of some of the factors experienced by customers in Northern Ireland is intended to be a helpful contribution to the wider debate on options for reform of the Social Fund.

Social Fund Commissioner for Northern Ireland

Executive summary

Adopting a similar approach used in preparing the GB report, we have extracted the personal data presented in support of the Social Fund applications; and our findings are based on what was said explicitly by those customers. The Social Fund application process captures data on a wide range of personal issues including: family composition, health, housing status, caring responsibilities, income and financial commitments.

The ratio of Community Care Grant to Crisis Loan cases found in the GB report was replicated in this report. However, the equivalent GB report was based on cases reviewed in the Independent Review Service (“IRS”) in June 2010 as opposed to cases reviewed in OSFC during January – June 2011 in this report. The main consequence of this is the impact of the severe winter weather conditions being reflected solely in the Northern Ireland cases used for this report.

The Government’s “State of the Nation Report” highlights poor health, personal indebtedness, gender, age and family breakdown as some of the social disadvantages which are presenting barriers to independence or social mobility¹. We note that while each case examined at the OSFC is defined by the customer’s personal and very individual circumstances, the findings of this research project highlight some of the underlying social and economic problems facing many of those who approach the Fund for assistance. It is also clear that a significant proportion of our customers face multiple disadvantages, as defined in the State of the Nation Report.

There is no such thing as a ‘typical’ Social Fund customer; but what we do know from our wealth of experience, and from this case examination, is that certain experiences are often prevalent. This study and the one in GB highlight the high incidence of health problems evident in Social Fund cases, with 92.0% of the NI cases containing evidence of a health condition. However, the comparisons made in this report suggest that the situation in Northern Ireland is particularly acute for both physical and mental health problems. This is further supported by the higher instance of health related benefits in payment to customers and the level of care and support they and members of their households receive from medial professionals (GPs, consultants, Community Psychiatric Nurses, etc.). Over a third of the instances of health problems recorded were mental health related, with depression the most commonly reported condition, affecting someone in almost half of all cases in this study.

The frequency with which the Social Fund in Northern Ireland is being accessed and the support its customers seek is another area of interest. The average age of applicants in this report (38 years) and in the GB report (39 years) is very similar. However, in the cases analysed, the average application number in Northern Ireland is 43 compared to 24 in GB. In addition, 81.3% of the cases examined were requests for help with multiple household items, the comparative figure in GB was 42.6%. This indicates a much greater demand for assistance from the Social Fund in Northern Ireland.

This trend follows through to the situation regarding customer's debt. The average amount of Social Fund debt (derived from Crisis Loan and Budgeting Loan awards) in the cases studied is £890.52, more than double the equivalent amount in the GB report. The median amount of non-Social Fund debt in these cases was also higher in NI than in GB.

Taking all the criteria covered by this report into account, it is clear that customers of the Social Fund in Northern Ireland are often living day-to-day with multiple social disadvantages. The State of the Nation Report highlighted that these groups can be particularly vulnerable. With the high level of reliance on the Social Fund here in Northern Ireland to help customers meet intermittent and unforeseen expenses for high priority items and services, any changes to the current Scheme should try to ensure that support is still available to help those most in need.

Background context

The Office of the Social Fund Commissioner (“OSFC”) is an independent statutory body. We are funded by the Department for Social Development (“DSD”).

The organisation is headed by the Social Fund Commissioner, Karamjit Singh CBE, who was appointed by DSD. The Commissioner is statutorily independent and is under a duty to produce an annual report to the Department, which must be laid before the Northern Ireland Assembly and published.

The Social Fund scheme is administered in the Social Security Agency (“SSA”). The core business of the OSFC is to provide an independent tier of review for customers dissatisfied with decisions made in the SSA on their applications to the discretionary part of the Social Fund. This part of the Social Fund is a scheme of grant and interest free loan payments designed to help people on low income with costs that are difficult to meet. Payments from the Social Fund are targeted at some of the poorest and most vulnerable citizens in our society.

The 225 cases examined for this report were applications made for either a community care grant or crisis loan. During 2010/11, the OSFC considered 1,363 cases as part of the review process.

Grant payments are intended to help meet a need for community care. The prime objectives of grants are to:

- help people to establish themselves in the community;
- help people remain in the community;
- help with the care of a prisoner or young offender on release or temporary licence;
- ease exceptional pressures on families;
- help people setting up home as a part of a planned resettlement programme; and
- assist with certain travel costs.

Crisis loans are intended to help meet an immediate short term need either in an emergency or as the consequence of a disaster, whereby the provision of that help is the only means of avoiding serious damage or serious risk to health or safety.

Summary of key statistical findings

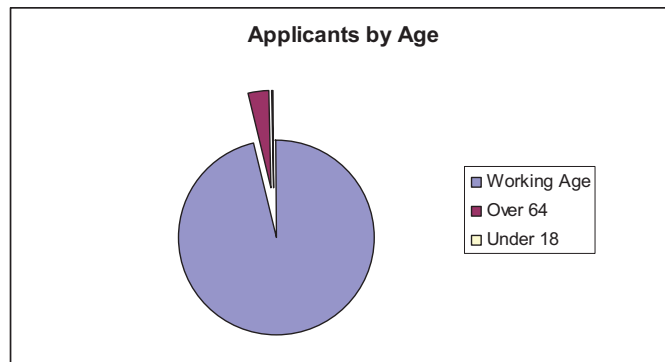

Of the 225 cases examined at the OSFC:

- 56.9% of applications (54.6% in GB) were made by people of middle working age (aged between 25 and 49).
- 39.1% of applications (27% in GB) involved an adult with both mental and physical health problems.
- Of cases that involved children, 6.5% (4.9% in GB) involved children with both physical and mental health problems.
- 82.2% (86.2% in GB) of families in the study either had an adult or child with a physical or mental health problem.
- 23.4% (21.4% in GB) of families in the study had both an adult and child with physical or mental health problems.
- 67.6% (46.4% in GB) of the cases examined involved working age people experiencing multiple disadvantages as defined in the State of the Nation Report.
- 35.1% of the cases examined (14.8% in GB) involved people with two or more of the following social disadvantages: learning difficulties; physical or mental health problems; homelessness; drug or alcohol problems; ex-offenders; children leaving care, or where there are ongoing custody issues.
- 49.3% of the cases examined (14.6% in GB) had a Social Fund debt of more than £1,000. In 16.2% of these cases the Social Fund debt was in addition to other debts to third parties.
- 49.6% (32.9% in GB) of customers in the study with an income may be spending more than 10% of their weekly income on debt repayments. However, it should be noted that Child Benefit and Child Tax Credit income information was frequently not available in the customers' Social Fund case papers, so the actual figure will be lower than 49.6%.
- 6.2% (11.8% in GB) involved a customer leaving some sort of institutional or residential care or some sort of resettlement centre.
- 20.9% (19.8% in GB) involved somebody who had experienced a period of homelessness.
- 31.1% of cases (40% in GB) involved a customer asking for items to set up home from scratch.
- 81.3% of cases (42.6% in GB) involved an application for multiple household items.
- 51.1% of cases (44% in GB) involved requests for replacement items. These are situations where the customer is already living in the property but wants help to replace items due to wear and tear or other damage.
- 18.2% of cases involved customers who had applied for the same item within the previous 12 months.
- The average amount requested by customers was £1,512.22 (£1,596.55 in GB). This covered a range from £30 up to £8,880 (£34.60 up to £15,080 in GB). The median figure of this range was £1,220 (£1,289.50 in GB).
- In 15.1% of cases (18.6% in GB) the customer was represented, e.g. by a family member; or by a third party such as a Citizen's Advice Bureau, solicitor, MLA or MP.

Detailed findings

Age of those applying to the Fund

- Of the 225 applications, 217 or 96.4% (93.4% in GB) were made by people of working age, i.e. by people aged between 18 and 64.
- Of the 217 applications made by people of working age, 19.8% (20.6% in GB) were made by people of younger working age (people aged between 18 and 24).
- 59.0% of the 217 applications (58.5% in GB) were made by people of middle working age (aged between 25 and 49).
- The remaining 21.2% of the 217 applications (20% in GB) were made by people of older working age (aged between 50 and 64).
- 0.4% of applications (2% in GB) were made by people aged under 18.
- 3.1% of applications (4.6% in GB) were made by people either at the retirement age of 65, or older.

Disability

Poor health has been highlighted as a major source of disadvantage in the Government's State of the Nation report. Grant and crisis loan application forms ask whether the customer has any health problems and how they are affected by this. The health problems reported by customers are varied in nature and extent, and can range from acute disability with formal diagnosis, to more general statements of feeling down, depressed or having generic back or leg pain, for example. These may not necessarily be diagnosed, medicated or recognised by the type of benefit in payment to them, but the following data encompasses all those cases where the customer offered detailed evidence of an underlying health problem:

Out of the 225 cases examined:

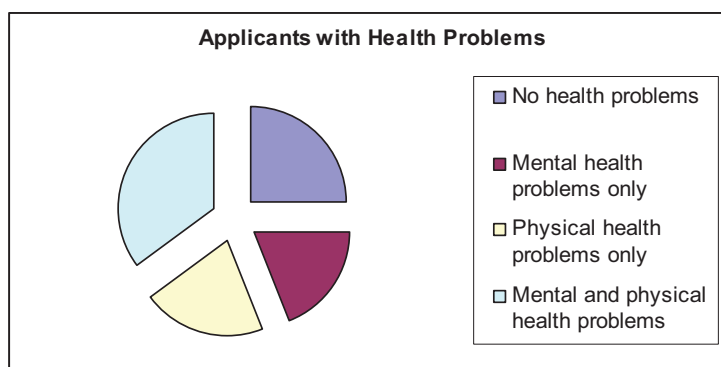

- 56.9% (45.6% in GB) involved an adult with a mental health problem (this can include, for example, depression, schizophrenia, panic attacks).
- 60.9% (51.2% in GB) involved an adult with a physical health problem (for example arthritis, back pain, asthma).
- 39.1% (27.2% in GB) involved an adult with both mental and physical health problems.
- 47.6% of the cases recorded depression as affecting at least one person.

Of cases that involved children:

- 9.3% (12.1% in GB) involved children with mental health problems (such as behavioural problems, ADHD).
- 29.9% (23.6% in GB) involved children with physical health problems (such as asthma, eczema, mobility issues).
- 6.5% (4.9% in GB) involved children with both physical and mental health problems.

Applicants with Health Problems

- No health problems 24.9% (31% in GB)
- Mental health problems only 19.1% (18% in GB)
- Physical health problems only 20.9% (24% in GB)
- Mental and physical health problems 35.1% (27% in GB)

Some adults' health problems affected their ability to do basic day-to-day household tasks and/or their ability to leave the home. Of the cases examined:

- 32.9% (30.0% in GB) involved an adult with a health problem that restricted their movement in their day-to-day life.
- 12.0% (19.0% in GB) involved an adult who, due to mental health issues, were isolated and experienced problems going out on their own.
- 3.1% (7.6% in GB) involved adults with both mobility problems and problems going out alone.
- Of the cases examined, 1.3% (1.2% in GB) of children had their mobility restricted because of a physical health problem.

Families and disability

Out of the 225 cases examined, 47.6% (36.4% in GB) described themselves as families. For the benefit of this examination this is defined as children living in the household or children living with extended family or another adult. Of families in the study:

- 82.2% (86.2% in GB) either had an adult or child with a physical or mental health problem.
- 74.8% (76.9% in GB) had at least 1 adult with a mental or physical health problem.
- 30.8% (30.8% in GB) had at least 1 child with a mental or physical health problem.
- 23.4% (21.4% in GB) had both an adult and child with physical or mental health problems.
- 1.9% (8.2% in GB) had both an adult and a child with a mental health problem.

Health conditions

92.0% of the cases contained evidence of someone with a health condition. In total, 737 instances of health conditions affecting a person mentioned in the application were recorded in the 225 cases: Of the recorded health conditions:

- 79.1% were experienced by the applicant;
- 9.9% were experienced by another adult; and
- 11.0% were experienced by a child.

There were 140 different health conditions recorded in the 225 cases. Of the recorded health conditions:

- 35.4% were mental health related;
- 19.7% of were mobility/bone/joint/pain related;
- 8.5% were lung related;
- 6.6% were bowel/bladder related;
- 6.5% were brain related;
- 4.5% were heart/liver/kidney/pancreas related;
- 2.3% were addiction related; and
- 16.5% were various other health conditions.

The most commonly reported health conditions in the cases examined were:

- Depression – 15.3% of reported conditions
- Asthma – 6.5% of reported conditions
- Anxiety – 6.1% of reported conditions
- Back pain – 5.3% of reported conditions
- Arthritis/osteoarthritis – 4.5% of reported conditions
- Stress – 3.4% of reported conditions
- Unspecified mobility issues – 3.4% of reported conditions
- Panic Attacks – 3.1% of reported conditions
- Incontinence – 2.8% of reported conditions

Disability benefits

- 52.9% of the cases examined (36.4% in GB) involved a customer who received a health related benefit; this could include Disability Living

Allowance (DLA) Care or Mobility components, Employment and Support Allowance (ESA), and/or Disability Premiums paid as part of weekly benefit income

- 30.7% of customers (18.4% in GB) received a DLA Care Component:
 - 14 (35 in GB) customers at the highest rate
 - 43 (29 in GB) customers at the middle rate
 - 12 (28 in GB) customers at the lowest rate
- 26.7% of customers (18.4% in GB) received a DLA Mobility Component:
 - 31 (39 in GB) customers at the higher rate
 - 29 (53 in GB) customers at the lower rate

Help from healthcare professionals

The application form for a community care grant asks whether or not the customer or a member of their family regularly sees a doctor or healthcare professional. It should be noted that the crisis loan application form does not ask for this information and so some of those customers may see their doctor or healthcare professional regularly, but we would not be aware of this from the case examination. However, given that the vast majority of cases examined were requests for grants, and that in some of the loan applications customers still volunteered this information, we can be satisfied that the data gleaned is sufficiently valid. Of the cases examined:

- 58.2% (27.2% in GB) regularly saw their GP.
- 19.6% (9.8% in GB) regularly attended appointments at hospital.
- 4.0% (5.0% in GB) regularly saw their CPN.
- 9.8% (11.4% in GB) regularly saw a counsellor.

The following two case studies from the examination illustrate the type and range of issues facing some Social Fund customers:

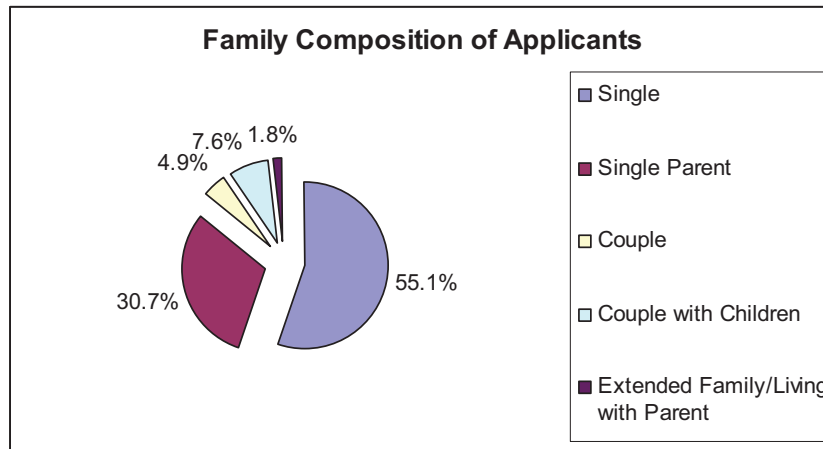

Case example 1

Ms A lives with 3 of her children and has her 2 other children to stay at weekends. Her Social Fund debt is over £1,300. Ms A has depression and one of her children is an insulin dependent diabetic and is receiving counselling to help deal with the condition. Some of Ms A's children had been abused at their previous address and the family had subsequently been rehoused by the Housing Executive. They were also now receiving support from a Social Worker. Ms A applied for items as a consequence of the family's move.

Case example 2

Mr B had been mugged by two men who took his jacket, which contained his benefit money. He reported the incident to the police and applied for a crisis loan to replace the money. Due to the incident Mr B was having to rely on a friend and a relative for food and shelter. He already owed more than £1,300 in Social Fund debt which was being repaid at a rate of 19.4% of his £65.45 weekly income.

Children & families

In 36.0% of the cases examined (36.4% in GB), the customer indicated that they had one or more children living at home. Of these:

- 79.0% (66.5% in GB) indicated that they were a single parent.
- 0% (24.2% in GB) indicated that they were living with a partner.
- 21% (9.3% in GB) indicated that they and their child or children were living with their parents or extended family.

In 13.3% of the cases examined (13.8% in GB) the customer indicated that they had children who were not living with them (excluding customers with grown-up/non-dependent children no longer in the family home). Of these:

- 53.3% (82.6% in GB) indicated that they were currently living alone.
- 20.0% indicated that they had other children living with them.
- 16.7% (7.2% in GB) indicated that they were living with their parents or extended family.
- 6.7% (8.7% in GB) indicated that they were living with a partner.
- 3.3% (0% in GB) indicated that they were homeless.
- 0% (1.5% in GB) indicated that they were living with someone who was neither their partner nor a member of their family.

In 52.4% of cases examined (53.8% in GB) the customer indicated that they had no children (excluding those customers with grown-up/nondependent children no longer in the family home). Of these:

- 89.8% (81.8% in GB) indicated that they were currently living alone.
- 10.2% (18.2% in GB) indicated that they were currently living with at least one other person.

In 47.6% of cases (46.2% in GB) the customer had children who were living with them, living elsewhere or both. Of these, 57.9% (48.9% in GB) at least one of their children was under the age of five.

In 3.6% of cases (3.6% in GB) either the customer or their partner was pregnant.

In 8.9% of cases (10% in GB) the breakdown of a relationship was at least part of the catalyst for the application being made. Of these relationship breakdowns:

- 65.0% (40.0% in GB) involved the customer leaving their parents' home.
- 35% (54.0% in GB) involved the customer leaving their partner.
- 0% (6.0% in GB) involved the breakdown of some other kind of relationship, for example a parent leaving the home of one of their offspring.
- in 30% (20.0% in GB) the customer had at least one child that they looked after.

In 4.0% of cases (5.6% in GB) the customer indicated that family reconciliation (where the customer was trying to get some level of custody of their children) was at least part of the catalyst for the application being made. Of these cases:

- in 44.4% (53.6% in GB) the children involved were currently in the care of the other parent.
- in 44.4% (35.7% in GB) the children involved were currently in the care of another member of the customer's family (for example, a grandparent).
- in 11.1% the children involved recently came out of care.

The next case studies are offered to help illustrate the types of difficulties facing some customers and members of their family:

Case example 3

Ms C is a young single parent with a 7 month old child and a Social Fund debt in excess of £1,400. She is pregnant with her second child and both her and her daughter have physical health problems. They are registered as homeless having had to leave the family home due to overcrowding, they are now living in a hostel. Ms C has recently been offered a tenancy of a Housing Executive property and has applied for items to enable her to take up the offer and move in.

Case example 4

Ms D is a single parent with 2 young children and shared custody of her teenage son who stays at weekends. She has a history of alcohol addiction and had a breakdown following bereavement in her family and had ended up homeless as a result. Ms D takes medication for significant mental health problems and is also receiving support from a Community Psychiatric Nurse, a counsellor, a social worker and a Family Support Unit. Her application was for items to help her provide for her young children.

Multiple disadvantage

Families with children

In the State of the Nation report it was found that families are more at risk of multiple disadvantage if they are: single parents; have 3 or more children; are younger mothers under 25; or when one or both adults in the household have health problems. Of the 225 cases examined:

- 30.7% (24.2% in GB) applications were made by lone parents.
- 7.1% (8.6% in GB) customers were in families with 3 or more children.
- 7.1% (7.4% in GB) customers were young mothers (under 25).
- 79.6% (28.0% in GB) applications were from households where one or both adults had mental or physical health problems.

Young people aged 16-24

The State of the Nation report found that those most likely to be at risk of multiple disadvantage in key life stages also include 16-24 years old who are female and live with children; and this is again borne out by the results from the OSFC case sample:

- 13.3% (14.4% in GB) of the cases examined were made by women aged between 16 and 24.
- 7.1% (7.4% in GB) of these customers were young mothers, with a high proportion of these cases also containing evidence of one or more family members with health problems, often coupled with high levels of debt.

People of working age without children

Another client group identified in The State of the Nation report as being at risk of multiple disadvantage included working-age people without children with some or all of the following characteristics: female; of older working age (over 50); sick or disabled; and those living in a single person household. Of the cases examined by the OSFC:

- 85.7% (72.8% in GB) of customers of working age (64 or under) had the family composition as single (meaning some had dependent children living with them, but no other adults).
- 54.7% customers (48.8% in GB) were in a single person household (meaning that they had no children living with them).
- 16.9% (16.2% in GB) were single females of working age with no children.
- 20.4% (19.6% in GB) were older working age people (50-64); 39.1% (42.9% in GB) of these were female and 60.9% (57.1% in GB) male.
- 76.4% of customers (65.2% in GB) of working age had either a mental or physical health problem.
- 67.6% of cases (46.4% in GB) examined involved working age people that fitted into two of the above categories. 23.1% (17.0% in GB) were affected by 3 of the disadvantages listed and 3.1% (3.6% in GB) applicants were affected by each disadvantage listed.

People aged 60 or over

7.1% (4.6% in GB) of the cases examined were made by applicants who are over 60. Of these:

- 6.3% (13.0% in GB) were made by applicants over 80.
- 62.5% (69.6% in GB) lived alone.

Social disadvantages

The State of the Nation Report highlighted that there are also a number of groups who are not generally represented in household surveys but who are significantly more likely to experience multiple disadvantage. The Report concluded that these groups can be particularly vulnerable, and may also lead chaotic lifestyles; and went on to highlight that groups who may be more at risk of experiencing multiple disadvantages are likely to include those with one or more of the following social disadvantages: learning difficulties; physical and mental health problems; homelessness; drug or alcohol problems; ex-offenders; children leaving care; or where there are ongoing issues with the custody of children.

Of the 225 cases examined by the OSFC:

- 47.1% (39.8% in GB) had evidence of a combination of both mental and physical health problems (this may be, for example, a single person with both mental and physical health problems; or a parent with physical health problems looking after a child with mental health problems). Of these cases, 44.3% (21.8% in GB) were applications made by a person living alone with no children.
 - 20.9% (19.8% in GB) involved somebody who presented themselves as 'homeless' (that is, living in a hostel, on the streets, "sofa surfing", sleeping in a homeless shelter, or a combination of these; from the sample, the median time spent homeless was 3 months (12 months in GB)).
 - 10.2% (7.4% in GB) involved an ongoing problem with alcohol and 4.4% (6.4% in GB) had ongoing problems with drugs. 2.7% (2.0% in GB) involved someone experiencing ongoing problems with both drugs and alcohol.
 - 4.9% (7.6% in GB) involved a customer leaving prison. Of these customers 90.9% (71.1% in GB) who told us how long their sentences were, the median prison sentence was 3 months (9 months in GB).
 - 5.8% (5.8% in GB) applied for help to provide the facilities to get access to their children or to have their children back to live with them.
- 35.1% (14.8% in GB) involved more than two of the above disadvantages.
 - 5.3% (2.0% in GB) involved three or more of the above disadvantages.

Personal indebtedness and financial difficulty

Number of Social Fund applications

The average age of applicants in the study was 38 (39 in GB), the average Social Fund application number in the study was 43 (24 in GB).

A high number of Social Fund applications may be indicative of someone who struggles to manage their money effectively. For the purposes of this case examination, we divided customers into six separate age bands (under 25, 25-34, 35-44, 45-54, 55-64, 65+). The median number of applications for individuals within each band was taken (any with an application number of "zero", indicating a clerical i.e. non-computerised application, were not counted).

Counting the number of customers with anything over double the median number of applications for their age band may provide a crude measure of the number of people who are struggling to manage their money effectively.

On this measure, 26.9% (33.06% in GB) of applications out of the 223 counted (2 clerical applications excluded) were made by a customer who would appear to be struggling to manage their money. This approach does have some limitations. Firstly, if someone makes a grant application but is actually awarded a crisis loan (or vice-versa) the award is entered by the SSA under a new application number, artificially inflating the "application number" of any later applications. Secondly, while a relatively high number of applications might indicate someone struggling to manage their money, it might equally indicate someone who is experiencing a range of health or other social issues leading to greater than normal intermittent expenses (for example, a single mother with children who have learning difficulties and display challenging and destructive behaviour).

Social Fund Debt

Our findings show that many of the customers and families experiencing those issues most closely associated with multiple disadvantage also have high levels of personal indebtedness and may experience ongoing financial pressures:

- In 75.6% (40% in GB) of cases the customer (and their partner, if applicable) had a Social Fund debt of more than £500.
- 49.3% (14.6% in GB) had a Social Fund debt of more than £1000.
- 38.2% (8% in GB) had a Social Fund debt of more than £1250.
- 20.0% (3% in GB) had a Social Fund debt within £100 of the £1500 maximum allowed by law.

Non-Social Fund Debt

- 15.1% (13% in GB) indicated that they owed money to a person or organisation outside of the Social Fund (however, this data is with the caveat that when applying for a grant the person is not obliged to reveal their level of indebtedness and so it may be that the true figure is actually much higher).
- Of those customers whose case papers indicated an amount of non-Social Fund debt, the median figure in Northern Ireland (from the 8.4% of cases which included a figure) is £950, and in GB (from the 7.6% of cases which included a figure) it is £850.

Level of total debt

Assessing the customer's total level of debt (both Social Fund debt and non-Social Fund debt) offers alternative means for assessing levels of financial difficulty. The median level of debt indicated by the customer and the SSA for the 225 cases examined was £1,097.81 (£388.70 in GB). In 4% of cases the customer's level of debt was more than double this amount.

Weekly repayments

In 0.4% of cases examined, the customer had no weekly income at the time of their review. Of the remaining 99.6% of customers:

- 49.6% (32.9% in GB) appeared to be spending more than 10% of their weekly income on debt repayments.
- 24.6% (2.2% in GB) appeared to be spending more than 15% of their weekly income on debt repayments.
- 7.6% (5.5% in GB) appeared to be spending more than 20% of their weekly income on debt repayments (including Social Fund repayments).

It should be noted that some information on a household's income could not be ascertained from the case papers. In particular, information on Child Tax Credit and Child Benefit income was often not available, so some customer's household income will be higher than the amounts recorded in this case examination.

The limitations already highlighted with regard to our knowledge of non-Social Fund debt for community care grant customers also holds true with regards to the data we have for weekly repayments. It is also important to bear in mind that a customer's rate of repayment to the Fund may vary week to week as they finish paying off one award and begin repaying another which has been set a different rate of repayment. Many of these customers already face problems managing their weekly income, and having to repay loans at variable rates can only exacerbate these difficulties.

The following case illustrates a customer repaying a large Social Fund debt where Social Fund repayment rates vary for different loans:

Case example 5

Ms E lives with her teenage daughter and has applied for items following a serious accident. She has depression for which she takes medication. Ms E was in receipt of Employment and Support Allowance, Child Tax Credits and Child Benefit and her Social Fund debt was over £1,400. Ms E's social fund debt was made up of 20 separate Crisis Loan awards whose agreed repayment rates when awarded varied significantly from c. £7.09 up to £18.71 a week.

What are people applying for and why?

From the 225 cases examined:

- 31.1% (40% in GB) involved a customer requesting items sufficient to set up home from scratch.
- 4.9% (6% in GB) involved an application for a single household item.
- 81.3% (42.6% in GB) involved an application for multiple household items.
- 28.0% (18% in GB) involved a customer asking for clothing.
- 0.9% (1.2% in GB) involved a request for 'specialist' equipment (items such as mobility scooters, other aids to mobility and disability aids).
- 4.4% (3.2% in GB) involved travel expenses (expenses such as visiting a sick relative or to provide support to family members following bereavement).
- 12.4% (11% in GB) applied for items that Social Fund law says can never be paid.

- 22.2% (3% in GB) applied for decorating expenses (such as paint, wallpaper or decorating equipment). Unlike in GB, the cases selected for this exercise covered the period during and shortly after the extreme winter weather conditions. This in turn led to increased numbers of applications prompted by damage caused by flooding from burst pipes. Ignoring the application where this was a relevant factor this figure drops to 16.0%.
- 14.2% (12.2% in GB) involved items not covered by the above categories (for example crisis loans for rent in advance).

Some customers apply for a range of needs which each fall into separate categories (such as household furniture & equipment; clothing & footwear; 'specialist' equipment; decorating costs; travel expenses):

- 39.6% (30.8% in GB) involved customers applying for items or needs in two or more of the above categories.
- 9.8% (5.8% in GB) involved customers applying for items or needs in three or more of the above categories.
- 0% (0.8% in GB) involved customers applying for items or needs in four of the above categories.

Moving home

43.6% of cases (33.2% in GB) involved moving home. Of these:

- 7.1% (5.2% in GB) wanted to move because of issues related to crime or harassment.
- 6.2% wanted to move due to family breakdown.
- 6.2% were required to move home (i.e. due to eviction, tenancy not renewed, vesting/repossession/sale of their home).
- 5.3% wanted to move due to a deterioration in the condition of their home (including due to a fire or flood) or to move to a more suitable or affordable home.
- 5.3% wanted to move to be closer to a relative or improve access to their children.
- 3.6% (5.6% in GB) lived in overcrowded conditions.
- 3.1% (11.8% in GB) applied as they were in temporary accommodation.
- 2.2% were moving to set up their own home for the first time.
- 1.8% (5.6% in GB) wanted to move because of a health related issue.
- 2.7% were moving for other reasons (including: as part of bail conditions, inherited a property, leaving prison).

Some customers gave very little information in their case so it was not always possible to categorise the request accurately.

'Traumatic event'

For the purposes of this case examination and analysis, we use the term 'traumatic event' to refer to an unexpected trauma leading to major upheaval in the customer's life. This could include events such as escaping domestic violence, a partner or close family member dying, the home being burgled, or damage caused by a natural disaster such as a fire or flood.

19.1% of cases examined (10.6% of the overall sample in GB) were made because the customer had suffered some form of 'traumatic event'. Of these:

- 2.3% (3.6% in GB) were escaping domestic violence.
- 11.6% (2% in GB) involved either the customer or a family member being a victim of crime.
- 30.2% (9.6% of the complete sample in GB) indicated that crime (including domestic violence) or harassment of some kind was at least part of the catalyst for their application to help them move home.
- 53.5% (2.8% in GB) involved a flood or fire. This figure is significantly higher than that for GB in part due to the cases selected for the exercise covering the period of extreme winter weather conditions in Northern Ireland, which was not the case in the GB exercise.
- 4.7% (2.2% in GB) involved some other kind of traumatic event.

The following case examples illustrate situations where the customer is already very vulnerable, and needs intervention because they have been the victim of some sort of abuse:

Case example 6

Mr and Mrs F live with their 4 children. Mr F has mental health problems for which he sees a Community Psychiatric Nurse and attends counselling, his wife is his carer. Their household income includes Income Support with disability and carer premiums, Disability Living Allowance (Care and Mobility) and Child Benefit. The family have been intimidated out of their home and entered temporary housing before securing a new tenancy. Following the intimidation their young son is having difficulty coping. He is bed wetting and is now receiving help to deal with the trauma.

Case example 7

Ms G is receiving Income Support with disability premiums and middle rate care Disability Living Allowance. Her Social Fund debt is over £1,000 and is being repaid over a 2 year period. Ms G has an eating disorder (for which she is attending hospital), depression, osteoporosis, has attempted suicide and is in recovery from alcohol addiction. Ms G is getting support from a key worker, a counsellor and an addiction clinic and has moved into her own tenancy from a family home where she had been the subject of abuse. Her application was for items to help her cope with her health problems and help her set up her new home.

Replacement items

- 51.1% (44% in GB) involved requests for replacement items. These are situations where the customer is already living in the property but wants help to replace items due to wear and tear or other damage.
- 18.2% of cases involved customers who had applied for the same item within the previous 12 months.

Relationship breakdown

- 8.9% of cases (10% in GB) involved some form of relationship breakdown. This could involve, for example, the customer leaving their family home (though not necessarily for the first time) or leaving their partner.
- 3.1% of cases (5.4% in GB) involved a partner leaving a relationship.
- 5.8% of cases (4% in GB) involved leaving the family home.

- 0% of cases (0.6% in GB) involved a parent living in a home owned or rented by their adult child, but where the relationship had broken down.

Leaving care or resettlement centres

- 6.2% of cases (11.8% in GB) involved a customer leaving some sort of institutional or residential care or some sort of resettlement centre.
- 4.9% of cases (7.6% in GB) involved leaving prison. The median sentence for these customers was 4 months (9 months in GB).
- 0% of cases (1% in GB) involved the customer leaving hospital.
- 0% of cases (1.6% in GB) involved the customer coming out of rehab and/or centre offering a high level of support to vulnerable people.
- 1.3% of cases (1.2% in GB) involved the customer leaving accommodation such as a Women's Refuge.
- 0% of cases (0.4% in GB) suggested that the customer was leaving care, but did not specify what type of care they were leaving.

Homelessness

20.9% of cases (19.8% in GB) involved somebody who had been made homeless. Of these:

- 19.1% (5.8% in GB) involved someone who lived in a hostel.
- 0% (2.2% in GB) involved a customer who was living on the streets without a fixed address.
- 46.8% (5% in GB) involved "sofa surfing" i.e. moving between and sleeping in the homes of different family members or friends.
- 8.5% involved the customer living in temporary housing or emergency accommodation.
- 12.8% (5.2% in GB) involved the customer living in some combination of the above.
- in 12.8% (1.6% in GB) the customer told us they were homeless but did not tell us how exactly how they were living.

The median time spent homeless for these customers was 3 months (12 months in GB).

Refugees

0% of the cases examined (2.4% in GB) involved a customer who had entered the UK with refugee status (these were now customers who had recently been granted 'Leave to Remain' in the UK, and who were in the process of trying to set up home).

Deterioration in health or housing

- In 3.1% of the cases examined (9.2% in GB) either the customer or a member of their family made the application to help address a deteriorating situation because of a deterioration in health.
- 3.1% of cases (7.4% in GB) either involved the customer or another family member with health problems.
- 0.4% of cases (0.8% in GB) involved children with health problems.
- 0.9% of cases (0.4% in GB) involved more than one individual in the household with health problems.

- 0% of cases (0.6% in GB) involved the deterioration of a family member or ex-partner who lives outside the applicant's household.

In 16.4% of cases (5.2% in GB) the primary reason for the application was deterioration in the condition of the customer's housing (including instances of damp, or damage caused by a flood or infestation). As mentioned previously, the cases used in this report cover the period during and shortly after the severe winter weather conditions experienced in Northern Ireland. Ignoring the cases where flooding caused by burst pipes due to the extreme cold causing the deteriorating housing conditions, this figure falls to 6.2%.

Family reconciliation

In 5.3% of cases (5.6% in GB) the reason for the application was either to gain access to the children, or to place them out of foster care, back with the applicant.

- 4.4% (3.2% in GB) of cases involved children living with the other parent.
- 0.4% (2% in GB) of cases involved children living with another family member.
- 0.4% (0.2% in GB) of cases involved a child currently in the care of social services.

Other organisations

In 2 (0.9%) of cases (1.2% in GB), the Inspector felt that another person or organisation may have a duty to provide at least one of the items being applied for, in one case (1% in GB) the Inspector concluded that the Occupational Therapy department of Social Services may have a duty to meet the customer's needs. The other case involved an application for travel expenses to hospital which the Inspector decided the NHS may have a duty to pay for.

Excluded items/services

In 12.4% of cases (11% in GB), the customer applied for an item or expense excluded by Social Fund law:

- 5% of community care grant applications included requests for oil, which can only be considered as a crisis loan.
- 2.0% of community care grant applications (1% in GB) included requests for daily living expenses, which can only be considered as a crisis loan.
- 1.8% of cases included requests for security items (other than minor locks, etc).
- 1.3% of cases (4.4% in GB) involved the customer applying for a deposit with which to secure a new privately-rented tenancy.
- 1.3% of cases (2.8% in GB) were community care grant applications for rent in advance, but these can only be considered for a crisis loan.
- 1.3% of cases (1.2% in GB) were for repairs or improvements to the home, and the repair or improvement was not 'minor'.
- 0.9% of cases (0.8% in GB) asked for items for the immediate needs of a newborn baby, and so were classed as maternity expenses. These cannot be met from the discretionary part of the scheme, so neither a community care grant nor a crisis loan could be considered.
- 0.4% of cases (0.6% in GB) involved the cost of travelling outside the UK.
- 0.4% of cases (1.2% in GB) involved a request for work-related expenses.

Representatives

In 15.1% of cases (18.6% in GB) the customer was represented by either a family member; or by a third party such as a Citizen's Advice Bureau, solicitors, MLAs or MPs, etc. In 84.9% of cases (81.4% in GB) the customer was not represented.

Help from other organisations

As part of the case examination we looked at the type of help customers are already receiving from elsewhere in a bid to improve their situation. On the community care grant application form it asks the customer if they get help from any organisations. This information can also come to light later on in the application process. 69.3% of cases (28.4% in GB) provided details of third party support, as follows:

- 64.9% (11.4% in GB) gave details of using a counselling service and/or attending regular support from someone medically qualified – for example a psychiatrist.
- 0.9% (2.2% in GB) had regular interaction with their probation officer.
- 1.8% (3.2% in GB) had regular contact with a rehabilitation worker.
- 12.0% (7.6% in GB) gave details of regular interactions with other organisations. This included groups such as community groups, women's groups or the Citizen's Advice Bureau.

Amount requested by customers

In this study the average amount requested by customers was £1,512.22 (£1,596.55 in GB). This covered a range from £30 to £8,880 (£34.60 up to £15,080 in GB). The median figure of this range was £1,220 (£1,289.50 in GB). Of the 225 cases examined:

- 89.8% (90.2% in GB) applied for an amount under £3,000
- 58.7% (57.8% in GB) applied for an amount under £1,500
- 39.1% (38% in GB) applied for an amount under £1,000

Dear Dr. Pelan

Parliamentary Passage of the Welfare Reform Bill

I am writing to you on behalf of the Public and Commercial Services Union (PCS) about the timetable for the Parliamentary passage of the Welfare Reform Bill.

PCS has 270,000 members working across UK departments, with around 100,000 delivering welfare provision. PCS has taken a leading role within the trade union movement in voicing concerns about welfare policy and in campaigning to defend and strengthen the welfare state. PCS members take pride in the welfare state and they want a welfare state that provides a decent standard of living for the retired, the unemployed and for those unable to work. Over the past 30 years the concept of welfare has been under attack as successive governments have stopped pursuing policies of full employment and sought to blame the unemployed or the individual.

PCS firmly believes that the UK governments £18 billion (with the potential for another £10 billion announced yesterday at the Conservative Party conference) welfare cuts will damage the welfare state and we have no wish to return to the welfare state of the 1940's which reflected the social attitudes of its time especially towards women and the disabled. As a consequence PCS has published "Welfare – an alternative Vision" and have had public meetings in Northern Ireland and distributed this material.

We understand that the Welfare Reform Bill will be referred to the Committee for its consideration stage from 10th October until 27th November, where scrutiny will take place two and a half days a week. Standing Orders allow 30 days for a Committee to consider a Bill, however, extensions can be sought.

We are seeking confirmation from the Committee that the commitment given to Congress for full line by line scrutiny will be honoured.

We are also seeking reassurance that the committee will request an extension to 90 days to allow for a full debate to occur on the practical consequences of any proposals within the Bill and to discuss potential options to mitigate impacts. It is vital that a real appraisal of the effect of these proposals locally is achieved. The welfare reform changes are likely to last a generation and any attempt to hasten the timetable will prove counter-productive.

Like our Congress colleagues PCS believes it is appropriate to tailor a Northern Ireland approach to issues presented by the Welfare Reform Bill. Given the wide range of reforms, the implementation of the changes will impact upon a significant percentage of the working age population in Northern Ireland. Different arrangements could be made and we argue that, in previous circumstances, different arrangements have been made that reflect the very different challenges that face society in Northern Ireland.

Furthermore, despite the legislation being passed in Great Britain, there remains a high level of uncertainty around the finer detail of Universal Credit. It is clear from the regulations that a number of important issues have yet to be decided, for example the level of the assumed minimum income floor which will be set of the self employed and the question of whether to pay monthly or fortnightly.

The challenge posed by these proposed reforms provides the NI Assembly with a unique opportunity to demonstrate the positive value of a devolved government and to impact on the formation of social security policy here for the next generation. We hope that this opportunity is seized and maximized and we look forward to working with the Committee on this important task.

We look forward to hearing from you.

Yours sincerely

Welfare Reform Bill NI – RNIB NI’S response

“To be blind is not miserable, not to be able to bear blindness, that is miserable”. Those words were written by John Milton, author of Paradise Lost, and it is our belief that if the Welfare Reform Bill is enacted into law in Northern Ireland in its current incarnation, its effect will be to cause hundreds of thousands of our citizens to be unable to bear blindness. That will have huge social and economic implications at a time when our society and economy can least afford it.

As committee members are aware, the Welfare Reform Bill proposes phasing out Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and replacing it with Personal Independence Payments (PIP).

In January 2012, the then minister for the disabled Maria Miller said PIPs would introduce face-to-face assessments and regular reviews. She said: “Under PIP, support will be focused on those who need it most, with a greater proportion getting the higher rates compared to DLA.” However, if that statement is contrasted with both the Bill itself and also the stated aims of the Westminster Government, it is shown up to be a fallacy.

In April 2011, the Westminster Government stated that their aim was to reduce spending on DLA by 20%, and in the process save in excess of £2 billion. We at the RNIB understand that the budget deficit must be reduced, but if the starting point of the debate on welfare reform is to reduce spending on disability benefit by 20%, how can that honestly be said to equate with Ms Miller’s statement that “support will be focused on those who need it most”? Inevitably, with an aim of reducing spending by 20%, some of those who need help the most in society will be deemed to “fall outside the net”, and thereby getting no support whatsoever under the proposed plans.

Looking specifically at the proposals, and in respect of blind and partially sighted people, we have the following comments:

There are a number of areas where we feel that the Department of Work and Pensions (DWP) has not properly recognised the impact of sight loss with regards to the introduction of the new disability benefit, PIP.

The DWP says it wants the assessment for PIP to consider social participation and other barriers to independent living, but across a wide range of activities it envisages blind and partially sighted people scoring zero points. Sight loss is a serious disability but in key areas the PIP assessment fails to recognise this at present.

In order to be eligible for the standard (lower) rate of PIP, a person must score 8 points. To be eligible for the enhanced (higher) rate, they need to score 12 points. In the areas discussed below, it demonstrates that blind or partially sighted people will struggle to get either rate of PIP, especially if they are motivated to maintain their independence which is what the benefit was initially designed to support.

Taking specific examples from the proposed legislation, let’s consider the case of a person who is completely blind, but has lived a relatively independent life, lives alone, uses a cane to assist in getting around and has adapted their home to allow the person in question to live as “normal” a life as possible. Let’s now cross reference that person with the criteria as laid down by the proposed legislation.

There are 9 activities within the proposed legislation which make up the daily living component on the new PIP benefit, with 2 activities comprising the mobility component. The first activity is entitled “preparing food and drink”. Using a strict interpretation on the proposed legislation, the highest score that our example individual could receive would be 2 points – “needs to use an aid or appliance to either prepare or cook a simple meal”.

Undoubtedly, this would include talking scales, liquid level indicators etc. However, we would argue that all blind and partially sighted people should automatically be entitled to 4 points as everyone requires some 'supervision' or 'assistance' to prepare or cook a simple meal. Under the interpretation in the schedule, "assistance" means physical intervention by another person. This may not be at the actual time they prepare/cook a meal but for example, they may have to ask supermarket staff to confirm the dates on food, read the instructions on how to cook it or they may have to spend more to buy pre-chopped vegetables and meat.

The second activity is entitled "taking nutrition". It is difficult to see how the person in our example would score any points under the proposed scoring system. Many blind and partially sighted people encounter extreme difficulties in partaking of nutrition, and these difficulties are not reflected in the legislation as it currently stands. We would encourage an award of points being given to any individual who has to make adaptations to their cooking facilities to enable them to cook a meal and ultimately 'take nutrition'. These adaptations could be, for example, having tactile oven temperature markers, or "speaking" measuring devices which allow an individual to know when an object is approaching its maximum capacity.

The third activity is entitled "managing therapy or monitoring a health condition". Again, it is difficult to see how someone whose "only" disability is blindness would attract any points under this head of criteria. Most people with any visual impairment would have some difficulty managing therapy. For example, not all medicine packets have their name and contents displayed in Braille, and indeed, even when that is the case, not all partially sighted people can read Braille.

Therefore many partially sighted people "fall between 2 stools" in this regard in that the identifying features on the medication are not visible or accessible to them, and, as they cannot read Braille, they have no way of ascertaining what medication they are taking. The Assembly can address this by taking a number of measures. These are 1) ensuring all medication in Northern Ireland has corresponding Braille identifiers, and 2) ensuring all medication in Northern Ireland has the capacity to come with descriptions and accompanying advice in large print where required. It would also be of great assistance to blind and partially sighted people if these factors were considered when deciding what points to award under this assessment criteria.

The fourth activity is entitled "bathing and grooming". At best, blind and partially sighted people would be able to obtain just 1 point under this aspect of the scoring system. As with cooking, many blind and partially sighted people have modified and adapted their shower or bathrooms in order to best meet their needs. This could be by way of a "speaking" temperature gauge, or having a wet room. Again, such modifications could be incorporated into the points system to make the process more accessible to blind and partially sighted people.

The fifth activity is entitled "managing toilet needs or incontinence". In our view, this aspect of the assessment criteria has been unduly simplified. Take our example of the blind person. Using a harsh and strict interpretation of these proposed rules, in the comfort and familiarity of their own home the blind person may be considered to be able to "manage toilet needs unaided".

Even if the white cane is considered "an aid", and even if the assessor deems that such assistance of a white cane is required to access the toilet, the blind person in our example would only receive the 2 points on offer for needing to "use an aid or appliance to manage toilet needs" Yet, if the same blind person is in an unfamiliar place, he or she would probably need to be escorted to the bathroom area, without being reduced to relying on assistance to actually get on to the toilet. In this scenario, depending on how the assessor viewed the situation, the maximum score the blind person could receive would be 4 points, which fails to take into account the difficulties encountered by blind and partially sighted people in these situations. We would request that the criteria and points awarded there for are amended so as to reflect these difficulties.

Activity 6 is entitled “dressing and undressing”. Again, if the “only” disability is blindness, or indeed partially sightedness, almost all such people would be able to dress and undress themselves, albeit it would take longer than it would for their fully sighted counterparts. As a result, under the proposed scoring system, they would be considered able to “dress and undress unaided” and again score 0 points. This does not take into account that most blind and partially sighted people require some form of assistance (“physical intervention by another person”) to dress. This could be help from someone to arrange their wardrobe, paying someone to iron their clothes or someone making them aware that their top is inside out or that there is a stain on their clothes. Once again, we suggest modifying the scoring criteria to take account of this reality.

Activity 7 is entitled “communicating”. The highest award a blind or partially sighted person is likely to receive under this aspect of the scoring criteria is 4 points by virtue of their needing assistance to “access written information”. The highest award in this category is 12 points. We feel that to award a maximum of only 4 points for blind and partially sighted people fails to adequately reflect the difficulties encountered by blind and partially sighted people in attempting to access, understand, assimilate and ultimately communicate and disseminate information.

Activity 8 is entitled “engaging socially”. This head of the criteria is at the heart of our concerns and we feel the requirements of, and facts of, not doing this have not been fully appreciated by the Assembly. How does one engage socially? One “gets out there” and meets people. How do blind and partially sighted people meet other people? In most cases, those said people cannot drive. So, how do they meet people? They use public transport, or, in most cases, they use taxis. How do they pay for taxis? They use the money they receive through DLA benefit. What will they most likely do if that DLA benefit is no longer available? Stay indoors on their own.

This has obviously potentially adverse consequences for wider society and the wider economy. Staying in means the people in question are not spending money in the wider economy. Staying in means they are more likely to have or develop mental health issues, which of course will need to be treated which will of course in turn cost money.

Further, such regression could in turn lead to the people in question being unable to “engage socially due to such engagement causing overwhelming psychological distress to the claimant”. As this is the very criteria used to determine receipt of the higher award under this head of assessment, it is puzzling that the effects of erroneously grouping or assessing blind or partially sighted people in this category could have the effect of making them more dependant and less able to appreciate their own sense of self esteem. We therefore urge the Assembly to change these scoring points to reflect the needs of blind and partially sighted people in a more adequate and satisfactory manner.

Activity 9 is entitled “making financial decisions”. Once again, these criteria, as they currently stand, make no consideration of the difficulties encountered by blind and partially sighted people. Essentially, if one can make any financial decision, and does not require “prompting” to do so (which appears to be a mental health issue) then 0 points will be awarded under this category. This totally excludes blind and partially sighted people who encounter frequent daily difficulties with making “simple financial decisions”.

To score 4 points in this activity, a person must “need[s] prompting to make simple financial decisions.” Under the regulations, “prompt” means remind or encourage and references to prompting are to prompting by another person. A blind or partially sighted may not require prompting to carry out “simple financial activities” i.e. (i) calculating the cost of goods; and (ii) calculating change required after a purchase;) but they most certainly require assistance to do so. Can the Assembly ensure that this activity is extended to include blind and partially sighted people as it is clearly not limited to persons with mental illness?

Moving onto the mobility activities and descriptors, activity 1 is entitled “planning and following a journey”. Once again, it is difficult to see how the blind or partially sighted person, who utilises a white cane instead of a guide dog, will attract many, if any points under this head. Band c) of activity one states that the claimant will be awarded 8 points if he or she “needs either (i) supervision, prompting or a support dog to follow a journey to an unfamiliar destination; or (ii) a journey to an unfamiliar destination to have been entirely planned by another person” Band e) states that a claimant will be awarded 15 points if he or she “needs either (i) supervision, prompting or a support dog to follow a journey to a familiar destination; or (ii) a journey to a familiar destination to have been planned entirely by another person”

We are sure that the effect of this is not to reduce independence, but as currently drafted in our view, these descriptors exclude users of a white cane. We would therefore request that the Assembly changes these criteria to reflect this and therefore correct this anomaly by allowing white cane users the same rights as their counterparts who use the services of a guide dog.

We are also concerned with the phrase “planned entirely by another person” used in these assessment criteria. Say the blind person in our example above lives nearby a friend or relative, and knows exactly how to get to that person’s house relatively comfortably and without any assistance being required.

Having made it to that person’s house, our blind person wishes to go somewhere unfamiliar, and the friend or relative assists that blind person to get to their ultimate destination, be it by planning the journey or lending some other form of assistance. Does the fact that the blind person can get to the friend or relative’s house mean that the whole of the journey is not “planned entirely by another person”?

A (very) strict interpretation of the wording as it currently stands again could (unintentionally of course) have the effect of reducing independence and self esteem within the blind and partially sighted community. We therefore suggest consideration is given to changing the wording of these assessment criteria in order to best suit the needs of the blind and partially sighted people within our community.

Finally, activity 2 of the mobility activities and descriptors is entitled “moving around”. Band a) of this criteria states that no points will be awarded where the claimant “can move at least 200 metres either (i) unaided; or (ii) using an aid or appliance, other than a wheelchair or a motorised device” Therefore, it is unlikely that blind and partially sighted people will qualify for any points under this head of assessment. We would therefore urge the Assembly to change these scoring criteria to adequately reflect the requirements of and difficulties encountered by blind and partially sighted people in our society when striving to be mobile.

A particular concern for people who are blind or partially sighted is that due to their high use of and reliance upon taxis, once the DLA benefit is withdrawn, they will be unable to afford taxis, leaving them isolated and unable to leave their homes. This actually makes it more likely they will become dependent on state assistance, due to factors such as being unable to access work, which will increase welfare spending, but also potentially cause an increase in healthcare spending as they are treated for mental health issues.

Another potential issue is the method and identity of the assessors for the new PIP benefit. ATOS, the company tasked with making the PIP assessments, have also been contracted to carry out the assessment process to determine eligibility for Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) entitlement. They have widely been seen as interpreting the rules erroneously, and applying too draconian an interpretation of those rules when it comes to their methods of assessing people.

These concerns are evidenced by the fact that approximately 50% of appeals have been successful in respect of the initial ESA assessments. Indeed, our direct experience has been that some ATOS Healthcare Professionals do not understand the particular needs of blind and partially sighted people, as evidenced by the number of complaints made by our constituents.

This is both costly for the Government, and unnecessarily stressful for the claimant. It would therefore be preferable if a different company was involved in Northern Ireland, but if this is not possible, then that ATOS in Northern Ireland be made expressly aware of the specific requirements of the needs of our society, and training be given accordingly.

Also, at a time of recession, with the withdrawal of DLA, a lot of money will be removed from the Northern Ireland economy (a lot of independent analysts have approximated that this figure could be £500 million) That could precipitate shops closing down, which would have a huge effect on employment and wider society in Northern Ireland, especially in rural areas.

Ways the Assembly can help

In an ideal world, we would like to see the Welfare Reform Bill defeated, or at least substantially amended. However, we appreciate there are budgetary constraints which may make this impossible. Therefore, and in addition to the suggestions made above, there are a number of measures we would encourage the Assembly to introduce, which would not break the concept of parity, but would make a real and significant benefit to blind and partially sighted people living in our society.

Firstly, we could adopt the Taxicard scheme which is in existence in London, Edinburgh and Greater Manchester. This scheme operates for people with disabilities, including people who are visually impaired. The idea behind the scheme is that eligible people are allowed to make 100 subsidised journeys per year. The eligible person pays a flat fare of £1.50 per trip. Most Taxicard trips are subsidised up to £10.30 for trips during the day, £11.30 for trips at weekends, and £12.80 for trips at night.

Also, we could change the Translink Smartpass system to allow free travel on public transport to both blind and partially sighted people. At present, this is only available to those people registered as being blind. It would not cost significantly more to extend this scheme to partially sighted people, whose need is the same in this regard as that of their counterparts who are registered as being blind. It would also be helpful if training was available to Translink employees so they fully understand the requirements of blind and partially sighted people when accessing and using public transport.

One particular measure that could be adopted quickly, easily and inexpensively would be if the destinations which appear on the front of buses could be changed to make them easier to read for partially sighted people. These measures could involve the buses returning to a format where the destination is displayed in white lettering on a black background, making it easier to read. Another measure which could be adopted easily would be making the sign at the front of the bus, identifying its destination, "larger" in terms of font size at the front of the bus.

The existing 'Door to Door' transport scheme is laudable in principle, but its delivery is poor in practice. We feel the Assembly would be improving the lives of blind and partially sighted people significantly by enhancing this scheme.

The RNIB has a benefits advisor who provides an excellent service to those who require it. Unfortunately, this post is not paid for by Government or other funding. As these reforms come into effect, there will be many questions raised by blind and partially sighted people that, with the best will in the world, DSS or CAB advisors will be unable to provide accurate, specific bespoke advice for blind and partially sighted people in order to adequately meet their requirements. The RNIB's benefits officer can do this, and should that position be funded by Government it would free up valuable resources to fight sight loss within our society.

And finally we would ask the Assembly to ensure that when the changes are being communicated to our constituents that their preferred format of communication is taken into account. Blind and partially sighted people cannot see or read the information and forms that will be sent to them. RNIB are in a position to advise on how best changes to their entitlements can be communicated to individuals.

In conclusion, on 25 June 2012, in a speech at Bluewater in Kent, the Prime Minister David Cameron said “crucially, we’re introducing proper, objective assessments, so that money goes to people who truly need it, with more for the severely disabled” Most people in society would consider that to be blind or partially sighted is to be severely disabled, but this fact is not reflected in the proposed legislation. As MLAs, you have the power to change this for the good for the people of Northern Ireland, and to ensure that people in Northern Ireland can be unique in the United Kingdom in that for them, they will be able to bear blindness and not live in abject misery and poverty once the new legislation comes into force.

Save the Children

Welfare Reform and Child Poverty

Save the Children briefing - Welfare Reform Bill

October 2012

Introduction

In keeping with Save the Children's focus on ending child poverty in Northern Ireland this paper sets out our serious concerns about the impact of the welfare reform proposals on low income families and their children, who are experiencing increasing hardship and income inequality.

We acknowledge the budgetary constraints due to parity arrangements but we urge the need to identify policy variations commensurate with the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland. We suggest that these include the on-going paramilitary violence, high levels of mental ill-health, low wages, inadequate housing and childcare provision and high rates of unemployment and child poverty.

It should also be acknowledged that the proposals represent the biggest change to the welfare system for over sixty years. However, a Northern Ireland welfare reform bill is an opportunity to mitigate the most damaging GB proposals, retain the current exemptions and influence the Department of Work and Pension's design of an IT system fit for purpose. We offer the following comments in the hope that they will influence the shape of the legislation and forthcoming regulations.

Background: Scale of the Challenge

Save the Children's recent findings in the 'It Shouldn't Happen Here' report that 14 % children in poverty say they go without a winter coat and 13 % have stopped asking their parents for anything at all.¹ These findings help convey the reality of children's experiences of poverty in a way numbers do not. However the underlying truth is that low income and inequality matter.

In considering the impact of the proposals it is important to reiterate the extent of the problem:

Child Poverty Levels

Different numbers are used to express how many children are living in poverty but government and the child poverty sector tend to highlight the relative income measure, which is the number of children living in households where household income is below 60% of median income. This is known as the headline measure of child poverty. The figures are derived from the government survey – the Households Below Average Income (HBAI) dataset of the Family Resources Survey. The latest figures show that 21% of children in Northern Ireland were living in relative poverty in 2010/11.²

1 Whitham, G., It shouldn't happen here, Save the Children, September 2012, available at: http://www.savethechildren.org.uk/sites/default/files/documents/child_poverty_2012.pdf

2 NISRA, 'Poverty in Northern Ireland: 2010/11', available at: http://www.dsdni.gov.uk/ni_poverty_bulletin_2010-11__release_document_.pdf

In Northern Ireland, 21% of children live in persistent child poverty, which is more than double the GB rate.³ More than 12%, or approximately 50,000 children, live in severe poverty.⁴

In-Work Poverty

Approximately half of children living in relative poverty are in families where one parent is working.

It is well known that Northern Ireland is a low wage economy with median earnings for all employees standing at £18,720 – some 10.9% lower than the UK's £21,008, according to the 2011 Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings. There has been an increase in part-time jobs at the expense of full-time work with the median gross weekly part-time earnings £151.6.⁵

Unemployment

The unemployment rate for the period May – July 2012 was estimated at 8.2% or 71,000, up 10,000 over the quarter. Unadjusted figures show that 45.5% of the unemployed have been unemployed for 1 year or more. The figures represent a rise of almost 20,000 since 2009, with the Northern Ireland jobless level moving above the UK average.

They also estimate the unemployment rate for 18-24 year olds at 23.5% – up 5.2 percentage points over the year.⁶

Rising Cost of Living

These cuts are happening at the same as higher living costs, with utility bills in Northern Ireland up by £800 and the average cost of a shopping basket up by 18% since 2008. It is calculated that an average household in Northern Ireland will need to spend an extra £3,500 just to pay the bills compared to four years ago, thus threatening to push more children into poverty.⁷

Rising Income Inequality

Income inequality is predicted to increase by 2020 across the UK. According to the recent Resolution Foundation report, living standards for working age households in 2020 are likely to be substantially lower for those in the bottom distribution, with modelling suggesting a decline in real terms income of around 19% for households reliant on benefits.⁸ Only higher income households see income growth for the decade ahead. It is to be noted that these forecasts are based on modest growth and assume no further cuts to welfare spending.

The report suggests that several factors account for the stark figures, including a loss of middle level jobs and the planned indexation of benefits to the Consumer Price Index rather than the Retail Prices Index measure of inflation, which will result in a lower standard of living for many households, especially those with children.

Predictions suggest child poverty levels could soar to 34% unless there is progressive intervention.

Budget and Welfare Cuts

The 2010 emergency June budget and the October Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) made a number of changes to welfare benefit, adding to those already announced by the previous government. By 2014-15, it is estimated that spending on benefits across the UK will be £18b less than it is now (in cash terms). The loss to Northern Ireland's benefit recipients will be more than £600m per year by 2014-15.⁹

Moreover, the June 2010 budget and October CSR reduced the block grant to NI by almost £4b, with anticipated heavy job losses in the public sector. Significantly more women in Northern Ireland are employed in low-paid public sector jobs. As such, women will bear the brunt of these public spending cuts, with subsequent devastating impact on the life chances of their children.

The Institute of Fiscal Studies (IFS) established that after London, Northern Ireland will be hardest hit by the impact of tax and benefits changes planned up to 2014-2015. In a report commissioned by the Law Centre NI, the IFS attributed this to two reasons: the high numbers of those in receipt of DLA, especially for mental health disorders, and the high number of families with children who will be adversely affected by cuts to social security.¹⁰

It is proposed that Universal Credit will be paid monthly as a single payment to one household member designated as 'main applicant', with findings that this will be the man in most families. As well as setting back women's economic independence by generations, the proposal is likely to lead to less money being spent on children. Evidence shows that more money is spent on children via the 'purse' compared to money spent from the 'wallet', particularly in low income households.¹¹

Government Obligations

The scale of the challenge would suggest that urgent action is required by the Executive, which has a number of obligations to protect the welfare and best interests of children.

Ministers have a statutory obligation to meet the targets set by the Child Poverty Act 2010, which are reiterated in the Programme for Government 2011-15. The Executive has also agreed the need for an outcomes-based child poverty action plan and an overarching Delivering Social Change framework across all departments. Further, the right to an adequate standard of living is enshrined in the UNCRC.

Save the Children's Concerns and Recommendations:

We know that families are feeling the strain of financial hardship and that children are worried about these pressures. We recommend the following as opportunities to mitigate this hardship for the most vulnerable children in our society and to fulfil the obligations under the UNCRC and the Child Poverty Act. We argue that the operational flexibilities suggested below can only happen if DWP and HMRC are pressed to design a multi layered IT system.

Making Work Pay?

It is time to challenge the argument that these reforms will make work pay and that people will always be better off in work.

Modelling work carried out on behalf of Save the Children shows that Universal Credit could have negative impacts on work incentives for many low-income families, especially lone parents working over 16 hours and second earners.¹² The UK government's own impact assessment concludes that 2 million households (including 1.1million with children) will have lower entitlements.¹³

Save the Children research found that most single parents working 16 hours or more a week will be worse off. A single parent with two children, working full-time on or around the minimum wage, could be as much as £2,500 a year worse off under the new system.¹⁴

The UK government acknowledged that under Universal Credit couple households will have one shared earnings disregard, resulting in second earners' universal credit payments reducing as soon as they start working. This will weaken work incentives for many second earners and lead to fewer women moving into work. This has potential negative consequences for child poverty because the risk of poverty is reduced by both parents being in work.

The other side of the equation is the importance of work that pays in the first place. It is known that approximately half of all children in poverty live in families where one parent is working, due to the low wage economy and rising income inequality.

We would highlight the strong correlation between child poverty levels and women's employment and income; as a result of recession and austerity measures, women's position in the labour market and their income are decreasing.

We recommend that the Executive:

- Identify the number of Northern Ireland children who will be affected by the lower entitlements
- Press the UK Government for a reduced taper rate and sufficient earnings disregards for second earners so that more working mothers and lone parents see the material benefit of work.
- Incorporate learning from Ofmdfm's mini-job child poverty reduction initiative about the earnings disregard, childcare and other barriers to employment.
- Encourage better pay for low income earners and do considerably more to reduce the barriers to making work pay, especially for mothers.

Childcare

Access to affordable, good quality childcare is a key element in a parent's decision to take up and remain in work. The success of Universal Credit in Northern Ireland in meeting the stated aim to make work pay will depend on the provision of adequate, affordable and quality childcare – which should therefore be considered an economic priority.

At the moment, Families in Northern Ireland are paying 45% of their income for childcare for one child, which is the highest amount in Europe.¹⁵ Until recently, low –income working parents could claim support for up to 80% of childcare costs through the childcare element of working tax credit. This was cut to 70% from April 2011, resulting in some families losing as much as £1500 a year. Save the Children research shows that many low income mothers are considering leaving work because they can't afford childcare.¹⁶

We therefore ask two things:

- for a progress report on the childcare strategy;
- for consideration of support with childcare costs.

For example, the Executive could cost the option of restoring the 10% cut to childcare tax credit within Northern Ireland and budget to meet this shortfall to cover a minimum 80% of childcare costs for all low-income mothers. Perhaps the Social Protection Fund could support this cost.

Lone Parents

The current GB welfare provisions impose greater conditionality on lone parents, with the possibility of punitive sanctions, including the withdrawal of benefits from 3 months to 3 years. Previous welfare reforms applied in GB were not transferred to Northern Ireland because an adequate childcare infrastructure does not exist. For example, compared to every fortnight in GB, lone parents in Northern Ireland currently sign on for work-focused interviews every 13 weeks.

Given the lack of progress in childcare provision since these exemptions were made, we ask:

- The Executive should not transfer additional conditionality and sanctions to lone parents in Northern Ireland without ensuring childcare provision and support is available.

Housing

Northern Ireland's history of direct payment of housing benefit to landlords assists tenants to remain current in payments, even during periods of financial strain. This system supports families and their children as well as the landlords who receive consistent payment. We would also point to the apparent contradiction between two competing priorities – between the need for housing associations to build more social housing and the control of housing benefit levels which will reduce the amount of investment.

A £30m allocation for discretionary housing payments to foster carers and families with a disabled child was recently announced by the Coalition Government. Clarity is required about whether and how similar discretionary housing payments could be developed in Northern Ireland.

Save the Children recommends:

Retention of the facility of direct payments of the housing benefit element of universal credit to landlords.

Social housing deemed to be under-occupied, but has children living there, should be exempt from a reduction in housing benefit.

Households with children should be exempt from moving to cheaper housing until it is clear that suitable properties are available in the thirtieth percentile of rents. Northern Ireland Housing Executive Stock contains a large proportion of homes which are three bedrooms or more and remain significantly single identity estates.

Discretionary Support Policy

Save the Children research shows that due to lack of access to affordable credit, low income families pay more for their basic goods and services than better-off families, with the calculation that this annual 'poverty premium' amounted to more than £1280 in 2010.

In light of added pressures since 2010 due to job losses, rising costs and the transition to universal credit, Save the Children shares the concerns of others in the sector that the funding will be inadequate to meet the level of need.

Under the proposed Discretionary Support Policy, the Social Fund's crisis loans and community care grants will no longer be treated as 'social security' and their reform will result in the development of a new fund, representing a transfer from Annually Managed Expenditure to the block grant. The proposed policy will also include the Discretionary Housing Payments (DHPs) that are currently delivered through the housing benefit system.

These funds have provided a much needed source of help for families with no access to other loans or credit. DSD research shows the extent of demand – 2010/11 saw 48,000 applications for Community Care Grants totalling £13.75m and 159,000 applications for Crisis Loans totalling £16.41m. More than half of the awards of Community Care Grants are to lone parents. Discretionary housing payment amounts to approximately £3m a year.

We therefore recommend clarity about:

- the budget allocation from the Coalition Government given the need for additional funding for set-up and administration costs.
- the role of the Social Protection Fund.
- ring-fencing the new fund's budget allocation and the separation of the housing element.
- an appropriate appeals process.

We recommend further that:

- DSD take the opportunity to link the replacement scheme to the financial inclusion strategy and reform of credit unions to ensure a more holistic approach to advice services, benefit uptake and access to financial services.
- DSD make the link between the early warning signs provided by applications to emergency payments and the continuum of support available from other agencies including the Children and Young People's Strategic Partnership and the Social Investment steering groups.

Disability

There is a higher incidence of disability in NI than anywhere else in the UK, with 21% of adults and 6% of children having a disability here.¹⁷ Given this higher number, it is accepted that these changes to the welfare system will affect disabled people here disproportionately.

Research shows that disabled children and children with disabled parents are more likely to be severely poor and more at risk of persistent poverty.¹⁸ Furthermore, child poverty rates are underestimated by up to 3% due to the lack of recognition of the cost of disability in the current HBAI survey methodology. The cost of bringing up a disabled child is estimated as being at least three times as much as bringing up a non-disabled child.

The NI Commissioner for Children and Young People (NICCY) has recommended the establishment of an expert group to examine the work capability and Personal Independence Payment (PIP) assessments in order to take into account the particular issues of a region emerging from conflict where the high levels of mental ill health are severely exacerbated by PTSD.¹⁹

Under the current system, families who are on a low income or out of work and who have a child in receipt of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) are entitled to a 'disability addition' worth £53.62 per week. Families with a child in receipt of the high rate care component of DLA also receive a 'top up addition' worth an additional £21 per week. Under the new system, most families will receive an addition worth less than 50% the current rate, although some severely disabled children will avoid this cut. The changes are likely to cost families up to £1366 a year.

Save the Children recommends:

- The NI Executive should take every step to explore opportunities to introduce protective measures that will mitigate the impacts of welfare reform on disabled children.

Best Interests of the Child in Universal Credit

We suggest that the best interest of the child principle should be the organising principle for assessing policy variations and on this basis we suggest the following:

- Designate the person with main caring responsibilities as the main applicant for universal credit.
- Provide choice of payment method rather than enforced monthly payment. While we welcome the recent statement by the Secretary of State that fortnightly benefit payments will continue for some claimants, we would argue that this should be a matter of choice for all.
- Retain existing exemptions that protect lone parents' children from the obligation on their parents to undertake employment or work-related tasks that are not in the best interests of the child.

Establish an Expert Working Group

We have recommended exceptions in payment frequency, exemptions for lone parents and for certain groups in housing provision. We share the concern of many in the sector that the transition to on-line applications represents a fundamental problem with the design of universal credit - due to lack of broadband in many rural areas and the limited access of low income families to the internet across Northern Ireland. In light of the NICCY suggestion to establish an expert group to examine the PIP assessments in order to take into account the particular circumstances of a country emerging from conflict where the high level of mental ill health are exacerbated by PTSD, we suggest that this group should be expanded to examine the additional recommendations above.

Demonstrate how the proposals contribute to ending child poverty

As a first step the draft legislation and forthcoming regulations should be assessed against the obligations under the UNCRC and Child Poverty Act, including how departmental decisions will contribute to improving outcomes for children and ending child poverty by 2020. These decisions incorporate funding allocations and spending and we would argue that they must include the Social Investment and Social Protection Funds, as well as the Discretionary Support Policy and forthcoming decisions on passported benefits and rates rebates.

Communication strategy

Given the significance and depth of change to the circumstances of the most vulnerable in our society, we call on the Executive to develop and initiate a robust communication strategy for the public. DSD should begin to communicate accurate details about the proposals in order to provide meaningful information and prepare claimants for the biggest change to the welfare state in 60 years.

Conclusion

We call for government to retain its commitment to the best interests of the child, as established in the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, to the Child Poverty Act 2010 targets, to encourage employers to pay the living wage, to let parents keep more money before benefits are withdrawn and to provide help with childcare and living costs for low-earners. Despite the sheer scale of the challenge, we argue that it can be done – 89 constituencies in UK have already met the headline target for 2020 by having child poverty rates of 10% or lower.²⁰

The economic meltdown was not caused by the poorest families and their children – growing consensus agrees that it was caused by the huge increase in income inequality. It is a scandal that they are being asked to bear the brunt of austerity cuts and the recession. There is further consensus that the financial shock has led to private, corporate and public deleveraging with a resulting lack of demand which is holding back economic recovery. This points to the ‘business case’ for providing low income families with additional financial support which they are more inclined to spend locally. This in turn will help kickstart the economy and create the foundations of a more equal and cohesive society.

All the research shows that unequal societies are likely to lead to more social distress, social unrest, ill health and economic decline. It took a lot of effort to end the most recent Troubles – the Assembly must make the effort commensurate with the challenge to ensure they never happen again. We suggest priority must be given to boosting benefits and low wages, improving skills and raising women’s employment.

Save the Children

Welfare Reform Bill

Save the Children Submission to the Committee for Social Development

October 2012

Introduction

The purpose of this paper is to suggest amendments to the Welfare Reform Bill from a child poverty perspective. We recommend that they be read in conjunction with the Welfare Reform Group's paper to which we have contributed and also with Save the Children's briefing paper for the 2nd reading of the bill. Please find enclosed.

Save the Children's summary positions on the Welfare Reform Bill

The time may have passed for consideration of the principles of the bill but we would urge that certain principles are key during its passage through the committee stage:

Meeting the UNCRC obligations and commitments to end child poverty by 2020 entails access to adequate resources and services – otherwise child poverty levels are predicted to rise to 34% by 2020.

In any decisions about social protection, the best interests of the child need to be a primary consideration.

The economic crisis was not caused by the poorest and most vulnerable in our society, and they must be protected from benefit reductions. Existing benefits are set below the poverty threshold.

The stated aim of universal credit - that it will make work pay for all claimants - should be challenged. Many working women in couples, lone parents, part-time workers and disabled people will be worse off.

Rising income inequality was a major cause of the economic crisis which is being sustained by loss of confidence and demand. This points to the 'business case' for providing low income families with additional financial support, which they are more inclined to spend locally, thereby stimulating economic revival.

With about half of low income children living in families where one parent is working, there must be a focus on decent jobs that pay in the first place. We would highlight the strong correlation between child poverty levels and women's employment and income.

The success of universal credit in meeting the aim of making work pay will depend on the provision of adequate childcare - which should therefore be considered an economic priority.

In view of the lack of adequate childcare and emerging contradictory regulations, we suggest a pilot in Northern Ireland. This would also provide time to trial the IT system, consider the regulations in more detail, assess the human rights and equality implications, undertake a communications strategy and consider other important concerns, including the future of free school meals which do not feature in the proposals.

The committee must be allowed to play its full role in scrutinising the Executive. We urge it to ask for a timetable for publishing the regulations, to seek extension of the confirmatory procedure to more regulations and the ability to use the affirmative resolution procedure.

Suggested amendments for the committee's consideration

Equality and human rights compatibility

This legislation represents the greatest change to the welfare state in more than 60 years, with major negative impacts on the poorest members of society. As such, we urge the committee to seek an equality and human rights assessment of the proposed legislation, either by the NIHRC or by committee in a manner similar to the role performed by the JCHR at Westminster.

Clauses 1-4 - Universal Credit

To advance children's best interest, an amendment should specify that the main applicant should be the individual with primary caring responsibility.

Clause 5 – Financial conditions

The extension of the savings rule will impact negatively on saving for a pension or mortgage deposit and will have a negative impact on the working poor and work incentives. We ask the committee to challenge this change.

Clause 7 – Basis of awards

An amendment should specify that regulations will provide for choice of payment frequency.

Clause 11 - Housing Costs

We seek an amendment to provide retention of the direct payment of the housing benefit element of universal credit to landlords.

Social housing deemed to be under-occupied, but with children living there, should be exempt from a reduction in housing benefit. This exemption would help protect families with foster children and disabled children who have adapted properties and need the extra space.

Households with children should be exempt from moving to cheaper housing until adequate provision of suitable properties.

Clause 12 - Other particular needs or circumstances

We suggest that this clause should include 'the fact that a claimant has responsibility for children'.

Clauses 15-27 - Work-related requirements and sanctions

Please find below our concerns about emerging contradictions:

At the moment claimants in part-time work on tax credits are not expected to seek additional work. But according to GB regulations, it would appear that benefits will be cut from those in work if they do not meet an earnings threshold equal to minimum wage rates for a 35 hour week. They will be expected to earn more from working extra hours, getting better pay or an additional job.

This runs counter to last year's extension of childcare support to those working in 'short hours jobs' when the Coalition government announced that universal credit will provide childcare funding for parents who are currently eligible for the childcare element of working tax credit and those working less than 16 hours a week.

On the other hand, modelling work carried out on behalf of Save the Children shows that universal credit could have negative impacts on work incentives for many low-income families, especially lone parents working more than 16 hours per week and second earners.¹

1 Whitham G., Ending Child Poverty: Ensuring Universal Credit supports working mums, Save the Children, 2012

The research found that most single parents working 16 hours or more a week will be worse off. A single parent with two children, working full-time on or around the minimum wage, could be as much as £2,500 a year worse off under the new system.²

Lone parents are currently exempt from certain previous welfare reforms applied in GB. For example, compared to every fortnight in GB, lone parents in Northern Ireland currently sign on for work-focused interviews every 13 weeks. The Jobseeker's Allowance (Lone Parents) (Availability for Work) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2010 provide a guarantee that lone parents with a youngest child of 12 or under who receive a jobseeker's allowance will have the right to restrict their availability for work to their children's school hours. They augment other flexibilities which 'hope to strike a balance between the requirements on parents to undertake work or work-related activities and the need for children to be raised in a secure environment with an involved parent or parents.'³

The other flexibilities include the ability of lone parents to limit their availability for work to a minimum of 16 hours a week, to refuse a job or leave employment if childcare is not available and the requirement on personal advisers to take the well-being of any child into account when drawing up a jobseeker's agreement.

We recommend that given the lack of progress in childcare provision and the lack of employment opportunities, these exemptions should be retained and the new conditionality regime should not be applied to Northern Ireland.

Sanctions include suspension of benefit payments for up to three years. A regulation must provide for exemption where the claimant does not have access to adequate childcare.

Clause 42 - Pilot schemes

In light of the scale of the cuts and the extent of confusion, we recommend that the committee presses for a pilot in Northern Ireland. It would also represent an opportunity to trial the IT system and provide time for a proper impact assessment and communications strategy.

Clause 44 - Assembly Control

This clause details the regulation-making procedures including negative and confirmatory resolution. The bill is essentially enabling legislation with the major opportunity for policy variation available in the regulation-making phase – however confirmatory procedure means that scrutiny will only be available after the regulations are laid.

We recommend that amendments seek a departmental timetable for publishing the regulations, the power of affirmative resolution to enhance scrutiny and extension of the list of regulations to be subject to confirmatory resolution.

Clause 69 - Housing benefit – determination of appropriate maximum

As above at clause 11, we recommend an amendment to ensure the following:

Social housing deemed to be under-occupied, but with children living there, should be exempt from a reduction in housing benefit. This exemption would help protect families with foster children and disabled children who have adapted properties and need the extra space.

Households with children should be exempt from moving to cheaper housing until adequate provision of suitable properties.

Clause 70 - Social Fund

Under the proposed Discretionary Support Policy, the Social Fund's crisis loans and community care grants will no longer be treated as 'social security' and their reform will result in the development of a new fund, representing a transfer from Annually Managed Expenditure to the block grant. The proposed policy will also include the Discretionary Housing Payments (DHPs) that are currently delivered through the housing benefit system.

These funds have provided a much needed source of help for families with no access to other loans or credit. DSD research shows the extent of demand – 2010/11 saw 48,000 applications for Community Care Grants totalling £13.75m and 159,000 applications for Crisis Loans totalling £16.41m. More than half of the awards of Community Care Grants are to lone parents. Discretionary housing payment amounts to approximately £3m a year.

We suggest amendments which specify forthcoming regulations about the payment amount, eligibility criteria and an appropriate appeals process should be subject to confirmatory or affirmative resolution.

Clause 76 - Personal independence payment

In light of the increased risk of severe and persistent poverty for disabled children and children with disabled parents, it is vital that regulations provide adequate protection.

As at clause 11, social housing deemed to be under-occupied, but with children living there, should be exempt from a reduction in housing benefit. This exemption would help protect families with disabled children who have adapted properties and need the extra space.

Regulations should also provide for adequate independent advice and appeals as well as monitoring and evaluation.

Clause 95 - Benefit Cap

A cap will be introduced on the total amount of benefit working age claimants can receive. Save the Children is opposed in principle to the cap which takes no account of variations in rent levels, or household size, and is likely to increase both homelessness and child poverty.

Therefore we suggest amendments:

to specify that child benefit and the child tax credit/child element of universal credit should be removed from the cap.

to provide for an exemption from the application of the benefit cap for individuals or a couple who have been accepted as homeless and in priority need or who would be threatened with homelessness and in priority need by the Housing Executive, as a result of the benefit cap.

Clause 99 - Payments

Please see Clause 1-4 amendment which recommends that the main applicant should be the individual with primary caring responsibility.

Clause 101 - Power to require consideration of revision before appeal

Clause 101 (3A) states that regulations may provide for right of appeal only if the department has considered whether to revise the decision. We recommend an amendment to ensure an effective appeals system that would provide fast reconsideration by a different decision-maker and adequate appeals hearings, with the right to independent advice and support.

Clause 113 - Benefit Offences: period of sanction

Due regard must be given to the impact of sanctions on dependent children – especially the most extreme proposal to suspend benefit payments for up to 3 years. Government is obliged by Article 3 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child to ensure the best interests of children are a primary consideration in all matters affecting children.

Clause 121 - Child Support Maintenance

Given the disproportionately high rates of child poverty in Northern Ireland, it is important that no family living on or below the poverty threshold has to sacrifice a single penny of child maintenance to pay for administrative charges. We seek an amendment to prevent introduction of this charge.

Clause 130 - Rate relief schemes: application of housing benefit law

We recommend an amendment to ensure any regulation provides protection for low income families with children.

Conclusion

We urge the need for a pilot to gauge the impact of the proposed changes on low income households, especially families with children. This should be followed by a commitment to ensure proper monitoring and evaluation. We suggest an annual report to the Assembly with the opportunity for debate in the plenary and committee.

INTRODUCTION

The design of Universal Credit should result in improved work incentives and boosts in income for many working families but lack of funding threatens to weaken its impact on child poverty and supporting women into work. New research compiled for Save the Children shows that single parents working longer hours (16 hours or more) on low pay and some second earners will be substantially worse off under the new system. This has serious consequences for children in these families. The impact on single parents alone could push 250,000 children deeper into poverty.¹ We are calling for extra funding for Universal Credit to help all parents maximise their income through work, so that they can lift themselves and their children out of poverty.

The government's own impact assessment concludes that 2.8 million households will have higher entitlements under Universal Credit, the new welfare system due to replace tax credits and most benefits from 2013. There will be no change for 2 million households, and 2 million households (including 1.1 million with children) will have lower entitlements.² We estimate that the proposals could push 150,000 working single parents already living below the poverty line deeper into poverty, affecting 250,000 children. A single parent with two children, working full-time on or around the minimum wage, could be as much as £2,500 a year worse off under the new system. Moreover, Universal Credit favours single-earner couples at the expense of couples where both parents work part-time on a low-income.³ A typical low-income couple with three children, where one parent works 24 hours a week and the other works a few hours, could lose as much as £1,800 a year (£35 a week). Some mothers wanting to move into work, from families where the father is the main breadwinner, will find their incentive to work reduced under the new system.

These changes come at a time when working mothers are already struggling. In April 2011, the amount of support low-income working parents could claim for childcare costs fell from 80% to 70%, making half a million families worse off by more than £500 a year on average.⁴ Employment rates for women have fallen considerably since the recession began in 2008. Across the country, more than 1 million women are now unemployed, up from 700,000 in September 2008,⁵ with a further 1.3 million women classed as economically inactive (as opposed to counted as being unemployed) but wanting a job.⁶

Save the Children believes the welfare system should help all parents to work their way out of poverty. In developed nations, there are clear links between higher rates of women's employment and lower rates of child poverty. For example, in Sweden, the maternal employment rates are among the highest in the EU, and child poverty rates are among the lowest. The UK has much lower rates of maternal employment and a much higher rate of child poverty.⁷ With rising levels of child poverty, it is crucial that mothers are able to maximise their income through work. Universal Credit has the potential to ensure that work becomes a route out of poverty for more families, but only if mothers are given more help to find work and stay in work. We are calling on the government to:

- provide sufficient earnings disregards (this is the amount someone can earn before they start having their benefits or tax credits withdrawn) for working mothers so that second earners and single parents keep more of their earnings
- cover a minimum of 80% of childcare costs for all low-income working parents up to proposed monthly maximums
- commit to introducing a more generous taper rate (the rate at which the benefit is reduced as earnings increase: the current proposal is set at 65%). The taper rate should be reviewed, and if possible reduced annually to reach 55% within a clear timescale.

Failure to introduce these reforms will result in a major missed opportunity for government to boost the incomes of working families, drive down child poverty, and boost the employment prospects of hundreds of thousands of mothers who want to work.

ABOUT UNIVERSAL CREDIT

PROS AND CONS OF UNIVERSAL CREDIT

The impact of Universal Credit on family incomes will be complex and will vary by family type and size, and by housing and childcare costs. Many low-income working families will benefit from increased incomes and better work incentives, and we welcome this much-needed extra support. However, under this topline picture, there are worrying exceptions, with some hard-working parents – especially mothers – being hit hard by the proposals.

Universal Credit will combine the current benefits and tax credit systems into one system.⁸ The distinction between being in and out of work (and the Working Tax Credit hours rule) will be removed. People will start to move on to Universal Credit in 2013, but it will be a number of years (2017) before everyone is moved on to the new system. It is expected that Universal Credit will significantly increase take-up of benefits because it will be less complex and will automatically respond to changes in household income. This should require less reporting of changed circumstances by claimants and less administration, resulting in fewer errors.

WORK INCENTIVES UNDER UNIVERSAL CREDIT

Under the present system, as people earn more, their benefit and tax credit payments are reduced (sometimes at very high rates). Under Universal Credit, this reduction in support will be smoother. In that sense, it should be easier for people to understand the amount they are entitled to if they move into work or increase the number of hours they work, and it means they are less likely to experience sharp and sudden drops in benefit payments. However, under the current proposals for Universal Credit, for some people working 16 hours a week or more, it will be less generous than the current system.

CASH PROTECTION

The government has said it will ensure that no one is worse off under the new system in cash terms (this is not inflation linked, so the amount received by families will reduce in real terms) by making extra payments to those whose entitlement under Universal Credit is lower than under the current system (it is assumed this includes help with childcare costs). However, this protection will only be provided to current claimants and for a time-limited period. Details of cash protection have yet to be fully set out. If claimants' circumstances change (and the government is yet to define what this means), then they may lose this protection. New claimants will not be entitled to cash protection.

IMPACT ON CHILD POVERTY

The government claims that Universal Credit will lift around 350,000 children out of poverty.⁹ This is largely because of expected increases in benefit take-up. Universal Credit is designed to be simpler to understand and require less reporting of information by claimants. It is therefore reasonable to expect increased levels of benefit take-up. However, this positive impact is more than outweighed by the negative impact of other government welfare reforms (in particular, the change in the way benefits are uprated, ie, increased from the previous year's rates). As a result, it has been forecast that by 2020/21, a further 800,000 children will be living in poverty, despite the positive impact of Universal Credit.¹⁰ The government argues that Universal Credit will result in "behavioural change" and that, because it incentivises households to move into work and increase their earnings through work, it will actually lift many more than the estimated 350,000 children out of poverty. However, modelling work carried out on behalf of Save the Children shows that Universal Credit could have negative as well as positive impacts on work incentives for low-income families.

WHY SOME WORKING MOTHERS BELOW THE POVERTY LINE ARE LIKELY TO LOSE OUT

Lack of adequate funding for Universal Credit risks undermining the positive impact it could have on supporting parents into work and reducing child poverty. We have identified three key issues that need to be addressed if Universal Credit is to deliver on protecting incomes and boosting work incentives for parents, particularly mothers. Below, we describe these three issues and suggest possible solutions.

I. INSUFFICIENT EARNINGS DISREGARDS FOR WORKING MOTHERS

An earnings disregard is the amount someone can earn before they have their benefits withdrawn. One of the main criticisms of the current system is that people begin to lose benefits very quickly when they reach this point. Universal Credit offers more generous earnings disregards than the current system. However, the proposals as they stand will disadvantage single parents working 16 hours or more a week and second earners in low-income couple families.

a) Single parents working longer hours

Although Universal Credit should boost the incomes of single parents working less than 16 hours a week, many single parents working 16 hours or more a week will be worse off. This is largely the result of the higher earnings disregards in Working Tax Credit and Housing Benefit. For example, single parents working 30 hours a week or more currently have a higher personal allowance in the Working Tax Credit (£92.07) compared with Universal Credit (£74.16).

In some instances, single-parent families will be pushed into poverty by the new system. Single-parent families already in poverty will be pushed deeper into poverty. There are around 150,000 single parents working 16 hours or more a week who are already living in poverty.

What is the solution?

Increasing the earnings disregard for single parents by at least 20% could help ensure that full-time work remains an option for many. Raising the earnings disregard for single parents would specifically target working single-parent families and also boost work incentives for single parents who are out of work or working fewer hours. There are more than 1 million working single parents in the UK, many of whom would benefit directly from this reform. This includes an estimated 150,000 single parents working 16 hours or more a week who are already in poverty.

b) Second earners in low-income couple families

Under Universal Credit, couple households will have one shared earnings disregard. This will, in effect, be used up by the main earner, meaning that second earners will find their Universal Credit payments are reduced as soon as they start earning. This may act as a disincentive to second earners – usually women – moving into employment (particularly into part-time work), as shown in example 3. In some cases, it will mean those second earners already in work are worse off, as example 4 shows.

Research into Universal Credit has found that it is likely to weaken work incentives for some second earners in couples.¹¹ If it results in fewer women moving into work, then this has potential negative consequences for child poverty. Both parents being in work also reduces the risk of the family falling into poverty if one parent loses their job or in the instance of family breakdown. Ensuring that women in low-income households have independent spending power increases the likelihood that money will be spent on their children.¹³

EXAMPLE 1: FULL-TIME WORKING MUM EARNING MINIMUM WAGE¹²

Janine is a single parent with three children. She works full-time on the minimum wage. She has average housing costs. Under the current system, Janine and her family are well above the poverty line. Although full-time work doesn't suit all single parents, it works for Janine.

Under the current system, full-time work represents a genuine route out of poverty for Janine, but this won't be the case under Universal Credit. Her income will drop by £67 a week (£3,484 a year) once cash protection runs out, pushing her and her children into poverty. Janine will be worse off largely because the earnings disregard (the amount someone can earn before benefits start to be withdrawn) is more generous under the current Working Tax Credit than under the proposed Universal Credit.

The government's approach to this issue appears to be largely driven by funding constraints. It has decided to reduce the number of workless households at the expense of giving parents a choice about who works what hours, for what income, and how they can balance this with childcare. This is explicitly recognised by the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) in its Welfare Reform Bill Universal Credit: Equality impact assessment (2011):

"As the focus of Universal Credit is to help reduce workless households there is a risk of decreased work incentives for second earners in couples (primarily women)." (para 68, p 23)

Prioritising support for single earners to work full-time rather than part-time does not seem right, particularly at a time when there are a record 1.35 million people having to take part-time work because there are not enough full-time work opportunities available.¹⁴

EXAMPLE 2: SINGLE PARENT IN PART-TIME WORK AND ON LOW PAY

Emily is a working single parent with two children. She has childcare costs of more than £200 a week. She works 25 hours a week on the minimum wage, earning £160 a week. After housing costs, her current net weekly income is £307. Under Universal Credit, she will be £52 a week worse off once cash protection comes to an end (£2,704 a year), pushing her and her children below the poverty line.¹⁵

As with Janine, Emily will be worse off largely because the earnings disregard is more generous under Working Tax Credit than under Universal Credit. According to modelling work carried out on behalf of Save the Children, single parents in Emily's situation will be worse off under Universal Credit unless they earn £421 a week (equivalent of being paid more than £12 an hour on full-time hours) or more.

Boosting the earnings disregard for single parents could help overcome this problem. Increasing the earnings disregard for single parents by just 20% would boost Emily's income by £416 a year and lift her and her children back above the poverty line.

What is the solution?

Parents need to be able to choose how they divide work between them. Just having one main earner is not necessarily the best choice for all families. Ensuring that second earners can work has long-term implications for their careers and future earnings potential. To ensure strong work incentives for second earners, the government should introduce a separate earnings disregard for second earners. A second earner disregard of £2,000 would cost £600 million. Given current funding constraints the government may consider bringing in a smaller, more affordable disregard initially. A second earner disregard of £500 would cost the government £130m, a disregard of £1,000 would cost £280m, and a disregard of £1,500 would cost £430m.¹⁶ Example 4 shows the positive impact this reform could have on a typical low-income working family – in some cases, making the difference between living in poverty or not.

EXAMPLE 3: COUPLE FAMILY WITH ONE PARENT IN PART-TIME WORK¹⁷

Gareth and Pauline have three children. They are a low-income family living below the poverty line. Gareth works 24 hours a week on low pay. He'd like to increase the number of hours he works, but his company has recently made a lot of redundancies and he knows there isn't much extra work available.

Pauline has been offered a job paying just over £100 a week. This extra income would lift the family above the poverty line. Pauline knows that she will lose some of her income through reductions in benefit support, but the extra money will make a real difference to the family. She will lose 41p of every extra £1 earned if she takes the job. Under Universal Credit, the family would keep even less of Pauline's wages. In fact, according to our modelling, Pauline would lose 65p of every extra £1 earned. If she took the job now, the family would have a combined income of £390 a week. Under Universal Credit, they would only have £354 a week – making them £36 a week (£1,872 a year) worse off.

Many mothers in Pauline's situation, looking to move into work, will also have much less incentive to do so under Universal Credit.

EXAMPLE 4: COUPLE FAMILY WITH TWO PARENTS IN PART-TIME WORK²⁰

Julie and Tim have two children. Tim is the main earner, working 24 hours a week, and Julie works six hours a week to boost the family income. After housing costs, they are just below the poverty line. Under Universal Credit, their income will fall by £1,144 a year (£22 a week) once cash protection comes to an end. This will push the family deeper into poverty and significantly reduce Julie's incentive to work. Julie's Marginal Deduction Rate (the amount she loses in benefit withdrawal for every extra £1 earned) under Universal Credit will be 65%, rather than 41% under the current system.

Julie wants to continue working as she knows that not working will reduce her ability to build a decent career in the future. A separate earnings disregard (of £51.92 in this example, so that it matches the first earner disregard) would help boost the family's income by £32 a week and lift them above the poverty line. For families in this situation, where the main earner's wages aren't enough to lift the family out of poverty, ensuring that the second earner can continue to work makes the difference between living in poverty or not.

Implementing this measure would benefit families where both parents are in low-paid work. This would include at least 342,000 children living in poverty¹⁸ where at least one parent works full-time and the other works (full-time or part-time), as well as families where a second earner moves into work as a direct result of this policy.

2. LACK OF SUPPORT FOR CHILDCARE COSTS

The ability of parents to find affordable childcare has a significant bearing on their ability to work, and the number of hours they are able to work. Until recently, low-income working parents could claim support for up to 80% of childcare costs through the childcare element of Working Tax Credit. This was cut to 70% from April 2011. This reduction in support for childcare costs resulted in half a million families being more than £500 a year worse off (on average), with some losing as much as £1,500 a year.¹⁹

A survey of parents by Save the Children and Daycare Trust in 2011 found that this reduction in support would have a negative impact on their ability to work, particularly those on the lowest incomes (41% of parents in severe poverty said they would consider giving up work and 25% said they would consider reducing the number of hours they work).²¹ This cut in support has had a very real impact on families. Evidence from HM Revenue & Customs (HMRC) shows that the cut to childcare support through Working Tax Credit has resulted in 44,000 fewer families getting the childcare element compared with April 2011 – a fall of 10%. In December 2011, families were getting £59 a week on average through the childcare element – the lowest level since 2005, representing a fall of 15% in just one year.²²

Under Universal Credit, funding for childcare will be available to those parents who are currently eligible for the childcare element of Working Tax Credit and those working in 'short hours' jobs (less than 16 hours a week). Families will be able to recover childcare costs at 70% – up to £760 for one child or £1,300 for two or more children a month. While we welcome this support for families working in short hours jobs as well as those working longer hours, the difficulties created for families affected by the reduction in support from 80% to 70% still need to be addressed.

What is the solution?

Covering childcare costs for low-income working families at up to 80% would cost £300m.²³ Over half a million families would benefit directly from this change (see example 5 for the difference it could make).²⁴ Additionally, families moving into work in need of support with childcare costs would also benefit.

EXAMPLE 5: HOW EXTRA SUPPORT FOR CHILDCARE COSTS WILL LIFT FAMILIES OUT OF POVERTY SOONER²⁵

Jane is a single mother of three looking to move into work. She is concerned about balancing work and childcare commitments. If she does move into work, she can use informal childcare for some of the time, but knows she'll face childcare costs of £291 a week.

Under current Universal Credit proposals, someone in Jane's position would need to earn £268 a week (earnings of £7.66 an hour based on a 35-hour week) to escape poverty. Extra financial support for Jane so that 80% of her childcare costs are covered would mean that she would be above the poverty line once her earnings reach £147 a week.

With extra support for childcare costs, Jane would be able to work 24 hours a week on or above the minimum wage. She and her children would be free from poverty and she would have greater choice about the number of hours she needs to work to provide a decent family life. Extra support for childcare costs makes work a much more realistic route out of poverty for parents in Jane's situation.

3. UNIVERSAL CREDIT PAYMENTS WILL BE WITHDRAWN TOO QUICKLY

Universal Credit is based on proposals developed by the Centre for Social Justice in its report Dynamic Benefits: Towards welfare that works. This report recommended a 55% taper as providing the best balance between affordability and ensuring improved work incentives for all.²⁶ However, the government has said Universal Credit will have one taper rate²⁷ of 65% for all earnings.

For some benefit recipients (particularly those in receipt of Council Tax Benefit and Housing Benefit), this is likely to lead to an improvement to the Marginal Deduction Rate (the rate of deductions through reduced benefit payments and increased Income Tax and National Insurance for every extra £1 earned) they face under the current system. However, some low- to middle-income working families will find that they face a Marginal Deduction Rate of 76% as opposed to 73% (70% prior to April 2011) under the current system (largely because the taper rate for Working Tax Credit is 41%).

What is the solution?

A reduction in the taper rate to 55% would benefit all working households in receipt of Universal Credit. This would include around 342,000 children living in poverty in working single-parent households and 1,824,000 children living in poverty in working couple families.²⁸ It would ensure that around 1,350,000 households who currently face a Marginal Deduction Rate of 73% (70% prior to April 2011) would not be worse off under Universal Credit.²⁹

Lowering the taper rate would boost the income of low-income working families and improve work incentives. For example, our modelling shows that a low-income couple family with two children and earnings of £149 a week would be £520 a year better off if the taper rate was reduced to 55%. The same family would face a Marginal Deduction Rate of 60% rather than 69% if the taper was reduced to 55%.

While it would cost the government £2.8bn to move to a 55% taper, it would cost significantly less to reduce it incrementally (around £280m for each percentage point drop).³⁰ Additionally, the government would not face the full costs of a move to a 55% taper rate (or other reduction) until all claimants had been moved from the current system on to Universal Credit, which is not due to happen until 2017.

CHILD POVERTY AND HOUSEHOLD WORK STATUS³¹

Most children living in poverty are in households where at least one parent works. Far too many jobs offer low wages and short hours, which means that work is not always the route out of poverty that it should be. However, the ability of parents to bring in two wages – or for a single parent to work full-time – significantly reduces the risk of poverty, as the following figures show.

COUPLE FAMILIES

Among couple families, only 5% of children in families where both parents work full-time and 8% of children where one parent works full-time and one parent works part-time are in poverty, compared with 29% of children in households where one parent works full-time and the other parent does not work. Despite this, the government is prioritising support for main earners at the expense of second earners.

It is fair to say that supporting one parent into work where that parent is part of a couple reduces the risk of poverty, but not by nearly as much as where both parents are in paid employment. Clearly, it suits some families to have only one earner; but the government should not promote this option at the expense of couples who both need to bring in a wage. By prioritising support for single-earner couples, the government risks increasing child poverty.

SINGLE-PARENT FAMILIES

There are 1.95 million single parents in the UK (around 90% of single parents are women).³² Around 1.1 million (57%) of single parents are working, up from 51% a decade ago. A further 23% are not working but want to.³³ It is clear, therefore, that the vast majority of single parents are either in work or want to work. For other single parents, working may not be an option because of illness or the age of their children.

The risk of poverty is twice as high among single-parent families as couple families. Of the 3 million children living in single-parent families, 46% (1.38 million) are living in poverty. This compares with 24% of all children in couple families. Children in single-parent households make up 37% of all children living in poverty. When single parents are able to work full-time, the risk of poverty is significantly reduced. However, Universal Credit reforms appear to be restricting the choices available to single parents in terms of the numbers of hours they are able to work. While we recognise that many single parents prefer to work fewer hours so they can balance work and child caring responsibilities, we believe that all parents deserve a choice.

CONCLUSION

The government's intention is to incentivise work and reduce poverty through the introduction of Universal Credit. However, this briefing shows that although many low-income working families will benefit from the new system, some will have less incentive to work, and some working poor households will be significantly worse off.

It is crucial that Universal Credit provides sufficient incentives to parents to move into decent work that offers a sustainable route out of poverty. As the economy recovers, mothers must not be further disadvantaged in the labour market through the introduction of Universal Credit. Instead, it should offer them a means of re-establishing themselves in the labour market following a period of increasing female unemployment. The ability of mothers to work – whether they are single parents or part of a couple – has a significant bearing on whether a family is poor or not.³⁴ As the figures in this report suggest, the ability of second earners (often mothers) in couple families to bring in a second wage, or the ability of single parents to secure full-time employment, can significantly reduce the risk of poverty.

We believe that Universal Credit, if funded and designed properly, could have a much more positive impact on child poverty and women's employment prospects. The policy recommendations set out in this report, if implemented, would enable government to overcome a number of significant challenges presented by the Universal Credit proposals as they currently stand.

ENDING CHILD POVERTY

Ensuring Universal Credit supports working mums

Save the Children's UK programme believes that no child should be born without a chance. We want to see the UK free of child poverty by 2020, and to see the link between low attainment and deprivation broken once and for all. Through our campaigns, and our programme work on the ground, we bring robust, evidence-based solutions to the challenges the UK's poorest children and families face.

Our Mums United campaign is part of our ongoing call on the government to fulfil their pledge to make work a genuine route out of poverty for the UK's poorest families. It's crucial that the government's flagship new welfare system – Universal Credit – makes work pay for all families, and delivers for mums who want and need to work.

That's why we're calling on mums to show their solidarity with the poorest mums, to call on the government to do more to help them work their way out of poverty.

Together we can make sure the poorest families have the help they need to give their children the best chance of fulfilling their potential.

Dear Dr. Pelan:

Re: Parliamentary Passage of the Welfare Reform Bill

We are writing to you, concerning the timetable of the parliamentary passage of the Welfare Reform Bill.

SIPTU supports an equality and human rights-based approach to the provision of social security which demonstrates an understanding of and focus on the needs and choices of all in receipt of benefits.

We understand that the Welfare Reform Bill will be referred to the Committee for its consideration stage from 10th October until 27th November, where scrutiny will take place two and a half days a week. Standing Orders allow 30 days for a Committee to consider a Bill, however, extensions can be sought.

We are seeking confirmation from the Committee that the commitment given to the Northern Ireland Committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions for full line by line scrutiny will be honoured.

We are seeking reassurance the committee will request an extension to 90 days to allow for a full debate to occur on the practical consequences of any proposals within the Bill and to discuss potential options to mitigate impacts. It is vital that a real appraisal of the effect of these proposals locally is achieved. The welfare reform changes are likely to last a generation and any attempt to hasten the timetable will prove counter-productive.

SIPTU believes it is appropriate to tailor a Northern Ireland approach to issues presented by the Welfare Reform Bill. Given the wide range of reforms, the implementation of the changes will impact upon a significant percentage of the working age population in Northern Ireland. Different arrangements could be made and we argue that, in previous circumstances, different arrangements have been made that reflect the very different challenges that face society in Northern Ireland.

Furthermore, despite the legislation being passed in Britain, there remains a high level of uncertainty around the finer detail of Universal Credit. It is clear from the regulations that a number of important issues have yet to be decided, for example the level of the assumed minimum income floor which will be set of the self employed and the question of whether to pay monthly or fortnightly.

The challenge posed by these proposed reforms provides the NI Assembly with a unique opportunity to demonstrate the positive value of a devolved government and to impact on the formation of social security policy here for the next generation. We hope that this opportunity is seized and maximized and we look forward to working with the Committee on this important task.

We look forward to hearing from you.

Yours sincerely

Consultation Response in respect of the Clauses contained in the Welfare Reform [NI] Bill 2012

1. The South Tyrone Empowerment Programme (S.T.E.P) is a not for profit community development organisation, which was established in 1997. It is based in Dungannon, Northern Ireland. Our range of services has continually diversified in response to changing community needs and gaps in service provision. We have grown to provide both local and regional services to the community. We aim to contribute to building a rights – based, participative, peaceful and prosperous society which provides equality of access and opportunity, embraces diversity and respects difference. Our objectives are to enable those most vulnerable to marginalisation, disadvantage and exclusion, to develop the confidence and skills to be heard; to identify their own strengths and needs; to access the support and expertise to help them in finding solutions and advocating social change.
2. S.T.E.P welcomes the opportunity to respond to this consultation which looks at the clauses contained in the Welfare Reform (NI) Bill 2012.
3. S.T.E.P is responding to this consultation for two key reasons:
 - (a) We are mindful that the legislative process in respect of the Welfare Reform (NI) Bill has already commenced and we are keen to assist in the mitigation of the effects of this new legislation. Notwithstanding the recommendations we have made herein, we wish to explicitly outline our wholehearted opposition to the Welfare Reform (NI) Bill 2012 in its entirety. We oppose this legislation as it will have the practical impact to marginalize and impoverish the most vulnerable and needy in Northern Ireland. It will also, in our view, expressly lead to greater poverty and social deprivation.
 - (b) We are an NGO which provides extensive legal advice and assistance to local and migrant communities. In this way, we can provide support services to the most vulnerable, impoverished and in need of welfare.
 - (c) Community-based support networks are vital in assisting exploited individuals. The availability of advice and information allows the claimant to be better informed when making welfare benefit applications and maintains quality by ensuring that legislation is correctly applied.

Scope of this Consultation Response

4. To consider the clauses contained in the Welfare Reform (NI) Bill 2012 (“The Bill”). To provide an informed analysis of the clauses themselves and the impact and effect they are likely to have. In addition we will make recommendations for improving the clauses as they are currently drafted.
5. We do not propose to respond to every clause as contained in the Bill, and intend our submissions to be cross transferrable where similar arguments can be made in other clauses.

Background to the Welfare Reform (NI) Bill 2012

6. The issue of social security in Northern Ireland is a devolved matter requiring a separate legislative process to bring about reform to the welfare benefit system. Welfare benefit payments come directly from Westminster, thereby avoiding money being taken from the Northern Ireland block grant. Figures released by the Department for Social Development highlighted that in 2009, £4,176,435,887 was claimed in welfare benefits (including State Pension), all of which was sourced directly from Westminster. In funding welfare in this way the NI Assembly are under considerable pressure to maintain a system of parity which largely operates in the UK.

7. The issue of parity is a contentious one. We recognise the merits in a congruent benefit system with the same principles as the rest of the UK; but are gravely concerned as to the impact these will have upon a separate jurisdiction. Northern Ireland has higher rates of joblessness, disabled claimants claiming sickness benefits (such as Incapacity Benefit and DLA) than in other parts of the UK, and we are largely a divided community emerging from conflict.
8. S.T.E.P believe that the Bill provides the Assembly with an excellent opportunity to best insulate and protect the most vulnerable in our local communities from the hard reality of austerity measures through the UK. We are aware that this legislation (in some form) will be passed and will become binding law. We strongly encourage the Assembly to ensure that every effort is made to explore the possibility of making substantive changes to welfare reform legislation to take account of Northern Ireland-specific circumstances, thereby mitigating its effects.
9. There should be a sharp focus on operational flexibility within the Departments and in the delivery and impact of these reforms. The Assembly have an excellent opportunity to shape the future of our nation and we recommend that every effort is made to protect the most marginalised and vulnerable.

The Welfare Reform Bill 2012 – Clauses

Proposed Clause 4:

10. Clause 4 identifies five basic criteria for eligibility. Clause 4(1)(e) identifies that the claimant must have “accepted a claimant agreement”. This makes no reference to personal circumstances nor qualifies the non-acceptance of such an agreement. It is conceivable that Carers of both children and adults are the most likely to have difficulties committing to a claimant agreement and are likely to fail to adhere to such agreements due to their caring duties.
11. In these circumstances the claimant agreement should have an element of reasonableness attached to it and the acceptance of such based upon the reasonableness principle. The agreement should then be tailored to best suit his/her needs.
12. We are of the view that greater protection and clarity should be added to Clause 4(1)(e), in identifying that the clients personal circumstances have been considered.
13. STEP recommend that s.4(1)(e) is amended to add “..., which has been tailored with regard to his personal circumstances.”

Proposed Clause 14:

14. Further to our submission in respect of changes to clause 4, we are of the view that the proposed clause 14 must also be reconsidered in the same light. This Clause fails to lay down any criteria for the creation or development of claimant contracts. Instead it provides a carte blanche for the department to make potentially restrictive agreements. In this regard 14(2) goes too far in that it allows the claimant commitment to be “prepared by the Department and may be reviewed and updated as the Department thinks fit.”
15. Clause 14 should be specifically amended to afford protection to the client on the grounds of fairness and reasonableness. Claimants should have the specific right to contribute to the agreement and only reasonable contracts be imposed. Where contracts are disputed on the grounds of reasonableness; these should be subject to challenge and/or appeal. One possibility would also allow for this to be challenged in the way such agreements are presently challenged under the present Job Seekers Allowance regime. In either event the right to dispute should be codified in a new sub-Clause in s.14.

16. Clause 14(4)(b)&(c) provide for the department to use: “any prescribed information’ (Clause 14(4)(b)) and “any other information the Department considers appropriate” (Clause 14(4)(c)). Clause should in our view be clarified and should be amended to read “...insofar as this other material is relevant and reasonable to be considered.”

Proposed Clauses 15 & 16:

17. We submit that the proposed s.15 (Work Focused Interview Requirement) & s.16 (work preparation Requirement) both be amended to specifically indicate that Department decisions are subject to reasonableness and proportionality, subjective to the claimants circumstances.
18. We further submit that for the same reasons as set out in our paragraph 9 above, that Clauses 15&16 are also subject to a challenge/appeal procedure.

Proposed Clause 19:

19. Clause 19(2)(c) makes provision where “the claimant is the responsible carer for a child under the age of one.” They will not be subject to work-related requirements. S.T.E.P are of the view that parity with this aspect of the Welfare Reform Bill should not be maintained. This rules only seeks to adversely advantage those with childcare needs.
20. Traditionally the Income Support rules recognised the fact that childcare was a key issue. In fact, so much so, that recent reforms to the Income Support rules recognised this with regard to work-related activities. Recent reforms imposed the requirement that work-related requirements were possible and should be undertaken where the child is of school age (age 5 and over.) Clause 19(2) is very much at odds with this recent rationale.
21. We are of the view that imposing work-related activities where the responsible parent where a child is over one (and under school age) will create a childcare crisis for many individuals. On the one hand they are required to engage in work-related activities yet are struggling to do so due to the availability or indeed affordability of childcare, which would otherwise allow them to engage in such activities.
22. Clause 19(2) will only seek to cause unnecessary hardship, anxiety and pressure on young families. We are of the view that 19(2) to should be amended to read “...under the age of 5.” To fail to do so would be in direct conflict with the governments principles underpinning the Welfare Reform (NI) Bill, namely ‘to get people back into work’ and ‘to make work pay.’

Proposed Clause 24:

23. S.T.E.P welcome the inclusion of special provisions for victims of domestic violence under Clause 27(7), which affords a 13 week reprieve. Whilst we welcome these provisions; we are concerned that the provisions do not go far enough and that the 13 week time-frame is too short in terms of timescale.
24. We are aware that the terms ‘domestic violence’ and ‘victim of domestic violence’ are yet to be determined by Regulation, but we feel that there is a key opportunity for the NI Assembly to widen the scope of traditional domestic violence situations where relationship and physical abuse is the focus.
25. The use of the term ‘violence’ is also unduly narrowing the issue as it suggests a physical threat or outcome. STEP prefer the term ‘abuse’ rather than violence; as domestic abuse can take the form of emotional, psychological and financial abuse, all of which are equally damaging within a domestic setting.
26. We are of the view that the legislation could better make reference to ‘victim of abuse within a domestic setting.’ This is our view better reflects the broad spectrum of damaging abuse. It would also cover the increase in human trafficking, forced labour and servitude within Northern Ireland. We are of the view that human trafficking, forced labour and servitude are as damaging as domestic abuse/violence and are in need of similar protection.

27. We are of the view that 13 weeks may not be a long enough time-period to overcome barriers to work-related activities and recommend this is substantially extended.

Proposed Clauses 26 & 27

28. Clauses 26 & 27 provide for more rigorous sanctions than currently exist in the present benefits system. We are concerned by the use of the phrase ‘for no good reason.’ No clarification as to the meaning of this or what may constitute such has been provided in the Bill. Our concern revolves around the instance that it may be left for the decision-maker to be persuaded by the reason, and provides for too much discretion in doing so.
29. We are further concerned that those with mental health, learning difficulties and those with communication difficulties may be unduly deemed as not having a ‘good reason’ when in fact their disability is their reason. Our concern remains the same for those who do have a good reason but cannot communicate this well enough to overcome the decision-makers discretion.
30. We recommend that safeguards are provided for and that claimants are afforded the full opportunity to explain the reasons and to provide additional information.
31. We are also of the view that these safeguards would ensure that sanctions are not used as a means of forcing claimants into work.

Proposed Clause 28

32. Clause 28(1)(f) allows for Regulations to set down circumstances where hardship payments are not recoverable. Whilst we welcome this provision, we feel this clause should go further. We recommend that greater discretion is provided to not seek recovery of hardship payments at all, where exceptional circumstances arise.
33. We recommend that a new sub-clause added to provide a specific discretion not to recover hardship payments. This discretion should mirror current Department policy, not to recover where this will cause hardship. In all circumstances this should be based on subjective personal circumstances.

Proposed Clause 52

34. Clause 52(1) seeks to impose the condition that Contributory ESA may only be claimed for up to 365 days, with this being the “relevant maximum number of days.” We are of the view that this is an arbitrary time-limit which will only lead to financial hardship for families who are on a low income but do not meet a Universal Credit entitlement.
35. The time-limit of 365 days is an arbitrary time-limit. The National Insurance Contribution (“NIC”) eligibility rules refer to the claimant having enough NICs in the last 2 tax years, as is the current eligibility criteria. The logical approach would be to exhaust all NICs over 2 tax years. Where the individual has paid NICs to the appropriate level, they should be allowed to fully avail of these. To impose a 365 day limit (one) year on a claimant who has 2 fully years NICs is to effect ignore the fact that s/he has paid to this level. We recommend this is removed completely or extended to 2 years as suggested.
36. Clause 52(1) (New (1A)(4)(f)) allows for the imposition of the 365day rule to apply to existing awards. S.T.E.P feel that this is merely retrospective law making designed to save money and is unfair and unjust. Where the client is entitled to an award based on the criteria at that time, the principle of natural justice dictates that s/he fulfills the entitlement to that benefit on the basis of rules that were in place at that time.
37. S.T.E.P advocate deletion of clause 52(1) (New (1A)(4)(f)) in its entirety. Awards that are currently in place should be allowed to run their natural course and only then should the new rules apply.

38. Clause 52(1) (New (1A)(1)(6)) allows for the further rules in relation to calculation of entitlement to Contribution-Based ESA. In assessing the 365 day rule it allows for days prior to the coming into effect of the new rules to be considered. In our view that is a further example of retrospective law-making designed to save money. It is unfair and unjust. Where a new rule comes into force it should only be from the “in-force” date and accordingly any time-limiting eligibility factors should not start running until that date.
39. S.T.E.P recommends the deletion of this clause on the grounds of fairness and natural justice.

Proposed Clause 59

40. Clause 59(2) imposes work related activities on lone parents with children aged under 5. It is STEP’s view that such conditions place an undue burden upon them in terms of obtaining and paying for childcare and thereafter taking up employment. Lone parents are affected by these the most.
41. For the reasons set out in paras 19-22 of this response we are of the view that imposing job related activities on lone parent families (with children under 5) should not be followed in Northern Ireland.

Proposed Clause 78

42. Clause 78(7) provides that:
- “Regulations may provide that a person is not entitled to the mobility component for a period (even though the requirements in sub-Clause (1) or (2) are met) in prescribed circumstances where the person’s condition is such that during all or most of the period the person is unlikely to benefit from enhanced mobility.”*

This Clause seeks to limit the availability of the mobility component yet fails to clarify what is meant by ‘unlikely to benefit from enhanced mobility,’ nor is any direction given to the scope of what the Regulations may contain.

43. The concept of a claimant being ‘unlikely to benefit’ needs clarification. It is too wide ranging in scope. To fail to do this in the Bill would potentially lead to circumstances were non-entitlement results in cases which were envisaged would normally be entitled under the spirit of the reforms.
44. The purpose behind the enhanced mobility component of PIP is to assist those most in need to lead independent lives. Where an individual is in constant severe pain whilst walking or mobilising (subject to the entitlement criteria) may be entitled to PIP Enhanced Mobility component (this would yield a DLA High Rate Mobility Component award today). In this example, Clause 78(7) in its current form could arguably be used to justify non-entitlement on the basis that the claimant could be said to not benefit from enhanced mobility as the pain is constant and severe [i.e. the pain level is still the same and thus no benefit accrues].
45. STEP recommend that clause 78(7) is clarified and the scope of any potential Regulations to further define this, codified within this Clause.

Proposed Clause 80

46. Clause 80(1)(b) imposes a 9 month projection on the duration of the condition (thereby limiting the ability of the claimant). This represents a extension of the current DLA criteria for the condition to be likely to last 6 months. In our view this clause only seeks to limit entitlement as a cost cutting measure. Such limitations are against the spirit of PIP which is to help disabled people lead independent lives. This is our view restricts disabled people to assistance only where they are likely to have the condition for a year (3months under clause 80(1)(a) and 9mths projected under clause 80(1)(b)).

47. S.T.E.P recommend that the current provisions of a 6month projection on an illness is more than adequate and clause 80(1)(b) should be limited to 6 months as is currently the case in DLA (the predecessor to PIP)

Proposed Clause 83

48. Clause 83 identifies that sickness benefits are not payable where the UK is not the competent state. Clause 83(2)(a)&(b) refer to the relevant EU Regulations governing this principle. We are of the view that this Clause fails to clarify the issue of competent state.
49. S.T.E.P has experience of assisting clients who are refused benefit entitlement under competent state arguments. In our experience the EU Regulations are not sufficiently clear. The EU Regulation 883/2004 appears to suggest that a claimant will be eligible where they are a family member of a worker in the UK, despite circumstances which would otherwise rule them as not entitled. We are of the view that the legislation can best address this matter by providing clarification of the rule.
50. We recommend a full and detailed clause, fully explaining the entitlement and non-entitlement under competent state arguments.

Proposed Clause 84

51. Clause 84(3) defined the term “Care Home” as meaning an “establishment that provides accommodation together with nursing or personal care.” We are of the view that this is an imprecise and vague definition. We are also concerned as to how this definition may be interpreted.
52. The use of ‘personal care’ needs specific clarification. If this refers to medical care or a form of assisted living arising from this (such a care worker providing washing and dressing services) then this must be specifically identified in the Bill.
53. We have concerns that providing accommodation and some other personal care would lead to claimants losing their benefits despite being entitled to PIP. This would apply to Shelters, Hostels and Refuges where a form of other support is provided over and above the accommodation.
54. Without clarification of Clause 84(3) we can arguably see clients losing benefit in circumstances where this was not envisaged under the Bill. The example of a Hostel resident who is in receipt of other support services (such as key worker or floating support services as current exist in NI), such as assistance to manage financial affairs could arguably be at risk under clause 84(3). Managing finances is an eligibility criteria for assessing the new PIP benefit and could thus be argued as personal care also.

Proposed Clause 95

55. S.T.E.P are concerned that the imposition of a benefit cap will only further limit the entitlement of claimants, who are otherwise eligible for benefits. We have further concerns that the proposals in reality seek to doubly assess and cap claimants.
56. Where the claimant meets the normal rules of entitlement they should be eligible for that benefit free of a benefit cap. To impose a benefit cap is to effectively assess clients twice; first for eligibility and secondly for income. This has the effect of denying a benefit (or full amount) which the client is otherwise eligible for.
57. Changes to the Local Housing Allowance amounts and the extension to the shared room rate to cover persons up to age 35, have already imposed de facto benefit caps. To then impose an overall benefits cap in addition, is to cap the claimant’s eligibility for benefit twice.

58. We are further concerned that a benefits cap will only lead claimants to the conclusion that they are ‘better off’ living and claiming separately, thereby potentially breaking-up households. This has a greater unforeseen impact on children.
59. Clause 95(5)&(6) amount to the relevant amount which is calculated by reference to the “estimated average earnings.” We recommend that if parity is to be maintained in this regard, then this amount should be in line with the average earnings in the whole of the UK.
60. We further recommend that average earnings are calculated with regard to potential welfare benefits assistance under Universal Credit that those working would also be entitled. A consideration of this in relation to the current tax credit system highlights the issue. It is not correct to say a family’s income is ‘X’ because they earn ‘X’ in their employment when in fact they are also entitled to in the region of £4000p/a in tax credits over and above those wages.
61. Clause 95(4)(c) provides Regulations to make “exceptions to the benefits cap”. This is ambiguous in our view. It is not clear whether this refers to exceptions to the cap completely (i.e. not applied at all) or whether it provides for a disregard of certain benefits when considering the cap (such a Disability Benefits.) This must be sufficiently clarified. Our recommendation is that provision for both should be made sufficiently clear in clause 95(4).

Further Issues which Should be Considered in the Bill

62. S.T.E.P are of the view that the Welfare Reform Bill has presented an excellent opportunity to commence the legislation process for protection of victims of human trafficking, forced labour and domestic servitude.
63. Northern Ireland is currently the pioneering legislation against human trafficking, within the UK. The recent private member’s bill [xxx] and subsequent awareness of human trafficking matters, has made legislating to protect victims all the more prevalent. The Welfare Reform [NI] Bill represents a real opportunity for our Assembly to address these issues and provide special recognition and protection for these vulnerable individuals within the welfare system.
64. S.T.E.P strongly recommends that a clause is added to protect victims of human trafficking and to provide for their access to welfare benefits.

Final Remarks

65. STEP strongly urges the Assembly to undergo a rigorous consideration of the Bill in its current form and to fully consider the impact of the implementation upon vulnerable individuals.
66. Full protection and appeal rights should be provided in respect of the claimant. There should always be a right to request a reconsideration or review in respect of their claim and to properly challenge decisions where discretion is granted.
67. Funding for the voluntary sector should be guaranteed and ring fenced in order to advise and assist those most in need as a result of these legislative changes.
68. Finally, it is imperative that further Regulations (not yet decided) are limited to their initial purpose of complementing the Bill rather than a means by which new savings and austerity measures can be introduced.

18th October, 2012

Dear Sir/Madam,

RE: Welfare Reform Bill

I refer to the above and am pleased to offer some comments and observations on the proposed Policy proposals presented by the Department following the presentation of the Welfare Reform Bill and its passage through the Northern Ireland Assembly; the comments have been prepared following discussions within the Supporting Communities NI staff team, the Housing Community Network and also with our partners in community organisations across N.I.

Supporting Communities NI (S.C.N.I.) is an independent charitable organisation which champions community participation by developing groups, supporting active citizenship and building cohesive communities. At the same time, and in partnership with the NI Housing Executive, S.C.N.I. supports and facilitates the Housing Community Network which was formed in response to the need for housing and related policies to be developed with and on behalf of local communities. S.C.N.I. works with the Housing Executive, Housing Associations and other organisations in the monitor and scrutiny of the delivery of housing and related services.

S.C.N.I. and members of the tenants and community representatives have considered the principal proposals of the Welfare Reform Bill at Housing Community Network Area and District meetings and the comments attached reflect many of the concerns expressed by community representatives during those considerations.

The attached comments have been prepared and are presented in line with the proposals in the published Bill and have been restricted to those areas which S.C.N.I. and the Housing Community Network has a specific and direct concern.

In general, the governments welfare reform agenda finds little or no support from community representatives involved in the Housing Community Network; whilst there may be some support for any attempt to make the system of income maintenance less complicated and more accessible for claimants, the general feeling is that the proposals in the Bill reflect only a desire to impose significant cuts in the overall welfare budget. The general feeling is that these proposals will have a negative impact on low and fixed income households and the most vulnerable members of our community, particularly given the emphasis on an overall cap on a claimants entitlement; some representatives have gone further and expressed the view that these proposals rather than better tackle poverty will actually be damaging to family and community life.

That said, we have attached more specific comments and observations on sections of the Welfare Reform Bill as presented.

I hope the committee finds these observations and comments helpful.

Yours Faithfully,

For SUPPORTING COMMUNITIES NI

Universal Credit

General

Whilst it is recognised that the explicit central theme of the Bill is to simplify the current system of income maintenance, it is believed that the proposals go too far and as an oversimplification will present difficulties for those accessing existing benefits and new and subsequent claimants. Community representatives have also expressed grave concerns around the transition period between the existing and current framework and the introduction of Universal Credit. It is apparent that many people are as yet not fully aware of the changes to their entitlements but also to the method, means and schedule of payments.

There is particular concern around the introduction of a system which carries the presumption of a predominantly online self-service claims process and for a system of payment of entitlements that is dependent on claimants having bank accounts. It is believed that the administration of the system renders it more complicated and less accessible to those most in need. Access to the internet and to online banking is still restricted and still largely excludes many low-income, disadvantaged and vulnerable households. There is a pressing and urgent need for greater assistance to be made available to those households and in particular to those more vulnerable claimants to fully explain the changes and to ensure no source of income or support is lost in transition.

Concern has also been expressed at the proposed scheduling of payments and that many low and fixed-income households have particular budgeting needs and requirements it is believed that in the rush to simplify the system, the needs of such households have not been considered or have been disregarded. We would urge the Committee to be mindful of these needs in their consideration of the impact of these proposals.

Capping of Entitlements

Concern has also been expressed at the inclusion of all benefits, and particularly the housing allowance element, in a single capped payment. Housing Community Network members are concerned about the introduction of an overall benefits cap (covering all tenures) mainly because the majority of households affected by this policy will have children. Indeed, members expressed concern that larger families with several children who require larger accommodation (and consequently higher Housing Benefit) will be affected the most. It is estimated that the rates for a couple/family will be capped at £500 per week. It has been noted that it is estimated that the cap will affect less than 1% of benefits claimants locally; however the impact on those affected is likely to be significant. In Britain, it is estimated that 50,000 claimants will be affected with an average loss of £93.00 per week. Those most affected will have four or more children. We fear that the loss of income could drive Northern Ireland children, whose parents are in receipt of benefits, deeper into poverty and potentially into homelessness. We are also concerned that the potential differential impact of these changes has not been fully considered within the context of Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act.

Housing Benefit Cap- Public and Social Rented Sectors

Community and tenants representatives have expressed the gravest concern at the proposals to reduce the entitlement of housing benefit based on the premise of 'under-occupancy'. It is believed that this measure will put in place undue hardship on individuals and households, either in terms of hardship or by placing undue impetus on the household to leave their home and seek alternative and smaller accommodation, which may not be available either of a nature or in an area of the claimants choosing.

There may be some sympathy with the desire to better match accommodation size to households needs; it is the view of community representatives that this is not the appropriate mechanism with which to provide that impetus. Indeed it has been postulated that a claimant in their fifties who may or may not have had adaptations to their home as a result of their own circumstances will receive significantly reduced housing benefit or will have to seek other alternative and potentially less suitable accommodation. It is believed that quite apart from being arbitrary and draconian this measure has not been fully considered in terms of its differential impact across Section 75 groups.

There are a number of other key impacts which have not been fully considered and some of these can be illustrated;

Claimants who are the non-primary carer, e.g. a father who has separated or divorced from their partner or spouse will be unable to exercise their right of access to their family as a result of having to move to single room accommodation as they cannot accommodate their children overnight; neither is it appropriate that a person in such circumstances should be forced to pay additional sums as a result of housing allowance capping, just to have access to family life. Community and tenants representatives believe it is quite wrong to impose such a cap in such circumstances.

Similarly a person with disabilities who does not necessarily require continual personal support will be unable to access overnight support when required as the requisite room would not be available.

It is widely held that tenants in the public and social rented sectors occupy accommodation to which they are entitled having been allocated that property through the housing selection scheme; the subsequent imposition of a cap on housing benefit on the basis of a 'supposed' under-occupancy is unduly harsh and unfair. The committee should also be mindful of the fact that peoples housing choices are frequently limited by availability and the area of choice, the need to be close to family and others to receive or provide support or care and the limitations imposed by a segregated housing market.

In any case, it is difficult to envisage how the public and social rented sectors could, if required, facilitate and expedite the allocation and transfer of tenants from 'under-occupancy' which will follow the capping of housing benefit.

The Committee should also consider the differential impact of this proposal between those of a working age and those of pensionable age and a potential conflict with the legal duties and obligations on the Department under Section 75 and its own equality Scheme.

Direct Payments

Community and tenants representatives also echo the concerns which have been expressed around the ending of direct payment of housing benefit to landlords. Direct payments to landlords has provided an opportunity for households in fixed and low incomes to safeguard rent payments in the context of demandingly tight household budgets. It is not believed that government has fully considered the impact on such households by ending such direct payments and including housing allowances in Universal Credit.

The combination of the welfare reform proposals and the economic downturn, along with increasing household costs for fuel and food, will have a serious impact on those households already vulnerable in the labour market. The ability to provide a tight leash on household expenditure in such circumstances will not be assisted by the ending of direct payments to landlords. The committee should consider how government can provide greater support and assistance, not increase the burdens and challenges on vulnerable and disadvantaged households.

Dear Minister

RE: Welfare Reform Act & Victims/Survivors of the NI Troubles

I very much welcomed your contribution at the NICVA Conference on Welfare Reform earlier this year, and Sinn Fein's continued concern about the effects of Welfare Reform. As the Welfare Advice Worker for WAVE Trauma Centre, a cross community charity which helps and supports victims/survivors of the 'NI Troubles,' I am particularly concerned about the impact of the Welfare Reform Act on many of our members. To date I have seen for myself the stress and anxiety caused among our membership due to Incapacity Benefit Migration to ESA. I am aware that the Welfare Reform Bill is coming before the NI Assembly soon so I felt compelled to write to you and raise some issues on behalf of members of WAVE.

Many of those injured in the NI conflict lost limbs and sustained serious injuries as a result of bomb explosions or random shootings. Many sustained not only physical injury, but also psychological trauma, depression and anxiety as a result of the violent loss of loved ones or physical injury. Most of our clients claim disability and/or means tested benefits. Unfortunately due to sustained anti-claimant media campaigns many people and some politicians are not aware just how severe Welfare Reform will be on those who have serious ill health and disability. This is because every aspect of welfare support is changing within a relatively short period of time during one of the worst recessions in recent decades.

Statements such as "those who really need the help will continue to get support," will and already has proved untrue for many and even GP's know that this is the case (see below). This is why the issue of welfare reform is so important. A policy of "Work Pays" and "getting people back to work" will only be a reality if (1) people really are fit for work, (2) if there is work and a need of labour particularly in areas of high deprivation, and (3) if potential employees are attractive to employers. In regard to the first point, thousands of individuals are disallowed benefit under the new ESA system causing stress and anxiety to genuinely sick and disabled people and as many as 40% are reported to be winning their case on appeal. The cost to the taxpayer of the tribunal system alone is £50m in the UK, around a half of the £100m a year being spent on reassessment. On the second point, new findings released on 8th May 2012 by the Centre for Economics and Business Research (CEBR) show that unemployment is set to continue rising in Northern Ireland:

"The regions expected to be worst affected by rising unemployment are those most dependent upon the public sector for employment and so are most exposed to government cutbacks. These include Northern Ireland, Wales, the North East of England and Scotland.....With almost three in ten workers employed by the public sector in Northern Ireland, the increase in unemployment is expected to be particularly pronounced. The unemployment rate is projected to rise from 8.8% in 2012 to 10.7% by 2016, weighing down heavily on consumer spending growth in the country."

This prediction brings us to the third point. A saturated labor market means that employers can pick and choose their workers. Those recently made redundant with up to date skills and good health will be far more attractive than those with long term disabilities or fluctuating health problems, who have been out of the labor force for many years. Most of those injured in the conflict are now in their 50's and early 60's and statistically this age group has little or no academic qualifications. They will also be competing for jobs with many young lone parents who will also have to search for work due to welfare reform and unemployed graduates. Who from the above list will be least attractive to potential employers? How will the long term sick in their 50's and 60's make "work pay" while their benefits are removed? This is exactly why the government's Welfare Reform Act is problematic – they place everyone on an equal playing field when the reality is they are not "equal."

A prime example of this is contained in the current more stringent test for Employment Support Allowance introduced last year. A registered blind person will not automatically pass the test for ESA – yet do they have equal chances of getting a job compared with able bodied workers? It is therefore of no surprise that in March 2012, the BMA reported that GP's at their Annual Scottish Conference unanimously voted to end the Work Capacity Assessment, calling for "a more vigorous and safe system that does not cause avoidable harm to some of the weakest and most vulnerable in society." At the British Medical Association's Local Medical Committee Conference 2012 held in Liverpool, GPs voted unanimously for the work capability assessment to end 'with immediate effect.' Dr Dean Marshall,

Chairman of the British Medical Association's Scottish General Practitioners Committee, said, "Evidence appears to suggest that people with serious health conditions are sometimes being declared fit for work.'

Another serious concern of welfare reform is the assumption that because someone has an aid, white stick; wheelchair, prosthesis etc. to do things they should be treated like everyone else, and this policy is reflected in the new criteria for PIP and ESA. But this is a distortion of what disability policy in our society should be about. The disabled and long-term sick should be supported for their efforts to be independent not penalized as they struggle on a day to day basis to do things able bodied people take for granted.

I have outlined many important points regarding the Welfare Reform Act in the attached document, and as the policy may affect thousands of your constituents I trust that you will consider them. Although we welcome encouragement to those who can work to do so, in reality the actual details of welfare reform could have devastating effects on many disabled people and those who are chronically sick across our province. It is all the more hard hitting as it will affect not only one benefit but practically all benefits over a short period of time including housing costs. This means claimants will feel the financial impact not just once or twice but many times over.

We feel that politicians at the NI Assembly have a moral duty to ensure that those who bore the brunt of suffering over 40 years of violence in Northern Ireland are taken care of and we need to ensure that they are not forgotten nor their burden made more acute by poverty and the stress of frequent medical examinations and stress and uncertainty about their benefits. Northern Ireland has been applauded across the world for the peace process and on-going progress in our political situation. It is imperative that we also demonstrate our care and real support for those who have paid the highest price for our new society. We need to take a realistic view of the lives of disabled and chronically sick individuals, the very people who did not benefit from the years of prosperity since the signing of the Good Friday Agreement. Northern Ireland Politicians must have the courage and creative thinking to ensure that those who do need help and assistance due to their disabilities will receive it.

We welcome your assurances that the Welfare Reform Bill will receive full scrutiny from the NI Assembly.

Yours sincerely

Annette Creelman

Welfare Reform Bill: Concerns on the impact on Victims/Survivors of the NI “Troubles.”

Welfare Reform Bill

Chapter 2: Employment Support Allowance S.50-53

- Duration of Contribution based ESA for those placed in the ‘Work Related Activity Group’s time limited to 365 days. (1 year).
- Those placed in the Support group will not have their benefit time limited.

Background

In order to consider the S.50-53 of the Bill is important to find out who is receiving Contribution based ESA; why have they been placed into the Work Related Activity Group and who will be affected by this proposal contained in the Welfare Reform Bill?

Although ESA was introduced in 2008, the criteria to qualify for this benefit became extremely stringent in March 2011, 2 months after the government began migrating thousands of people from Incapacity benefit to ESA. The criteria is such that those with serious sensory impairment (deaf or blind) will not automatically be awarded the 15 points required to pass the work capability assessment for ESA (unlike pre-March 2011 tests). If a blind person can walk in an unfamiliar place using a guide dog or other aid, without requiring assistance from another person they will fail the test.

The descriptor ‘walking’ has been changed to ‘mobilising’ so for the first time wheelchair users are assessed as to how far they can push themselves in a manual wheelchair. This is the case despite the fact that it is not an equal playing field for people with serious disability to find employment. The exemptions from the test have also been drastically curtailed. Therefore those who do satisfy the test usually have serious disabling conditions or chronic ill health. In fact DWP evidence has revealed that between January and August 2011, a total of 1,100 claimants died in the work-related activity group (WRAG). Why then are so many people many of whom must have serious ill health conditions placed in the WRAG?

The criteria for the ‘Support Group’ is so limited and stringent that it is difficult for many chronically sick and disabled people to satisfy it (appendix 1). Consequently many people are placed in the WRAG without any real prospect of obtaining work or holding down a job due to ill health. Unlike those in the Support group, those in the WRAG have to attend a series of interviews at their local Job Centre to discuss work related activity and their ability to get back to work. Within our client group we have had many clients report that when they are called for an interview in the Job Centre, advisers are informing them that they won’t be expected to undertake any activity and won’t be called back for many months. It would appear that job centre staff can clearly see that those in the WRAG are not fit for work.

Contribution based ESA is paid to those who have worked before they claimed and paid sufficient national insurance contributions to qualify for benefit. Many of those claiming will have worked for many years, contributing tax and national insurance. However under the proposal in the Welfare Reform Bill thousands will find that their contribution based ESA will only be paid for 12 months and this will apply retrospectively. Claimants of contribution based ESA feel that it is unjust that they worked and paid many years of National Insurance contributions, and now find that their ESA stops after 12 months, not because their health has improved but because of a sudden change in government policy.

Why is contribution-based Employment Support Allowance being time limited?

The government's reasoning is three-fold:

ESA for people in the Work Related Activity Group was never intended to be a benefit for the long term, but an interim measure for those who are expected to move into work. The Government expects people on benefit to take up the help and support available through Jobcentre Plus or the Work Programme to move off benefit and into work (1).

In terms of comparisons with the rest of the UK, Northern Ireland has almost double the number of Incapacity Benefit recipients per head of working age population than the UK average (4.8% vs. 2.8%). This is not surprising in view of over 40 years of conflict, and so the impact of this change and the reassessment of IB claimants will have a particularly greater impact in Northern Ireland (2). Advice NI estimate that as many as 20,000 Incapacity benefit Claimants in Northern Ireland will transfer to the Work related Activity Group and will be affected by the time limit proposed (2).

However there are major flaws in the government's policy. The first is that the idea behind ESA is to get sick people back to work as soon as possible, "a quick turn around." The underpinning assumption is that for those in the Work Related Activity Group (WRAG), ESA should only be a temporary benefit pending the claimants return to work as soon as possible. This policy may be effective for some new ESA claimants freshly out of the labour market – who with some assistance may be more able to re-habilitate and get back into some form of work if at all possible with their disability or illness. However many diseases and long term disabilities will not fit into this box. This major flaw is very relevant to those who are migrating over from Incapacity benefit with long term disabilities and chronic medical conditions. It would include those with serious physical and psychological injuries as a result of the NI Troubles. Long term Incapacity Claimants have been out to the labour market or markedly longer periods, with long term or often fluctuating health problems. The majority of these claimants are over 50 years old and high numbers also have mental health issues (2). These claimants will lack up to date skills and often with age their medical conditions become more complex. It will not be an equal playing field for these long term claimants to rehabilitate quickly before their benefit is cut. The extremely narrow criteria for the Support Group means that many people with very serious health concerns are being placed in the WRAG, and will therefore have their money cut, despite satisfying the WCA.

Advice NI report that in terms of the profile of the 51,000 Incapacity Benefit recipients in Northern Ireland, Incapacity Benefit recipients have been in receipt of this contribution based benefit for many years. 31,000 (over 60%) are aged 50 or over (2). The majority of victims/ survivors of the troubles claiming ESA/IB are now in their 50's and 60's; and their ability and chances of re-employment is minimal. The age of our client group with disabilities and many years out of the labour market make them particularly vulnerable, at a time when they will have to wait longer (particularly women) to qualify for state pension. All too often employers prefer healthy young well qualified workers with recent work experience. Incapacity claimants tend to fail on just about all these counts. (6) Many that are over 50 previously worked in mainly manual jobs and a higher proportion have no formal qualifications at all. They are extremely unlikely to be an employer's first choice. The government's policy ignores this important fact.

In most cases, when someone loses a job because of illness, they will have difficulty gaining new employment unless they can convince an employer that they are 'cured.' "A combination of anti-discrimination legislation and promotion of more positive attitudes amongst employers may well create more employment opportunities for people with reasonable health but have a static impairment, but where employers are faced with someone whose condition is associated with ill health and frequent times when they cannot work, such policies are unlikely to be successful (4) This is exacerbated if there is no demand for labour – we are currently in one of the deepest recessions of the century. The idea therefore that "work pays" and that "work is the way out of poverty" can be realistically obtained, if people are fit for work; have up to date skills, and are attractive to employers. The vast majority of victims and survivors of the Troubles fail on all three.

Our client group have long term ill health and disabilities not only affecting them physically but also psychologically. Many struggle to cope on a day to day basis. The government's policy underplays the impact of physical and mental ill health.

The government states that those with limited or no means of supporting themselves and those who are most severely affected by their medical conditions (i.e. those in the support group) will continue to receive Employment and Support Allowance even after 365 days. If claimants are affected by the introduction of a time-limit they may be able to receive income-related Employment and Support Allowance.

DWP's own impact assessment (5), based on detailed modelling of household income is that when entitlement to non-means tested benefit comes to an end after 12 months, 40% of claimants in the Work related activity group will fail to qualify for means-tested ESA. The average rate of Incapacity benefit paid at £98.39 per week (2) those affected could lose nearly £400 per month into their households. This could send many households into spiralling financial hardship, debt, and mortgage/ rent arrears. Many individuals and families are finding it difficult to cope with rising food, utility, and fuel costs. Disabled and chronically sick people have higher heating bills than those who are able bodied as their mobility and circulation is often restricted. Some households have to support older teenagers in higher education; have shortfalls in endowment policies to pay off mortgages. To lose such a large portion of income all of a sudden will have a huge impact on low income families. In view of the fact that many victims and survivors with a disability are over 50yrs, their ability to change their situation is limited. Moreover, the 'safety net' of income based ESA will not prevent many claimant's to be substantially worse off if they have other forms of income which would be deductible from income based ESA (see case study 1 below).

Although some people who lose their contribution based benefit, will be able to transfer onto "income based" ESA which is means tested and not time limited, many more will be unable to. As it is means tested, it will only be open to those who have little or no other form of income. Many others will not be eligible to claim this benefit, because e.g. their partner works over 24 hours per week; or they may have other forms of income such as an occupational/ private pension or Industrial Injuries benefit which pushes them over the threshold of eligibility for Income-based ESA. Many in their 50's who are paying the latter term of a mortgage which includes only capital, may not qualify for assistance with mortgage payments under income based ESA. Indeed to live on means tested benefit is to live just above the poverty line. Is it right that the sick and disabled in our society should be denied ESA when they paid their national insurance stamps before they became ill or were injured? Should they be relegated to a poverty led existence or financial hardship particularly when their ability to change their circumstances is limited? Is this the way we want to treat disabled victims and survivors in Northern Ireland?

The financial impact of the losing ESA payments must be considered against other welfare reform. The long term sick will already face financial cuts just by simply migrating over to ESA in the first place. Although they will initially be paid at the same rate of money they were receiving under IB, this protected figure will not increase year on year unlike ESA for new claimants. This is to ensure it matches the level of ESA by 2020. It could be said that this is a cut in benefit for the sick and disabled through the back door, over a long time frame, while prices and inflation continues to rise. Moreover the change to up rating benefits from the Retail Price Index to the Consumer Price Index means that in very real terms the value of welfare benefits are already decreasing year on year. Institute for Fiscal Studies (IFS) analysis found that only 23% of claimants will be protected by this change, the rest will be paying for things not covered by CPI so there will be a real loss of income over time. If, for example, the RPI exceeds the CPI by 1% point a year, after ten years the value of a payment up rated by the CPI would be around 91% of what it would have been under RPI up rating; after 20 years, it would 83% and after 30 years 75%.

The proposal to time limit ESA will affect many people suddenly without the ability or resources to make provision. Those who have to undergo a long and stressful fight for entitlement to ESA at appeal may find that despite succeeding, their benefit may only be paid for a matter of months before payments cease, even though they have been found to satisfy the stringent new criteria for ESA. This is because the 1 year time limit will apply retrospectively. All contribution based ESA claimants and Incapacity claimants who have been migrated over to contribution based ESA, and placed in the WRAG in the past year will lose their benefit. This will therefore affect many victims/survivors of the NI troubles who have migrated over to ESA from Incapacity Benefit.

Moreover as outlined above, the criteria for the Support group is so stringent, many seriously ill people are placed in the WRAG, so it is not necessarily true to state that those “most severely affected by their medical conditions (i.e. those in the support group) will continue to receive Employment and Support Allowance.” Often those “most severely affected by their medical conditions” do not receive the help they need and deserve. Recently media in N Ireland highlighted the case of Mrs Celia Burns, a cancer patient who had been awarded no points, under the WCA, and who sadly died a few weeks after the decision was over turned.

Indeed there is a need for a wide and comprehensive response to the inadequacies of the ESA and how it is assessed. The WCA has been under tremendous criticism from dozens of charities representing disabled and chronically sick people. It has also been criticised by GP's. In March 2012, The British Medical Association (BMA) reported that at the annual Scottish GP conference that month, doctors voted in favour of the following motion –

‘That this conference, in respect of work capability assessments (WCA) as performed by ATOS Healthcare, believes that:

- (i) the inadequate computer-based assessments that are used have little regard to the nature or complexity of the needs of long term sick and disabled persons;
- (ii) the WCA should end with immediate effect and be replaced with a rigorous and safe system that does not cause avoidable harm to some of the weakest and most vulnerable in society.’

Commenting on the successful motion, Chairman of the BMA's Scottish General Practitioners Committee Dr Dean Marshall said -

“We also support the need to provide more opportunities for those people who are able to work. However, our patients are very concerned and confused with regards to these assessments. Many are in fear of how they will cope with the removal of, or cuts to, their benefits. Evidence appears to suggest that people with serious health conditions are frequently declared fit for work.

Jenny Morris of the Joseph Rowntree Foundation in “Rethinking Disability Policy” points out that the main problem with the new work capability assessment is the behavioural model on which it is based. “The combination of the ‘ bio-psycho’ model and a government target of reducing the numbers eligible for ESA/IB by 1 million by 2015 are creating a punitive and stigmatising narrative about large numbers of people claiming they are too sick to work when in fact they are capable of working.” Morris points out that this view is based on two assumptions. Firstly that there is a high level of malingering even though all the evidence is that this is extremely rare (Department Work and Pensions 2010b). The second assumption is that most disabled people want to work and it is disabling barriers which have got in the way e.g. an aid or a prosthesis will be a “fix” to put them on an equal footing with an able bodied worker. However this assumes that disabled and chronically sick people do not experience any ill health associated with their impairment. Yet thousands of people in receipt of IB/ESA have chronic health conditions experiencing serious pain; fatigue, breathlessness on a daily basis due to their illness/disability.

Probably the most major flaw is the reality of disabled people's employment opportunities - it's the 'elephant in the room.' Richard Berthoud's analysis shows that disabled people's employment opportunities worsened from the 1980's up until the end of the century, in that the extent to which a disabled person was less likely to have a job than a non-disabled person (the disability employment penalty) increased from 17% in 1987 to 28% in 2000, and has remained at this level. The majority of our claimants shot or injured in the troubles are now in their 50's and 60's. All too often employers prefer healthy young well qualified workers with recent work experience. Incapacity claimants tend to fail on just about all these counts. Many that are over 50 previously worked in manual jobs and a higher proportion have no formal qualifications at all. They are extremely unlikely to be an employer's first choice. The government's policy ignores this important fact.

In view of the above, how successful will the government's policy be? Amongst those in the Work Related Activity Group, only 5% were helped into employment over the course of the year (Department for Works and Pensions 2011). The treatment and management of long term health conditions has certainly not figured much in the current government agenda on enabling people on IB/ESA to take up paid employment with the emphasis being on questioning whether they really are in such poor health that they cannot work. For those injured, traumatised and bereaved in the NI conflict, the passage of time doesn't mean improvement. Many conditions deteriorate as people get older; their medical condition often becomes more complex with many people having multiple health conditions.

The governments over all welfare reforms are set to drastically increase recorded levels of unemployment (6). There are many areas with many areas of concentrated deprivation and unemployment within Northern Ireland. Without economic growth and job creation within these areas, the effects of welfare reform could push many households into poverty. It's worth remembering that the WCA was initially conceived before the recession and that since the migration of those on Incapacity Benefit last year we have been in one of the worse recessions of this century. New findings released on 8th May 2012 by the Centre for Economics and Business Research (CEBR) show that unemployment is set to continue rising in Northern Ireland:.

"The regions expected to be worst affected by rising unemployment are those most dependent upon the public sector for employment and so are most exposed to government cutbacks. These include Northern Ireland, Wales, the North East of England and Scotland.....With almost three in ten workers employed by the public sector in Northern Ireland, the increase in unemployment is expected to be particularly pronounced. The unemployment rate is projected to rise from 8.8% in 2012 to 10.7% by 2016, weighing down heavily on consumer spending growth in the country."

The economic situation in N Ireland could be further exacerbated if the "Euro Crisis" widens and continues to slow down growth in Europe and the UK. In view of their age and disability; prolonged absence from the labour market and lack of academic qualifications, Victims/survivors placed in the work related activity group of ESA are therefore one of the most vulnerable groups affected by welfare reform, due to their age; disability and their capacity to improve their financial situation. The government's policy expects them to compete for employment with thousands disallowed ESA and those in receipt of JSA. These changes run alongside reforms for lone parents who will also have to look for work and the thousands who are already unemployed or who have been made redundant in the current recession. Many small and medium sized businesses who are struggling to survive in the current economic climate may fear taking the risk employing someone with a disability or fluctuating health condition.

The speed at which these changes will take effect is real cause for concern. The government's reform is set to reduce the number of incapacity claimants by just less than 1 million across the UK; but the Coalition government is planning to do this in a third of the time set by the previous labour government. This would be equivalent in scale to cutting the number of unemployed on Jobseekers by two thirds in just 3 years (6). In the current recession; with minimal economic growth there is little hope that the labour market can absorb such a large influx of potential new workers over such a short period.

Without work, reduced benefits will only lead to poverty which in turn can lead to poor health. Indeed this very issue was a concern and identified by the Chairman of the BMA's Scottish General Practitioners Committee Dr Dean Marshall, "...we must keep an eye on the wider implications of these reforms. A reduction in income may lead to poorer quality of health for individuals and increased health inequalities for our nation as a whole."

Advice NI point out, the Leonard Cheshire Disability report, 'Disability Poverty in the UK', shows that disabled people are twice as likely to live in poverty as non-disabled people and that disabled people's day-to-day living costs – for basics like mobility aids, care and transport - are a quarter (25 per cent) higher than those of non-disabled people. The Report paints a picture of how poverty can impact on many areas of a disabled person's life. For example:

- Continuing low levels of employment for disabled people mean that many are trapped in inescapable poverty. For people not expected to work, benefit levels frequently fail to cover basic costs of living, leaving them with no real route out of poverty.
- Half (49 per cent) of disabled people surveyed by Leonard Cheshire Disability had no savings. The majority revealed this was because their incomes were way below the national average.
- Disabled people face major discrimination in the education system. For example, disabled people are more than twice as likely to have no qualifications as nondisabled people. **

The governments thrust of welfare reform regarding disability benefits will involve more regular retesting; regular medical assessments with unfamiliar doctors and health professionals. Many victims/survivors find this difficult: having to relive/retell their experience and how it has impacted on their health; they find it frustrating that they will have to repeatedly justify why they receive sickness benefits; they dislike having to recount traumatic events and many have reported that they find attending medicals, tribunals, and appeals stressful and degrading. For many the perpetrators who e.g. shot them were not brought to justice, there will be no HET enquiries into who shot or injured them and those who were convicted, most were released under the Good Friday agreement and this was understandably difficult for victims/survivors. Financial assistance from the Northern Ireland memorial Fund has been piece meal, and often unpredictable. It could be said that it is irrelevant which services are put into place effect for victims and survivors if they cannot pay for basic necessities, such as food, utilities, heat and housing costs. This is why welfare reform and its effects on victims/survivors is so important. It is therefore understandable that many feel an increasing sense of injustice that their very finances are being threatened as they struggle in their later years to make ends meet.

Many victims/survivors in receipt of contribution based-Incapacity benefit/ESA feel victims of moving goal posts. For many years they have attended medicals and passed and fulfilled all conditions to meet the criteria for benefit. Now when their chances of obtaining jobs 5, 10 or 15 years before retirement, with long standing and often fluctuating health problems in the current economic climate is minimal, many will lose their income through either failing the stringent WCA for ESA or through the proposed time limiting of ESA for those placed in the WRAG under the Welfare Reform Bill.

Works pays and work as the ticket out of poverty only works if (A) there is work and if (B) you are attractive to employers in what is now a highly competitive and saturated labour market. Victims and Survivors of the conflict due to age and disability, lack of skills and qualifications fail on this hurdle. Many are unfit to work nor able to secure employment. Many people feel that it is the vulnerable that are paying the cost of the banking crisis. The government's strategy is unlikely to succeed for this group and this must be addressed by our politicians. Many of those injured physically and psychologically feel their suffering paid the price of the peace enjoyed by N Ireland following the Good Friday Agreement, and now fear that because of welfare reform are also paying the price for the banking crisis that has caused the current recession.

Which victims/survivors will be affected the most to time limit ESA?

Due to rules around occupational and personal pensions, some disabled people will not be affected by a loss of ESA due to receipt of large pensions. This may include many ex-police officers or ex-UDR whose pension entitlement exceeded the means testing rules around pensions for ESA/Incapacity benefit. For police officers who do still receive some entitlement to Incapacity/ESA (e.g. pre 6.04.01 claimants - before means testing for occupational pension was introduced), the financial loss of ESA under the new harsher test or through the 12 month time limit, may be 'made up' or compensated for by the way their pensions are calculated. If their occupational pension gives a minimum income guarantee, any loss contributory ESA would be made up by the pension provider. This would certainly be a buffer against the financial loss felt by loss of these benefits.

A similar situation would arise for some ex civil servants and prison officers under the CSIBS. Injury benefit allowances, under the CSIBS, are based on a "guaranteed minimum income." Eligible benefits must be claimed, and amounts paid for ESA/Incapacity Benefit and Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit are factored into the calculation of pension to ensure a "Guaranteed Minimum Income". If recipients cease to be eligible to receive any of these benefits, their pension would be increased to maintain the overall 'Minimum Income Guarantee.' This formula of calculating pensions would provide protection against ESA reform.

Many seriously injured ex-UDR or army veterans receive Unemployability Supplement from the Veterans Agency. This is an equivalent of Incapacity benefit or ESA for veterans, so they would also not be affected by Incapacity reform. However ex-UDR and other ex-service men and women who do not qualify for Unemployability Supplement or whose pensions do not operate along the above schemes may depend on ESA.

It would therefore appear that many victims and survivors who were prison officers, civil servants e.g. customs officers, and police officers will be somewhat protected from feeling the full effects of the proposal concerning time limiting contribution based ESA for those in the WRAG. It could be said that the potential financial loss would be made up by a different government department. In a sense this provides a kind of buffer to the impact of the potential changes. The main effects of the changes will therefore be felt most by civilians or a small group of ex-servicemen/women who receive ESA and who will be subject to the full effects of the government's welfare reform even though their health has not improved and in many cases has deteriorated.

Case Study 1

Client was shot multiple times in a sectarian shooting while working as a on a building site; no-one was ever convicted. He was never offered any counselling after the incident, and developed PTSD; Depression and Anxiety with a fear of going out in addition to his physical injuries. His condition affected his relationships and his marriage broke down. He has no savings, having used his compensation to purchase his home, but receives Incapacity Benefit of £110.85 per week and Industrial Injuries Benefit of £43 p/w giving a total income of £153.85 p/w. If he passes the test for ESA, and is placed in the 'Work related activity group' his ESA will stop after 12 months if the Welfare Reform Bill becomes law. Although he can make a claim for income based ESA which is means tested, this would only be £56.15 per week because it will take into account his Industrial Injuries benefit, giving a total income of £99.15 p/w. Therefore the 12 month limit on contribution based ESA would mean he is £54.70 p/w worse off, losing over 1/3 of his income.

Case Study 2

Client is 58 years old and suffers from physical and mental health problems. He accepted redundancy due to his deteriorating health stemming from injuries sustained in a bomb many years before. It has been difficult for him to adjust to the loss of his wages. He has a young teenage daughter at school, but also has to support an older daughter at University and another who is a vocational apprentice. His wife works 20 hours per week earning around £600 per month but her employer is unable to increase her hours. Earlier this year the family lost working tax credit as under welfare reform, assistance was withdrawn if neither member of a couple worked less than 24 hours per week. Client has a small Occupational Pension of £320 per month and the couple receive Child benefit and child tax credit for their youngest daughter. Outgoings include their mortgage of £300 per month, rates of £80 per month, school dinner money and increasing food, electric, heating costs and run a car. Their income is just over the threshold for income based ESA. Last year, client was migrated over from Incapacity benefit to ESA and was placed in the Work Related Activity Group. Time limiting his ESA to 12 months would mean a loss of over £380 per month. He is still paying a mortgage which is over £300 per month. This is part endowment but there will be a big shortfall when his endowment matures. Client would be unable to pay his outstanding mortgage and maintain living costs if his ESA payments cease. He is worried that that there will be a serious risk of losing his home in the 8 years before he reaches retirement.

Case Study 3

Client developed a serious condition affecting his hips. He also suffers from Depression and Anxiety following multiple traumas when he worked. His wife works earning £839 per month, and they receive CTC for their dependent child. They pay rates of £80 per month, and a mortgage but there will be an £8-9000 shortfall at the end of their mortgage next year as their endowment has underperformed. They have no savings, and are also repaying a car loan. Due to his restricted mobility the family would have high heating costs. Client has been disallowed ESA even though he is awaiting further surgery. He is appealing this decision. Even if he wins his appeal, if the proposal to time limit payment of ESA to 12 months, for those in the WRAG he will lose around £400 per month. He receives high mobility DLA and middle rate care but these will also come under review and could be lost when PIP replaces DLA. This could leave this household struggling financially.

Case study 4

Client was shot multiple times at a sectarian shooting at his family home, sustaining long term injuries. Another family member was murdered during the attack. He recently migrated over to ESA, was disallowed but won his case on appeal. Despite this, he will lose his contribution based ESA as soon as the proposal in the Welfare Reform Bill becomes law. His wife works as a Care Assistant but is only contracted for 2 and ½ days per week but welcomes the chance work extra hours when possible but this is unpredictable. They receive CTC for their daughter and child benefit. Client receives DLA high mobility and low rate care component due to his injuries and contribution based ESA. Despite this if his ESA was stopped he states that he does not think he could stay in his current home but would have to move.

Part 2 – Client commitments for those in receipt of ESA: we are also concerned about how this aspect of the Bill will be put into practice and administered. The government's policy appears to treat those on ESA as job seekers without taking into account why they are claiming ESA in the first place and not JSA. Everyday difficulties like, breathlessness, pain, stiffness, fatigue; symptoms of depression which may manifest in a variety of ways may make it difficult for claimants to attend interviews, keep claimant commitments etc. We would hope that a common sense and fair approach is adopted taking into account the unique circumstances of each client, and ensuring that their health does not suffer.

Part Four of the Welfare Reform Bill introduces Personal Independence Payments to replace the current Disability Living Allowance.

From 2013/1014 the government intends to replace DLA with Personal Independence Payments for those aged 16-64 years old. While the Department for Work and Pensions aims to make the test for PIP more objective and consistent than the assessment for DLA, proposals are underpinned with the intention to make financial savings of 20%. This is reflected in the tough nature of the new test and the fact that there will be more regular reassessment. Draft regulations offer the first glimpse of the new test for PIP and there appears to be a move towards a point based system like ESA.

A new paper published by the Joseph Rowntree Foundation argues that the assessment framework for the new personal independence payment (PIP) is a “blatant corruption’ of the social model of disability. In “Rethinking disability policy,” Jenny Morris, a former member of the Prime Minister’s Strategy Unit and the Office for Disability Issues, points out that the government has interpreted the ‘social model of disability’ in such a way that the assessment for PIP “should take into account the impact of ‘medical treatments and aids and adaptations’ on people’s ability to participate in everyday life.’, with the impression being that the new eligibility criteria may exclude those with substantial impairment who use aids and adaptations. “Whereas disabled people have seen DLA as contributing towards a level playing field, by enabling them to meet additional costs associated with impairment and/or disabling barriers, the assessment for PIP will mean that where an individual ‘successfully’ uses ‘aids and adaptations’, this may well disqualify them for the new benefit.” This, the paper highlights is at least in part based on the assumption that using aids and adaptations ‘successfully’ makes people ‘independent’ and therefore not eligible for support from the state. Yet speak to anyone with a long term disability, e.g. an amputee and ask them if they face a level playing field in work; or in undertaking everyday tasks simply because they use aids and adaptations. This policy incorporates a simplistic and naive view of equality for the disabled. Society needs to make resources available to encourage participation on view of the reality of living with disability and the ignores the increased financial costs faced by disabled people. It also assumes that barriers faced everyday by disabled people are limited to the ‘list’ in the test for PIP. Consequently many disabled people could find that much needed help is removed, and they are penalised for striving to live independently. Moreover qualifying for DLA/PIP can passport one to other benefits. There could be detrimental domino effect on the disabled and chronically ill. Removing this assistance is to remove a wider recognition by society that opportunities for the disabled and chronically ill are more limited, and although we aspire to equality in real terms, removing financial assistance flies in the face of what true equality should be about. A fair society should provide help and encouragement to disabled people who want to work but also agree to support those who cannot.

In view of the fact that N Ireland has endured over 40 years of conflict and the fact that rates of DLA are higher here than in UK mainland, the introduction of PIP and the government’s policy behind it could also have a huge impact on those physically or psychologically injured by the NI conflict. The change in the test is causing a lot of apprehension among our client group. For many DLA is an important part of their income in view of their disability/injuries. A recent survey by the Papworth Trust in England shows that 77% of DLA claimants think that the government is penalising disabled people unfairly. Papworth Chief Executive Adrian Bagg said “The people who participated in the survey have many concerns about the proposed changes but they are particularly anxious that the new PIP assessment will be unfair. We urge the government to learn the lessons of the work capability assessment and ensure that if they make this change, the assessment will be fair and the implications clearly explained.”

Many of our client group are extremely concerned that the stringent changes in criteria for ESA and PIP could cut their income many times over, not because their health has in any way improved but because the tests for assistance from the state has become so stringent. These changes coupled with other forms of welfare cuts, such as that to housing benefit and the way in which benefits are uprated, could mean that over time, disabled people are reduced to severe hardship. This in turn could lead to despair and affect mental and emotional health.

At Wave Trauma centre we have seen first-hand how migration over to ESA has affected our client's mental and physical health, with increased anxiety and stress. In one case a client experienced a severe flare up of colitis due to the stress and worry of passing the Work Capability Assessment. Another flaw is that the governments thrust of welfare reform regarding disability benefits (ESA and PIP, which will replace DLA in 2013) will involve more regular retesting; regular medical assessments with unfamiliar doctors and health professionals. This will compound the anxiety of those who are sick and disabled. Many victims/survivors find this difficult: having to relive/retell their experience and how it has impacted on their health. Many find it frustrating that they will have to repeatedly justify why they receive sickness benefits when it was hardly their choice to be injured. They dislike having to recount traumatic events and find attending medicals, tribunals, and appeals stressful and degrading. For many the perpetrators who e.g. shot them were not brought to justice, and for many of the injured there will be no inquiry or re-examination into any police investigations into the event in which they sustained their injuries. Welfare reform will therefore heighten a sense of injustice for many victims and survivors of the "Troubles." The concentration on ATOS medicals for ESA and PIP instead of evidence from a patient's own GP/Consultant is therefore flawed. If an able bodied person loses their income they can invest their energies into job search and achievable ideas. Many disabled and chronically sick people cannot, if they lose their benefits, what are the alternatives? That is why the government's cull on the benefit system makes this an extremely worrying time for disabled and chronically ill victims/survivors of the troubles.

In a speech to the TUC conference on 30 May 2012, TUC General Secretary Brendan Barber said -

'No group of people is more affected by the government's savage, ideological austerity than disabled workers. It's no exaggeration to say that when it comes to disability, there is a fundamental dishonesty about government policy.'

'The coalition is keen to promote the language of fairness and is keen to stress the opportunities available to disabled people, but the truth could not be more different. Nowhere is the dichotomy between rhetoric and reality starker than when it comes to benefits - a lifeline for so many disabled people...'

'The government's welfare reforms are causing immense damage. Think about the Work Programme, which is replacing welfare with workfare and allowing private firms to rake it in. Think about the conversion of disability living allowance into personal independence payments (PIP). This is a measure that is designed solely to save a billion pounds, and the only way that can be achieved is by reducing the numbers eligible for PIP. And think finally about work capability assessments. The number of wrong decisions and successful appeals is indicative of a system that is frankly rotten to the core.'

From 2013, a more stringent PIP will begin to replace DLA. The loss of this benefit will impact on the payment of premiums on other benefits; there will also be cuts caused through the calculation of benefit for Universal Credit. We are concerned that the way UC may be calculated less favourably than current benefits. This seems all the more likely with the government's announcement on 8th October 2012 that they are set to cut an additional £10 billion from the welfare budget. There appears to be testing times ahead. Moreover the plans to pay Universal Credit monthly and to one nominated person may cause problems in households where someone has an addiction; monthly budgeting may be difficult for those who have learning disability, or mental health issues. There should therefore be an element of choice in the frequency of payments.

Restriction of Housing Benefit for social housing tenants whose accommodation is larger than needed.

We are concerned about this restriction due to the lack of smaller sized homes within the social housing sector. It has the potential to cause hardship for many people whose children have grown up and left the family home, but who are settled and supported in their communities with friends and neighbours. Although this restriction is active in the private rented sector, there is often more choice for tenants in that sector to choose accommodation. Moreover some tenants in the social rented sector may have made adaptations to their home; have strong reasons on grounds of health to stay in their accommodation. We submit that there should therefore be a policy drawn up with specific exemption to the HB restriction, e.g. on grounds of health, or where the tenant is willing to move but there is no alternative social housing available in their area. It must also be noted that there is no parallel provision of restricting mortgage interest if a home is bigger than a family would require.

Conclusion:

The sweeping welfare reform changes introduced by the government to date and the introduction of the Welfare Reform Bill before the NI Assembly, are going to have huge long term effects on the welfare system. There are increased levels of apprehension and worry among our members who fear losing their income with no resources or reserves to turn to. It is very apparent that over the next 3 years many people will be caught in the trap of too ill to work but not ill enough to receive financial assistance from the State or who are caught by the proposed new 12 month time limit on payment of ESA. The government policy behind welfare reform, particularly behind ESA and DLA/PIP underestimates the problems the disabled and chronically sick face on a daily basis, and appears to dismiss that a disabled person has any health problems should they be able to use aids or adaptation's. This is a sinister distortion on what disability policy should be about: creating a realistic playing field and options for the long term sick and disabled rather than punitive treatment of the vulnerable.

Reduced benefits will mean that the ability to cover a shortfall in housing costs to plug the gap between housing benefit and actual rent costs or mortgage interest shortfalls will become increasingly difficult. House repossessions in Northern Ireland are already on the rise. These changes are occurring at a time of increased heating costs, increased utility bills, high inflation and high unemployment. The changes will therefore have a domino effect on our client's circumstances and will undoubtedly lead to financial hardship for many people with increased stress and mental health problems; strain on relationships; and debt. The Institute of Fiscal Studies has stated that the impact of current welfare changes will increase child poverty.

A blind spot in the government's policy of "getting people back to work" is that the ESA test is too harsh. Many genuine and vulnerable ill and disabled people are finding it difficult to satisfy the new criteria. Even the majority of those that do and who are placed in the Work related Activity Group will have their benefit cut within 12 months if government proposals are passed. Another major blind spot is the fact that we are in a deep recession, the worst economic crisis in Europe for decades and jobs are not plentiful. The problems are exacerbated for our client group, mostly in their 50's and 60's with long term physical and mental health problems. If employers (many of whom are just about continuing to trade in the current recession) are selecting new employees in a saturated labour market, who are they are going to employ, those just made redundant or the long term sick and disabled? Many of our members sustained their injuries in the 70's and 80's long before there was any legislation against disability discrimination, long before there were ramps on footpaths, or the disability adaptations we find today. Now many years after compensation has been spent, a lot of injured victims and survivors rely on welfare benefits.

The welfare changes are occurring at a time when financial assistance for victims and survivors is being depleted; there may be little chance of reopening cases of poor compensation; and the government rejected proposed payments to victims/survivors by Eames Bradley. More recently victims are reading about proposals to pay huge redundancy payments for prison officers and more recently high compensation awards to some victims of violence in face of pitiful payments to many victims of the troubles decades before. This is against a background of disappointment at the outcome of many HET inquiries and quests for justice and truth, and in face of the large scale prisoner release scheme which was particularly and understandable difficult for many victims of violence and for those who had lost loved ones in the conflict.

The changes to ESA will impact Northern Ireland more than any other region in the UK as we have nearly twice as many long term Incapacity claimants compared to the UK mainland. This is not surprising after over 40 years of civil conflict. Among victims and survivors of the Northern Ireland conflict, the changes to our welfare system will have the biggest impact on civilians. To date the effects of welfare reform are just beginning to take hold, but there will be repeated waves of cuts felt quickly over the next 3 years. At the moment one the major difficulties among low income households is an inability to heat homes due to fuel poverty. However it appears likely that over the next few years, paying actual housing costs to keep the home will become an increasing problem. Many renting in the private and social sector will have to plug the gaps between what they receive in housing benefit and actually pay in rent. This will be made more difficult if disability benefits are decreased.

Recommendations:

- Politicians in N Ireland work to obtain changes to the harsh ESA test to provide realistic help and assistance to disabled and chronically sick individuals, including those with fluctuating conditions and to review the mental health descriptors, to ensure in particular that the mental health conditions reflect the symptoms of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder.
- Ministers need to monitor how successful the current government policy of getting those placed in the WRAG of ESA back into employment really is, particularly for those aged 50+ who have been long term sick.
- Ministers also need to monitor how effective the schemes provided by private firms to help rehabilitate the long term sick back into employment really are, particularly for those aged over 50 years who have a long term disability and whether there is value for money.
- Due to the high levels of appeals against ATOS decisions, the consequential cost to the tax payer and stress caused to disabled people, ATOS should be forced to obtain medical evidence from GP's/consultant's at the outset of a case to ensure all relevant medical information can be taken into account. This would save a huge amount of tax payers' money, and avoid enormous stress and anxiety for chronically sick and disabled people within our community. It would improve decision making and save thousands of pounds in appeal hearings.
- The criteria of the Support Group needs to be widened to ensure that only those with a realistic chances of rehabilitation in view of disability and age are placed in the WRAG of ESA.
- That ESA is time limited at the very least to 5 years to allow for realistic opportunity for those placed in the Work related activity group, who are chronically sick/disabled through injury to rehabilitate/retrain in something that is compatible with their disablement if at all possible.
- In view of the extent of welfare reform, consideration is given to the creation of a non-means tested pension for those injured by the troubles or who were widowed/orphaned within the early years of the troubles (when compensation payments were pitiful).
- Alternatives to cessation of contribution based ESA for those placed in the WRAG are seriously considered, for those who are long term sick and over 55 years old, in recognition of the very real fact that their chances of obtaining employment is unlikely, due to age, statistical evidence which shows that this age band has few qualifications; many lack up to date skills and experience and have multiple health problems. Alternatives could include e.g. Voluntary work in the voluntary sector to continue to receive benefit. This could assist the voluntary sector in its work.

- Currently the rule is such that those who are 3 years from claiming state retirement pension can remain on Incapacity Benefit. Although the policy of parity applies to the NI Assembly to follow legislation from Westminster, could funding be raised in Northern Ireland to make an exception for those claiming Incapacity Benefit on grounds of injury or disablement caused by the NI conflict? Could money streamlined for victims be fed into this?
- Those with long standing chronic conditions as a result of the N Ireland Troubles should be exempt from the 12 month time limit on ESA, set to be introduced in 2012. At the very least this period should be extended to 5 years. This would afford more time for economic recovery and rehabilitation, albeit despite this as outlined in this report many people would still have difficulties returning to work but it would lessen the impact of the changes.
- Those injured in the Troubles should have their DLA protected and should be exempt from transferring over to Personal Independence Payments. Naturally they would continue to be medically assessed through the collation of medical evidence for DLA as under the current system.
- Welfare reform in Northern Ireland needs to retain discretion to prevent repetitive reassessment when it is not really necessary in a lot of cases of long term physical or psychological injury and there is evidence to suggest that there will be no expected improvement. The government's policy behind ESA and PIP which is set to replace DLA will introduce more frequent and regular medical assessments. However many of those injured physically and psychologically in the troubles, find it distressing degrading to have to undergo repeated medicals and find the experience stressful."
- It may be of interest to further compare the amount of money the government saved by the prisoner release scheme had all prisoners served their sentences, and the subsequent savings made following the closure of the Maze prison etc. when considering the bigger picture on the treatment of victims and survivors of the NI Troubles.

Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Group

Social Development Committee: Welfare Reform Bill (Northern Ireland) 2012

October 2012

About the Welfare Reform Group

The Welfare Reform Group is an umbrella grouping of organisations that campaign for positive and progressive changes to policy, service provision and legislation for those in receipt of social security while also providing advice and support to other advice giving organisations and disadvantaged persons in their capacity as individual members of the Group.

The Group supports an equality and human rights-based approach to the provision of social security which demonstrates an understanding of and focus on the needs and choices of all in receipt of benefits. In this paper we outline the significant equality issues likely to be presented by implementation of the draft Bill in Northern Ireland.

This response has been prepared by the following organisations:

The NI Welfare Reform Group welcomes the opportunity to comment on the publication of the Welfare Reform (Northern Ireland) Bill 2012. The NI Welfare Reform Group looks forward to continuing to work with the Social Development Committee during the parliamentary passage of this important legislation.

1. The Northern Ireland Context

Northern Ireland presents particular circumstances with regards to welfare reform and arrangements to move people into employment. There is considerable evidence of multiple disadvantage in Northern Ireland including lower average wages, higher fuel costs, lack of childcare provision, greater incidence of mental health and higher trends of economic inactivity. In addition, economic forecasts from a variety of sources all suggest that Northern Ireland will take longer to emerge from the recession than Britain.

While benefit rates are universal across the UK there are significant differences in social security provision which recognise the particular circumstances applying in Northern Ireland. While the Department of Social Development is unlikely to move away from the major welfare reform proposals, it is possible that a different approach may be taken to the operational arrangements of Universal Credit, conditionality and sanctions, and a number of the other initiatives contained in the Welfare Reform Bill. Moreover, the Northern Ireland Executive has set aside £20 million a year as a Social Protection Fund. This provides scope to tailor the welfare reform agenda to specific needs locally. In practice, we are not seeking an alternative social security system for Northern Ireland. In effect, we seek an approach that will work taking account of Northern Ireland's particular circumstances and context.

2. Introduction

The Welfare Reform Group supports a number of the principles behind the Government's package for reform, namely, to simplify the social security system and to make work pay. At present, we remain unconvinced that the proposals will actually deliver these principles. We also have considerable concerns regarding the outworking of some of the proposals in the Bill for example, the introduction of Universal Credit and Personal Independence Payment and outline these and other recommendations below, many of which relate to proposed regulations which will be drafted following the Bill. Our response is aimed at improving the proposals designed for Britain taking into account the specific circumstances and needs of Northern Ireland. We aim to flag up issues which we think require scrutiny by the Committee and require further clarification from the Department.

The Welfare Reform Group welcomed the Minister for Social Development's announcement that changes had been secured in relation to the way Universal Credit is paid. We are cautious that while these flexibilities have been achieved, the Committee needs to closely examine what other steps can be taken to protect households affected by the changes. The Committee needs to carefully scrutinize, for example, the under-occupation penalty in public rented housing, the level of conditionality and sanctions proposed under the Welfare Reform Bill and the lack of childcare provision across Northern Ireland.

3. Regulation Making Procedures of the Welfare Reform Bill

We are concerned that many of the regulations governing critical parts of the Welfare Reform Bill will proceed through the confirmatory process with scrutiny only happening after the regulations have been laid. Given that the Welfare Reform Bill is significantly enabling legislation with detail left to regulations, this is a retrograde step.

DWP in Great Britain have yet to publish the final version of the Universal Credit regulations which will not be laid until after the pre-budget report on 5th December. Particular areas of concern to address are the crucial details governing entitlement to housing credit within Universal Credit, confirmation of the rates of personal allowances, and other additions, childcare costs, earnings disregards and the details of what will be required of people in all the work related requirements. In addition, the details of daily living activities and daily mobility activities which will govern entitlement to Personal Independence Payment are left to the regulations. These will clearly be central issues relating to work incentives and the level of support for people in and out of work and people with disabilities.

The flexibility to do things differently in a Northern Ireland context lies very much within the detail of the regulations. As a result the scrutiny process must find a way of addressing where the scope for specific flexibilities exists. It is unlikely that following 'the bedding in period' of the confirmatory procedure, that there will be much scope to amend the legislation in the future.

We recommend that the Committee asks the Department to provide a draft plan to include a timetable for publishing the regulations due to be made under the Bill.

4. Universal Credit - Part 1

Part 1 of the Bill contains provisions and confers regulation making powers for the new integrated benefit Universal Credit. Claims will be made on the basis of households rather than individuals.

Clause 1 - 4

The introduction of Universal Credit will change the way that couples are treated where one is a pensioner and the other is of working age, described here as 'mixed age couples'. Currently as long as one partner in a couple has reached Pension Credit age they are treated as a pensioner couple for the purpose of means-tested benefits. Those already receiving Pension Credit will continue to be entitled but in the future mixed age couples will be assessed under Universal Credit. This could result in one member of a couple being well above pensionable age and still subject to work related requirements and claimants commitment conditions required of their younger partner. For example, a woman aged 60 with a male partner aged 70 who has already retired claiming a means tested benefit for the first time in April 2014 will move to Universal Credit rather than Pension Credit. Not only could this impact on the actual income of the couple, (mixed age couples where neither work could receive £100 less per week under Universal Credit compared to the current Pension Credit system – Age UK 2012 Universal Credit Briefing) but the older person who would currently be in receipt of Guaranteed Element of Pension Credit would lose out on passport benefits such as free dental and optical care and full rate rebate. We would welcome further exploration of these types of cases with the Department.

The Welfare Reform Group welcomed the Minister's announcement that split payments may happen as a positive development to ensure that the main carer receives some of the Universal Credit payment. We would, however, welcome further clarification as to the delivery of this mechanism. Will it apply universally or to specific claimant groups only?

In order to claim Universal Credit, an individual must be 18 years old unless in prescribed circumstances as set out in subsection 3 e.g. lone parents less than 18 years old or young people estranged from their family. The Welfare Reform Group would welcome the inclusion to the list of specified groups of 16 and 17 year olds who are registered with the Work Programme, but without an immediate placement.

Furthermore, young people leaving care will continue to receive support outside the social security system. Under the current rules, payment can be made on a discretionary basis where severe hardship occurs. We would welcome the retention of this provision.

Clause 5

This clause introduces a savings rule for Universal Credit which we understand will mirror the current capital limit for IS, JSA and ESA i.e. £16,000 with a tariff income for savings between £6,000 and £16,000. This will represent a significant change as currently tax credits and pension credit have no upper capital limit.

This measure is likely to impact disproportionately on older claimants who have spent time saving towards retirement. Two issues need to be considered. First, will tax credit claimants transferred to Universal Credit be able to remain entitled under transitional arrangements? We would welcome such safeguards. Secondly, would the capital threshold be appropriate for people on Universal Credit where the claimant or one member of the couple has reached state pension age?

Clause 11

Almost all of the detail about the payment of housing credit is left to the regulations. These payments essentially are rent, mortgage interest and service charges. The Welfare Reform Group recommends that the Committee seeks confirmation of what will be included within housing costs, for example further clarification is needed in relation to service charges.

In particular, we are concerned that the DWP has signaled that an owner occupier on Universal Credit will lose help with housing costs should they do any paid work. For example, a lone parent who takes up a mini job on a temporary basis could lose all help with mortgage interest. This will act as a financial disincentive for many owner occupiers with mortgage arrears and runs against the aim of encouraging people into employment. The Committee should, therefore, request the Department to set out its intentions and the ramifications of such an approach for claimants in Northern Ireland.

Although we welcomed the recent confirmation that SMI will continue to be made directly to lenders, the Department has yet to confirm the waiting period for assistance with Support for Mortgage Interest. It is considering extending the waiting period from 13 to 39 weeks. Early clarity of this waiting period is important. We recommend that the Committee seeks clarification regarding the DWP's policy intentions in this area.

Working Age Benefits - Part 2

Part 2 of the Bill makes provision for changes to the responsibilities of claimants of Jobseeker's Allowance and Employment and Support Allowance and subsequently Universal Credit and the contributory Employment and Support Allowance and Jobseekers Allowance.

Clause 13

In respect of the work related requirements and imposition of sanctions clauses the NI Welfare Reform Group would welcome the insertion of a clause requiring the Department to have regard to the prevailing economic conditions perhaps at Clause 13 or in the subsequent regulations:

When considering the requirements with which claimants must comply in this Part the Department must have regard for the prevailing economic conditions and how they may impact on the claimants ability to meet those requirements.

Clause 14

In order to receive Universal Credit, both members of a joint couple will have to sign a claimant commitment. We would welcome assurance from the Department that there will be an alternative procedure, recognizing relationship breakdown and situations where one partner will not sign the commitment, to enable payment to the member that does sign. The alternative process could, for example, allow the partner committing to receive the single rate of Universal Credit plus appropriate additions e.g. child allowances and housing costs.

Clauses 15 - 24

These clauses outline the four types of work requirements that will be imposed on claimants and introduce significantly increased sanctions for claimants who fail to meet the conditionality requirements under Universal Credit.

Clause 16 (4) introduces a work focused health related assessment. This was originally a requirement for claiming ESA but was later suspended. There does not appear to be a need to reintroduce this additional assessment. The Committee may wish to seek whether it should be reintroduced and on what basis.

Clause 22 presents a number of issues that warrant scrutiny by the Committee:

- i) DWP has signalled that most claimants will be expected to spend 35 hours a week looking for or preparing for employment. In practical terms this will be impossible to maintain on an ongoing basis, for example, where the claimant is waiting on a response from a prospective employer. This is an area where proportionate operational arrangements should be put in place.
- ii) DWP has stated that EU workers or jobseekers will always be placed in the 'all work related requirement group' (provided for in Schedule 1, paragraph 7 of the Bill). This is clearly discriminatory and is likely to be unlawful, with little purpose. The Committee should ensure that no such prejudicial arrangements are introduced in Northern Ireland.

- iii) This clause also outlines that all work requirements can be imposed on claimants in work who earn below a specific threshold. Currently claimants in part time work on tax credits are not expected to seek work on top of their part time commitments. It is unclear how this will work in practice. The Committee should determine what approach should be taken in Northern Ireland.

There are also a number of issues for the Committee to consider in relation to the sanctions presented within this clause:

- i) Is the level of sanctions appropriate given its impact on the rest of the household including children? Due regard must be given to the impact on dependent children of sanctions applied to parents – especially the most extreme proposal to suspend benefit payments for up to three years. The Department is obliged by Article 3 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child to ensure the best interests of children are a primary consideration in all matters affecting children. We believe that the increase is disproportionate and the periods of sanction of 13 weeks, 26 weeks and 3 years are too long. Moreover, this will further contribute to severe child poverty and works against the grain of the Northern Ireland Executive's child poverty strategy and target to reduce severe child poverty.
- ii) The regulations proposed in Britain only allow five days for a claimant to show good reason before a sanction is applied. There may be myriad reasons why a person misses an appointment and it takes more than five days to explain why (e.g. a family emergency). This will result in some particularly harsh cases, for example if a family member is rushed to hospital in an emergency and is seriously ill resulting in the claimant taking a week to explain why an appointment is missed then a sanction will still be applied. In our view, as the penalty for non compliance will rise, so too should the time to provide details of good reason. We therefore recommend an increase to at least 15 days.
- iii) The DWP has introduced the claimant commitment and some of the increased sanctions for JSA and ESA in advance to broadly align with UC. This appears unnecessary given that many of the apparent advantages of Universal Credit are not available to claimants in the interim. We would support the delay of its implementation in Northern Ireland until the introduction of Universal Credit.

Sanctions are an area that could be subject to operational flexibilities and we would recommend that the Committee urges the Department to take a different path from Britain. These could include specific safeguards for people with mental health and learning disabilities, those people whose first language is not English and people with literacy problems. Research has shown that people in these groups are disproportionately prone to be being sanctioned.¹

Conditions placed on claimants should be reasonable and claimants with a learning disability will need extra support to help them understand and make decisions about the process they are involved in and what they have to do to meet any requirements.

Furthermore, it is vital that Personal Advisers working with people with disabilities and mental health issues have a good understanding of the particular difficulties they may face and the impact this may have on their health in returning to work. In addition, personal advisers should receive clear guidance aimed at ensuring that sanctions are used as a very last resort. We also recommend that certain groups are visited before a sanction is applied to ensure they are aware of the effect of the sanction

We understand that DWP is considering carrying out home visits to those with mental health and learning disability issues and we would urge the Department to do similar.

1 Sanctions in the benefit system: Evidence review of JSA, IS and IB sanctions SSAC occasional paper No1 (2006)

Clause 26-27

Clause 26 and 27 provide for a reduction of the amount of a claimant's award in the event of certain failures. We recommend the insertion of the following clause after these two clauses:

'The Minister may not impose a sanction under section 26 or 27 on a claimant falling under section 22 where the claimant does not have guaranteed and predictable access to childcare meeting the needs of any child for which the claimant is the responsible carer.'

This clause also helps to further confirm the importance of the availability of affordable childcare to a number of the proposals within the Bill. We foresee a number of difficulties in introducing legislative powers for this purpose in Northern Ireland when the childcare infrastructure in Northern Ireland required to underpin these proposals is not in place. It is not appropriate to simply transfer these provisions from the Westminster Act to Northern Ireland as the infrastructure to implement the proposals is not available in Northern Ireland. Arguments of parity must take into account the lack of parity of provision of affordable childcare. If the infrastructure to support the introduction of many of the clauses within the Bill is not in place, we would urge the Assembly to work on developing and implementing an effective childcare strategy to enable lone parents and others to take up work. Further, with high unemployment the current economic climate will make it difficult for lone parents to secure jobs that allow them to combine their work and family life. Finally, there is a potentially adverse impact on child poverty if lone parents are exposed to the risk of benefit sanctions.

Furthermore, given the difficulties accessing affordable childcare in Northern Ireland we would urge the Committee to examine the costs of allowing lone parents to remain exempt from work related requirements until the child they are responsible for reaches the age of five which would require a change to Clause 19 (2)(c) from the age of one to the age of five.

Clause 28

This clause provides a power for regulations to provide hardship payments for a claimant who has been sanctioned.

A concerning new feature of the hardship payments is that they will be recoverable rendering them loans in effect. The DWP has signalled that the hardship rate will be 60% of the daily amount. The Welfare Reform Group does not support hardship payments becoming recoverable.

6. Chapter 3 - Supplementary and General

Clause 42

This clause provides for pilot schemes to be introduced for specific purposes as part of the implementation of Universal Credit. We are concerned that the pathfinders for Universal Credit will be running in England only and the evaluation of these pilots will be based on a totally different infrastructure to that in Northern Ireland.

We would therefore welcome the insertion of a clause that insists that the Department should take on board any learning experiences from the pathfinders and initial introduction of Universal Credit in Great Britain before implementation in Northern Ireland in April 2014. The Department for Social Development should provide a report on the findings and outcomes of the pathfinders highlighting specific ramifications for Northern Ireland and action that can be taken to mitigate disproportionate impact locally.

Clause 44

This clause sets out the statutory rules procedures for regulations. As outlined earlier in our response, the Committee should seek a plan with a timeframe for the regulations from the Department as they remain a critical part of the scrutiny process.

Clause 52

ESA is a benefit for people who are out of work because of illness or disability. Following a 13 week assessment stage – during which the claimant undergoes the Work Capability Assessment - if assessed for ESA, they are either placed in the Support Group or the Work Related Activity Group. There is currently no time limit to the amount of time a person can remain in either the ESA Support Group or the WRAG.

This clause limits the amount of time someone in the WRAG is eligible to receive ESA on a contributory basis to twelve months. Thereafter a means test will apply. The proposed changes will be very rapid – time limiting will start once the Bill is implemented and will be applied retrospectively. We strongly recommend that the Committee should consider either not implementing this clause or amending it to tie the provision to the age of a claimant e.g. those under 50 or 55 years of age.

Clause 54

This clause provides that no new claims for contributory ESA may be made on the grounds of youth after the coming into force of the Bill. It also abolishes youth ESA and time limits existing claimants to 12 months.

The Committee should consider not implementing this clause. Alternatively, an amendment could be included which preserves ESA in youth cases for those in further education. The current cost of the benefit is estimated at £390,000 a year. It is still unclear whether this is net of the displacement costs of moving claimants to other benefits, e.g. JSA. Furthermore, data is not currently held by the DSD in respect of youth cases and the information provided in the EQIA was assessed on the basis of 'IS' youth cases.² According to these figures 2990 individuals are currently claiming Incapacity Youth. The Committee should press the Department on this matter.

Clause 59

Clause 59 amends the regulations to provide for IS to be available where a lone parent has a child under 5.

We are very concerned by the proposals to require lone parents with children aged under seven years of age to actively seek work as a condition of JSA. While we support a policy of positively encouraging lone parents into paid work at an appropriate time, efforts to move lone parents back to work should be through measures tailored to support and encourage lone parents rather than through sanctions.

Other Benefit Changes – Part 3

The Welfare Reform Group does not support the move to up-rate Local Housing Allowance by CPI rather than local rents, whichever is the lower. This approach breaks the long established principle of linking HB payments with actual or representative housing costs in the private rented sector. The Committee should seek to have the impact of CPI reviewed with a commitment to re-linking LHA to at least the 30th percentile if necessary.

The amendments made by Clause 69 will ensure the Department has the power to bring forward regulations to introduce size criteria into the calculation of housing benefit for working age tenants in the social rented sector. In GB, it was advised that £30 million annually would be added to the discretionary housing payments specifically for those under occupying disabled people living in significantly adapted accommodation and foster carers who keep a spare bedroom between foster placements. We believe that mitigation for these groups should be through specific amendments to the Bill and in subsequent regulations rather than by discretionary support.

http://www.dsdni.gov.uk/index/publications/other_reports/equality.htm

We agree that genuine under-occupancy should be sensitively tackled and that there is best use made of existing stock through proportionate and targeted measures. We are concerned that the under-occupancy tax is not the most appropriate and sensitive means of doing so given the makeup of Northern Ireland social housing stock. According to NIHE approximately 32,000 households will be affected (26,000 NIHE and 6,000 Housing Association) by this measure.

We propose that the Committee should seek to withdraw this clause from the Bill completely. Alternatively, we propose that the definition of under-occupancy should be amended to allow claimants to have one spare bedroom where the spare bedroom serves a legitimate person such as a family member returning home, or serves a purpose such as required for treatment e.g, dialyses and/or storage of large items of equipment - for example hoists, showering equipment. It should also allow for circumstances where there is no alternative accommodation available to move to. In addition, the Department should exempt households with disabled children from the measure, as well as foster families, prisoners who intend to return to the family home and where one person is of pension age. We would also urge the Committee to examine provision within this clause for non-resident parents who have children stay as part of contact arrangements. We believe this amendment has the potential to mitigate the Bill's policy of tackling under occupation.

Clause 70

Clause 70 repeals the payments of crisis loans, community care grants and budgeting loans from the discretionary social fund. It also abolishes the office of the Social Fund Commissioner. We understand that the Department is considering the retention of the Social Fund beyond April 2013 as its replacement scheme will have to be consulted on and may require additional legislation which will be time consuming. We, therefore, do not envisage this clause being introduced immediately. We would advise the Committee to seek clarification from the Department about its intention and timetable for replacing the Social Fund.

8. Personal Independence Payment – Part 4

This part of the Bill introduces the new framework for Personal Independence Payment that will replace Disability Living Allowance. In Northern Ireland, the projected savings of this change are £22.19 million from 2013/2014 and £65.94 million from 2014/2015.

The new assessment will measure the ability of an individual to perform specific tasks, which will be provided by a contractor outside of DSD. The Committee may wish to press the Department on the terms of any new contract taking into account the problems associated with the delivery of the ESA Work Capability Assessment by Atos Healthcare. We recommend that the contract with the medical assessment provider in Northern Ireland should contain the following aspects: (i) annual reviews of performance; (ii) penalties for under-performance (including complaints, number / percentage of decisions based on the medical report that are subsequently overturned at appeal). This approach will ensure that the assessment provider is aware that service delivery is about process and outcome. We note the recent Audit report in Britain which suggested that the Department for Work and Pensions was not effectively applying penalty clauses to the ESA assessment contract with Atos Healthcare.

The NI Welfare Reform Group agrees with the Work and Pensions Committee report, Government support towards the additional living costs of working-age disabled people, that reassessment of existing DLA claimants should only proceed once [the Department] is confident that the assessment process produces accurate results and is working properly for new claimants.

We would therefore welcome the insertion at Clause 76 of the following:

- (a) a trial period before any assessment process is implemented fully for new applicants and those transferring from DLA;

The NI Welfare Reform Group would like to see an amendment to Clause 87 which takes account of circumstances where a person is held on remand and there is no sentence of imprisonment or detention, or charges are dropped or they have their sentence quashed. We believe that in these circumstances a claim for PIP should be backdated for the entire period of custody as long as the individual continued to meet the qualifying disability conditions for PIP. Under PIP, unlike DLA, no arrears will be paid. The arrangements for PIP are unfair to people wrongly held on remand. The Committee should seek to restore the position that applies to DLA.

9. Social Security General – Part 5

Clauses 95 and 96 allow for a cap on the total amount of benefit received. Regulations will set out the cap, how the cap will be calculated, the benefits that will be taken into account and power to provide for exceptions from the cap. The intention is to use this power to exempt households where a member of the household is working above a certain level, has a disability and is entitled to disability living allowance, PIP or constant attendance allowance, or is a war widow or widower.

The estimated savings of this measure are £7.26 million in 2013/2014 and £8.58 million in 2014/2015. We believe that the Committee should seek detailed figures from the Department as to the number of claimants likely to be affected by the introduction of the Benefit Cap. This exercise was recently conducted by DWP in Britain.

We believe that regulations under this section should also provide for an exemption from the application of the benefit cap for individuals or couple who are:

- in receipt of Carers allowance
- in receipt of Bereavement Benefits
- as a result of the benefit cap, considered by NIHE to be threatened with
- homelessness and in priority need ; or
- accepted by the NIHE as homeless and in priority need.

Impact monitoring

It is vitally important that the impact of significant benefit changes on vulnerable claimants is monitored from the outset. It is our experience that key outcomes have not always been measured under previous benefit reforms. For example, the number of sickness benefit claimants finding employment after being found fit for work under Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) was not initially monitored, despite this being the key aim of the welfare change. A number of outputs were recorded, including the results of the assessments, but not the final outcome for the claimant. It is essential that outcomes rather than just outputs are monitored.

We suggest the following outcomes, based on the points raised in our response, should be monitored and subject to statutory scrutiny by the Committee for Social Development under the Welfare Reform Bill.

- The impact of increased sanctions on jobseekers, including whether this had a positive effect on employability and whether sanctions lead to increased demand for charitable support.
- The impact of Universal Credit on claimants with disabilities or illness who are fit for work. Analysis of the regulations suggest that these claimants will be worse off under Universal Credit although it is difficult to estimate the scale of this loss of support.
- The impact of Universal Credit on child poverty levels given the commitment in the Child Poverty Act to end child poverty by 2020

- The direct and indirect consequences of the implementation of welfare reform, in recognition of the significant impact on the working age population and the knock on impact within other sectors creating increased 'displaced expenditure'.
- The performance of the medical given its central role in the implementation of PIP and the knock on consequences of below par performance.

Furthermore, we would welcome the introduction of a statutory right to independent advice for those negatively impacted by welfare, recognising the key role advice service play in addressing the negative impact of welfare reform.

Conclusion

The Welfare Reform Group believes it is appropriate to tailor a Northern Ireland approach to issues raised in the Bill. As enabling legislation, much of the opportunity for flexibility lies within the regulations and it is therefore vital that they are subject to comprehensive scrutiny by the Committee. We support the recommendations of the recent Children's Society, Citizens Advice and Disability Rights UK report, Holes in the Safety Net, which highlighted specific groups of disabled people who will lose out under Universal Credit. 3

The Welfare Reform Group welcomes the opportunity to respond to this consultation. We trust you will find our comments helpful. If there is any further way in which we could contribute to this process we would welcome the opportunity to do so.

NI Welfare Reform Group

Briefing for Social Development Committee

October 2012

1. The Northern Ireland Context

The NI Welfare Reform Group welcomed the Minister for Social Development's announcement that changes had been secured in relation to the way Universal Credit is paid. We are cautious that while these flexibilities have been achieved, the Committee needs to closely examine what other steps can be taken to protect households affected by the changes and to tailor the welfare reform agenda to Northern Ireland specific circumstances. It is vital that the changes work in practice for Northern Ireland. Moving people into employment can only be achieved if there are jobs available and access to good quality and affordable childcare. Neither of these ingredients applies locally.

The Committee needs to carefully scrutinize, for example, the under-occupation penalty in public rented housing, the level of conditionality and sanctions proposed under the Welfare Reform Bill and the lack of childcare provision. The Northern Ireland Executive has set aside £20 million a year as a Social Protection Fund which could be utilized to widen the scope for exemptions to some of the more punitive arrangements in Universal Credit.

2. Regulation Making Procedures of the Welfare Reform Bill

We are concerned that many of the regulations governing critical parts of the Welfare Reform Bill will proceed through the confirmatory process with scrutiny only happening after the regulations have been laid. Given that the Welfare Reform Bill is significantly enabling legislation with detail left to regulations, this is a retrograde step.

DWP in Great Britain have yet to publish the final version of the Universal Credit regulations. Particular areas of concern to address are the crucial details governing entitlement to housing credit within Universal Credit, confirmation of the rates of personal allowances, and other additions, childcare costs, earnings disregards and the details of what will be required of people in all the work related requirements. These will clearly be central issues relating to work incentives.

The flexibility to do things differently in a Northern Ireland context lies very much within the detail of the regulations. As a result the scrutiny process must find a way of addressing where the scope for specific flexibilities exists. We recommend that the Committee asks the Department to provide a draft plan to include a timetable for publishing the regulations due to be made under the Bill.

3. Conditionality and Sanctions

Increased conditionality, reform of the sanctions system and changes to hardship payments are the main changes to conditionality and sanctions within the Bill.

Sanctions arrangements are an area where operational flexibilities could be put in place and the Department should be pressed hard on this issue with specific undertakings given. There are a number of issues for the Committee to consider in relation to sanctions. They are as follows:

- (i) is the increased level of sanctions proportionate given its impact on the rest of the household including children? We would suggest the increase is disproportionate and sanctions of 13 weeks, 26 weeks and 3 years is too long.
- (ii) regulations in Britain only provide five working days for a claimant to establish good reason before a sanction is applied. The penalty for non-compliance will be increased sharply to should a longer period to provide details of a good reason also be provided. We would support an increase to at least 15 working days to show reasonable cause.

- (iii) the DWP has introduced some of the increased sanctions arrangements for JSA and ESA in advance to broadly align with UC. This seems unnecessary given that the apparent advantages of Universal Credit are not available to claimants in the interim.

Claimants who are sanctioned may apply for and receive hardship payments of income based JSA if they can demonstrate that they or their dependants would suffer hardship in the absence of such a payment. The Welfare Reform Bill seeks to make hardship payments recoverable. The NI Welfare Reform Group does not support this measure.

4. Impact on Particular Groups

Lone parents

If the NI Welfare Reform Bill replicates the GB proposals, more punitive sanctions will be introduced and greater conditionality placed on lone parents, as well as introducing further conditionality on some people who are already in work.

The NI Welfare Reform Group believes existing variations to the administration of social security in NI for lone parents should be retained. Previous reforms applied in GB were not introduced here, mainly due to NI's poor childcare infrastructure. As a result, lone parents in NI currently sign on for work focused interviews every 13 weeks as opposed to fortnightly in Great Britain. Given that NI already has these operational differences, and the requisite investment in childcare has still not occurred, the NI Executive should retain the existing exemptions that protect lone parents' children from the obligation on their parents to undertake employment or work-related tasks that are not in the best interests of the child.

Mixed Aged Couples & Universal Credit

Couples can currently claim Pension Credit as long as one partner has reached the qualifying age. The Welfare Reform Bill changes the age criteria so that in future, couples will only be able to claim Pension Credit when they have both reached the qualifying age. The arrangements for seeking work etc. in these types of cases should be explored further with the Department.

The Bill introduces a savings rule for Universal Credit which we understand will mirror the current capital limit for IS, JSA and ESA i.e. £16,000 with a tariff income for savings between £6,000 and £16,000. This will represent a significant change as currently tax credits and pension credit have no upper capital limit.

This measure is likely to impact disproportionately on older claimants who have spent time saving towards retirement. Two issues need to be considered. First, will tax credit claimants transferred to Universal Credit be able to remain entitled under transitional arrangements? We would welcome such safeguards. Secondly, will the capital threshold be appropriate for people on Universal Credit where the claimant or one member of the couple has reached state pension age?

Women's ad-hoc Policy Group Welfare Reform and Women

DSD Committee

Tuesday 23rd October 2012

1. Introduction

Our evidence should be read alongside the paper we presented to the Committee on 28th June 2012 in which we outlined how welfare reform sacrifices women. This welfare reform reduces women's capacity to work, economic autonomy and equality and personal security. We observe that most MLAs share concerns about the impact of welfare reform on constituents and that parties have different views on how to proceed. We will make a number of critical comments about the process so far and want to make it absolutely clear that we do not support any party position. Our role is solely to use our expertise to represent the interests and concerns of women.

Yesterday the DSD Minister announced a little progress in three areas of negotiation on welfare reform: payment of housing costs, the person to whom the payment is paid and frequency of payment. These developments are already provided for in the current Bill. Disappointingly the Minister's announcement fell short of realising the full flexibility contained in the Bill and signalled an intention to limit flexibility.

We are disappointed at how little account has been taken of women's needs and circumstances. We urge the DSD Committee to press for further progress on this and to make sure that the flexibility permitted in the legislation is not narrowed in regulations and guidelines or by an unresponsive IT system.

2. Key Issues

1. The legislation and regulation process for welfare reform should be coherent and transparent.
2. The default position for payment of Universal Credit should be payment (i) to the second earner or carer in the household where the main earner is working; and (ii) as a split payment where neither in a couple is working.
3. N Ireland JSA rules for lone parents that stipulate the 'best interests of the child' as a condition for employment and work-related tasks should be continued under Universal Credit and extended to couple households.
4. The principle of 'the best interests of the child' should be the primary consideration in the application of sanctions.
5. For housing costs, (i) refugees should receive direct payment of housing costs; and (ii) consideration of the best interests of the child and of abused women should be required for decisions on shared rooms.
6. Payment periods should reflect the needs of claimants and be genuinely flexible whether weekly, fortnightly or monthly.
7. The UK IT system must be designed to provide for flexible implementation in N Ireland.

3. Process

The processes for adopting the legislation and regulations lack coherence and transparency. This may lead to failure to make fair and good arrangements.

1. Regulations are an essential part of welfare, yet the legislation is scheduled to go through the Assembly without either the regulations having been prepared or cast-iron agreement on exactly what will be permitted within their scope.
2. Legislating for social security is devolved but UK-rooted welfare payment means that social security in N Ireland must be compatible with other parts of the UK. It appears we will not frame our own regulations under agreed parameters but simply 'take the lead' on N Ireland within UK-framed regulations.¹ This reduces potential for flexible design for particular circumstances in N Ireland.
3. While the legislation is permissive in some key areas statements of intent on how flexibility will be applied are inadequate where they exist.
4. Decisions on regulations are to be made by confirmatory resolution. Many regulations will be drafted after the legislation has been passed and Members are not able to amend regulations, even where their intent is only clear later.
5. There are two types of regulation in the legislation: (i) "regulations are to provide" (a requirement) and (ii) "regulations may provide" (a discretion). There should be clarity and certainty on whether both are restricted by 'confirmatory resolution'.

In our view, it is essential to obtain acceptable cast-iron commitments/ statements of intent on the application of the law and regulations in certain areas before agreeing to pass the Bill.

4. Payment of Joint Claims: Clauses 2-5 & Clauses 97 & 99

Clauses 2-5 provide that couples must make a joint claim for Universal Credit and both claimants must meet the basic conditions and jointly meet the financial conditions. Regulations may provide for exceptions to the basic conditions (Clause 4) but there is no exception provided for financial conditions (Clause 5). A question arises as to what happens on relationship breakdown, before that breakdown is formalised or recognised when, presumably, single claims might be made. What evidence is required to split payments, especially when it may not be possible in the current economic climate or housing market for one person to leave the marital home? Does the legislation provide for this?

Clause 97 (Subsection (4)) amends Section 5(1)(g) of the Administration Act to allow for joint claims by enabling one person to make a joint claim on behalf of another. This 'main applicant' is most likely to be male, and he is likely to receive the single Universal Credit payment, unless there is intervention to regulate otherwise. If this is allowed to become normal practice it is a backward step to the old male Head of Household model, which will have consequences as we know from past experience. Women in couples will lose all direct financial support and economic independence, and there are additional implications for children and abused women.

Under Clause 99 payments can be regulated differently. In amending Section 5 of the Administration Act, Clause 99 provides the Department of Social Development, in the case of a benefit awarded to persons jointly, with the power to:

"determine to which of them all or any part of a payment should be made and in particular for the Department –

- (a) to determine that payment should be made to whichever of those persons they themselves nominate, or
- (b) to determine that payment should be made to one of them irrespective of any nomination by them."

1 DSD Evidence to DSD Committee 10th October 2012

Despite these powers, the Minister announced there would be a single household payment for the majority of claimants with flexibility for split payment only when necessary in a limited set of circumstance laid down in guidelines. He declared “[i]f we can avoid split payment, so much the better”. This denies the extent of the Department’s powers under Clause 99 and narrows the possibilities in the legislation. An approach that leaves it to “partners to look at [split payment] and come forward to present a case if there is a need to do so” does not appreciate women’s reduced access to income including vulnerable women suffering financial and other domestic abuse.

There should be a cast-iron commitment/statement of intent before passage of the Bill that the default position will be to pay Universal Credit

- (i) to the second earner or carer in the household where the main earner is working; and
- (ii) as a split payment where neither person in a couple is working.

We have reasoned arguments for proposing this. When praising the new taper for benefit levels at the Committee earlier this month DSD officials neglected to inform Members of the gendered differences in Universal Credit. Universal Credit is designed to reward the primary earner in couples, normally the man; the UK Government acknowledged it has reduced rewards for the second earner and weakened women’s incentive to work. The fact is that women are more likely to have no earned income of their own; where they work their income will normally be less than their partner’s; and they will not receive the single Universal Credit payment unless there is intervention to redirect this income to them.

We urge the Committee to press the Minister to implement our proposal on who to pay Universal Credit to. Our approach will resolve several problems:

1. It will provide the right economic arrangements in which the interests of the child are safeguarded best.
2. It will not transfer all financial resources from the purse to the wallet, leaving women unequal and vulnerable without any independent means of support.
3. If sanctions are applied to the ‘main applicant’ (likely to be male) there will be less likelihood of a gap in payment affecting all of the family.
4. It will assist in overcoming the financial abuse of women that is part of domestic violence/abuse.
5. In cases of relationship breakdown and domestic violence, it will avoid women and children becoming homeless and unable to secure alternative accommodation due to the housing debt accumulated by a male ‘main applicant’.

Women’s organisations have been asked for advice on how to identify those who are vulnerable to domestic abuse. Although it has not been made explicit, presumably this is to form an exception group for single payment. This is to fundamentally misunderstand domestic violence. Domestic violence is rooted in inequality and power. Financial control and abuse is one component of domestic violence. Secrecy, including among those affected, is a factor. The safe and effective way to provide for abused women is to provide access to income for all women.

5. Frequency of Payment: Clause 7

Clause 7 gives the Department discretionary powers over assessment and payment periods. The Minister confirmed yesterday that, where necessary, bi-monthly payments would be made in place of a single monthly payment. Officials told the DSD Committee two weeks ago that while flexibility is built in, departure from the normal practice of monthly payment will only be made in exceptional circumstances.² We welcome the proposed consultation on payment periods. The consultation should not focus on defining ‘exceptional circumstances’ but develop an effective approach to meeting claimants concerns and needs in relation to payment frequency.

We are aware that the Committee was advised by DSD officials on the number of people in work who are paid weekly, fortnightly and monthly as a basis for assessing capacity to manage on monthly payments. This is not a sufficient assessment. We would like to add that women have reported the importance of weekly child tax credits, which “saved” them in lean weeks between fortnightly wages or benefits. Flexibility should not be restricted to a few. We ask the Committee to obtain the Minister’s commitment to inclusivity in flexible payments regulations/ guidance.

6. Housing: Clause 11

We note the Minister’s commitment to automatic payment of the Universal Credit housing element to landlords unless the claimant opts out. Refugees rely on direct payment of housing benefit to support victims of domestic violence and we appreciate that the arrangement announced by the Minister will assist refugees to sustain their service. This decision on automatic housing payments demonstrates that policy variations and operational flexibility can be accommodated within a shared welfare system.

The best interests of the child should be taken into account when implementing the shared room rate up to the age of 35 years. This is necessary to allow the non-custodial parent, normally the father, to have his children in a safe and comfortable environment for day visits and overnight stays. The interests of abused women must also be considered when implementing the shared room conditions; when they are not housed in refuges abused women must have conditions for privacy, safety and security. We request the DSD Committee to secure a commitment/ statement of intent on these shared room matters from the Minister.

Woman and child/children are often forced to leave their house due to domestic abuse. We ask the DSD Committee to seek regulations capable of declaring the house to be under-occupied and moving the abuser out so the woman and child/children can return.

7. Work-related Requirements: Clauses 13 - 25

Best Interests of the Child: A claimant who is the responsible carer for a child faces work-related conditions set according to the age of the child, starting with no work conditions for a lone parent/nominated carer with a child up to one year. Those with a child up to three years (or five years according to DSD officials) are required to attend work-focused interviews. Yet, our childcare infrastructure is very poor, for younger and older children, and cuts have already reduced financial support for childcare for those on low incomes.

Conditionality and sanctions are extensive under Universal Credit. The conditionality threshold is set at the national minimum wage, except for those who are not expected to work full-time. A high proportion of those on benefit are working – benefit is subsidising low wages. The Minister and DSD officials are keen on ‘making work pay’ and might therefore be expected to enforce the national minimum wage and actively champion equal pay which would be welcomed by low paid women. However, where claimants are working fulltime but earning below the minimum officials made clear to this Committee that responsibility lies with claimants to find better-paid work or increase their hours. This approach will increase the pressure on women juggling work, childcare and domestic responsibilities.

The Welfare Reform Act (NI) 2010 stipulates that the best interests of the child must be taken into account when drawing up jobseeker agreements for lone parents. We urge the Committee to (i) make sure the ‘best interests of the child’ principle is continued for lone parents under Universal Credit; and (ii) press the Minister to extend the same principle to child carers in couple households. The principle should be included in claimant commitments.

In light of the 10% cut in the child tax credits that support working parents with childcare we repeat our June 2012 request to the DSD Committee to ask the Executive to:

- (i) Cost the option of restoring the 10% cut to child tax credit in N Ireland.
- (ii) Meet the costs of the 10% shortfall for lone parents and all low-income families.

We comment on the DSD officials' evidence that much relies on personal advisors and relationships between personal advisors and claimants. Personal advisors should be trained and their training should include gender awareness and s75 responsibilities.

8. Sanctions: Clauses 26 & 27

Given the harsher sanctions attached to Universal Credit, we ask the DSD Committee to obtain assurances from the Minister that vulnerable people will be protected in the legislation or by regulation. To avoid unfair sanctions, conditionality for those with responsibilities for children should take proper account of N Ireland's poor childcare infrastructure. The principle of 'the best interests of the child' should be the primary consideration in the application of sanctions. We urge the Committee to ensure the legislation permits this and obtain a commitment/statement of intent from the Minister that he will include it in regulation of sanctions.

Where sanctions are applied to the 'main applicant' (likely to be male) there should be no gap in payment to the woman and children in the family. Our earlier proposal for the Department to use powers under Clause 99 to pay Universal Credit to the second earner/carer or to split payments, according to their financial circumstances explained previously, would avoid this.

9. Conclusions

We urge the Committee to press for progress on women and children in the welfare reform legislation and regulations. We also urge you to ensure that the flexibility in the legislation is not narrowed in regulations and guidelines or by an unresponsive IT system.

Women must be treated fairly and have access to financial support. We call for a cast-iron commitment/statement of intent before passage of the Bill. This should commit to a default position to pay Universal Credit

- (i) to the second earner or carer in the household where the main earner is working;
and
- (ii) as a split payment where neither person in a couple is working.

Where prior drafting of regulation is not possible, it is essential to obtain acceptable cast-iron commitments/statements of intent on the application of the law and regulations in the above areas before voting the Bill through.

Dear Dr Pelan

Pensions Bill

Thank you for the opportunity to make a submission relating to the introduction of the Pensions Bill. Our submission will be based solely on PART 1 point 1. Equalisation of and increase in pensionable age for men and women.

Whilst we realise the retirement age between women and men equalisation is inevitable, we believe the timescale is unrealistic and detrimental to women. In fact, the Turner Commission recommended a lead-in time of fifteen years. Equalisation two years earlier than promised will have a disproportionate impact upon women aged 56 and 57 when their pensions will be held back for another year and in some cases two years. This is an unsatisfactory situation for women who do not have the funds or savings to fill any gap.

We strongly believe that this double increase for women should not go ahead at this time and Government should start introducing policies and safeguards focusing on how to help women extend their working lives thus reducing the many prejudices women face. Women are more likely to experience interruptions to their careers to take on caring responsibilities and this has a negative impact on their future career and earnings.¹ This can also have an impact on their pensions.

Women are indeed at higher poverty risk in old age than men. Women continue to predominate in the category of part-time workers,² and therefore part-time workers are in a particularly vulnerable position in old age, because often they have no, or only restricted, access to a pension system. Even when granted access to a pension scheme, part-time workers are especially vulnerable to its regulations and provisions. Fewer working hours and lower monthly incomes over a long period of part-time work produce limited pension entitlements which may be just above the poverty line.

A report by Age NI³ concluded there were significant numbers of pensioners unaware or unable to claim pension credit. The number of pensioners failing to claim was at least one-third and possibly as many as half of those entitled to State Pension Credit were thought not to claim. We would like to see the Department for Social Development continuing to fund benefit up-take programmes. Making Pension Credit an automatic payment would ensure women who are entitled to Pension Credit receive it without the necessary form filling which often makes the process more difficult for older people.

By introducing this equalisation earlier will mean that women will have few options to find new jobs or will have sufficient time to prepare for retirement. A report by the Women's Resource & Development Agency⁴ highlighted that some women may already have taken early retirement and are unaware of the pension shortfall they face.

4 Hinds, B. (2011) The Northern Ireland Economy: Women on the Edge?, WRDA, 2011

We believe the only option to ensure women are not disadvantaged is to slow down the acceleration plan to allow women more time to prepare for retirement. The Bill in its current state contains elements within the system which actually amplify gender inequalities in old age.

WSN has welcomed the opportunity to make a submission on this Bill. If you have any queries please get in touch.

Dear Kevin

Welfare Reform Bill – High Level Briefing Paper

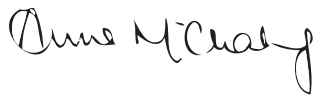

Further to the email from Stewart Kennedy which requested a briefing paper on the principles of the Welfare Reform Bill (NI) 2012, please find a paper enclosed.

The paper, attached at Appendix 1, provides the Committee with a high level overview of the principles of the Welfare Reform Bill. As requested, we will be attending the Committee on Thursday 4th October to discuss this paper and answer any questions arising from members.

I will be accompanied by Michael Pollock; Martina Campbell and Colm McLaughlin.

I hope this information is helpful.

Briefing for Social Development Committee on the general principles of the Welfare Reform Bill

Universal Credit

Background

- The overall policy intent of Universal Credit is to address poverty through tackling worklessness and benefit dependency. The underlying principle is that work should always pay and that people should be better off in work.
- Universal Credit will replace a complex system of working-age benefits and credits with a single set of rules

Current system	Universal Credit
The welfare system has more than 30 benefits each with their own rules and criteria	Universal Credit is a new single means-tested support for working-age people who are in or out of work
Work incentives can be very low, benefits are reduced to take account of earnings, but different benefits have different rules	Universal Credit will ensure that work pays. Financial support will be reduced at a consistent and predictable rate and people will generally keep a higher proportion of their earnings
Conditionality – some benefit claimants are capable of working but have no obligations to look for work	Universal Credit will personalise conditions according to people's capability and circumstances
Payments are paid to different adults in a household and for various periods	Universal Credit is a single monthly payment to each household - the Department will retain the ability to pay more frequently or to split payment in exceptional circumstances

What is Universal Credit?

- Universal Credit is a working age benefit which will replace Income Support, income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, income related Employment and Support Allowance, Housing Benefit, Child Tax Credits and Working Tax Credits.
- The upper age limit for Universal Credit will be the age at which the claimant becomes eligible for state pension.
- First new claims for Universal Credit will start in October 2013 with all existing claimants moved to the new system by 2017.

Entitlement and awards

- Claims will be made on the basis of households rather than individuals and both members of a couple will be required to claim Universal Credit.
- Universal Credit will be paid on a monthly basis as a monthly payment cycle will fit well with the usual cycle of earnings for people in work. For those out of work, Universal Credit will mimic a salary for paid employment, to help smooth the transition into work.
- To ensure households are able to manage the transition to monthly payments a package of support to include appropriate budgeting advice will be developed.
- Entitlement will be calculated based on information already held or provided by the claimant including information about any income they have, other than earnings. For those who are not working and who satisfy all the conditions of entitlement, this is the amount they will be paid.

- Claimants who have earnings from employment will have those earnings automatically taken into account. This will involve using HM Revenue and Customs proposed real-time information system to identify earnings and to calculate the net Universal Credit payment due by applying the appropriate taper to the gross payment.
- A single taper rate and a simple system of disregards will allow people in work to see clearly how much support they can get while making sure that people considering a job will understand the advantages of working.
- Real time information means that Universal Credit payments can be gradually reduced as earnings increase.
- The taper rate is expected to be set at 65 per cent. This would mean that 35 pence in every pound earned would be kept; meaning that claimants would be £35 better off for every extra £100 of net earnings. Significantly this means that many people in work would receive substantially more support than under the current benefits system.
- The standard allowance is the core cash component of any Universal Credit claim intended to help with ordinary living expenses. It is onto this basic amount that additional amounts are added to provide for individual needs such as children, childcare costs, disability and housing.
- An amount will be included for claimants who are responsible for children or qualifying young people. An additional amount will be paid if the dependant child or qualifying young person is disabled consistent with the objectives of Universal Credit of simplicity and affordability. This will replace Child Tax Credit and take over its role as the main source of extra support for children in low income families in and out of work. As now Child Benefit will remain separate.
- Support with the costs of childcare will be available to all lone parents and couples, where both members are in work, regardless of the number of hours they work. Families will be able to recover childcare costs as follows – 70% of up to £760 for one child or £1,300 for two or more children per month. This mirrors the current arrangements under the Tax Credit system.
- It is intended that support for housing costs will cover similar types of payment liabilities as are covered by the current Housing Benefit and Support for Mortgage Interest schemes.
- Tenants in the social-rented sector who under occupy their properties will have their Housing Benefit payments limited. The size criteria will replicate that which applies to claimants in the private rented sector.
- People remain registered with the system for two years after their claim has ended. This ensures that they do not have to wait for vital support if they lose their job or cannot work for a period owing to ill health.

Benefit cap

- There will be a cap on the total amount of benefit that working-age claimants can receive so that households on out of work benefits no longer receive more in benefit than the average weekly wage, after tax and national insurance. The total level of entitlement to welfare benefits is to be limited to £500 a week for a couple and lone parent households and £350 a week for single households. These amounts correspond to the level in Great Britain even though earnings are lower in Northern Ireland.
- Exemption for the cap will apply to war widows and households with a member in receipt of Disability Living Allowance, Personal Independence Payment, Attendance Allowance, Industrial Injuries Benefits, the support component of Employment and Support Allowance and the limited capability for work and work related activity element of Universal Credit.

Transitional protection

- The broader impacts of introducing Universal Credit suggest that 64% of households will have the same or higher benefit entitlement. A package of transitional protection is being developed to ensure that there are no losers as a direct result of the move to Universal Credit where circumstances remain the same.

Conditionality groups

- There will be four conditionality groups –
 - (i) full conditionality – this will be the default option for claimants including lone parents and couples with older children. Claimants in this group will be required to be available to immediately take up, (or attend an interview for) work/more work/better paid work. Advisers will allow claimants to place limitations on the work they must search for in certain circumstances, for example those with a good work history and those with a health condition. There will be exceptions for immediate availability, for example, those who need to make childcare arrangements;
 - (ii) work preparation – claimants in this group are disabled or have a health condition which means that they have limited capability for work at the current time. They are expected to take reasonable steps to prepare for work;
 - (iii) keeping in touch with the labour market – claimants in this group are lone parents or lead carers in a couple with a child over one but under five. They will be expected to attend periodic interviews to discuss their plans for returning to the labour market; and
 - (iv) no conditionality – claimants in this group are disabled or have a serious health condition which prevents them working and preparing for work, and/or a lone parent or lead carer in a couple with a child under one, and/or have intensive and regular caring responsibilities, and/or have earnings above the relevant threshold.

Sanctions

- Strengthened conditionality will be supported by a new system of financial sanctions. The new sanctions will provide greater incentives for people to meet their responsibilities. Under the existing Jobseeker's Allowance sanctions regime the consequences of failing to comply with requirements are not always clear, for example, if a claimant refuses a reasonable job offer he might get a sanction of between 1 and 26 weeks.
- Prior to the introduction of Universal Credit the Jobseeker's Allowance and Employment and Support Allowance sanctions regime are being revised to broadly align with the Universal Credit sanctions model.
- The Universal Credit sanctions approach will feature four levels of sanction, high, medium, low and lowest level. No one will be sanctioned if there is no work available. The sanctions will only apply if a job is available, the claimant has been offered it and has not taken.
- The level of sanction a particular claimant will receive will depend on the conditionality group they fall into.

Sanction	Applicable to:	Duration
		1 st failure	2 nd failure	3 rd or subsequent failure
Higher Level e.g. failure to take up an offer of paid work	Claimants subject to all work-related requirements	91 days	182 days	1095 days
Medium Level e.g. failure to undertake all reasonable action to obtain work	Claimants subject to all work-related requirements	28 days	91 days
Lower Level e.g. failure to undertake particular, specified work preparation action	Claimants subject to all work-related requirements Claimants subject to work preparation and work-focused interview requirements	Open ended until re-engagement plus
		7 days	14 days	28 days
Lowest Level Failure to participate in a work-focused interview	Claimants subject to work-focused interview requirements only	Open ended until re-engagement

Employment and Support Allowance

- A one year time limit will apply to people claiming contributory Employment and Support Allowance and placed in the Work Related Activity Group. The most severely ill or disabled people in the Support Group for whom work is not a viable option are not affected by this measure.

Fraud and error

- Claimants who fail to report or are negligent with their benefit claim will now face a financial penalty as well as recovery of the overpaid benefit.
- The current administrative penalty and cautions will be replaced by a new minimum administrative financial penalty and cautions will be replaced by a new minimum administrative financial penalty for benefit fraud or 50 per cent of the amount overpaid whichever is greater up to a maximum of £2000. They will also have a loss of benefit for 4 weeks.

Personal independence payment

Introduction

- Part 4 of the Bill contains provisions related to the introduction of personal independence payment which, beginning from June 2013, will replace disability living allowance for people aged between 16 and 64.

Rationale for change

- DLA has not been fundamentally reviewed since introduction in 1992.
- It has become hard to understand and complex to administer.
- There is no systematic process for checking that awards remain correct.
- Need to target support at those who most need help.
- In 2010/11 spending on DLA was £754m.

Summary of proposals

- Personal Independence Payment is a new benefit. It will be payable to people who meet conditions which will be set out in regulations. The conditions include:

- Being resident and present in Northern Ireland;
 - Having a physical or mental condition that limits or severely limits their ability to carry out daily living or mobility activities;
 - Having had a disability for a qualifying period of 3 months with the prospect of remaining disabled for the next 9 months (“prospective test”);
 - Claimants being assessed on their ability to perform nine daily living and two mobility activities;
- A claimant who has a terminal illness may be entitled to benefit without having to satisfy either the qualifying period or prospective test.
 - There will be two components – a daily living component and a mobility component.
 - Each component will be payable at either a standard or enhanced rate which will be set out in regulations.
 - The majority of awards will be for a fixed term and there will be a process to regularly review awards to ensure they remain correct.
 - The Social Security Agency will retain responsibility for decision making. Decisions will carry a right of appeal.
 - A key part of the reform is that decisions will be based on an assessment.
 - There will be a new shorter two part claim form.

Personal Independence Payment Assessment

- Will consider the impact a person’s disability has on their ability to perform a range of everyday tasks.
- Assessments will be carried out by a third-party provider.
- Criteria are still being developed and have been consulted on. They will take account of physical, sensory, mental, intellectual and cognitive impairments.
- Will consider an individual’s ability to carry out the activities over a period of time and those which apply for the majority of the time, for example, in cases where a person’s condition fluctuates.
- Key part of the assessment process for claimants will be a face to face consultation with a trained health professional – this will apply to the majority of claimants.
- Separate consultations on the assessment criteria and the detailed design of personal independence payment have been undertaken in conjunction with DWP. The formal response to those consultations will be published in due course.

Timetable

- June 2013 – new claims
- October 2013 – Natural reassessment (ie, where there has been a change in circumstances or a claim has come to an end)
- January 2014 – Managed reassessment – 1000 cases per week to be reassessed by March 2016

Social Development Committee - Schedule of Responses to Questions from Briefing paper dated 1st October 2012

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE QUESTIONS IN DALO LETTER OF 1 OCTOBER

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
General 1. Promoting financial capability and budgeting skills – there are concerns that many UC claimants may not have the budgeting skills to manage monthly payment of UC. Will there be a financial inclusion strategy for Northern Ireland to support the roll-out of UC? If so, what resources are available for such a strategy and what will be the timetable for its roll-out? If there is no financial inclusion strategy, can the Department outline how it intends to promote financial capability and budgeting skills for claimants of UC?	DSD Officials working within the Universal Credit Programme are currently developing a Customer Preparation & Budgetary Support Strategy. This is considering the types of budgeting advice customers may require, the development of suitable banking products (transactional banking products) and the types of alternative payment arrangements that may be required for those customers who will have difficulty budgeting from a single household monthly payment. The Customer Preparation & Budgetary Support Strategy will be available in advance of the launch of Universal Credit but it is too early to specify the level of financial resource that will be assigned to these activities.	Legislation already allows for payments to be made more frequently. Paragraph 4 of Schedule 2 to the Welfare Reform Bill amends the Social Security Administration (NI) Act 1992 to allow the Department to carry forward the existing arrangements that apply to other benefits in respect of claims and payments of Universal Credit i.e. allow payments more frequently. This will be further specified within the Claims and Payments Regulations. (Regulation 41(1) refers). Minister announced on 22 October that Lord Freud has agreed to payment flexibilities including split payments and payment frequency.
2. Benefit recipients are often excluded from accessing mainstream financial services, there are also concerns that UC claimants may not have access to appropriate bank accounts (e.g. post office accounts do not current have a facility for direct debits). Can the Department outline what discussions it has had with the Northern Ireland banking institutions to ensure that appropriate financial products are available to UC claimants?	Banks operating in Northern Ireland are members of the BBA (British Banking Association1). The DWP Universal Credit Programme has engaged with the BBA and the Northern Ireland UC Programme has been involved in this process. Following this engagement, a UK-wide procurement exercise to select banking products suitable for Universal Credit customers has been launched by Lord Freud, Minister for Welfare Reform. Northern Ireland is within scope of this procurement exercise.	As above

3. Is there flexibility within the system to enable UC to be paid on a more regular basis (e.g. fortnightly) if the claimant so chooses?	Although there is currently no provision within the Welfare Reform Bill to allow claimants to choose to have their Universal Credit paid on a fortnightly basis; Under the proposed Claims and Payments Regulations (Regulation 41(1)) the Department will have the power to make a decision on alternative payment arrangements such as making more frequent than monthly payments. The decision on alternative payment arrangements will be taken based on the claimant's financial circumstances and any vulnerability factors e.g. following discussion with the claimant. The Decision Maker will consider any relevant health issues. The circumstances in which alternative payment arrangements will be appropriate will be set out in guidance. This approach will enable cases to be assessed on their individual merits. It is planned to offer support to customers to transition to monthly payments but it is also recognised that for some this may not be achievable.	Given the need to put in place more flexible payment arrangements for some customers Minister has discussed with GB Ministers the need for Northern Ireland to have operational flexibilities available for customer payments. DSD officials are currently engaged with DWP to determine the required changes to the IT systems to deliver more frequent payments to customers and the timescales and costs of delivery of such flexibility. Minister announced on 22 October that Lord Freud has agreed to payment flexibilities including split payments and payment frequency.

Question from Social Development Committee 4. Is there flexibility within the system to enable UC claimants to split their payment of UC between partners if they choose to do so?	Response from DSD Clause 99 of the proposed Welfare Reform Bill amends the Social Security Administration Act 1992 to allow for regulations to specify that couples may nominate which partner should receive the payment of benefit. It further gives the Department the power to make an intervention and determine to which member of the couple the payment may be made, irrespective of whom the couple has nominated. Further, this clause also allows the Department to split payments of Universal Credit between partners. Under the proposed Claims and Payments Regulations (Regulation 41(5)) the Department will make a decision on alternative payment arrangements such as splitting the payment within the household. The decision on alternative payment arrangements will be taken following discussion with the claimant. The Decision Maker will consider the claimant's financial circumstances and any vulnerability factors e.g. any relevant health issues. The circumstances in which alternative payment arrangements will be appropriate will be set out in guidance. This approach will enable cases to be assessed on their individual merits and build in safeguards to protect vulnerable claimants.	Scope for operational flexibility Minister has discussed with GB Ministers the need for Northern Ireland to have operational flexibilities available for customer payments including split payments. DSD officials are currently engaged with DWP to determine the required changes to the IT systems to enable customers to split their Universal Credit payment between partners if they choose to do so and the timescales and costs of delivery of such flexibility. Minister announced on 22 October that Lord Freud has agreed to payment flexibilities including split payments and payment frequency. In his statement on 22 October, Minister confirmed that he has asked officials to develop and consult with public and voluntary sector representatives on a set of guidelines for determining the circumstances when the UC payment should be split or made twice monthly.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
5. What special arrangements will be put in place to ensure survivors of domestic abuse and their children receive adequate support under UC? What special arrangements will be put in place to ensure the financial and other details (e.g. address) of survivors of domestic abuse are kept confidential if that partner leaves the abusive partner?	Clause 24 of the Bill is about circumstances when requirements or specific actions must not be imposed on claimants. There is specific provision at subsection (7) to allow for claimants who have been victims of, or threatened with domestic violence to be given a 13 week exemption from any work-related requirements. This exemption will be carried forward into the proposed Universal Credit Regulations. Also under the proposed Universal Credit Regulations (Schedule 3, paragraph 6(2)) there is provision to treat the claimant as occupying two accommodations where the liabilities have arisen because of fear of violence in the accommodation normally occupied as the home and the claimant intends to return to the home accommodation. In these cases both liabilities can be met for up to 12 months (Schedule 3, paragraph 6(3), time limit of 12 months has been inserted in a later draft). Under the proposed Claims and Payments Regulations (Regulation 41(5)) the Department will be able to make alternative payment arrangements such as splitting the payment within the household for claimants who have been victims of domestic violence. Further measures will be taken to support victims of domestic abuse including exempting them from work search and availability requirements for a period of up to three months. There will also be the facility to provide additional assistance with housing costs including provision to consider the costs for both the normal and temporary residences, but only if the claimant intends to return when both liabilities can be met for up to 12 months.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
	In circumstances where there is a break up in a household the parties will be required to make separate claims for Universal Credit. This will ensure that there are no circumstances where a customer will have access to personal information about their former partner. There is a system in place which provides additional protection for certain claimants including those who are in serious harm through domestic violence. This means that normal viewing of these customer's details is locked out to prevent accidental disclosure. In addition, information relating to a 2nd home liability in cases of people fleeing domestic violence would not be available online. The 2nd home data gather is done via an inbound call from the claimant. The data gather, assessment and verification in relation to this is an entirely manual process so there will be no details stored on UC; in fact, neither claimant will be able to see them. The Department currently supports people in these circumstances and will continue to do so under Universal Credit. Where a claimant is a victim of domestic violence and is within 6 months of the incident being reported for a period of 3 months they will not be expected to comply with the work search and work availability requirements.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
6. Can the Department outline what discussions it has had with Housing Associations and the Housing Executive to devise suitable financial options for UC claimants, e.g. budget training, banks accounts etc.?	The Northern Ireland Housing Executive is represented on the Universal Credit Programme Board and Steering Groups. Arrangements for alternative payment arrangements and for financial / budgeting advice are still being devised as part of the Customer Preparation and Budgetary Support Strategy. In conjunction with the NIHE, Department officials are also considering the need for additional funding for housing advice and support for those individuals impacted by the welfare reform changes. The intention is to consider and where appropriate to employ multiple interventions such as information and advice, house swaps and moves, taking in lodgers, and money advice.

Question from Social Development Committee 7. Can the Department outline what discussions it has had with Housing Associations and the Housing Executive in terms of identifying 'vulnerable' claimants?	Response from DSD The Northern Ireland Housing Executive is represented on the Universal Credit Programme Board and Steering Groups. It is acknowledged that there will be vulnerable customers who will require alternative payment arrangements other than the single household monthly payment. Development of the guidance determining those customers who will require an alternative payment arrangement is ongoing as a part of the Customer Preparation & Budgetary Support Strategy which is currently being designed by the Northern Ireland Universal Credit Programme. The Department is also working to bring forward legislation for an information sharing protocol which will enable NIHE to share Housing Benefit information with landlords to enable them to identify all those tenants likely to be impacted by the welfare reform changes. Department officials have had ongoing discussions with NIHE, NIFHA and Housing Associations to identify specific tenants who are likely to be impacted. Once identified the above organisations will contact each tenant to provide them with advice on how they will be affected. The Housing Executive and Housing Associations will need to put plans in place for how they will deal with those tenants who fall into arrears as a result of the under-occupation restrictions.	Scope for operational flexibility Minister announced on 22 October that Lord Freud has agreed to payment flexibilities including direct payment to landlords, split payments and payment frequency. In his statement on 22 October, Minister confirmed that he has asked officials to develop and consult with public and voluntary sector representatives on a set of guidelines for determining the circumstances when the UC payment should be split or made twice monthly.

Clause 4 (Basic conditions & Clauses 13-24 (conditionality)) 8. There may be situations whereby one partner in a couple refuses to sign the claimant commitment - could the Department comment upon how the partner in the relationship who does sign the commitment will be financially protected?	One of the basic conditions under clause 4 of the Welfare Reform Bill is that for joint claims to Universal Credit each claimant will need to accept a claimant commitment. This isn't entirely new. Currently both claimants within JSA must accept some conditionality although this will be strengthened by Clause 45 of this Bill. The proposed Claims and Payments Regulations (Regulation 10) provide that if one member of a couple fails to sign a claimant commitment, then neither will be eligible if they continue to apply as a couple. A short cooling off period will be allowed for claimants to re-consider the impact on the household claim and to sign their claimant commitment before any decision is taken to disallow. If a claimant refuses to accept their Claimant Commitment then they will not be entitled to Universal Credit. As Universal Credit is a household benefit, if either eligible adult in a couple refuses to accept their Claimant Commitment then the claim for the other eligible adult will also end.
General – IT Issues 9. What contingency plans will be put in place if the new IT system experiences technical difficulties/a systems failure?	The Universal Credit IT Systems will be covered by the same Service Management arrangements as the current range of IT systems which support payment of welfare benefits to customers. Full contingency arrangements for the Universal Credit systems are being developed in conjunction with the Department for Work and Pensions to ensure that they will be available and that if any technical difficulties were to arise, they will be resolved quickly.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
10. How does the Department intend to promote IT skills amongst claimants of UC and how much resources are available for this? Will there be an IT strategy? How does the Department intend to promote and support internet usage amongst vulnerable groups (e.g. older people, people with disabilities, people for whom English is a second language etc.)?	In order to understand the challenges faced by customers and their propensity to use an online service, the Agency has commissioned independent research by IPSOS Mori. This information is being used to inform the development of the Universal Credit Integrated Channel Management Strategy and Channel Shift Strategy. In addition, the Agency is working with the Digital Inclusion Unit (DFP) to take forward a number of pilots to assist customers to improve their IT skills in advance of the introduction of Universal Credit and is putting in a place a delivery model which will assist those customers needing help to get on line and use the online Universal Credit services. Appropriate resources will be available to support customers needing help to use the online services within local offices.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
1.1. How does the Department intend to make available sufficient public access computers to enable claimants to apply and manage their claims online? How will claimant's details be protected on public access computers? Could the Department comment on the staffing arrangements to support claimants to make and manage their claim online?	The principal route for customers to apply and manage their claims online will be via their home computer. Latest research indicates that 75% of Northern Ireland households now have a broadband connection and many of these people use the internet regularly for complex transactions. However, the Department recognises that many customers will not have a computer at home and to deal with these circumstances is currently putting in place additional public access computers in all of its Jobs & Benefits/ Social Security offices for use by customers. Information captured on one of these computers will be handled in such a way that persons subsequently using a computer will have no access to information put there by the previous customer. The Department will ensure that sufficient staffs are in place to support customers who telephone for help or call into a Jobs & Benefits/ Social Security office for help in making their claim on line.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
12. Can the Department provide details as to whether it will test the new online system with a sample of claimants, including vulnerable groups, before UC is rolled out in NI.	The system will be fully tested before go-live although the precise details of the Northern Ireland Test Strategy are still subject to discussion with officials from the Department for Work and Pensions. There is no provision in the Welfare Reform Bill to test the online system in Northern Ireland before it is rolled out in April 2014. The Department generally does not carry out piloting/testing of systems where this is carried out by DWP. The GB UC Pathfinder will start in April 2013, 6 months before the national roll out in October 2013. This will involve DWP, HMRC and Local Authorities within certain areas of North-West England. This will help to ensure UC is ready to go live across the rest of the UK later in 2013.

Question from Social Development Committee Clause 11 13. Direct payment of the housing element of UC to landlords – how does the Department intend to protect providers of housing (both social and private rented) from potential rent arrears that may arise from direct payments to tenants?	Response from DSD Work is ongoing on the housing element but it is intended that there will be a trigger which switches the housing payment direct to landlords if tenants start to get behind with their rent. This will be there to protect landlords from persistent failure to pay by providing a safety net so income streams remain secure and to protect the tenant from being evicted. Under the current Housing Benefit (NI) Regulations 2006 payment of rent allowance or rent rebate can be paid direct to a landlord where a claimant has accrued arrears of 6 weeks or more. In GB payments go direct to the landlord if arrears of 8 weeks or more have been accrued. In addition, as is the position under current arrangements, the proposed Claims and Payments Regulations (Schedule 5, paragraph 5) will allow deductions to be made from claimants' Universal Credit payments for arrears of housing costs. Direct payments to tenants will not undermine the position of housing providers. The Department will provide tenants with financial advice to enable them to manage their new financial responsibility to safeguard their rent payments and other important expenses.	Scope for operational flexibility In order to protect the interests of both claimants and landlords, Minister has discussed with Lord Freud the need for Northern Ireland to be able to pay the housing cost element of Universal Credit direct to landlords in Northern Ireland by default when Universal Credit is introduced here. Minister announced on 22 October that Lord Freud has agreed to payment flexibilities including direct payment to landlords, split payments and payment frequency.
---	---	---

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
14. Is there flexibility within UC to permit payments to landlords where the claimant wishes to choose this option? Will there be a mechanism within UC whereby non-payment of rent to the landlord (e.g. two months' rent arrears) will be diverted back to the landlord?	There is no legislative provision within the Welfare Reform Bill to allow claimants to choose to arrange for the housing element of UC to be paid direct to landlords. However, under the proposed Claims and Payments Regulations (Regulation 52) the Department will make a decision on alternative payment arrangements such as making payments direct to landlords. The decision on alternative payment arrangements will be taken following discussion with the claimant. The Decision Maker will consider the claimant's financial circumstances and any vulnerability factors e.g. any relevant health issues. The circumstances in which alternative payment arrangements will be appropriate will be set out in guidance. This approach will enable cases to be assessed on their individual merits. It is intended that there will be a trigger which switches the housing payment direct to landlords if tenants start to get behind with their rent. The landlord may also apply to the Department for the housing cost element of the customer's Universal Credit to be paid directly to the landlord. Currently under the Housing Benefit (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2006 payment of rent allowance or rate rebate can be paid to a landlord where a person has accrued arrears of 6 weeks or more. (In GB payments go direct to the landlord if arrears of 8 weeks or more have been accrued). Also, under the current system there is provision to allow deductions to be made from benefit entitlement for rent arrears – it is likely that these provisions will be carried forward to UC regulations.	Minister announced on 22 October that Lord Freud has agreed to payment flexibilities including direct payment to landlords, split payments and payment frequency.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
15. Can the Department comment upon the impact of the housing element of UC on providers of temporary accommodation. Can the Department provide assurances that UC will not have a negative impact on the providers of temporary accommodation?	There is currently no provision within Universal Credit for those in supported 'exempt' accommodation. DWP announced on 17 September 2012, that housing costs for those in supported accommodation will be provided outside of Universal Credit. It is our understanding that any changes impacting on sheltered/supported housing will be dealt with outside welfare reform. DSD Minister has not yet made any decision on the position here.
16. Will the Department put in place a robust advice and information strategy to support claimants of UC? What additional funding will be available to provide advice and support? Is there funding available to support the voluntary and community advice services whose workload may increase as a result of UC (assistance with claims, increase in appeals etc.)? What support will be available to social housing providers to support the advice and information needs of their tenants?	DSD Officials working within the Universal Credit Programme are currently developing a Customer Preparation & Budgetary Support Strategy and there will be comprehensive support and advice available to customers claiming Universal Credit. Over the period October 2012 to March 2015, the Department will provide funding in the region of £3.5million to help support Voluntary Advice Services at a regional level, across Northern Ireland. In particular, this funding is geared to ensure that those organisations involved in the day to day delivery of voluntary advice services across Northern Ireland, have access to the specialist training and other regional support they need. In addition, the Department provides funding in the region of £1.5m annually to local advice services through the Community Support Programme. This is administered through the 26 local Councils.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
Clause 5 & 8 17. Will specialist advice and support be available to self-employed claimants as the application and maintenance process for this group is likely to be particularly complex? Under the Universal Credit Regulations (Regulation 56) claimants with self employed income will be required to report it to the Department on a monthly basis. (The time frame of monthly will be in guidance). This income will be reported on a simplified cash income basis via an online tool which will ask them for the total from receipts into the business and details of payments out of the business under defined categories in the assessment period. Reporting on a monthly basis will ensure that the award is reactive to fluctuating income. These requirements have been designed to make it possible for claimants to report monthly without employing an accountant. Comprehensive advice and guidance will be available both for self-employed customers and Decision Makers.	Under the Universal Credit Regulations (Regulation 56) claimants with self employed income will be required to report it to the Department on a monthly basis. General 18. Can the Department give assurance that any face-to-face and telephone services for UC will be adequately resourced?	Yes – the Universal Credit Programme is currently working with DSD statisticians and SSA Staff Resource Unit to develop the complementing model that will be used to determine the resources necessary to deliver the various aspects of the Service Delivery Model for Universal Credit. This model will be regularly reviewed and updated to reflect the latest information.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
IT systems 19. With regards to the IT system for UC – can the Department provide the Committee with information on the Identify Assurance process – what information will claimants have to provide to verify their identity?	An Integrated Risk and Intelligence IT system, known as IRIS, is being designed with colleagues in the Department of Work and Pensions to protect the gateway to the Universal Credit system. The detail of the specific information required at the point of claim is being developed and will be tailored according to the risks associated with the new benefit. It is intended to establish the method of check first pay later with the validation of identity via a range of automated data checks as part of that process. These will include checks via third party providers, for example banks and building societies, and will either allow for or prevent a claim being made. In cases where a doubt around identity verification is established, customers may be required to attend in person to verify their identity.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
General 20. How will the Department ensure that fraud and error will be minimised under the new UC arrangements?	The Agency has commenced implementation of a refreshed Counter Fraud and Error Strategy which introduces a range of new and enhanced initiatives as well as making preparations to minimise and tackle new risks within Universal Credit. The strategy broadly replicates work that is being carried out in Great Britain on a joint Department for Work and Pensions and Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs strategy "Tackling fraud and error in the benefit and tax credit systems". Planned changes will include a more integrated approach by bringing together the investigation of all benefit offences and customer error within a single organisation. Better risk intelligence, via a new Integrated Risk Intelligence Service, also aims to use improved matching techniques to risk score and target fraud and error cases with greater precision. This approach will ensure that the Agency continues to get maximum value for its fraud and error investment. In addition, tougher measures will be used in response to fraudulent behaviour. These may include increased fraud penalties and further loss of benefit. Debts will be recovered more quickly by increasing deductions for fraud overpayments, as well as making provision for deductions directly from earnings.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
21. How will the Department ensure that claimants who make unintentional mistakes or errors in the application and maintenance of their claim are not unfairly sanctioned?	Clause 112 of the Welfare Reform Bill allows the Department to impose a new civil penalty on claimants who negligently make incorrect statements, or who fail, without reasonable excuse, to disclose information about their claim or tell the Department of relevant changes of circumstances, both of which resulting in an overpayment of benefit. The civil penalty will be a fixed amount with the rate set in regulations and is intended to be £50. The Department expects claimants to tell us about changes that may affect their benefit entitlement straightaway. This means as soon as reasonably practicable after the change occurs. This is dealt with in the current Claims and Payments Regulations and will also be in the proposed Universal Credit Claims and Payments Regulations (Regulation 34(4)). Clearly where a claimant was not negligent in their actions, or has a reasonable excuse for not responding to a request for information or reporting a change of circumstances, even though there may have been a benefit overpayment, the penalty would not be imposed. The Department recognises and appreciates that there are different reasons why a claimant might make a mistake in giving information to them about a claim. There will be some circumstances where the customer is able to demonstrate that there were good reasons why they made the mistake. In these cases a penalty will not be imposed. It is proposed that there will be a £50 civil penalty for claimants who are negligent in maintaining their benefit claim to encourage personal responsibility. The aim is to reduce the financial loss from claimant error and achieve greater compliance. It is the claimant's responsibility to make sure that the information held by the Department is correct and up to date at all times. In addition the system will be streamlined to reduce error.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
22. Are the Department satisfied that the new employment programme for NI will be in place to coincide with the introduction of UC?	Employment Programmes are the responsibility of DEL. DEL has confirmed to the Department that it will have provision in place to assist jobseekers find work when Universal Credit is introduced.
23. Does the Department anticipate that there will be an increase in the number of appeals due to the new sanctions regime? What arrangements will the Department put in place to deal with any increase in appeals (e.g. in terms of staffing etc.)?	The Department is currently considering the impact of Universal Credit on the Appeal Service and the arrangements and resources that need to be put in place to ensure that Appeals are dealt with efficiently.
24. Does the Department anticipate that the new conditionality and sanctions regime will place additional pressures on frontline staffing?	The key objective of the proposed changes is to strengthen and set out clearly the link between the receipt of welfare benefits and the individual's responsibility to look, or prepare, for work. The rationale for the changes to sanctions is supported by DWP research which suggests that over 40% of customers say they are more likely to look for work due to the threat of a sanction. This research also shows that of those who are sanctioned, around 75% are only sanctioned once, and most say that they would not repeat the behaviour that led to them being sanctioned – clearly a strong sanctions regime acts as a deterrent. The Department will monitor the impact of the conditionality and sanctions regime to ensure that appropriate resources are in place.

25. Can the Department provide an update on the nature of discussions between Housing Association and the Housing Executive in relation to the introduction of UC?	The Department is fully engaged with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in relation to the introduction of Universal Credit and the NIHE is represented on the Universal Credit Programme Board and Steering Groups. Discussions are also taking place at official level to ensure that the impacts of the introduction of Universal Credit are fully understood. Departmental officials have also established a working group consisting of representatives from both NIHE and Housing Associations to assist us to develop new housing policy initiatives in response to the Welfare Reform changes.	The loss of direct payments potentially jeopardises the steady income for landlords which is obtained via Housing Benefit as this would present significant budgeting difficulties in terms of financing schemes and additional maintenance/ administrative costs of running the organisation. Making direct payment to landlords as the default, with the choice for the claimant to opt-out, is the preferred default payment option and Minister is seeking to enable direct payment of the housing element of Universal Credit to landlords. Minister announced on 22 October that Lord Freud has agreed to payment flexibilities including direct payment to landlords, split payments and payment frequency.
26. Can the Department provide information as to how the roll-out of UC will affect staffing levels within the Housing Executive? How will the Department ensure that the skills and expertise of staff who administer housing benefit is not lost as a result of the roll-out of UC?	Work is currently undergoing to determine the impact of the introduction of Universal Credit on staffing levels within the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. Legal advice is also being sought on the application of Transfer of Undertaking (Protection of Employment) 2006 Regulations and the Cabinet Office Statement of Practice for Staff Transfers to those staff impacted by the changes.
27. What will be the impact on existing IT contracts as a result of the introduction of UC?	Existing IT systems will continue to be required until the full migration of customers to Universal Credit has been completed. The transition period for the full implementation of Universal Credit is over a 4 year period up to October 2017. Therefore the impact on existing IT contracts will be minimal in the short to medium term. The precise changes to IT contracts and the timing of these changes will be subject to ongoing work with the Department for Work and Pensions and other Northern Ireland stakeholders.

28. Has the Department had discussions with the Department of Education in relation to the impact of UC on free school meals?	Yes. DSD officials have met regularly with Department of Education officials both in bilateral meetings and in the DSD-led Universal Credit Consultative Forum to assist Department of Education officials in relation to the development of new eligibility criteria for free school meals following the introduction of Universal Credit. Clause 117 of the Welfare Reform Bill allows for data sharing between this Department and the Department of Education for the purposes of provision of welfare services. This clause is defined widely enough to cover the provision of school meals.
	Passported benefits, including the provision of free school meals, have been discussed at Executive sub Committee on Welfare Reform meetings. DE officials have identified a wide range of possible options for free school meals provision in Northern Ireland with DSD statisticians assisting with this analysis. Work is currently ongoing to prepare options for consideration by Minister O'Dowd. DE officials are awaiting revised data from DWP and further modelling is likely to be required.
29. Does the Department have, or does the Department intend to implement, a monitoring/evaluation strategy to ascertain the impact of UC? What aspects of UC do the Department intend to monitor/evaluate?	Yes, the Department will be developing a monitoring/evaluation strategy and DSD Officials, including its Analytical Services Unit, are currently considering the detail of such a strategy and the collection of baseline statistics/information. No detailed plans are yet available.

Social Development Committee - Schedule of responses to questions to questions from Briefing paper dated 8 October 2012

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE QUESTIONS IN DALO LETTER OF 8 OCTOBER

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
General 1. Clarification on the differences between the GB Bill and the Northern Ireland Bill	The Welfare Reform Bill for Northern Ireland does not include an equivalent to a total of 18 sections of the Great Britain Welfare Reform Act 2012. Details of these sections are attached at Annex A.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
2. Clarification on the differences between direct payments here and in GB	In Great Britain, the Welfare Reform Act 2012 allows for the housing element of Universal Credit payable to the customer. In GB, approximately 20% of claimants have their rent paid direct to landlord. Currently 99% of tenants here in receipt of Housing Benefit in the social housing sector have payments made direct to landlords with 100% of Housing Benefit payments rebated directly to the Housing Executive rent account. DWP are currently running 6 demonstration projects whereby claimants in the social rented sector are directly receiving monthly housing benefit payments and paying rent to landlords themselves for the first time. The demonstration projects will test how claimants can manage housing benefit monthly payments ahead of the introduction of Universal Credit from October 2013. The projects will also look at the appropriate level of safeguards needed to help secure landlord income streams if tenants fall behind on their rent. The projects will inform how best to communicate the changes to claimants, provide assistance with budgeting to successfully pay their rent, and support claimants and landlords experiencing financial difficulties.	Minister announced on 22 October that Lord Freud has agreed to payment flexibilities including direct payments, split payments and payment frequency.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
	Response from DSD Under the proposed Claims and Payments Regulations the Department will make a decision on alternative payment arrangements such as making payments direct to landlords. The decision on alternative payment arrangements will be taken following discussion with the claimant. The Decision Maker will consider the claimant's financial circumstances and any vulnerability factors e.g. any relevant health issues. The circumstances in which alternative payment arrangements will be appropriate will be set out in guidance. This approach will enable cases to be assessed on their individual merits. It is intended that there will be a trigger which switches the housing payment direct to landlords if tenants start to get behind with their rent. Currently under the Housing Benefit (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2006 payment of rent allowance or rate rebate can be paid to a landlord where a person has accrued arrears of 6 weeks or more. (In GB payments go direct to the landlord if arrears of 8 weeks or more have been accrued). It is important to remember that Universal Credit is an in and out of work benefit, therefore there will be a large number of people who are used to managing their own finances including paying their rent. However, for Northern Ireland, Minister McCausland is seeking to have specific functionality built into the IT system for Universal Credit that will enable the housing element of UC to be paid directly to landlords.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
3. if the Department has examined all optional areas of flexibility in the Bill	The Department prepared a paper for the Executive Sub-Committee on potential flexibilities in Welfare Reform. This was discussed at the Executive Sub-Committee meetings during which all political parties had an opportunity to discuss and agree areas on maximising flexibility. Minister McCausland is continuing to work with DWP Ministers on the need for flexibilities.	As above
4. clarification on whether ESA will carry on in its current form	Clause 52 of the Welfare Reform Bill provides that an award of contributory Employment and Support Allowance for those in the Work Related Activity Group will be limited to a maximum period of 365 days. The Employment and Support Allowance claimants in the Support Group, whose medical conditions mean they have limited capability for work-related activity, will be unaffected by this measure. Equally, those claimants, receiving income-related Employment and Support Allowance, will be unaffected, whatever group they are assigned to. Clause 54 of the Welfare Reform Bill will abolish the special concessions that allow certain young people to qualify for contributory Employment and Support Allowance without meeting the usual paid National Insurance conditions that apply to all others. This will apply to all new claims. New claims may, however, qualify for income-related Employment and Support Allowance.

	Clause 55 of the Welfare Reform Bill introduces a claimant commitment to Employment and Support Allowance in the period leading up to the introduction of Universal Credit. Beyond requiring claimants to accept a claimant commitment, there is no change to the current requirements that can be placed on a claimant. Where a person is in the support group the content of the commitment will be minimal. Clause 57 of the Welfare Reform Bill allows for hardship payments to be available to claimants of Employment and Support Allowance who have been sanctioned and face hardship as a result. Sanctions apply where a claimant fails to meet their requirements and has no good reason for failing. Hardship payments will not be recoverable for Employment and Support Allowance claimants. Income-related Employment and Support Allowance will cease for new claims from October 2013¹ as claimants will claim Universal Credit instead (clause 2 of the Welfare Reform Bill). Existing Income-related Employment and Support Allowance claims will be migrated to Universal Credit over the period October ²2013 to 2017 (clause 37 and Schedule 6 to the Welfare Reform Bill refer).

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
5. if the Department has been in any discussions with other Departments on whether the jobs will be available for people to go back to work	Through the Executive Sub Committee on Welfare Reform, Minister is working across Government to consider where welfare reform will impact on other Minister's responsibility. This includes the Minister for Employment & Learning & Minister for Enterprise, Trade & Investment. The Minister is working with Minister Stephen Farry to develop effective solutions to meet the needs of the long term unemployed. The Department for Employment and Learning is consulting on a proposed new employment programme, provisionally called Steps 2 Success (NI), which will replace the Department's main adult return to work programme Steps to Work. Further, the department is a member of the Interdepartmental Economic Working Group and is contributing to the development of the Executive Economic Strategy Plan.
6. clarification on the number of benefits that will be abolished.	Under clause 34 Universal Credit will replace – <ul style="list-style-type: none"> (i) Income Support (ii) income-based Jobseeker's Allowance (iii) income-related Employment and Support Allowance (iv) Housing Benefit Working Tax Credit and Child Tax Credit are abolished under section 33(1)(f) of the GB Welfare Reform Act 2012. These are excepted matters and are not devolved to the NI Executive.

Question from Social Development Committee 7. if there is any scope for monthly payments to be fortnightly	Response from DSD Paragraph 4 of Schedule 2 to the Welfare Reform Bill amends the Social Security Administration (NI) Act 1992 to allow the Department to carry forward the existing arrangements that apply to other benefits in respect of claims and payments to Universal Credit. Under the proposed Claims and Payments Regulations (Regulation 41(1)) there will be scope for the Department to make a decision on alternative payment arrangements such as making more frequent than monthly payments. The decision on alternative payment arrangements will be taken following discussion with the claimant. The Decision Maker will consider the claimant's financial circumstances and any vulnerability factors e.g. any relevant health issues. The circumstances in which alternative payment arrangements will be appropriate will be set out in guidance. This approach will enable cases to be assessed on their individual merits. It is planned to offer support to customers to transition to monthly payments but it is also recognised that for some this may not be achievable. DWP announced on 17 September (A Prior Information Notice) that it is seeking providers who can supply products with extra budgeting functions to support claimants as they move to the new benefit Universal Credit.	Scope for operational flexibility Minister announced on 22 October that Lord Freud has agreed to payment flexibilities including direct payments, split payments and payment frequency. In his statement on 22 October, Minister confirmed that he has asked officials to develop and consult with public and voluntary sector representatives on a set of guidelines for determining the circumstances when the UC payment should be split or made twice monthly.
---	---	--

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
	As part of the criteria any potential new accounts must have a series of essential features to help people on low incomes to budget, but the final design will be left open to the market to devise, including: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Support for claimants to budget and manage their money • Regular payments for housing and other main bills • Options for multiple income streams from work and benefits • Access to all claimants, irrespective of credit history • Options to build up a credit rating • Availability to people once they have moved off Universal Credit This is merely one of a range of options that the Government will be exploring to support UC claimants to budget and manage their money. Northern Ireland is included within the scope of this tender. Given the need to put in place more flexible payment arrangements for some customers, Minister has discussed with GB Ministers the need for Northern Ireland to have operational flexibilities available for customer payments. DSD officials are currently engaged with DWP to determine the required changes to the IT systems to deliver more frequent payments to customers and the timescales and costs of delivery of such flexibility.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
8. confirmation on whether childcare payments will only be for registered child minders	Clause 12 of the Welfare Reform Bill provides scope for Universal Credit to allow for extra additions to cover particular needs in the same way that the current system provides for them through premiums. Among the additions included in this clause will be support for childcare. Similar to the current position whereby Tax Credits do not cover informal childcare, under the proposed Universal Credit Regulations, in order to get the childcare element the child needs to be in registered childcare. Regulation 36 of the GB Universal Credit Regulations gives details of registered childcare. . In Northern Ireland this means that the childcare provider must be one of the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • registered with a Health and Social Services Trust; • a school that provides out of school hours childcare on the school premises; • an Education and Library Board that provides out of school hours childcare; • a person approved by the Home Childcare Approval Scheme, providing childcare in the child's home. 	The Department, and indeed the OFMDFM Policy and Economic Appraisal of the Options for the NI Childcare Strategy (September 2010), accept that there is a reliance by parents here on informal childcare. However, current Tax Credits and benefits (with the exception of DEL funded work programmes/training schemes) do not cover informal childcare payments.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
	Families will be able to recover childcare costs in Universal Credit as follows - 70% of up to £760 for one child or £1300 for two or more children per month. This is in line with current arrangements under Tax Credits but unlike Tax Credits, there will be no restriction on the minimum number of hours to work under UC. In relation to informal childcare, currently the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) pays for assistance with child care to a lone parent, or a partner of certain benefit customers who are looking for work on the Steps to Work programme. DEL is currently consulting on a proposed new employment programme called Steps 2 Success (NI) which will replace Steps to Work. The feasibility study for Steps 2 Success said that childcare costs should be borne by the provider and a consultation exercise is currently underway.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
9. clarification on the timeline for transitional protection	There is no time limit on transitional protection as long as circumstances remain the same. Paragraph 4(3)(a) of Schedule 6 to the Welfare Reform Bill provides that at the point of transition onto Universal Credit, those households whose circumstances remain unchanged, and who would otherwise experience a reduction in benefit income as a direct result of the move to Universal Credit, will receive cash protection to make up the difference. The only timeline is that transitional protection cannot start until the case has been moved to Universal Credit. Transitional protection will be applied in cases where people are moved to Universal Credit in a process managed by the Social Security Agency. Transitional protection will end if a claimant's circumstances change significantly.

Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
	Examples of occurrences which may be treated as a significant change in circumstance are - <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • a sanction being applied to the Benefit Unit; • a partner leaving/joining the household; • a sustained (3 month) earnings drop beneath the level of work that is expected of them according to their claimant commitment; • a sustained (3 month) increase in earnings which would lift the claimant out of Universal Credit means-tested support; • the Universal Credit claim ending; • the loss or gain of any of the elements that make up the Universal Credit award (for example, the childcare element, the housing element etc). Details will be in a transitional set of Regulations. Once transitional protection has ended it will not be applied to any future awards.
10. confirmation on whether the Committee will be briefed on the new IT system underpinning PIP and Universal Credit	DSD Officials can make a presentation to the Committee on the two separate IT systems that will administer UC and PIP. DSD Officials are still in discussion with their DWP counterparts in relation to IT changes to meet NI specific requirements but it is hoped these matters can be concluded over the next few months.

1.1. confirmation on whether Child Benefit is included in the proposed benefit cap	Clause 95 of the Welfare Reform Bill provides for a cap to be introduced on the total amount of benefit that working-age claimants can receive. Regulation 72 of the proposed Universal Credit Regulations, lists those cases where the Benefit Cap does not apply. These are attached at Annex 2. Those claimants who are in receipt of any of those benefits will be excluded from the Benefit Cap. Child Benefit is to be taken into account when calculating the total amount of benefit income for the cap. Payment of child benefit will remain a separate payment outside of Universal Credit. As now, child benefit will continue to be paid to the main carer - usually the mother.
1.2. details of the impact on the main applicant reaching pension age in the under occupancy proposals	The size criteria rules will only apply to claimants of working age. Any claimant over the qualifying age for state pension credit or with a partner over that age will be exempt from the size criteria rules from April 2013 (timing is dependent on Regulations being made).

Annex A

Differences between the GB Bill and the Northern Ireland Bill

Answer:

The Welfare Reform Bill for Northern Ireland does not include an equivalent to the following sections of the Welfare Reform Act 2012

	Description	Reason
60	Claimants dependent on drugs etc	This repeals provisions introduced by the 2009 Act which were not replicated in NI
76	Calculation of working tax credit	Section in Welfare Reform Act 2012 extends to Northern Ireland
103 & Schedule 12	Supersession of decisions of former appellate bodies	This clause has no relevance in NI because the social security appeal bodies have not been replaced by the Upper tribunal as in GB
109	Recovery of fines etc by deductions from employment and support allowance	This amends a criminal justice provision on fines which has no counterpart in NI
117	Benefit offences: disqualifying and sanctionable benefits	This brings tax credits within the regime in certain sections of the Social Security Fraud Act. Tax credits are however an excepted matter. As the clause deals solely with tax credits and is not ancillary to other provisions it would be outside legislative competence to replicate this clause. Tax credits should be dealt with under the Westminster Fraud Act in the same way as war pensions (see s 6A(2) of that Act)
120	Loss of tax credits	This amends the Tax Credits Act on a UK wide basis and already contains appropriate NI references
122	Tax credit fraud: investigation	This extends certain of the investigations provisions of the Administration Act to offences relating to tax credits. Tax credits are however an excepted matter. As the clause deals solely with tax credits and is not ancillary to other provisions it would be outside legislative competence to replicate this clause. Tax credits should be dealt with under Westminster legislation
123	Information-sharing for prevention etc of tax credit fraud	This extends information sharing provisions in the Administration to Tax Credits. Tax credits are however an excepted matter. As the clause deals solely with tax credits and is not ancillary to other provisions it would be outside legislative competence to replicate this clause. Tax credits should be dealt with under Westminster legislation

124	Tax credit fraud: prosecution and penalties	This amends the Tax Credits Act on a UK wide basis and already contains appropriate NI references
125	Unauthorised disclosure of information relating to tax credit offences	This amends the Administration Act to permit disclosure of tax credit information). Tax credits are however an excepted matter. As the clause deals solely with tax credits and is not ancillary to other provisions it would be outside legislative competence to replicate this clause. Tax credits should be dealt with under Westminster legislation
126	Tax credits: transfer of functions etc	This extends UK-wide and already provides for the transfer of tax credit functions in NI and the consequential amendment of NI legislation
127	Information-sharing between Secretary of State and HMRC	Section in Welfare Reform Act 2012 extends to Northern Ireland
128 & 129	Information-sharing between Secretary of State and DPP	This enables HRMC to share information with those including DSD administering social security. It extends to NI and already contains appropriate NI references
135	Functions of registration service	Relates to Registration Service Act 1953 – different structure in Northern Ireland - not required
141	Review of fees regulations	Relates to Child Maintenance pilot - not applicable for Northern Ireland to pilot
143	Standards of decision-making	DWP is abolishing the standards of decision making report – DSD will continue to produce this report
145 & Schedule 13	Social Mobility and Child Poverty Commission	This amends the Child Poverty Act and related enactments on a UK-wide basis Commission is UK wide

Benefit cap

Benefit cap - what it is

The benefit cap will apply to people aged 16 to 64, also known as 'working age'.

The cap means that households where no one is in work should not get more in benefits than the average wage paid to people in work. This is after tax and National Insurance has been taken off.

A household means you, your partner if you have one and any children you are responsible for and who live with you.

What's included in the benefit cap

When added together the benefit cap will limit the total income you can get from the following benefits:

- | | |
|---|--------------------------------|
| ■ Bereavement Allowance | ■ Incapacity Benefit |
| ■ Carer's Allowance | ■ Income Support |
| ■ Child Benefit | ■ Jobseeker's Allowance |
| ■ Child Tax Credit | ■ Maternity Allowance |
| ■ Employment and Support Allowance
(except where it is paid with the support component) | ■ Severe Disablement Allowance |
| ■ Guardian's Allowance | ■ Widowed Parent's Allowance |
| ■ Housing Benefit | ■ Widowed Mothers Allowance |
| | ■ Widows Pension |
| | ■ Widows Pension Age-Related |

How much is the benefit cap

The actual amount of the benefit cap won't be set until later this year (2012) in England, Scotland and Wales. The amount of the benefit cap will probably be the same in Northern Ireland, but this is not certain until the law is changed. In England, Scotland and Wales the amount of the benefit cap is expected to be:

A maximum of £350 a week if you're a single person and either:

- you have no children
- the children you have responsibility for don't live with you

A maximum of £500 a week if you're either:

- a couple, with or without dependant children
- a lone parent with dependant children

The cap will not apply if you qualify for Working Tax Credit or get any of the following benefits:

- Disability Living Allowance

- Personal Independence Payment (from April 2013)
- Attendance Allowance
- Industrial Injuries Benefits
- Employment and Support Allowance, if paid with the support component
- War Widow's or War Widower's Pension

The cap will be applied through deductions from Housing Benefit payments.

The current understanding is that Households who are not getting housing benefit as of April 2013 will not have the cap applied.

Why is the benefit cap being introduced?

The benefit cap will make sure that households getting benefits will not normally get more in benefit than the average working household receives in pay.

The benefit cap will encourage people to look for work and help to promote fairness between those in work and those getting benefits.

What help will be available

Support and advice will be given to help you through these changes if they affect you.

Further information

You can get help looking for work, updating a CV, improving your skills, applying for jobs and preparing for an interview.

(Footnotes)

1 This is likely to change to April 2014 in line with Minister's announcement of 22 October that Universal Credit introduction will be delayed until 2014.

2 As above.

Social Development Committee - Schedule of responses to Questions from Briefing Paper dated 10 October 2012

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE QUESTIONS IN DALO LETTER OF 10 OCTOBER

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
Clause 5	Clarification on whether money a claimant receives from the Child Maintenance and Enforcement Division would be classified as income under UC?	Child maintenance will be classed as unearned income for Universal Credit purposes and will be disregarded as unearned income per regulation 61 of the Universal Credit Regulations. While there is provision for some types of unearned income to be deducted from the Universal Credit award under clause 8(3)(b) of the Bill, as child maintenance is not included in the category of income listed in the regulations it is disregarded.	N/A

Welfare Reform Bill Clause 7	Question from Social Development Committee Details of what support will be provided to claimants who will be expected to manage the transition to a 4 week period for receipt of Universal Credit?	Response from DSD The Department is committed to ensuring that suitable budgeting advice and support is made available to those claimants who may experience difficulty in managing the transition to monthly payment of Universal Credit. In addition it is planned to offer an advance of benefit to those claimants migrating from a legacy benefit to Universal Credit. Under clause 100 of the Welfare Reform Bill there is provision to allow the Department to pay an advance of benefit where it considers, in accordance with criteria to be set out in Regulations, that the payment can reasonably be expected to be recovered. Migrating claimants will be to apply for a Universal Credit Advance at any time during the first month of entitlement to Universal Credit. The Social Security Agency will achieve this by providing migrating claimants with the option of an advance of UC two weeks into their first UC assessment period. The advance, which may be up to 50% of the expected Universal Credit monthly award, will be recovered in 12 equal monthly instalments from subsequent payments of UC. This approach is similar to advances of salary provided by many employers when an employee starts work on a monthly salary. The interim payment would be paid at the two week point. The Advance is not a loan, but a rescheduling of payment in the first month. The claimant receives the same overall amount of Universal Credit over the first year, and no interest is charged. In addition, as advised previously, DWP is leading on the development of a range of financial products to help claimants budget their money. Northern Ireland is included in this development work. – see answer below for more details.	Scope for operational flexibility Minister announced on 22 October that Lord Freud has agreed to payment flexibilities including direct payments, split payments and payment frequency. In his statement on 22 October, Minister confirmed that he has asked officials to develop and consult with public and voluntary sector representatives on a set of guidelines for determining the circumstances when the UC payment should be split or made twice monthly

	A list of the financial products which will be made available to claimants to assist them in budgeting their finances?	The DWP Universal Credit Programme has engaged with the British Banking Association (BBA) and the Northern Ireland Universal Credit Programme has been involved in this process. Following this engagement, a UK-wide procurement exercise was launched on 17 September to select banking products with budgeting functionalities suitable for Universal Credit claimants has been launched by Lord Freud, Minister for Welfare Reform. Northern Ireland is within scope of this procurement exercise. In the DWP Prior Information Notice (announced on 17 September) it is seeking providers who can supply products with extra budgeting functions to support claimants as they move to the new benefit Universal Credit. As part of the criteria any potential new accounts must have a series of essential features to help people on low incomes to budget, but the final design will be left open to the market to devise, including: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Support for claimants to budget and manage their money • Regular payments for housing and other main bills • Options for multiple income streams from work and benefits

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
		<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Access to all claimants, irrespective of credit history • Options to build up a credit rating • Availability to people once they have moved off Universal Credit This is merely one of a range of options that the Government will be exploring to support UC claimants to budget and manage their money. Northern Ireland is included within the scope of this tender.
	The number of people on low-incomes who are paid on weekly or fortnightly basis?	The Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings (ASHE) published in November 2011 and referencing April 2011 shows that – <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • 29% (231,000) of employees indicated that their gross pay covered a period of one week; and • 4% (31,000) have indicated that their gross pay covered a period of two weeks. The table attached at Annex 1 shows a breakdown of the population by income decile and payment frequency based on weekly or fortnightly payments.
	Details of what role the Voluntary and Community Sector will provide in the provision of advice on budgeting?	Discussions are ongoing with the Department's Voluntary and Community Unit around how the provision of the voluntary advice service could support the implementation of the extensive Welfare Reform Programme.

	Confirmation as to whether the existing rules on habitual residency will be carried forward and if so, will additional safeguards, such as clear guidance, be introduced to protect citizens born in Northern Ireland who move abroad and later returns to the UK?	Yes. The existing rules on habitual residence which apply to income related benefits will be carried forward into Universal Credit. Under clause 4(5) of the Welfare Reform Bill the Department will make regulations (a) specifying when a person is to be treated as being in Northern Ireland, and (b) when a person is to be treated as not resident in Northern Ireland because they are not considered to be habitually resident here. (Regulation 7 of the proposed Universal Credit Regulations refers). There is no definitive list of factors which determines whether a person is habitually resident. The Department looks at each case individually and considers all relevant factors. There is guidance in the Decision Maker's Guide for staff dealing with these cases.

Clause 8	Confirmation as to whether the allowances provided for childcare costs will be made available to non-registered childminders as well as registered childminders?	Clause 12 of the Welfare Reform Bill provides scope for Universal Credit to allow for extra additions to cover particular needs in the same way that the current system provides for them through premiums. Among the additions included in this clause will be support for childcare. Similar to the current position whereby Tax Credits do not cover informal childcare, under the proposed Universal Credit Regulations, in order to get the childcare element the child needs to be in registered childcare. Regulation 36 of the GB Universal Credit Regulations gives details of registered childcare. In Northern Ireland this means that the childcare provider must be one of the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • registered with a Health and Social Services Trust; • a school that provides out of school hours childcare on the school premises; • an Education and Library Board that provides out of school hours childcare; • a person approved by the Home Childcare Approval Scheme, providing childcare in the child's home.

		Families will be able to recover childcare costs in Universal Credit as follows - 70% of up to £760 for one child or £1300 for two or more children per month. This is in line with current arrangements under Tax Credits but unlike Tax Credits, there will be no restriction on the minimum number of hours to work before qualifying under UC. In relation to informal childcare the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) pays for assistance with child care to a lone parent, or a partner of certain benefit customers who are looking for work on the Steps to Work programme. DEL is currently consulting on a proposed new employment programme called Steps 2 Success (NI) which will replace Steps to Work. The feasibility study for Steps 2 Success said that childcare costs should be borne by the provider and a consultation exercise is currently underway.
Clause 9	In the event that the main householder/main applicant for UC is on remand, confirmation on whether the Bill allow sufficient operational flexibility to enable the housing benefit element of UC to be separated and thereby enable the rent to continue to be paid?	Clause 9(3) of the Welfare Reform Bill allows for circumstances where an award will not include a standard allowance, for example, a standard allowance will not be included for prisoners on remand but an amount for housing costs could be included in an award for such a claimant. (Regulation 16 of the Universal Credit Regulations refers). The housing element will be protected for up to 6 months due to imprisonment. (Regulation 16(2) of the Universal Credit Regulations refers).

Clause 10	Clarity on what impact the introduction of Universal Credit will have on the child tax credits and child benefit provided to claimants who are responsible for children or qualifying young people?	Under Universal Credit, support for children will be provided in the form of a child element. This will replace Child Tax Credit and will be paid in addition to Child Benefit which will continue to be paid outside of Universal Credit. The child element in Universal Credit will comprise two rates (unlike Child Tax Credits which pays same rates for each child irrespective of number in family) – one rate for the first/only child and then a reduced rate for second and subsequent children. (Regulation 18 of the Universal Credit Regulations refers). The maximum amount of Universal Credit is to include an addition to the child element called a Disabled Child Addition (similar to the current disability premiums under child tax credits) for each child dependant (Regulation 20 of the Universal Credit Regulations). There will be two rates (lower and higher) of disabled child addition – (i) lower rate disabled child addition will be awarded for a child who receives any rate of either component of Disability Living Allowance (mobility or care) apart from the highest rate of the care component; or (ii) higher rate severely disabled child addition will be awarded for a child who receives the highest rate of the care component of Disability Living Allowance or a child is registered blind.

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
Clause 11	Clarity on the prescribed period for the support for mortgage interest payments under the Bill and when the temporary measures which reduced the period from 35 to 14 weeks will end?	Under Universal Credit it is intended that there will be greater support for the most severely disabled children. Payments for disabled children and adults will be aligned as between 2003 and 2010 the uprating of child payments increased at a faster rate than those for adults. The amounts will be based on those provided through Child Tax Credit. We expect details of the rates that will be payable to be announced in the Autumn statement on 5 December and will be included in the proposed Universal Credit Regulations. HM Treasury funding for the 13 week waiting period and a more generous £200,000 capital limit for working age mortgage holders receiving income related benefits (JSA, ESA or IS) will end in January 2013. Work is currently ongoing on the funding arrangements after January 2013 and we expect details to be announced in the Autumn statement on 5 December. Further details will be in Regulations.	This question has been answered covering both aspects – i.e. the financial calculation and covering the size criteria. This Welfare Reform Bill introduces an enabling provision to allow us to introduce regulations relating to under occupancy (i.e. size criteria). Members should note that the under 35 shared occupancy rate is already in legislation – this was covered by provisions within the last Welfare Reform Bill 2010 and The Housing Benefit (Amendment No.2) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2011 (S.R. 2011 No. 293). The Discretionary Housing Payments may provide support for those claimants who have shared custody arrangements.

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
	Clarity on how household size will be calculated in cases such as separated families with shared parental responsibilities or short-term foster carers?	Separated parents who share the care of their children and who may have been allocated an extra bedroom to reflect this may have their housing costs element reduced as they will be deemed to have a spare bedroom. Under Universal Credit (Clause 10) the child element will be awarded to the person with whom the child normally lives. Where the child normally lives with both parents in separate households, parents will be encouraged to decide between themselves who receives the payment. If they cannot agree the Department will decide based on who has the main responsibility for the child. The category of accommodation which is reasonable for the claimant to occupy and the persons to be taken as part of the claimant's household are any children for whom he/she is responsible, are taken into account when considering the housing costs element. (Universal Credit Regulations, Schedule 4, Part 3, paragraphs 10 and 11, refer).

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
		This could mean that in shared care arrangements some separated parents may have their accommodation classed as “under occupied” and the housing costs element may be reduced by 14% for the use of a room by one child, or by 25% for the use of two rooms by children. (Universal Credit Regulations, Schedule 4, Part 5, paragraphs 37 and 41 refer). In cases where the housing costs element is reduced tenants will be responsible for paying the shortfall in their rent. Foster carers are allowed to claim the housing costs element for the housing needs of their own families but fostered children living with them are not taken into account when calculating the size of the accommodation required. (Universal Credit Regulations, Schedule 4, Part 5, paragraph 40 refers). Therefore a household which has an extra room for a current or potential foster child will be treated as under-occupying and the housing costs element may be reduced by 14% for the use of a room by a foster child, or by 25% for the use of two rooms by fostered children. (Universal Credit Regulations, Schedule 4, Part 5, paragraphs 37 and 41 refer).

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
		To ensure that this measure does not discourage people from being foster carers, additional money will be made available to the Discretionary Housing Payment fund to help foster carers who find themselves with a reduction in their housing costs element owing to under-occupation. A foster child who remains with their foster carer after the age of 18 will then be treated as a non-dependant and be included in any room calculation. Shared parenting – as under the current arrangements in benefits and tax credits where parents are separated and provide shared care, only one of them will be eligible to receive the child element of Universal Credit. The couple should decide between them who should receive the child element. Only where the parents cannot agree or where the agreement does not reflect the care arrangements between them, will the Department intervene and make a decision based on who has main responsibility for caring for the child.

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
		Clause 10(4) of the Bill allows for regulations to set out circumstances where an award will not include an amount for a child or young person. Regulation 4(4) of the proposed Universal Credit Regulations says that where a child or young person normally lives with two or more persons, only one of them is to be treated as responsible and that is the person who has the main responsibility. Regulation 4(5) says that the couple should decide between them who should receive the child element. Only where the parents cannot agree or where the agreement does not reflect the care arrangements between them, will the Department intervene and make a decision based on who has main responsibility for caring for the child. Short-term foster carers – In the current benefits system, for the purposes of calculating income-related benefits, foster children are not included in the benefit assessment. The same principles will apply in Universal Credit. Clause 10(4) of the Bill allows for regulations to set out circumstances where an award will not include an amount for a child or young person. Work is ongoing to include in Regulation 4(6) of the proposed Universal Credit Regulations that foster carers should not receive the child element.

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
		In the current benefits system, the allowances and fees received by foster carers in return for fostering are fully disregarded for the purposes of calculating benefit entitlement. The same principles will apply within Universal Credit. These payments will not be taken into account as earnings or income, and whether or not a foster carer receives such payments will not affect the amount of Universal Credit they are entitled to. (As these payments are not included in Regulations 51 or 61 of the Universal Credit Regulations they are disregarded).
	Confirmation as to whether guidance will be provided on the definition of 'exceptional circumstances' and 'suitable accommodation'?	The terms "exceptional circumstances" and "suitable accommodation" are not defined as each case is decided on its merits. Under the current arrangements the guidance sets out factors to be taken into account when considering the merits of a case. It is likely that this will be carried forward into the Universal Credit guidance.
	Confirmation as to whether financial incentives will be provided to assist claimants to move to the private rented sector in instances of over occupancy?	Awaiting reply from Housing Division

Clause 13	More detail (duration, quality, and qualifications of training providers) on what training will be provided for client advisers who will be responsible for carrying out work focused interviews? In particular, what assurances can the Department give that this will enable the advisers to deal with specific mental health issues such as bi-polar disorder and autism?	Employment Service Advisers working with clients on Incapacity Benefit and Employment and Support Allowance have received specialist training, over and above that received by Employment Advisers who are dealing with JSA clients. This training would have covered awareness of the full range of disabilities, including sensory, physical, mental health and learning disability. It would have also covered practical skills sessions on how the advisers should interact with clients, depending on the nature of their disability, and discussion sessions on how the respective disabilities impacted on the individual's behaviour and attitude towards employment.

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
		In addition to the full programme of training that these Advisers would have received, the Department's Disability Employment Service provided a Support Model Service to these teams. The Support Model team consists of Occupational Psychologists and experienced Disability Employment Managers who have worked with disabled clients for many years. The Support Model is delivered on an ongoing basis throughout the Office Network and consists of Case Conferences on more complex cases, ongoing training, such as Motivational Interviewing and has seen the introduction of a new Diagnostic Tool on Employability for sick and disabled clients. As well as the Support Model visits, the respective staff are available at all times to give advice via telephone calls and ad-hoc meetings. The OPS staff will also carry out individual employment assessments on clients if the Employment Adviser thinks this is appropriate. Finally, the Employment advisers have built up positive relationships with local disability organisations and with staff from the local Health Trusts and can speak to these staff for advice and guidance in relation to the clients they are trying to help towards or into employment.

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
	Confirmation on the time period that claimants will have for submitting evidence in respect of good cause in order to avoid being sanctioned for failure to attend an interview?	There will be no specific time limit in the Universal Credit regulations so that there is flexibility to adapt to the circumstances of the claimant. The key point (which will be reflected in Guidance) is that the claimant always has the right amount of time. It is anticipated though that the current rule of 5 working days should be the default. But, if for example, the claimant is in attendance and has provided their evidence, there may be no need to wait a further 5 working days. Also, if the claimant is waiting for evidence from a doctor or support worker then the 5 working days should be extended.
	Confirmation as to whether a claimant's commitment will take account of any permitted work a claimant may also be undertaking? Will the same rules apply to voluntary work under the claimant's commitment?	For claimants who are carrying out permitted work the precise terms of the claimant's availability will be set out in their claimant commitment which will be discussed with the Personal Adviser. Regulation 86(1)(a) of the proposed Universal Credit Regulations refers. For claimants carrying out voluntary work, work search must remain their primary focus. In these cases claimants will be allowed to carry out voluntary work for up to 50% of their expected hours on work search. Regulation 86(3) of the proposed Universal Credit Regulations refers.

Clause 14	Details of what support (provision of internet, newspapers) will be available to claimants to assist them in their search for work?	The Department for Employment and Learning has agreed to take the Department for Work and Pensions' Transforming Labour Market Services (TLMS) system which will provide a comprehensive tool for claimants to use to search for work.
	Details of what consideration has been given to the use of mobile phones in assisting the claimants in their search for work?	The Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) ran a pilot using text messaging to remind claimants of their interview in one office in each of the three DEL regions. This is continuing in order to gain sufficient data to gauge effectiveness. In addition at the moment individuals may select to have text alerts via JobCentre online when a vacancy is put on to the system in their area.
	Details of how a claimant's physical, literacy, numerical and IT skills will be assessed and will this assessment be undertaken at the same stage of the process? What type and level of training be provided to claimants to assist them in their work preparation?	Currently both the Department for Employment and Learning advisers and Lead Contractors employed by them may identify those with potential essential skills needs and may refer them for an assessment and training to address these barriers to employment. A wide range of tailored provision will be available from short courses to work placements etc.

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
	Confirmation as to whether the potential risks of industrial disease will be taken into account in the claimant commitment?	The claimant commitment will take account of the individual's capabilities and circumstances. Those claimants currently in the Employment and Support Allowance Support Group will fall into the group with no work-related requirements. People who are not capable of work will not be required to search for a job. This includes anyone assessed as having Limited Capability for Work through a work capability assessment. (Clause 14(4) (a) of the Bill) Personal Advisers will work closely with people who are not capable of work at the current time - but who will be expected to prepare for work - to understand their needs (Clause 16 of the Bill). Personal Advisers will encourage and support these people to fulfil appropriate work-related requirements to help them move closer to work in future. For those who are capable of work, we believe it is right that they should be required to do so in return for benefit payments. However, work search requirements will be tailored to reflect an individual's personal capability and circumstances.

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
	Clarity on whether the claimant commitment will be legally binding?	The claimant commitment is not a legal document but there are implications for a claimant who does not agree the claimant commitment. One of the basic conditions for entitlement to Universal Credit is that the claimant accepts the claimant commitment (Clause 4(1)(e)). Under clause 14(5) the claimant will also need to accept the claimant commitment when it is updated and changed as necessary. As the claimant has agreed in writing to undertake certain actions, the claimant commitment is binding in that it gives entitlement to Universal Credit. If the claimant does not accept the claimant commitment he/she will not be entitled to Universal Credit.

Welfare Reform Bill	Clause 16	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
		Details of what steps the Department is taking to minimise the risk that work placements will lead to possible redundancies of full-time positions?	The Employment Service has taken a number of steps to reduce the possibility of job substitution. Each employer proposing to offer a work experience placement is required to sign a formal Agreement with the Employment Service confirming that there are no current vacancies in the area of activity in which the placement is offered, that there have been no redundancies within the organisation within the last 3 months and that there has been no displacement of existing employees as a result of the placement. Employment Service staff follow a robust monitoring regime during the period of work placement which includes on-site visits to support the participant and to confirm that the placement is operating within the broad principles of the scheme. At the end of each work experience placement, there is a cooling off period of 4 weeks to facilitate a review of the success of the placement and to prevent employers operating consecutive placements. During this period, meetings between an Employment Service Adviser and both the work experience provider and participant take place independently to elicit feedback on the placement. Where Employment Service staff have evidence that an employer is operating outside the overarching ethos and principles of the scheme, that employer's continued participation in the scheme can be suspended.

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
	Confirmation as whether work placements will be tailored to the local job-market?	Shorter work experience placements are geared towards providing participants with key transferable employability skills to support them in their search for work. Longer term placements under the Skills Development Programme are restricted to jobs growth sectors with the potential to rebuild and rebalance the NI economy in support of the draft Programme for Government and the NI Economic Strategy.
Clause 17	Whether industry specific training relevant to a claimant's previous profession (i.e. plumbing) would be considered under a claimant commitment?	Yes, industry specific training relevant to a claimant's previous occupation can be considered under a claimant commitment. This might be in the form of upskilling to help a claimant compete better for available jobs or it might be in the form or conversion training aimed at helping the claimant extend the range of occupations open to them. All of this training would be influenced by labour market conditions and the Adviser's assessment of how close the claimant is to work.

Clause 18	Confirmation as to whether a definition or guidance will be provided on what constitutes “availability”?	Clause 18 specifies that under a work availability requirement “available for work” means able and willing immediately to take up paid work, or more paid work or better paid work. This requirement must be met unless one of the following in Regulation 87 of the proposed Universal Credit Regulations applies - <ul style="list-style-type: none"> (i) the claimant is in paid work in which case they are allowed up to 48 hours to attend an interview, or until their notice period has expired to take up a job; (ii) the claimant has caring responsibilities, for a child or for a disabled person in which case they will be allowed up to 48 hours to attend an interview and one month to take a job; (iii) the claimant is carrying out voluntary work in which case they will be allowed up to 48 hours to attend an interview and one week to take up paid work.

Clause 19	More details on the process for assessing limited capabilities and who will be undertaking this assessment? Will the assessors have access to a claimant's full medical records?	An individual's work capability will continue to be established through the Work Capability Assessment, currently undertaken for Employment and Support Allowance. The WCA looks at the functional effects of an individual's condition rather than the condition itself. Customers are assessed against 7 mental health descriptors and 10 physical descriptors. The information required to determine if an individual has Limited Capability for Work is any information detailing the individual's ability to perform certain defined duties. The outcome of the WCA is determined by a Social Security Agency Decision Maker taking into consideration information provided by the customer and the Medical Support Service provider, Atos Healthcare. As part of the decision making process customers complete a medical questionnaire (ESA 50) and are asked to provide supporting medical evidence. In going forward this will continue to be the process.
	Will lone parents in full-time education continue to receive benefit?	In Universal Credit, as in the current benefit system, the majority of people in full-time education will not be entitled to claim. However, there will be some exceptions – clause 4(6) of the Bill allows for regulations to specify exceptions. Regulation 12(1)(c) of the proposed Universal Credit Regulations says that students, including lone parents, with relevant dependant children or young persons can still be able to qualify for Universal Credit.

Clause 26	In instances where the main applicant in a household receives a higher level sanction- can the Department confirm what the impact will be on the family	The details on higher level sanctions are set out in regulations 93 to 102 of the proposed Universal Credit Regulations. See below for further information

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
	Will the same amount, minus the main applicant's allowance – be paid to the partner and the children?	The sanction reduction will not affect the child or housing elements where a claimant is entitled to the maximum standard allowance (i.e. earnings have not reduced their award). If the claimant is not entitled to the maximum standard allowance, the sanction amount may reduce the housing or child elements. In such cases it will be for the claimant to manage their budget and use other income such as earnings to meet their housing or other costs. If after the sanction is applied the claimant cannot meet their basic essential needs they may make a claim for a hardship payment which will be recoverable.
	Would the person who is sanctioned cease to be the main applicant?	No
	Would the partner be reclassified as a lone parent and therefore receive a lone parents benefits?	There are no lone parent benefits in Universal Credit.
	Can the Department outline the process and timeline for reassessment of UC in this instance?	The higher level sanctions can only be applied to jobseekers who do not – without good reason – meet their most important requirements, which might include accepting reasonable job offers. The process will be set out in guidance. In terms of the timeline the sanction will end when the claimant can demonstrate re-engagement.
	Is 'good reason' the same as 'good cause'?	There is no difference between good reason and good cause. In previous legislation "good cause", "good reason", and "just cause" have all been used and often have the same meaning. To introduce consistency, the Welfare Reform Bill uses "good reason" throughout.

Welfare Reform Bill	Question from Social Development Committee	Response from DSD	Scope for operational flexibility
	If a sanction is imposed and evidence is subsequently produced that would call into doubt the decision, what procedures are in place to protect the claimant? Example of a claimant with a medical condition that would impair their decision making process is sanctioned for failure to comply and evidence of the condition was subsequently provided to the department.	Clause 101(3) of the Bill, provides for amendments to be made to the Social Security (NI) Order 1998 to allow for regulations to be made specifying that a decision must be reconsidered fully internally by the Department before it can be appealed. This is a new requirement and will allow for issues to be resolved and errors identified and corrected at the earliest possible occasion. The claimant will have a right of appeal when they are notified of the outcome of the reconsideration by the Department. Regulation 8 of the proposed Decisions and Appeals Regulations sets out the detail on consideration of revision before appeal.

Clause 7

The table below shows pay period frequencies for Northern Ireland as taken from ASHE 2011

Pay Period	Deciles										All
	0-10	10-20	20-30	30-40	40-50	50-60	60-70	70-80	80-90	90-100
One Week	40.2%	36.8%	43.2%	41.6%	33.8%	31.6%	25.8%	19.2%	5.7%	5.3%	28.3%
Two Weeks	8.5%	4.0%	4.3%	5.3%	5.3%	2.8%	4.0%	1.4%	1.1%	0.4%	3.7%

This shows that people in the lower half of the income deciles are more likely to be paid weekly or fortnightly than those in the higher end.

Dear Kevin,

WELFARE REFORM

Thank you for your letter dated 1 November to Billy Crawford, which has been passed to me for reply.

The Committee had raised a number of questions and I will answer each of them in turn.

1. Confirmation of potential job losses contained in the outline Business Case for Universal Credit.

It is not possible to confirm the levels of any potential job losses as a consequence of Universal Credit as it is too early to state with any certainty the impact that the introduction of Universal Credit will have on staff numbers in either the Social Security Agency or any of the affected organisations. Whilst the first iteration of the Outline Business Case did indicate a potential reduction in staff of approximately 1,600 by 2019/2020, this was based on assumptions which are being constantly reviewed and updated as information on the detailed processes and level of automation becomes available. Work is also ongoing to develop the necessary complementing and resourcing models to inform the development of a revised business case.

In addition, our Minister is committed to working across government, not least, with the Department of Finance & Personnel, to ensure a fully managed approach and the development of strategies that allow for a managed change in workforce requirements which will, where possible, ameliorate staff impacts. Changes will be implemented in a carefully planned way, with new arrangements being introduced gradually through a phased approach. The administration of existing benefits will continue for some time while the Universal Credit system ramps up. During this time staff will be needed for both new and existing arrangements.

2. Confirmation and details of a communication plan/strategy

A Welfare Reform Engagement Strategy is currently in place, the aim of which is to prepare, inform and support our customers, staff, stakeholders and the public through the forthcoming changes to the welfare system. The Social Security Agency has recently created a specific team to take this work forward over the next 24 months.

Work is on-going to ensure that a wide range of communication channels are utilised to ensure accurate and timely communication of welfare reform. The Department is committed to being a trusted source of information on Welfare Reform and wide ranging engagement with stakeholders and customers. The Engagement Team are currently planning a series of face to face engagement events on different topics over the next few months, with the first event being held in Long Gallery on 15 November. Invitations to this event have been sent to interested parties and MLAs.

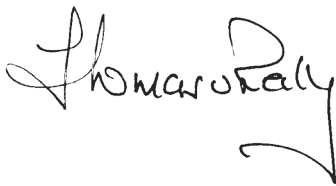

The Department have also engaged PwC as a strategic partner to work with Universal Credit programme to develop a communication and engagement strategy and plan to support the implementation of Universal Credit. This programme level plan will be incorporated into the wider Engagement Plan and you may wish to consider whether the Committee should secure a briefing upon completion.

3. Confirmation on whether Work Capability Assessment decision makers' guidelines set out targets

There are no targets for Work Capability Assessment outcomes in the Employment and Support Allowance decision making procedures and corresponding guidance.

In determining entitlement to benefit, an Employment and Support Allowance Decision Maker considers all available evidence in relation to a customer's claim. In all cases, if the evidence available to the decision maker indicates that benefit would be disallowed, they will contact the customer, normally by telephone, to discuss their claim. This will enable the customer to provide any additional evidence which could influence the entitlement decision.

I hope this clarifies matters for you, however, if you have any further queries officials would be happy to address the committee to assist their understanding.

Dear Dr Pelan

Supporting Separated Families Consultation

Thank you for your letter of 16 October 2012 in which you ask about directors drawings and jurisdiction issue of non-resident parents living in another country.

1. Is there a contingency in place for those company directors in receipt of director's drawings as payment which are not required to be declared as income?

In response to the query in relation to directors and if there is a contingency in place for those in receipt of director's drawings as payment which are not required to be declared as income, I understand that a Director cannot simply take money out of a company, without first accounting for it in some way to HMRC, which will in future be the source of information for the assessment of child maintenance liability.

Company Directors are legally required to show what monies they have taken, which of course are taxable, and either accountable in the maintenance or by way of the variations process. A Director's income may include remuneration, share dividend, debenture interest and drawings from the company.

In addition child maintenance legislation allows for additional financial factors to be taken into account which are not captured in the maintenance calculation; this is known as a variation to the maintenance calculation.

The new statutory scheme will bring about changes to the types of variation that parents with care can claim. The intention is that grounds available to parents with care will focus on capturing a non-resident parent's actual unearned income. This approach will make best use of the additional sources of taxable income held by HMRC having been captured by self-assessment, such as income from savings, property and or investments rather than establishing a notional income, which is the current method of calculating unearned income.

This means the Department will be able to investigate non-resident parents' additional income instead of the onus being placed on parents with care to provide supporting evidence. This will be done by requesting details of unearned income information held by HMRC whenever an application for an additional income variation is accepted. If the application is successful, resulting in the variation increasing the maintenance calculation, further requests will be made each year as part of the annual review using gross income figures supplied by HMRC.

Calculations will be more cost-effective with fewer manual in-year changes being required. Therefore the changes to the variations scheme will make it harder for non-resident parents' unearned income to remain undetected. However, I would caution that it still will not be easy to establish the non-resident parent's "true" income if they have not declared it to HMRC.

2. Has consideration been given to cases where the non-resident parent is living in other jurisdictions e.g. Republic of Ireland?

In regards to consideration being given to cases where the non-resident parent is living in other jurisdictions the legislation is clear.

European Council Regulation EC 4/2009 on jurisdiction, applicable law, recognition and enforcement of decisions and co-operation in matters relating to maintenance obligations ("the EU Maintenance Regulation") provides for the reciprocal enforcement of maintenance between EU member states. This regulation, which has direct effect in UK law, has been applicable since June 2011. This Regulation aims to ensure the swift and efficient cross-border recovery of maintenance obligations imposed by both courts and certain administrative bodies including DSD.

To facilitate this, the EU Maintenance Regulation establishes a system of Central Authorities to assist in applications, including helping to obtain information on the income, and, if necessary, other financial circumstances of the debtor and creditor. A Central Authority in one member state may make a request to a Central Authority in another member state to help obtain relevant information and the requested Central Authority must take all appropriate measures to assist. Public authorities which in the course of their ordinary activities hold the relevant information must provide it to the Central Authority at its request.

The Child Maintenance and Enforcement Division are continuing to work with the Northern Ireland Court and Tribunal Service ("the Central Authority") on this.

In summary if an applicant has a maintenance assessment in place then it can be enforced in the same manner as a court order in the other jurisdiction.

Dear Kevin,

Welfare Reform – Financial Implications for not Implementing the Bill

Further to your recent query regarding the possible financial implications for not implementing the Welfare Reform Bill, please see explanation below.

As part of the United Kingdom public expenditure system, Northern Ireland is required to adhere to controls set out by HM Treasury in the Statement of Funding Policy. This makes clear that:

- (i) Spending on Northern Ireland social security benefits is treated as annually managed expenditure (AME), met directly from HM Treasury in line with the actual entitlement of claimants and outside the departmental expenditure limit (DEL) funding allocated to and managed by the NI Executive;
- (ii) Increases in annually managed programme expenditure arising from policy decisions made by Northern Ireland will have to be met from their respective budgets; and
- (iii) Should the Northern Ireland Executive decide to change social security policy to differ from the rest of United Kingdom, ministers in Great Britain will have to take a view on the level of any funding adjustment.

This is echoed in the Consolidated Budgeting Guidance which highlights that any action or inaction which increases Annually Managed Expenditure is expected to be met from reductions in DEL or through other AME savings.

Considering the controls that I have set out above, it is estimated that the financial implications of not implementing the Welfare Reform Bill Northern Ireland (2012) during the Spending Review 2010 period is estimated to be in the region of £207 million. This estimate includes:

- £113m of social security benefit spending controls which will not be happen as measures such as Personal Independence Payment and Employment Support Allowance Time Limiting will not be implemented;
- £7m for fraud and error measures which will not be achieved;

- £9 million in additional social security spending on Universal Credit to support the policy intent that work pays which will not come into Northern Ireland; and
- the removal of £61million of resource DEL and £18m of capital DEL related to the implementation of Welfare Reform and included in the Northern Ireland Block DEL Spending Review 2010 settlement.

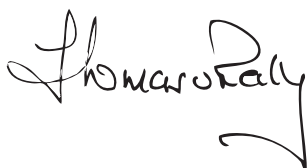

These estimates increase significantly in the next spending review period as Welfare Reform measures are fully implemented.

The £207 million estimate does not include the additional IT and administration costs which Northern Ireland would have to meet for administering different systems and the loss of the significant cost advantages which exist from using the same systems and administering the same benefits as Great Britain.

While ultimately the level of any funding adjustment will be a matter for discussion with Great Britain ministers, the rules which govern the funding relationship between the Great Britain and Northern Ireland clearly set out that adjustments can be made.

I hope you find this information useful.

Yours sincerely

Dear Alex

THE WELFARE REFORM BILL

Thank you for your letter of 1 October regarding Committee scrutiny of the Welfare Reform Bill (NI) 2012.

Whilst we have devolved responsibility for Social Security matters here in Northern Ireland, you will appreciate that our benefits system here in Northern Ireland is predicated on the assumption of parity, both in terms of substance and timing insofar as possible. As you are aware the Welfare Reform Bill for GB was granted Royal Assent in March this year and currently we in Northern Ireland are behind Westminster with our legislative process.

You will also be aware that in dealings with Westminster colleagues, among them Lord Freud and Iain Duncan Smith, and through the Executive Sub-Committee on Welfare Reform, I have actively sought to put forward the case that, in implementing Welfare reform here we must ensure that the legislation is afforded proper scrutiny in the Northern Ireland Assembly. To that end I consider that robust Committee scrutiny of the proposals contained in the Bill is vital and I understand the Committee is committing additional time to this responsibility to meet the 30 day timeframe. I welcome your leadership in taking this forward

At the meeting at which we discussed the Welfare Reform Bill and the potential impact on the work of the Social Development Committee, I did indicate that I was working towards the Bill receiving Royal Assent in mid March and that the draft timetable which officials provided you, the Committee Vice Chair and the Committee Clerk was based on the Bill completing the legislative process within the Assembly by early February.

It is not therefore possible at this time to effectively detail all of the implications should the Committee not meet the 30 day timescales for completion of the scrutiny of the Welfare Reform Bill. Understanding any parity and operational implications can only be undertaken once the Committee has completed the scrutiny stage and we are able to assess the impact on the other legislative stages of the Welfare Reform Bill. I would again highlight that the length of time taken by the Committee does have a direct impact on the overall legislative timescale and, if not achieved, will therefore have both service and financial consequences.

I hope this information is helpful.

Yours sincerely

Release of Business Cases to the Social Development Committee

Further to your letter of 8th November, in which you had requested, on behalf of the Social Development Committee, copies of each of the Outline Business Cases relating to Welfare Reform, I regret to inform you that it is not the policy of the Department to release these documents as they are considered to be policy under development, and the Outline Business Cases often contain commercially sensitive information.

As previously discussed the Department recognises the importance of keeping the Committee informed, at this time this would be best served through the issue of Strategic Outline Cases relating to Welfare Reform.

Dear Dr Pelan

Fostering Network - Impact of Housing Benefit under-occupation restriction

Thank you for your letter of 3 December 2012 regarding the concerns raised by Margaret Kelly, Director of the Fostering Network. First of all, I would like to apologise for the delay in responding.

I should point out that Ms Kelly has already raised her concerns with DHSSPS and this Department and has received full written responses.

It may be helpful if I explain that the introduction of the size criteria for working age claimants under-occupying in the social rented sector will bring the social rented sector more into line with the approach in the private rented sector, where the rate of Housing Benefit is related to the size of dwelling the claimant needs.

Size criteria will be used to determine whether there is under-occupation or not. There will be two different percentage reductions made to the maximum Housing Benefit available (generally speaking the person's eligible rent), based on whether the claimant is under-occupying their property by one bedroom (14% reduction), or by two or more bedrooms (25% reduction). The average reduction is likely to be £7 or £14 a week, depending on the level of under-occupation.

As with claims in the private rented sector, a room for a foster child will not be included when calculating how many bedrooms a family unit requires. Therefore, a household that has an extra room for a current or potential foster child will be treated as under-occupying.

However, the financial support that foster carers receive from social services helps them to meet the costs associated with caring for foster children and this support is disregarded in full for the purposes of Housing Benefit. If foster children were to be included in the household, then the fostering allowance would also have to be included as income so disregarding foster children in the assessment and then disregarding the fostering allowance as income is normally more beneficial to the claimant.

Contrary to what Ms. Kelly has stated, Discretionary Housing Payments are available in Northern Ireland and rather than creating blanket exemptions for broad categories, support will be made available by way of Discretionary Housing Payments.

This is considered a more appropriate mechanism to deal with vulnerable claimants. Discretionary Housing Payments offer flexibility based on local decisions helping ensure scarce resources can be targeted as needed. So as not to discourage foster carers, and in recognition that there may be cases where it would make sense to provide additional support, Discretionary Housing Payments could help, for example, to meet housing costs between placements. The Payments could also assist single people under age 35 who are foster carers, but who are receiving the shared accommodation rate of Housing Benefit.

The Discretionary Housing Payments budget here has been increased substantially, with £3.426million available in 2012-13, £6.944million in 2013-14, £5.939million in 2014-15 and £4.431million in 2015-16 and in 2016-17. This includes additional funding of £1.005m in each of the years from 2013/14 to 2016/17, specifically targeted at people who live in significantly adapted accommodation (due to someone in the household having a disability) and foster carers (including those between placements) who find themselves with a reduction in their Housing Benefit due to under-occupation.

While Discretionary Housing Payments were never intended to fully cover any reduction in Housing Benefit under the reforms or to meet everyone's needs they do provide a reasonable level of support to help people adversely affected by Housing Benefit reform.

I hope you find this information helpful

The Fostering Network Letter to Chair DSD re Welfare Reform 23.11.12

Mr Alex Maskey
Chair DSD Committee
NI Assembly
Parliament Buildings
Stormont Estate
Belfast
BT4 3XX

Dear Mr Maskey

I am writing to you in your capacity as Chair of the DSD Committee to raise with you a number of serious concerns regarding the Welfare Reform Bill and approved foster and kinship carers.

When the Welfare Reform Bill was progressing through Westminster there were a number of serious concerns regarding its impact on approved foster and kinship carers and their ability to continue to provide care for some of the most vulnerable children. As a result of this a number of assurances were given by the Westminster government and these were accepted by Department of Work and Pensions. I have detailed those assurances in the attached briefing paper and would request the Committee considers these and the need for them to be replicated here.

The single biggest issue the Welfare Reform Bill raises for approved foster and kinship carers is the housing under occupancy rule. It is not possible to become a foster carer unless there is a separate bedroom for each child or young person. However, the cost of this is covered by housing benefit. If we remove this from foster carers they will no longer be able to offer care for children and young people or may have to meet this cost themselves.

The response to this in Westminster was to include foster carers within the scope of the Bill but to add an addition to the Discretionary Housing Fund in-order that they could be compensated for the loss. There is no Discretionary Housing Fund in Northern Ireland so this is not a feasible solution and I am writing to the Committee to ask them to seek to insert a clause into the Bill that will exclude approved foster and kinship carers from the under occupancy rule.

I have attached for your information a briefing paper on this issue. I would welcome the opportunity to discuss this with the Committee as you scrutinise the Bill and look forward to your response.

Yours sincerely

The Fostering Network Final Welfare Reform Briefing 23.11.12

The Fostering Network NI – Issues for Foster and Kinship Carers in Welfare Reform

1. Introduction

- 1.1 The Fostering Network is the leading charity for foster and kinship carers in NI and we work to improve outcomes for children in care. We have 1900 members who are approved foster carers, including kinship carers, and we provide support, training and advice to ensure they can transform the lives of children in care.¹
- 1.2 We also deliver the flagship Fostering Achievement scheme on behalf of the Health and Social Care Board. This provides additional resources and support to improve the educational outcomes of children in care; it includes the award winning Letterbox Club.
- 1.3 The Fostering Network (UK) campaigned at Westminster to seek significant changes to the Welfare Reform Bill on behalf of foster carers a number of which were accepted by the Department for Work and Pensions.² However, there remain a number of outstanding issues with the Welfare Reform Bill as proposed that could have a significant impact on fostering and which the Fostering Network would ask the Committee to address. In particular we want to ensure that the DSD Committee replicates these assurances for approved foster and kinship carers in Northern Ireland.

2. Children in Care in NI

1. There are currently 2644 children and young people in care in NI. This represents a 5% increase since last year and an underlying trend of increases since 2006. There is nothing to suggest that this trend is about to change and we should expect for the next five years either a continuing upward trend of children coming into care or it remaining at a similar level.
2. At the same time that the overall numbers of children in care has continued to increase the percentage looked after in foster or kinship care has also continued to grow. In NI at March 2012 75% of the total number of children in care were cared for by either foster or approved kinship carers. This represents an 18% increase over the last six years.
3. Care Matters and Transforming Your Care have both clearly indicated that they see foster and kinship care as the placement of choice for the future of care in Northern Ireland. Residential care has continued to shrink in-terms of the percentage of young people placed there and while there will always be some young people for whom this is appropriate, the majority of children and young people should be placed in a family setting.

1 Throughout this briefing we refer to foster and kinship carers. These are both carers who are approved as foster carers by Health and Social Care Trusts and are caring for a looked after child or children. An approved kinship carer is a family member or friend of a looked after child who has been approved as a foster carer and provides their care. They are treated differently for the purposes of tax and benefits than informal kinship carers whose needs are not addressed within this briefing.

2 See <http://www.dwp.gov.uk/docs/ucpbn-8-foster-carers.pdf>

3. Foster and Kinship Care in NI

1. We currently have around 2000 approved foster and kinship carers in Northern Ireland. However, not all of these are available for full-time care placements and many carers only undertake respite care.
2. Each week here, there are 2 children who require foster care and for whom a placement cannot be found because of lack of carers. We are already in a deficit position with the number of carers and it is also the case that for foster care to work effectively there needs to be space in the system. Matching a child with the best carer possible for them means we should ideally have more carers than placements required so that we have space to choose properly for children and to ensure carers are not over-loaded with too many placements.
3. There are also on-going concerns about the demographics of foster and kinship carers. Many carers are older and have been caring for a significant period of time and may be unable to continue caring. The ability to recruit new foster and kinship carers is critical to the ongoing needs of the most vulnerable children who come into care.
4. The vast majority of foster carers in NI are recruited by Health and Social Care Trusts, with only around 8% recruited by independent or voluntary foster care providers.
5. Unlike the position in England and Wales the very vast majority of carers in NI are voluntary and are not paid a fee. We have a small percentage of fee paid carers but most carers only receive an allowance to cover the costs of feeding and clothing a child and covering the cost of pocket money and birthdays, Christmas and one holiday per year.
6. In both Britain and NI there are many foster and kinship carers who rely on the tax and benefit system to support the work they do. However, given that NI has a substantially lower number of fee paid foster carers than any reduction in their access to benefits will have a substantially higher impact.
7. The Welfare Reform Bill as it currently stands could have a significant impact on the ability of Health and Social Care Trusts to recruit foster and kinship carers and by default a significant impact on the most vulnerable children in NI.

4. Impact of 2011 Changes on Single Room Rents

1. In January 2011 there were changes to Local Housing Allowances that have already begun to impact on foster and kinship carers and their ability to provide care for children.
2. New regulations came into force that meant for single people under 35 years of age their housing benefit claim would be restricted to the cost of shared accommodation, regardless of the kind of accommodation they currently occupied.
3. The Fostering Network is aware of a number of cases where single carers, who have no children of their own but are providing a foster or kinship placement have had their Housing Benefit reduced and have had to find the difference themselves. In one case this amounted to having to find almost £40 per week. Clearly shared accommodation was not an option for this carer and yet there is no exemption under the new regulations. (SR2011 No 293 – the Housing Benefit (Amendment No 2) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2011.
4. The potential impact of further reducing access to housing benefit for approved foster and kinship carers could have a hugely detrimental effect on our ability to provide family based placements for children who need them.

5. Impact of Welfare Reform

1. As the Welfare Reform Bill was making its way through Westminster it became clear that it could have a significant impact on the ability of foster and kinship carers to offer a home to some of the most vulnerable children and young people.

2. A number of assurances were provided by the Westminster government in-relation to the impact of the Act on foster carers. These were:
 - Fostering Income would continue to be disregarded for the purposes of benefit calculation
 - The sole or main carer of fostered children under 16 would not have to seek work outside of fostering
 - Other exceptions may be made to reflect exceptional need
 - Benefit payments would run on for a period of eight weeks after a fostered child leaves the placement.
 3. The provisions under the Welfare Reform Bill in-relation to under- occupancy could both prevent people becoming foster or kinship carers and make it more difficult for those who currently are carers to continue.
 4. There was some recognition of this as the Bill passed through Westminster and it was agreed to create a ring-fenced fund that would provide additional support to carers.
 5. An additional sum was to be added to The Discretionary Housing Fund which would be applied to local authorities in Britain and was estimated to help 5,000 foster carers.
 6. Current evidence from the Fostering Network suggests that the discretionary nature of this support has not worked well. The response is patchy with some foster carers having access to the Fund and others not. The impact of this on foster placements is a significant cause of concern.
 7. The Discretionary Housing Fund does not operate in Northern Ireland. Therefore a compensation based solution is not possible and there is already a lack of parity.
 8. The Fostering Network calls on the Committee to insert an exemption into the clause in the Bill which removes entitlement to all rooms that are under-occupied for approved foster and kinship carers.
- 6. Priorities for DSD Committee
- 6.1 The Fostering Network in NI would ask the DSD Committee in their scrutiny of the Welfare Reform Bill to write to the Minister and ask him to clearly outline the impact of the Bill on Foster and Kinship Carers and to provide similar assurances as were given in Westminster.
 - 6.2 The Fostering Network would ask the DSD Committee to seek clarification from the Minister in-relation to the under occupation rule and its impact on approved foster and kinship carers. It would also ask the Committee to raise with the Minister inserting an exemption to the under occupation rule for approved foster and kinship carers.
 - 6.3 The Fostering Network would further ask the Committee to clarify with the Minister if he is unwilling to give an exemption to the under occupancy rule for approved foster carers and kinship carers how will he ensure they are compensated in a similar way to England.
 - 6.4 The Fostering Network would also ask the DSD Committee to write to the Minister regarding the impact of the single room rent on foster and kinship carers since its introduction.

Dear Alex

THE WELFARE REFORM BILL – SDC PRE-FORMAL SCRUTINY – KEY ISSUES

Thank you for agreeing to allow me the opportunity to meet with the Committee on 31 January to discuss the key issues arising from the Committee's pre-formal scrutiny of the Welfare Reform Bill (NI) which are outlined in Dr Pelan's letter dated 16 November 2012 to my Department.

Firstly I would like to put on record my appreciation of the amount of time and effort which the Committee has afforded to the scrutiny of the Welfare Reform Bill (the Bill). I think it's important that we satisfy ourselves that we have explored all avenues for flexibilities.

In advance of our discussion and, as an aid to your deliberations, please find the attached document which outlines my current thinking on these matters. Whilst I can appreciate the concerns expressed by Committee Members, and indeed I share many of those concerns, I must also be mindful of the financial position and the potentially wider ramifications for Block expenditure generally on any proposals to implement Welfare Reform differently in Northern Ireland.

As you are aware, quite apart from any discussion on parity, we depend on the IT Infrastructure supplied through the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) for delivering benefits here in Northern Ireland and any divergence from the proposed approach in Great Britain will most likely have a significant cost attached through either additional IT functionality or clerical workarounds.

In that context I would hope that at our meeting on 31st we can reach an agreed position on the issues raised and I will then seek the views of the Executive. The timescale is extremely tight if we are to complete the legislative process and maintain parity of timing with the rest of the UK in implementing these reforms. I have previously highlighted to Executive colleagues, as has Minister Wilson at the Executive Sub-Committee on Welfare Reform, that Whitehall has expressly reserved its right to review funding arrangements should it be considered there is undue delay and I would urge the Committee to do all it can to assist in that regard.

In the attached document at Annex 1, I have provided further clarification for the Committee on each issue, including costs where possible (Appendix 1) and a suggestion as to how to move forward in terms of our response.

I look forward to an informed discussion.

Yours sincerely

Nelson McCausland

Payments (listed as clause 2 but refers to clause 99)

Summary of issues raised:

Proposed amendment:

- UC payments are, by default, paid fortnightly;
- in the case of a joint application payments are made, by default, on a split basis; and
- in a joint application where one person is in paid employment, the payment is made, by default, to the second earner/primary carer.

Explanation

Twice monthly payments

The legislation already provides for payments frequency through the proposed Claims & Payments Regulations. Minister has already secured an agreement from DWP to enhance the IT system to deliver bi-monthly payments based on criteria¹ agreed in Northern Ireland when Universal Credit goes live in April 2014. Under this agreement the first payment has to be for a full month and not split – if someone needs a more frequent or split payment in the first month these will have to be done clerically.

To be able to offer a twice monthly payment or split payment from the start of the claim DWP has advised will require significant changes to the ICT over and above that already agreed.

The costs associated with the agreed ICT enhancements (i.e. those from Minister's announcement on 22 October) have not yet been definitively determined. It is anticipated that to deliver the fully automated choice suggested by Committee at data gather (i.e. at point of claim) will add significantly to these costs.

The Social Security Agency has provided a high level estimate at this stage of £12m per annum running costs for a population of 150,000 households in fortnightly payments (approximately 50% of current caseload). If all cases are to be paid fortnightly this would equate to £24m per annum based on current estimated caseload of 300,000 claims. This is based on full automation of payment arrangements with the clerical workarounds focusing on decision making, taking of claims, change of circumstances, dispute resolution and checking.

Split Payments

Clause 99 of the Welfare Reform Bill allows for split payments. Minister has secured an agreement from DWP to enhance the IT system to deliver split payments on request in exceptional circumstances when Universal Credit goes live in April 2014. The Social Security Agency is currently conducting a public consultation exercise on the criteria for splitting payments between joint claimants as noted overleaf.

Payments to Main Carer

Clause 99 of the Welfare Reform Bill allows for payment to a nominated person (i.e. main carer/second earner). This clause also allows for the Department to decide to whom the payment should be made irrespective of any nomination by the couple. The IT system will ask at data gather (point of claim) to whom the payment should be made.

¹ The criteria will be decided using the consultation process which SSA commenced on 15 November 2012

Proposed way forward

Minister shares the Committee's concerns around the monthly payment. Minister accepts that many claimants need more frequent payments. He has directed his officials to engage with members of the public and the voluntary and community sector to develop criteria for more flexible payment arrangements. Criteria are currently being developed to achieve a balance between delivering more frequent payments for all and only on an exceptional basis. The current estimated cost of everyone receiving twice monthly payments as the default position is in the region of £24m.

Minister wishes to discuss his criteria for increased frequency with the Committee before considering whether to approach the Executive regarding the additional cost to the NI Block.

Universal Credit Basic Conditions

(i) Claimant Commitment (clause 4)

Summary of issues raised:

Proposed amendment:

In the case of a joint application, where one person refuses to sign the claimant commitment the payment shall be made to the person who is willing to sign the claimant commitment.

Explanation

Universal Credit is a household benefit and as part of that, all claimants will be required to accept a claimant commitment as a condition of entitlement.

Clause 4 makes it a basic condition of entitlement that for joint claims to Universal Credit each claimant will be required to accept a claimant commitment, similar to the current position for joint claims to Jobseekers' Allowance.

The claimant commitment, will, for the first time, record the claimant's obligations and clarify what people are expected to do in return for benefits and support, including doing all that can reasonably be expected of them to find or prepare for work, and exactly what will happen if they fail to comply with these requirements.

The proposed Claims and Payments Regulations (Regulation 10) provide that if one member of a couple fails to sign a claimant commitment, then neither will be eligible if they continue to apply as a couple. A short cooling off period will be allowed for claimants to re-consider the impact on the household claim and to sign their claimant commitment before any decision is taken to disallow.

There is no provision for a claim to be made by the partner willing to sign the commitment as the Universal Credit claim is based on the joint income and savings of the members in the household. The provisions within Clause 2 (2) allow for Regulations to specify circumstances where a member of a couple may be treated as a single person, but it is not envisaged that this provision will be used to cover these circumstances.

Under the current arrangements, a couple making a joint claim to Jobseekers Allowance, must, among other things, satisfy availability and actively seeking work and agree a Jobseekers' Agreement. If a member of a couple does not satisfy these conditions then the legislation allows for benefit to be calculated for the member of the couple willing to comply as if they were a single claimant.

There will be no such provision within Universal Credit.

Proposed way forward

Whilst we appreciate the potential difficulty for claimants in these circumstances, for us to allow claims in such circumstances would be breaking parity and would have a cost attached. It is difficult to estimate the costs for this, but the number of claimants who are expected to be disallowed in these circumstances will probably be very low. Minister does not consider that a legislative change is appropriate.

(ii) Third party verification (clause 4)

Summary of issues raised:

Proposed amendment:

Where a person due to extenuating circumstances cannot provide all the required documentation to make a claim then there is provision made for third party verification, in lieu of required documentation (including identity documents), so that the claim can be made.

Explanation

Under the current Claims and Payments Regulations a person making a claim for benefit must provide certificates, documents, information and evidence as required. This provision is being carried forward into the proposed Universal Credit etc Claims and Payments Regulations.

How evidence is currently accepted is in guidance and while there is nothing specific on handling 3rd party evidence, in practice if it is from a reputable source e.g. social services, it is accepted to kick-start a claim from someone who is homeless and/or vulnerable.

Guidance will cover, as it does currently, the continued acceptance of third party verification where appropriate.

The IT identity security system (IRIS) will flag up a range of risks or concerns including those originating from identity trust flags. In such cases, there will be an identification task generated requiring resolution, including third party verification, through face to face contact with staff in the office.

There should be no difficulty for claimants without bank accounts as the Simple Payment Service will enable such vulnerable claimants to access their money without conventional ID documents.

Proposed way forward

Minister will provide an assurance that the current practice allowing third party verification for vulnerable claimants will carry forward and that such claimants will still be able to make a claim and have their money paid either via a bank account (if held) or via the Simple Payment service which is aimed at claimants who don't have access to a bank account. No legislative amendment is required.

(iii) 16/17 year olds registered on training but not placed (clause 4)

Summary of issues raised:

That 16 and 17 year olds who have come out of care or who are registered for training with the Employment Service but have not secured an immediate placement should also be added to the list of specified groups, to mirror the current provision for discretionary hardship payments under Jobseekers' Allowance.

Explanation

16/17 year olds registered on training but not placed

Department for Employment and Learning's (DEL) Training for Success (TfS) programme provides a guaranteed training opportunity for 16/17 year olds and that guarantee must be met.

DEL is not aware of any 16/17 year olds on a waiting list as such. Some 16/17 year olds may have to wait if there is a particular programme they want to get onto and the supplier does not have a place at that point in time, however while waiting for that particular placement the 16/17 year old will be provided with other type of work-based placement.

Those on the TfS are paid a non-means tested Education Maintenance Allowance of £40 a week while in training. This arrangement is unique to Northern Ireland.

16/17 year olds in these circumstances would be eligible for assistance, providing they met criteria, from the proposed Discretionary Support Scheme only where they are estranged from their family and householders in their own right in circumstances where they meet loan/grant eligibility criteria.

16/17 year olds coming out of care

Discretionary Support will be extended to 16/17 year olds by exception - by this we mean where the applicant is estranged from their family and potentially a householder in their own right. In these circumstances the applicant would potentially qualify for both loan/grant provision providing other criteria low income, risk to health and safety, crisis situation etc are satisfied.

A 16/17 year old coming out of care (if re-establishing/setting up home in the community) would satisfy grant criteria - potentially on the grounds to establish them in the community or under hardship criteria. For a young person coming out of care back into family home a parent or responsible adult could make an application to cover costs associated with 16/17 rejoining the family home but 16/17 year old could not make an application in their own right.

Under this clause as an under-18 year old care leaver cannot qualify for Universal Credit unless they are part of a benefit unit with responsibility for a child (either as a lone parent or as part of a couple) or a limited capability for work or work related activities recipient. Care leavers cannot qualify on the grounds that they are without parental support or pregnancy post-confinement/or as a carer.

Where the care leaver is still eligible (because they are a lone parent or are disabled) they will be excluded from the housing element of UC.

We do not have any figures on the number of hardship payments made to 16/17 year olds but a total of 413 hardship payments were made during 2011/12.

Proposed way forward

Minister notes the Committee's concerns on both these issues. However, we do not believe that there is a strong enough case for making exceptions for those on training schemes. The position for those in care is that these cases should be dealt with outside of the social security system. Help from the new Discretionary Support Scheme may be available in particular circumstances for those leaving care as outlined above. No legislative amendment is required.

(iv) Restrictions on entitlement (clause 6)

Summary of issues raised:

Proposed amendment:

The Committee seeks reassurance from the Minister that there shall be no loss of passported benefits as a result of clause 6.

Explanation

This clause allows for payment not to be made where it is below a certain amount and would be administratively prohibitive to pay the claimant. The policy intention is that payment of UC will not be made where the claim is for less than 7 days (including waiting days). However, the notification will state that the claimant has an underlying entitlement to Universal Credit so as to allow them to access passport benefits where appropriate.

Proposed way forward

Minister notes the Committee's concern and can reassure the Committee that the notification/award notice will make it clear that an underlying entitlement exists to enable claimants to be able to access passport benefits. No legislative amendment is required.

(v) Responsibility for children and young people (clause 10)

Summary of issues raised:

Proposed amendment:

The Committee expressed serious concern about this clause and sought further information on how many people this would affect.

Explanation

Families with children will be able to receive an amount in their Universal Credit award for each dependent child called the child element. Families with one or more disabled children will be eligible for extra support through the disabled child addition which is payable on top of the child element.

Under Universal Credit, the aim is to simplify existing provision and align the disabled child additions with the additional elements for disabled adults.

Universal Credit will have a two-tier system of support for disabled children: - a lower disabled child addition and a higher rate disabled child addition.

Entitlement to the disabled child additions under Universal Credit will continue to be linked to the child's eligibility to Disability Living Allowance, or its replacement, Personal Independence Payment, where appropriate for a young person, as in the current system.

The Coalition Government has also extended eligibility for the severely disabled child additions to children who are severely visually impaired who currently only qualify for the disabled child element in Child Tax Credits.

The Universal Credit rate payable to severely disabled children will be almost £353 per month, which is higher than the current Child Tax Credit equivalent (£345 per month). The lower rate of Universal Credit disabled child element will be less than the lower rate of Child Tax Credits (currently £245 p/month) the Universal Credit lower rate will be £123 per mth.

Eligibility for the disabled child additions will, as now, will be linked to the rate of Disability Living Allowance received. There are currently 15,837 child recipients of the Care Component of Disability Living Allowance, which includes 8,257 Lower or Middle Rate cases and 7,580 Higher Rate cases.

Universal Credit will not replicate the range of complex premiums paid to disabled adults and children in the current system. The money saved from abolishing these premiums will be recycled and used to target support at those disabled people with the greatest need.

Existing claimants moving onto Universal Credit will have their award protected by Transitional Protection. This will ensure that current benefit claimants will not receive less as a result of their move to Universal Credit, where circumstances remain the same.

A high level estimate of the recipients of Child Tax Credits shows that there are 7,600 children receiving Disabled Child element and 6,000 children receiving the Severely Disabled Child element. This means that potentially there are 6,000 children who will receive more and 7,600 children who will receive less under Universal Credit. Potential costs to reinstate to Child Tax Credits lower rate £11.293m approx [Child Tax Credits rate – Universal Credit rate x 7,600]

The calculation of this payment will require to be clerically based and adjustments made on a monthly basis. This will require additional staffing but no estimate is available based on confirmed processes for making these payments.

For working parents, there is a higher in-work allowance (earnings disregard) for those in receipt of a disabled child element which should help offset any reduction in benefit.

During the passage of the Welfare Reform Act, Lord Freud committed to undertaking a review of the gateway which passports children to the disability additions under UC. This work is not expected to begin until 2015, by which time DWP should have gathered sufficient evidence from work Department for Education is undertaking to explore moving towards a single assessment for a child's social care, health care and special education needs as well as learning from the introduction of Personal Independent Payment.

Finally, any household in receipt of Disability Living Allowance or Working Tax Credits will be excluded from the Benefit Cap.

Proposed way forward

Whilst Minister understands and shares the concerns of the Committee of the potentially lower rates payable for disabled children, any decision to increase or vary the Disabled Child addition is a clear breach of parity and will have an estimated cost attached as outlined above circa £11.3m with additional administration costs.

Minister wishes to discuss with the Committee whether they wish to pursue this change.

(vi) Other particular needs or circumstances (clause 12)

Summary of issues raised:

Proposed amendment:

The Committee expressed concern about the removal of the Severe Disability Premium.

Explanation

Universal Credit will be a radical simplification and entail abolition of all existing premiums/additions with the savings used to recycle support to those with limited capability for work or work related activity.

There will be no direct passporting from DLA (except for children), so entitlement to an additional element within the UC award will only be for those who have limited capability for work(LCW) (or limited capability for work and work –related activity).

The limited capability for work elements will replace the 7 different disability components within the current system of benefits and tax credits. These are paid at different rates, have different qualifying conditions and different purposes.

There will be a single assessment for these elements, so people who are in work will have to qualify for them on the basis of limited capability for work. The assessment will be made through the Work Capability Assessment, also used to assess people for ESA.

Work is ongoing to develop a process to identify individuals who are likely to have LCW and ensure support is provided to a similar group currently supported by the Working Tax Credit Disability Element.

Under the current system, there is a very small difference between the two Employment and Support (ESA) components – some £5. The Coalition Government believes that people who need the support the most should get more money.

As part of the Welfare Reform changes, as resources become available, the Coalition Government intends to raise the weekly rate of the support component (equivalent to £34.05 today) in stages to around £81 per week. This will help to focus resources more effectively on the most severely disabled people.

As Universal Credit will mean that Tax Credits will no longer be available, including the disability elements support should be available to people both in and out of work to reinforce work incentives.

Higher Earnings Disregard and Single Taper: creating a work incentive, which allows people to earn between £1,330 a year (i.e. the disregard floor) and £7,759 a year before the standard Universal Credit taper applies – thus keeping 100% of their earnings up to that level before Universal Credit starts to be withdrawn at a rate of 65%;

Two Additions: consisting of a higher addition (support component equivalent), ultimately worth around £70.08 per week (up from £34.05 in 2012); and lower addition (work-related activity component equivalent), worth £28.53 per week (£28.15 as now in 2012). Payment is based on the single assessment.

Equalised additions for adults and children including increased support for the most severely disabled children: The cash additions for families with disabled children and the cash additions for adults will be aligned, with the lower rate at £28.53 and the upper rate at around £81.44 per week. The higher amount is £24.81 per week more than the current rate. The Government will also extend eligibility for the higher rate to children who are severely visually impaired who currently only qualify for the disabled child element in Child Tax Credit (those registered or certified as blind). Eligibility for the disabled child additions will, as now, be linked to the rate of Disability Living Allowance they receive.

Within Universal Credit individuals will only qualify for either a disability or a carer element, not both. The coalition Government is removing current overlapping provision that allows people to simultaneously claim an addition by virtue of a medical condition and a carer element for themselves to reflect the fact that the additions are paid in respect of not being able to work through either a medical condition or by virtue of caring responsibilities. However, as now, couples could get a disability addition for one member and the carer element for the other partner.

As resources become available the Coalition Government intends to raise the weekly rate of the support component equivalent from £34.05 today in stages to around £81.44. This will help to focus resources more effectively on severely disabled people.

New or revised claims will have access to higher earnings disregards and the modeling shows that there is greater incentive for a disabled person to work than for non disabled person. [EQIA April 2012: The Participation Tax Rate (the lower the PTR the greater the incentive to work) below 60% for 10 hours p.w. work for a disabled person rises from 14% under the current system to 90% under UC; for a non disabled person the rates are 31% to 99%].

Any claimant in receipt of DLA/PIP (including any child within the household) will be excluded from the Benefit Cap.

Proposed way forward

We note the Committee's concerns but this is very clearly a parity issue, with significant costs attached to do anything differently within the social security arena.

If a severe disability premium were to be introduced to Universal Credit it would cost in the region of £52.6m per annum if paid in line with existing benefit rules and rates. (number of claimants currently in receipt 17,000 x current annual rate of premium £59.50 x 52weeks). Note IT system would not calculate this therefore a clerical work-around would be needed to pay this resulting in an increase in administration costs.

Minister is not prepared to consider this amendment due to (i) the amount involved and (ii) the overall changes as outlined above planned to the disability addition under Universal Credit.

(vii) Capability for work or work related activity (clause 38)

Summary of issues raised:

Proposed amendment:

The Committee agreed to recommend that medical evidence is given 'primacy' in any medical assessment relating to Welfare Reform.

Explanation

This clause allows us to continue to use the Work Capability Assessment when determining whether a claimant has Limited Capability for Work, and if so, whether they also have Limited Capability for Work-Related Activity and eligibility for an additional element within a Universal Credit award.

All available evidence, including medical evidence from GPs, is fully considered by the Department's Decision Makers. There are processes in place to request this evidence where relevant. However, GPs are not experts in disability assessment and, as advocates for their patients, are not best-placed to make an independent decision which affects benefit entitlement.

The Work Capability Assessment is not based on diagnosis of condition but on the functional effects on an individual. The assessments are conducted by qualified healthcare professionals who have been specifically trained in disability assessment.

Where the department requests medical evidence from the GP or Consultant, the department will meet any costs incurred. However, where a claimant obtains medical evidence on their own behalf and a GP or Consultant charges, then this is an issue for DHSSPS and the GP/Consultant contract.

Issues or concerns about the qualifications or appropriateness of the Health Professional carrying out the assessment is a contractual issue and should be dealt with under the terms of the contract.

It is important to note that the contractor only provides advice to the Department on capability for work – they do not make decisions on benefit entitlement. Decision making standards here are significantly higher than in DWP and our Decision Makers are at the heart of the process.

Assessments for disability benefits always have higher levels of appeals than other benefits. If a decision is overturned at appeal, it does not necessarily mean that the original decision was inaccurate – often, claimants produce new evidence to their appeal.

We are introducing a number of measures to reduce appeal rates – including explaining the decision to claimants and ensuring they have submitted all the available evidence and improving the feedback, communication and training between the agencies involved.

Proposed way forward

Minister notes the Committee's concerns but (i) wishes to advise the Committee that medical evidence is part of the package of evidence considered by Decision Makers; (ii) the department is introducing a number of measures aimed at reducing the number of appeals; and (iii) suggests that the Committee considers writing to the Health Committee asking them to consider the issue of GPs/Consultants charging claimants to supply evidence in support of their claim.

(viii) Pilot schemes (clause 42)

Summary of issues raised:

Proposed amendment:

- (i) The Committee agreed to express concerns that Northern Ireland has not been included in any pilot schemes to date.
- (ii) The Committee was of the view that the objectives of the pilot schemes as defined in the Bill were too restrictive and wanted the Department to consider broadening these.
- (iii) The Committee agreed that the Bill should reflect inclusion of Northern Ireland in future pilot schemes where appropriate.

Explanation

- (i) The purpose of this clause is to give the Department the powers to have pilot schemes in NI. Before any pilot schemes can take place we need to have in place statutory cover (i.e. the Welfare Reform Bill) and supporting regulations.

In order to inform the budgeting support and Flexible Payment Arrangements activities we are planning on running a small-scale Payment Support Trial.

The Local Authority pilots currently in place in GB are aimed at testing the payment of housing costs to claimants; as the Northern Ireland policy position is to pay the Housing Element of Universal Credit direct to the landlord by default these pilots have no relevance here.

- (ii) The objectives listed are broad enough to allow for any pilot schemes that we would wish to undertake – for example – increasing the taper or increasing the different additional elements such as that payable for disabled child or for limited capability for work.
- (iii) Where appropriate, the learning arising from any pilot conducted within GB will be considered for its application within Northern Ireland.

Proposed way forward

As regards the objectives defined within the Bill, Minister does not agree that any broadening is required. Minister notes the Committee's concerns and will write to Lord Freud, at final stage, conveying the Committee's views about including Northern Ireland in future pilots so that the Northern Ireland demographics can influence the application of learning from any such pilots within GB.

Housing

Summary of issues raised:

Proposed amendment:

The Committee opposes the introduction of under-occupancy and opposes the zero earnings limit on Support for Mortgage Interest.

Explanation

Support for Mortgage Interest (clause 11)

Details of Support for Mortgage Interest (SMI) will be provided within Regulations, and are not included within the Bill.

The Chancellor announced within the Autumn Statement that the temporary changes to SMI have been extended until 2015 for working-age SMI claims. The waiting period will remain at 13 weeks and the working-age capital limit will remain at £200,000 until 31 March 2015.

The Coalition Government has proposed that a zero earnings limit will apply with regard to SMI assistance under UC. Although this would seem perverse logic with regard to incentivizing individuals to take up or increase part-time work it is considered that the UC tapers and disregards will help ensure that no-one should be disadvantaged by the zero earnings rule.

We cannot provide an overall figure for SMI for 2011/12, figures can only be provided as a snapshot at a given time each month. Figures for Mortgage Interest paid direct for Income Support and Jobseekers' Allowance were 5,560 and 1,850 respectively in May 2012. We do not receive Mortgage Interest direct figures for any other benefits. However, there were 3,028 Employment Support Allowance cases with housing loan costs. The average weekly amount for SMI is £27.66 for Income Support claimants and £38.77 for Jobseekers' Allowance claimants.

Proposed Way Forward

A high level estimation of cost if SMI were to be retained would be £18m (number of claimants (10,438 x average of IS and JSA amounts (£33.21) x 52 weeks). Note IT system would not perform this calculation due to divergence from GB therefore a clerical work-around would be needed to pay this resulting in an increase in administration costs. We are not supportive of any proposal to depart from the policy intention.

Under-occupancy (listed as clause 11 but refers to clause 69)

This change to Housing Benefit affects working-age claimants living in social rented sector housing to reflect household size, as happens now in the private rented sector.

There will be two different percentage reductions made, to the maximum Housing Benefit available, based on whether the claimant is under-occupying their property by one bedroom, or by two or more bedrooms. The specific rates of reduction will be 14 per cent if there is under-occupation by one bedroom, and 25 per cent if under-occupying is by two bedrooms or more, an average reduction in the region of £7 or £14 per week, depending on the level of under-occupation.

In Northern Ireland it is not expected that NIHE or Housing Associations will reclassify rooms based on the under occupancy condition as this would impact on rental revenue streams but it is anticipated that guidance would recommend that rooms with an area of 40 sq ft or less would be treated as a box room. DWP has indicated it will not prescribe size criteria for 'box rooms' – this will be left to LA's and Housing Associations.

Current estimates from NIHE suggest that around 26,168 of working age tenants will be affected by the under-occupation rule. These figures illustrate that 18,850 under occupy by one bedroom and 7,318 under occupy by 2 bedrooms or more. Based on average NIHE rent of £58.76 (2012/13) affected tenants will see deductions in HB of approximately £8.25 (one bedroom) or £14.70 (two or more bedrooms) per week depending on the level of under occupation.

Figures for Housing Associations show there are 14,757 working age Housing Association tenants in receipt of Housing Benefit. Due to a number of issues around data matching, it has not been possible to assess the levels of under-occupation in all cases. It is currently estimated that the total number of working age Housing Association tenants affected by the changes will be around 6262. Of that number 5046 would be under-occupying by one bedroom and 1216 by two or more bedrooms. Based on a mean weekly Housing association rental of £81.69 (2010/11), affected tenants will see an average deduction of £11.44 (one bedroom) and £20.42 (2 bedrooms).

The total annual shortfall for both NIHE & Housing Associations is estimated at £17,331,120.

The Discretionary Housing Payments budget here has been increased substantially, with £3.426million available in 2012-13, £6.944million in 2013-14, £5.939million in 2014-15 and £4.431million in 2015-16 and in 2016-17 to help with issues arising out of reform to housing.

This includes additional funding of £1.005m in each of the years from 2013/14 to 2016/17, specifically targeted at those in adapted accommodation and foster carers affected by the under-occupation restriction. It has not been ring fenced for those people and some of it could be available for other vulnerable people if, for example, it looks like there would be an under-spend. The Payments provide a reasonable level of support to help people affected by Housing Benefit reform. The funding level is reviewed every year.

We want to keep the system as simple as possible. Housing Benefit assessors and, in the future, the Universal Credit system will not be able to establish whether a bedroom is suitable for sharing or not.

The Chartered Institute of Housing has published guidance specifically aimed at landlords to help them with implementation of the size criteria rules and this is available on its website.

Proposed way forward

Minister shares some of the concerns expressed by the Committee around the issues of housing and under occupancy. Minister recently raised the issue of under occupancy and the housing situation in Northern Ireland with Lord Freud. The Northern Ireland Housing Executive and Federation of Housing Associations have also presented their concerns to Lord Freud. Any departure from the proposals will have a significant cost impact to revenue streams as outlined above in the region of £17m per annum.

Sanctions (conditionality) (clause 26)

Summary of issues raised:

Proposed amendment:

The Committee agreed to ask the Minister if there was room for variation in respect of the proposed sanction regime.

Explanation

Clause 26 provides for financial sanctions for those claimants who are subject to all work-related requirements and, without good reason, fail to meet their most important responsibilities.

Most people want to find work and will never be in the position of facing a sanction – the vast majority of claimants comply with requirements. However, for a small minority of claimants who fail to meet their obligations without good reason – an effective sanctions system is needed that encourages responsibility and deters non-compliance.

It is important to note that a three year sanction will only apply to claimants who are subject to all work related requirements and who have deliberately and repeatedly avoided their most important responsibilities. They will have received at least two previous high level sanctions (within a limited period) and the consequences of continued non-compliance will have been clearly explained. This will be clearly set out in regulations. We estimate that very few claimants will be subject to a three year sanction.

The diagram at Appendix 2 sets out the proposed sanctions periods and estimated amounts dependent on the nature of the non compliance. It also sets out the number of claimants sanctioned under the current system.

Proposed way forward

Any variation in the sanction regime would be a breach of parity and mean that a claimant here who doesn't comply with the requirements of their claimant commitment may be treated more advantageously than a claimant in similar circumstances elsewhere. There would also potentially be costs attached to any variation in the sanction regime, insofar as benefit would be payable earlier than what is proposed and what is set out in the Regulations arising out of the GB Welfare Reform Act. It is difficult to determine the cost of any proposed change to duration of sanction as under Universal Credit the sanction period increases for repeat offences and the statistics currently available do not specify how many are first offences and how many are repeat offences.

However, Minister has considered the concerns expressed and will pursue the possibility of varying the sanction regime with DWP. Sanctions for fraud purposes are discussed later in this document.

Contracting out (clause 45)

Summary of issues raised:

Proposed amendment:

The Committee agreed to seek assurances from the Minister that this clause does not provide for privatisation of services delivered by the public sector.

Explanation

The Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) has a vital role to play in the provision, development and management of employment programmes in the context of continuing Welfare Reform. The purpose of this clause is to enable DEL to be able to use Work Service and Training Providers, including voluntary and community sector providers, as is currently the practice.

Proposed way forward

Whilst this is an issue primarily for Department for Employment and Learning, Minister wishes to confirm that there are no plans to use this clause to privatise services currently delivered by the public sector.

Employment and Support Allowance

(i) Timelimiting contribution-based ESA to 365 days (Clause 52)

Summary of issues raised:

- (i) The Committee sought information from the Department on whether there would be a lead-in time for this to allow people to prepare;
- (ii) The Committee would like to know where the savings realised from this restriction would be directed;
- (iii) The Committee also wished to know if there was any impact on other benefits people might be entitled to.

Explanation

- (i) The Social Security Agency will write, in advance, to all those claimants not in the support group, who will have received 365 days of contribution-based ESA when the changes are introduced and advise them of the date their entitlement to contribution-based ESA will end and invite them to make a claim for income-related ESA.

In GB claimants in receipt of contribution-based ESA have already had their benefit restricted from 1 May 2012. They were advised in September 2011 of the intention to withdraw their benefit and invited to claim income-related ESA. The lead-in time between the issue of the notifications and the restriction on benefit was 7 months. The Social Security Agency intend to write shortly to affected claimant's, in a similar fashion to GB, to advise of the forthcoming change.

- (ii) Contribution-based ESA is a National Insurance Fund benefit. Social Security spending in Northern Ireland is classified as Annually Managed Expenditure (AME) and is outside of the Northern Ireland Executive managed funds. It is demand led in nature and Northern Ireland only draws down its actual needs. This will mean that any amounts not used or required will accrue directly to HM Treasury.

Treasury is including all aspects of public expenditure including AME and Departmental Expenditure Limits (DEL) in their spending decisions. This will mean that spending on AME will impact the funds made available to Departments in Great Britain and the NI Executive managed block DEL in this and the next spending review.

- (iii) The loss of contribution-based ESA may result in payment of income-related ESA (subject to capital and other rules) or an increase in working tax credits if a partner is working.

Only claimants who have alternative resources available to them will not qualify for income-related ESA.

The main reason for not being eligible for income-related ESA would be in those cases where a claimant's partner is working more than 24 hours a week (and therefore should be able to claim an increase in working tax credits and/or child tax credits). This is the case for 71% of those whom we expect not to qualify for income-related ESA.

It is important to note that claimants will be able to re-qualify for a further year of contribution-based ESA if they leave benefit for more than 12 weeks and they meet the National Insurance conditions in full, without using the same two tax years of their previous claim. This will provide the same approach to how a person may re-qualify for contribution-based Jobseeker's Allowance at present.

Proposed way forward

Minister shares the Committee's concerns around the timelimiting of contribution-based ESA to 12 months, however the cost of not implementing this measure is approximately £3m per month.

Minister would like to discuss with the Committee the additional cost of extending the period of contribution-based ESA to more than 12 months before approaching the Executive.

- (ii) ESA youth claimants (Clause 54)

Summary of issues raised:

- (i) The Committee wish to know how many people this would affect;
- (ii) The Committee also wishes to know what will happen to the estimated 3% of people who do not move to income-related ESA and what conditions are attached to income-related ESA.

Explanation

- (i) A scan of the ESA liveload at 2 November 2012 shows that there are only 2 claimants under the age of 20 years who are not in the support group and not in receipt of income-related ESA.
- (ii) Income-related ESA is payable where the claimant:-
- does not have income, including the income of their partner, that exceeds their applicable amount;
 - does not have capital, including the capital and savings of their partner, exceeding £16,000;

- is not entitled to Pension Credit ;
- does not have a partner who is entitled to income-related ESA, Pension Credit, Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance;
- does not have a partner who is working over 24 hours;
- is not receiving education.

Those without their own income or capital will be paid income-related ESA at the same rate as contribution-based ESA. If claimants have their own income or capital to take into account, their income-related ESA would be slightly lower depending on the level of that other income.

No other contributory benefit waives its conditions of receipt for any other age or client group.

Proposed way forward

There is an equality issue here in that no other contributory benefit waives its conditions of receipt for any other age or client group. Claimants will have access to income-related ESA if they do not have sufficient income or savings to support themselves.

The 2 claimants under the age of 20 years who are not in the support group and not in receipt of income-related ESA, do not qualify either because they have capital of £16,000 or more and so are excluded because they have capital in excess of the limits to qualify for benefits, or they have a partner who works 24 hours a week or more and therefore Working Tax Credit may be payable instead (or Universal Credit when it becomes available).

Minister does not believe that there is a strong enough case for making exceptions as this proposal puts young people on the same footing as other groups and treat them in the same way in relation to entitlement based on paid National Insurance contributions.

Personal Independence Payment

Temporary absence (Clause 76)

Summary of issues raised:

The Committee was concerned about length of time a person is allowed to spend abroad is too short.

Explanation

Although a 4 week period for temporary absence has been detailed through public consultation and the evidence provided by Departmental officials to Committee, the DWP response to the public consultation published on 13 December 2012 confirms that this period will actually be set at a period of 13 weeks.

The period of temporary absence is not on the face of the Bill, but will be set out in Regulations under Clause 76(3).

Proposed way forward

We hope the Committee and stakeholders will welcome the change to 13 weeks and be reassured that the Minister will continue to raise the issues of both the number of claimants here and the higher incidence of mental illness here amongst claimants with DWP Ministers.

Prisoners on remand (Clause 86)

Summary of issues raised:

The Committee has raised concerns about the daily living component not being paid to someone on remand who is subsequently released.

Explanation

When someone is detained in legal custody or serving a prison sentence the duty of care to provide for an individual's disability-related needs falls to the Prison Service together with health care provided for by a Health and Social Care Trust. This means that it is those bodies that will meet the detained person's disability needs. It would, therefore, be inappropriate to continue to pay Personal Independence Payment in addition as that would represent a duplication of funds.

It is proposed that Personal Independence Payment will be payable for a short period, perhaps 28 days after someone goes into prison. Providing such a period of continued benefit will help to ensure that a person does not leave prison with an overpayment which has to be paid.

Proposed way forward

Minister notes the Committee's concerns but believes that the policy intention to treat those people on remand or who have their conviction quashed in the same way as people are treated who go into hospital and that is a fair and equitable approach.

Timing of report to the Assembly (Clause 88)

Summary of issues raised:

The Committee has concerns that the time period for a report to the Assembly on the operation of assessments under section 79 is too long.

The Committee therefore requests that the time period under 88(a) should be amended from 2 to 1 year and in 88(b) from 4 years to 2 years.

Explanation

Officials have clarified that it is important to ensure that the new benefit is operating correctly, but believe that annual reviews are not the best way forward. Two reviews, reporting within two years and four years of the primary legislation coming into operation, will allow for a full evaluation of the operation of the assessment.

DWP is currently planning for their year one report to be laid by December 2014. This would allow them to make any changes in time for the managed reassessment start.

The Committee is aware of the decision to delay the managed reassessment of current DLA claimants until October 2015. If new PIP claims do not begin until October 2013 in Northern Ireland, a requirement to have an annual report would take us to October 2014 and DWP has already undertaken to report in December 2014.

There will be cost implications in producing a year one report. DWP has advised that the annual cost of the Work Capability Assessment Harrington review is approximately £100,000 – this does not include the DWP staff Team who supported him in the work.

Issues around a 'One year Report' i.e. June 2014:

DWP are currently planning for their year one report to be laid by December 2014. This would allow them to make any changes in time for the managed reassessment start. To deliver on this December 2014 date the fieldwork and evidence gathering will have to start early in 2014 so while the Report to the Assembly would not formally be presented until 18 months after PIP has started the actual evaluation work has commenced in year 1 of the scheme.

In terms of practicalities, if Northern Ireland were to deviate from the DWP approach e.g. laying a report within one year it would take at least six months to complete the field work prior to that date meaning that the Report would be looking only at a small number of claims. In addition there would not be sufficient numbers of people that have worked their way right through the system e.g. through the dispute process etc. Given this scenario it could be argued that there would not be sufficient data to allow an informed judgment to be made about changes that would be required to the PIP assessment criteria.

It is also worth noting that if Northern Ireland were to examine cases in the period June to December 2013 that no existing DLA claimants would have gone through the process to migrate to PIP, just new claimants. The particular concern expressed by Committee was on the impact of the new criteria on those existing claimants and that data would not be available in a June 2014 report.

Even if there was a NI specific Report (separate from GB) the assessment criteria/descriptors are determined nationally and it is not clear how any recommendations could be implemented as DWP would be unlikely to consider any changes until they complete their UK wide review.

It is intended that DWP will provide guidance to providers on carrying out Personal Independence Payment assessments, including the collection of evidence, carrying out paper-based assessments and inviting claimants to face-to-face assessments and if that guidance needed changed in the intervening period before the year one review was completed then that would be considered .

Proposed way forward

Minister is sympathetic to the Committee's concerns, however in terms of practicalities if Northern Ireland were to deviate from the DWP approach e.g. laying a report within one year, it would take six months to complete the field work prior to that date meaning that the report would be considering a small number of claims. In addition there would not be a sufficient number of people who have worked their way right through the process, and in these circumstances there would be insufficient data for an informed judgement to be made about changes that would be required to the PIP assessment criteria.

Minister wishes to discuss with the Committee the value of pursuing annual reviews of PIP.

Recovery of benefit overpayments (Clause 109)Summary of issues raised:

- (i) The Committee was unhappy about what it perceived to be an inherent unfairness in compelling a claimant to repay an overpayment when the overpayment was due to Departmental error.
- (ii) The Committee is seeking a review of the de minimis level below which recovery of the overpayment will not be sought. This level is currently established at £65.

Explanation

- (i) Officials have clarified that although the Department must take responsibility for its mistakes that this does not give people the right to keep money to which they are not entitled and that the Department must take action to recover overpayments in order to protect public funds.

In 2011-12, the Social Security Agency's Debt Centre, in accordance with recovery rules, had total write off relating to official error of approximately £11.25m. Under Welfare Reform, this would remain on the SSA balance sheet and form part of the customer debts for pursuit through appropriate recovery methods. Additional AME recoveries may be generated as a result and these may not equate to the full level of official error which would be held in the debt balance post welfare reform.

- (ii) Small overpayment limit – the £65 limit is set by Treasury, so parity applies.

In 2011-12, the Agency's Debt Centre had total small overpayment write-offs of £0.58m (volume approx 22k). Any deviation from parity would represent a loss of AME recoveries. Based on 2011-12 write-off volumes, every £1 increase in the small overpayment limit for NI would attract a cost of £22k for NI (based on a cost of £1 per customer and assuming the same level of customers are captured within the new overpayment limit) If the limit is raised ultimately more customers would fall into the overpayment write off bracket increasing the cost to Northern Ireland

Table below illustrates various levels:

Small overpayment limit £	NI Annual DEL cost £k (est. Volume = 22,000)
70	110
75	220
80	330
85	440
90	550
95	660
100	770

General

Any decision to pursue recovery does take into consideration an individual's financial and personal circumstances and there are well-established hardship provisions in place and if someone engages with the Department, it may be that their circumstances would result in a lower repayment rate being appropriate or the overpayment not being recovered at all.

The small overpayment limit is aligned with DWP. Change would represent a breach in parity as it would impact on cashflow to Treasury (i.e. amounts of AME written off in NI would be higher than in GB). Any reduction associated with a parity breach could result in a cost to the NI Block in line with the rules governing the funding arrangements for AME expenditure between HM Treasury and Northern Ireland.

Proposed way forward

Minister hopes that the Committee understands that there are particular criteria which must be satisfied before any decision to waive recovery of an overpayment is made. The Department will consider the “Overpayment Recovery Guidance”, to see if any additional clarification is needed for Decision Makers.

Before approaching the Executive I wish to discuss with the Committee if it is minded to pursue its opposition to the Department’s intention to compel claimants to repay an overpayment due to Departmental error and to pursue a review of the de minimis level below which recovery of the overpayment will not be sought, as this will incur additional costs.

Fraud Sanctions

(i) Level of fines

Penalty in respect of benefit fraud not resulting in overpayment (Clause 109) and Amount of penalty (Clause 110)

Summary of issues raised:

The Committee was unhappy with the level of fines and thought these were disproportionate. The Committee are seeking the Department to review these levels.

Explanation

The Department acknowledges the Committee’s concern in those cases where people are facing a £350 Admin Penalty where no loss was incurred. The Committee’s view was the penalty for an attempt should be some form of caution.

Frauds begin as an attempt and, if successful and not identified at the outset, turn into actual frauds as benefit begins to be paid. Frauds on average when identified have run to around £4,000 – with some cases going to extremes of over £50,000 uncovered. There needs to be some deterrent to prevent claimants from attempting to commit fraud.

Clause 109 provides an alternative to the current situation whereby the only redress for the Department to deal with an attempted fraud is court action. Current legislation only allows a penalty to be offered where there has been an overpayment of benefit. This means that the Department is restricted to prosecuting such cases; which may be neither a proportionate response nor a cost effective one. Admin Penalties (and indeed cautions as suggested above) provide an alternative for claimants by providing another option for disposal of the case which in some cases may be a much more appropriate solution.

Administrative Penalties are already used as a means of dealing with benefit fraud and provide an alternative to prosecution for lower level fraud cases. The key point is admin penalties, or court imposed penalties, are applied as a penalty for having committed the fraud. Overpayment recovery is an accounting arrangement to recover what should not have been paid; it is not a penalty for fraud and in fact applies equally to claimant error.

Under clause 110 the new penalty amount will be a minimum of £350 or 50% of the overpaid benefit, whichever is greater, up to a maximum penalty of £2,000. In cases where there is no overpayment, the penalty will be fixed at £350. It is important that an admin penalty provides sufficient deterrence against fraud. Increasing the admin penalty to 50% strengthens that deterrence, but ultimately the claimant is free to decline the offer and choose to be dealt with through the courts.

Increasing the threshold to £2000 (or 50% of £4,000) provides greater flexibility and allows admin penalties to be applied in cases with an overpayment up to £4,000 (currently cases over £2,000 go for prosecution). The intention is that in practice, as with DWP, the £2,000 overpayment threshold for deciding admin penalty or court will generally remain, but this clause introduces flexibility – for example a person who commits fraud and gathers up a sizeable overpayment quickly with perhaps housing benefit and income support both in payment, but perhaps for medical or other personal reasons the case is more suitable for an admin penalty than a court hearing.

Proposed way forward

The Minister believes that Administrative Penalties provide an alternative for claimants and in some cases may be a much more appropriate solution. The Minister would like the Committee to reconsider this in light of the information provided by the Department. Further information on fraud is given in Appendix 3.

The cost of not implementing administrative penalties is estimated at £0.1m.

(ii) Period for withdrawal of agreement to pay penalty (clause 111)

Summary of issues raised:

The Committee is concerned about the reduction in this ‘cooling off period’ and is seeking assurances that this will be addressed in the guidance.

Explanation

The Committee was concerned that in some cases legal advice may not be available within the 14 day period and persons would be forced into making decisions without proper guidance.

The Department is content with proposal to apply 14 days as the norm, but will include ability to increase to 28 days by exception in cases where genuine reasons are presented for an inability to make an informed decision.

Proposed way forward

Minister will give an assurance that this (good reason) will be covered in guidance but the scope to increase to 28 days will also need an amendment to this clause.

(iii) Loss of Benefit for 3 years for a first offence (clause 113)

Summary of issues raised:

The Committee is concerned that benefit could be stopped for 3 years for a first offence.

Explanation

The introduction of the 3 year withdrawal or reduction of benefit sanction for a first offence relates to a first offence of serious fraud. The Bill explains how seriousness is defined – cases of over £50,000, fraud of over 2 years, fraud involving identity fraud or a sentence imposed of 12 months imprisonment or over. The distinction has been made between fraud and serious fraud – and the issue is primarily one of deterrence. We would also advise that hardship provisions apply to current loss of benefits and will apply in future to this clause.

An example of a £50,000 overpayment case recently which would fall into the serious fraud category is set out below;

Case Summary:

This was a working while claiming case.

Information was received from the Northern Housing Executive (NIHE) that the claimant was employed by Western Health & Social Care Trust, Gransha Hospital, Londonderry. Enquires were made and it was established that the claimant had been employed since 6 November 2000.

The following overpayments were subsequently raised;

£12,901 (IS): 07 June 2005 to 15 April 2011 (Recoverable)

£28,088 (HB): 07 June 2005 to 15 April 2011 (Recoverable)

£16,935 (CA): 04 August 2003 to 24 April 2011 (Recoverable)

£57,924 in total

A court hearing was held on 13 November 2012 and the claimant was sentenced to 240 Hours Community Service.

Proposed way forward

Minister notes the Committee's concern but, as illustrated above, this is a deterrent for the prevention of serious fraud and to do anything differently would result in a break in parity and have costs attached.

(iv) Cautions (clause 115)

Summary of issues raised:

The Committee recommends that cautions should be retained.

Explanation

Clause 115 seeks to remove cautions completely. As explained at the Committee, while the view was that cautions are a preferable outcome to claimants than an admin penalty – this is not always the case as a caution is placed onto someone's record and, while not incurring any financial penalty, could have far reaching consequences not associated with an admin penalty (such as job applications and travel abroad).

Proposed way forward

Minister wishes to discuss with the Committee the impact of a caution on a person's criminal record before deciding whether cautions should be retained.

In the event agreement is made to retain cautions and remove clause 115, then it would in fact make sense to keep clause 109 and amend it to have the power to apply an admin penalty or caution for attempted fraud.

If clause 115 is not pursued and cautions remain for actual fraud, alongside admin penalties and courts, then we should have the same options for disposal of attempted fraud cases. This would provide maximum flexibility in applying sanctions for fraud.

Assembly control (Clauses 33 and 91)

Report of the Examiner of Statutory Rules on the Delegated Powers Memorandum

The Examiner has recommended that the Committee amendments that would make regulations under the powers in clauses 33 and 91 subject to confirmatory procedure where the supplementary or consequential provision amends, modifies or repeals a statutory provision (or at least a provision of Northern Ireland primary legislation).

Explanation

It is not normal procedure to make amending Regulations confirmatory (i.e. subject to a debate up to 6 mths after introduction) given that the policy will already have been discussed when the first set of regulations are made.

This is for two reasons to reduce the burden on Assembly time and to enable us to maintain parity of timing with DWP

Proposed way forward

Minister will wish to advise that officials are currently considering this issue further in conjunction with colleagues in Office of the Legislative Counsel and Departmental Solicitors Office.

* Statistical data on sanctions has previously been supplied, however system limitations have since been reduced and these figures are a more robust assessment of the current position. This data still carries a health warning however since responsibility for inputting information is shared by both DEL and SSA users in a range of posts and therefore total accuracy cannot be assured.

Appendix 3 Fraud Sanctions

Penalty in respect of benefit fraud not resulting in overpayment

A penalty will be offered as an alternative to prosecution in cases of attempted benefit fraud i.e. where an offence of benefit fraud has been committed, and there are grounds to prosecute but the fraud is discovered before any payment of benefit is made as a result of that fraud.

It is proposed to increase the amount of the penalty that claimants must pay if they accept an offer to pay such a penalty. The new penalty amount will be a minimum of £350 or 50 per cent of the overpaid benefit, whichever is greater, up to a maximum penalty of £2,000.

At the same time the Department will stop offering cautions for benefit fraud offences.

There will be a reduction in the time limit provided to allow someone to withdraw their acceptance of an administrative penalty as an alternative to prosecution, from 28 days to 14 days.

Civil penalties

It is proposed to introduce, a new civil penalty that can be imposed on claimants who negligently make incorrect statements, or who fail, without reasonable excuse, to disclose information about their claim or tell the Department of relevant changes of circumstances, both of which result in an overpayment of benefit. The amount of the Civil Penalty will be set in regulations, but the intention is that it will be £50.

Loss of benefitPeriod of sanction

There is a proposal to increase the length of loss of benefit sanctions for fraud. Where a loss of benefit sanction applies, a claimant will not be paid sanctionable benefits for a fixed period of time or will only be paid it at a reduced rate for that period.

Loss of benefit sanctions for first offences that result in a person accepting the offer of an alternative penalty rather than prosecution for benefit fraud, will continue to be a 4 week sanction.

Anyone who is convicted for a first offence will now be subject to a longer 13 week loss of benefit sanction.

A longer, tougher sanction for repeated benefit fraud resulting in convictions - 26 weeks for a 2nd offence and also a new 3 year sanction, where a 3rd offence results in a conviction.

In addition any offence, even a first offence if it involves a "specified offence", meaning a serious case relating to benefit comprising organised fraud or identity fraud will, on conviction, be subject immediately to the toughest 3 year loss of benefit sanction.

Cautions

Cautions will be abolished for benefit fraud offences. In future those who commit benefit fraud will be subject to either the administrative penalty, or they will be prosecuted.

Hardship Payments

Hardship payments will be available to vulnerable people.

Dear Kevin,

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE REQUEST: INFORMATION ON PAYMENTS UNDER UNIVERSAL CREDIT

As you aware, Minister McCausland and Mr Tommy O'Reilly appeared before the Committee on 31st January. On that occasion, the Agency's Chief Executive agreed to provide the Committee with additional information on the early cost projections for possible clerical workarounds that may apply when the operational processes and subsequent volumes are factored in for flexible payments. This work is ongoing but Mr O'Reilly will be able to give the Committee a flavour of the progress to date at tomorrow's meeting.

Linked to the additional costs of these flexible payments are the methodology and criteria for making such payments. These aspects are currently being considered by an Oversight Board which will inform recommendations by the Permanent Secretary to Minister. By way of example of progress to date, I have attached briefing material (Annex 1) which sets out methodological options for the payment of the Housing Allowance under Universal Credit and how this might impact different household types, and I can take Committee Members through this options paper tomorrow. Similar work will also be progressed for the proposed twice-monthly and split payments.

For those printing out the document, I would highlight that colour has been used in the enclosed graphs.

As outlined above, Tommy O'Reilly and I will be in attendance to brief the Committee further on the 7th February.

I hope that the Committee finds this information helpful.

Yours sincerely

Housing Element Calculation in Universal Credit

Introduction

1. The Universal Credit award will include a basic personal amount for ordinary living expenses. Additional amounts will also be available, where appropriate, for other needs such as disability, childcare costs and in recognition of any Housing Costs incurred by the Benefit Unit¹ to help meet reasonable costs for rent and/or mortgage interest.
2. Housing costs provision under Universal Credit will start in Northern Ireland from April 2014, building upon a number of other changes to housing support (currently provided through the separate Housing Benefit) that will occur prior to April 2014.
3. This paper sets out several different options for paying the housing element of Universal Credit and outlines the steps being taken to identify the most appropriate payment methodology.

Current Position

4. At present people that are on a low income and living in rented accommodation can apply for Housing Benefit, which may provide assistance with the payment of rent. The amount of Housing Benefit that may be paid will depend on the level of income and personal circumstances. If a claimant is also entitled to an income-related benefit (e.g. Income Support) they are likely to receive the maximum amount of support available. However, the amount of Housing Benefit paid does not always cover the full rental charge². This could occur due to a number of reasons including if a claimant has earnings or substantial savings (i.e. above £16,000).
5. In those cases where the amount of Housing Benefit paid is not sufficient to discharge the total rent liability the claimant is required to pay the shortfall direct to the landlord. Those claimants who rent from the private sector and who do not qualify for full Housing Benefit may apply for additional financial support in the form of a Discretionary Housing Payment to help with meeting the shortfall in their rent. There is a maximum award of £25 per week and assistance is time-limited, usually for a maximum of six months. The period of assistance can be extended up to three years in exceptional circumstances.
6. Currently, if Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) or Housing Association tenants (i.e. the Social Rented Sector) claim Housing Benefit, there is no restriction to the amount of benefit they are entitled to in respect of the size of their home. However, restrictions are applied to claims in the Private Rented Sector.
7. It is proposed to introduce changes to existing legislation to deal with under-occupancy of properties in the Social Rented Sector. This will affect both NIHE and Housing Association working age claimants (and any family) occupying the home. In such cases the amount of eligible rent used in the calculation of Housing Benefit for tenants will be reduced by 14% for

1 Benefit Unit is the family unit that Universal Credit is paid to, and comprises of one adult or a couple and any child dependants.

2 At November 2012 the proportion of tenants receiving partial Housing Benefit was 15% of NIHE, 16% of Housing Association and 17% of private tenants under-occupation by one bedroom and by 25% for under-occupation by two or more bedrooms. If the Housing Benefit award is less than the rent due to the landlord the claimant will have to pay the difference. It is planned to extend eligibility of the Discretionary Housing Payment scheme to tenants of Social Rented Sector landlords to coincide with the introduction of the under-occupancy rules.

8. An element to cover domestic rates will not be included in Housing Benefit under the proposed Welfare Reform changes. The Department of Finance and Personnel are leading development of a new Rates Rebate Scheme and officials are working to ensure that Universal Credit will be able to signpost claimants requiring support with payment of their rates.

Housing Element

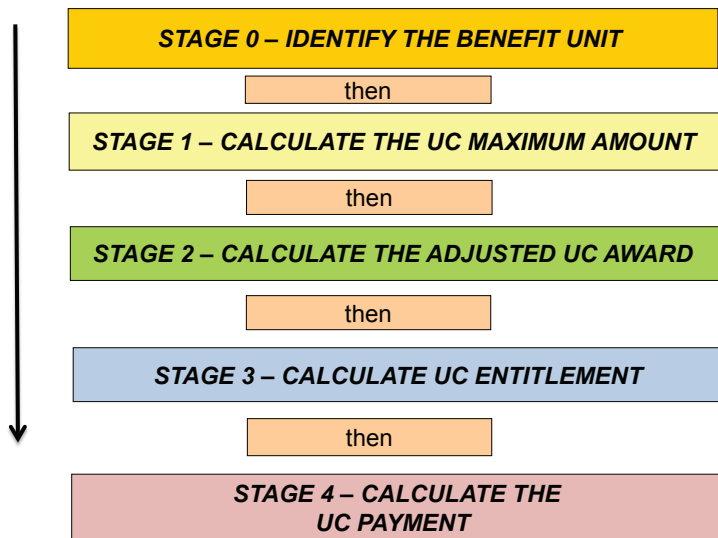

9. To qualify for the Housing Element of Universal Credit, the Benefit Unit must have a liability to pay rent, and/or a mortgage or other housing costs.
10. In Universal Credit, if a claimant is an Owner Occupier the Housing Element may constitute an amount towards the cost of servicing mortgages and other loans for eligible home improvements secured on the home the claimant occupies. This amount will be paid directly to the lender. There will be no entitlement to support for mortgage interest payments if any member of the Assessment Unit³ is in paid employment.
11. Where accommodation is rented, the value of the housing element is the amount of liable rent and eligible service charges, subject in certain circumstances, to restrictions determined by the size of the Benefit Unit and any non-dependants in the household.
12. Those claimants that are in properties provided by the Social Rented Sector will have their rent assessed subject to the application of the standard percentage-rate deductions where the accommodation is under-occupied. A decision on under-occupancy deductions will be made following an assessment of the number of bedrooms that the benefit unit requires. (In Northern Ireland the rents for NIHE are set annually by the Minister for Social Development).
13. Those living in Private Rented Sector properties will also have the number of bedrooms the benefit unit require assessed. The amount of Universal Credit allowed for housing costs will be capped by the Local Housing Allowance. The rate of the Local Housing Allowance depends on the area the claimant lives in. There are exceptions to this approach, for example, if the household includes a child(ren) with disabilities or an adult requires regular overnight care.

Universal Credit Assessment

14. To determine the amount of the housing element of Universal Credit to be paid, there are a number of steps to be followed.
15. First, the size of the Benefit Unit (i.e. members of the household to be taken into consideration) is established. Then, the Universal Credit Maximum Amount is calculated. This is made up of a number of elements depending on the circumstances of the adults and children in the Benefit Unit. Once this sum has been determined, the overall award will be reduced, if appropriate, to take account of any capital and/or income. Universal Credit will then take any earnings into account and apply the earnings disregard and taper. The steps in this process are shown below.

³ An Assessment Unit comprises all the members of a benefit unit and any other adult connected to the eligible adult in the benefit unit (i.e. the other half of a couple where that other adult is not eligible in their own right).

SUMMARY – THE KEY STAGES IN THE UC ASSESSMENT PROCESS

16. Universal Credit will include a tailored system of earnings disregards which are generally higher than the current system and a single taper rate to withdraw support as earnings rise. This means that many households will be able to keep a higher proportion of their earnings and will provide strong incentives for workless households to take up employment.
17. There are different earnings disregards that will apply depending on the composition of a household. Once the appropriate disregard threshold is reached a single taper, irrespective of the components making up the award, is applied. This means that any entitlement to the Housing Element may be subject to the taper.
18. If a claimant has earnings above the appropriate disregard figure the Universal Credit maximum amount is subject to the taper rate, which will be 65%. A reduction of the maximum Universal Credit amount, equivalent to 65% of the total amount of earnings above the threshold, will be applied. In other words claimants will retain 35p per pound of earnings over and above monies covered within the disregarded sum. Following the application of the taper the Adjusted Universal Credit Award, which is the amount to be paid, is calculated.

Payment of Housing Element

19. Following Minister McCausland's recent statement to the Assembly, in Northern Ireland the Housing Element of Universal Credit will be paid directly to landlords, although there will be provision to allow claimants the freedom to opt out of these arrangements.
20. In those claims where a payment is made to a landlord on behalf of a claimant the amount of Universal Credit paid to the claimant will be reduced according to the number of hours worked. However, the Universal Credit assessment process will create a number of different scenarios that will impact on the proportion of the benefit award that will actually be payable to the claimant and their landlord. These include:
 - Full Rent Allowed - For many Universal Credit claimants the process of claiming help with housing costs will be straightforward. The full cost of the rent will be allowed with no deductions for under-occupancy or the application of the LHA rate. There will also not be any reduction as a result of the taper being applied. The default position in such cases will be for the full amount of the rent liability to be paid direct to the landlord with the remaining amount of Universal Credit paid to the claimant.

- Partial Rent Available – There are 2 instances in which this could occur- where the claimant has partial rent costs allowed or due to a reduced Universal Credit entitlement. In the first case, some claimants will find that the amount of Housing Element they are allowed is less than their rent liability, which may be due to the effects of under-occupancy or the application of the Local Housing Allowance rate. Universal Credit could pay the amount of allowed Housing Element to the landlord and the claimant will be responsible for paying any shortfall. Although claimants may apply for assistance from the Discretionary Housing Payment scheme to help cover this shortfall.

In the second scenario, there will be cases where the total amount of Universal Credit due has been reduced. As explained in the assessment process, a reduction in entitlement could occur for a number of reasons including the application of the disregards and taper to earned income or the effects of the benefit cap. The result is that the amount of benefit paid in respect of the Housing Element could be reduced.

In both these examples, claimants may apply for assistance from the Discretionary Housing Payment scheme to help cover any shortfall.

- No Rent Costs Payable - Some claimants will not be liable for rental costs (e.g. owner occupiers) and in these instances there will be no rental costs paid under the Housing Element of Universal Credit

21. The scenarios at Appendix 1 show the impact a claimant's earnings and the application of the Local Housing Allowance rates will have on the Universal Credit award available to pay a claimant's rent.
22. As is demonstrated from these scenarios, any reduction in the Universal Credit entitlement is likely to create difficulties when determining the adjusted value of the Housing Element and the amount that should be paid direct to a landlord. This issue will be exacerbated by the impact of any deductions that should be taken from the Universal Credit award before payment can be made to the claimant.
23. A system of third party deductions already exists within the benefit system and it is intended to extend this provision to Universal Credit. It will be possible to make deductions for a number of reasons including sanctions, payments direct to utility providers and the repayment of debt (including overpayments of benefit and awards from the Social Fund).

Options

24. A number of options have been identified for managing the payment of rent direct to a landlord when the Universal Credit entitlement has been reduced. The three most feasible options considered are as follows:

Option 1- Pay Housing Element to landlord only when claimant receives full Universal Credit award

25. This option is to pay the housing element of Universal Credit directly to the landlord only until the point where the disregard and the taper apply. After that point, the claimant will be responsible for paying the entirety of their rent to the landlord.
26. This helps to remove the complexity of calculating the amount of rent to pay to the landlord when the claimant does not receive their full Universal Credit award, for example, due to an increase in earnings.
27. Many claimants towards the higher end of the earnings threshold may not currently receive Housing Benefit and so will already be confident and capable of paying their rent directly to their landlords. It is those claimants closer to the point where the taper is applied who are most likely to be anxious about the responsibility of having to pay their own rent.

28. To assist these claimants to be more financially capable, the Universal Credit programme will provide support to a suite of products being identified through the programme's Financial Independence Strategy.
29. In the cases where claimants are clearly incapable of managing their finances, or there are concerns about their ability in this area, payments to landlords can be continued. Additionally, if a claimant goes into arrears during the period when they were responsible for managing their rent payments, there are measures in legislation to allow the arrears to be paid to their landlords via deductions from their Universal Credit award.
30. Figure 1 shows while the claimant receives their full Universal Credit award their housing element (in this example £85 per week) is paid directly to the landlord. Once the claimant's income increases to a level where the taper is applied, the Universal Credit award will then be paid to the claimant and it will be their responsibility to pay their full rent to their landlord.

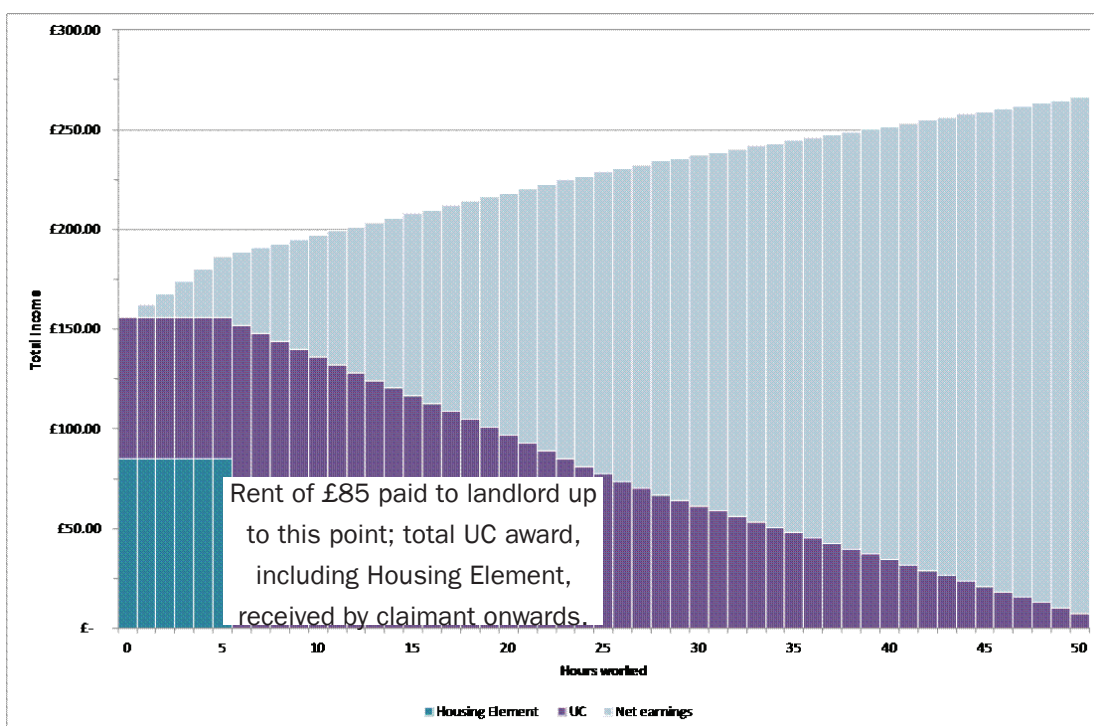

Figure 1 - Total income of the benefit unit showing when rent moves from being paid directly to the landlord to being paid to the claimant

(Example is a single person, over 35 years old, with no children, no disabilities and moving into work at the National Minimum Wage. The cost of renting their house is £85 per week.)

Option 2 – Pay full Housing Element to landlord when claimant receives full Universal Credit award and then tapered Housing Element until claimant no longer eligible for Universal Credit

31. In this model, the Housing Element and the rest of the Universal Credit award are tapered proportionately. When the earnings threshold is passed, the 65% taper rate is applied to all elements of UC, with a tapered sum being passed on to the landlord.
32. This option matches more closely to the original design of Universal Credit as all the elements taper at the same time and rate. However the option may not be feasible for a number of reasons.
 - the effect on the claimant is that will they be unsure of what their UC payment, minus the housing element, will be if they have small fluctuations in earnings and they will have a different deficit to meet at each level of hours worked

- the landlord will subsequently have reduced security in what they will receive in respect of the claimant and increased administrative and financial burdens as they have to continually calculate what is owed to them by the claimant and pursue this amount. There might also be increased transactional costs (e.g. direct debit charges) incurred by landlords as once the taper is applied they will be receiving payments from both the Department and the claimant.

33. Figure 2 shows while the claimant receives their full Universal Credit award their housing element (in this example £85 per week) is paid directly to the landlord. Once the claimant's income increases to a level where the taper is applied, the Housing Element and the rest of the Universal Credit award are tapered proportionately. The landlord would be paid the tapered Housing Element. It would be the claimant's responsibility to make arrangements to pay any shortfall in rent.

Figure 2 - Total income of the benefit unit, showing when housing element and remainder of UC are tapered simultaneously

(Example is a single person, over 35 years old, with no children, no disabilities and moving into work at the National Minimum Wage. The cost of renting their house is £85 per week.)

Option 3 – Full Housing Element amount paid directly to landlord until remainder of UC payment has been tapered to zero, then Housing Element tapered to zero

34. In this option the Housing Element is untouched by the taper rate until the rest of the Universal Credit award has been tapered to zero. This will preserve the integrity of the housing element paid in respect of the claimant for as long as possible by protecting the housing element from the taper rate until it is all that is left of the UC claim, which is then subjected to the 65% taper rate. The claimant would have the full housing element paid on their behalf while the remainder of their UC payment would steadily reduce in line with the increase in their net earnings. Once the claimant's remaining UC has been reduced to zero, due to the level of their earnings, the housing element will be subject to the 65% taper, causing a deficit that must be met from their earnings. This approach will result in the claimant eventually receiving no direct UC payment, as it will have been paid to their landlord.
35. Figure 3 shows while the claimant receives their full Universal Credit award their housing element (in this example £85 per week) is paid directly to the landlord. Once the taper is applied, the full housing element continues to be paid to the landlord until the point where the total Universal Credit award is less than the claimant's Housing Element entitlement. The Housing Element then continues to be paid to the landlord until it is tapered to zero. It would be the claimant's responsibility to make arrangements to pay any shortfall in rent.

(Example is a single person, over 35 years old, with no children, no disabilities and moving into work at the National Minimum Wage. The cost of renting their house is £85 per week.)

36. The benefit of this approach to both claimant and landlord is the fixed threshold that can be calculated in advance. This gives the claimant the security that one essential payment will be taken care of until their earnings reach a level that reduces their remaining UC payment to zero. This may encourage the claimant to move into work or work for more hours per week. The landlord can be confident in either receiving their full payment, or if the housing element begins to taper, that the claimant should have the means to correct any shortfall.
37. In those cases where a claimant has fluctuating earnings that impacts on their Universal Credit award it will be necessary for them to check the amount actually paid to the landlord. The breakdown of actual payments should be easily identifiable from the award notice. This should be supported by effective communications highlighting to claimants the importance of confirming if their full rent has been paid by Universal Credit.
38. This option also offers attractions in that it is relatively simple and involves a low administrative burden. In addition, the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) has indicated that this is the approach they will be adopting for their exceptional payments of housing costs to landlords. This should remove the need to develop any specific technical changes to the Universal Credit system for Northern Ireland. This option also prioritises the payment of a claimants rent so it works to safeguard a claimants housing, helping to prevent claimants becoming homeless due to non-payment of rent
39. As with option 2 one potential disadvantage of this approach is the possibility of increased administrative costs for the landlord once the Housing Element starts to be tapered.

Consideration of Options

40. Figure 4 below is a summary of the merits of each of the aforementioned options:

Option	Advantages	Disadvantages
1	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Reduced complexity • Claimants have opportunity to take on more financial responsibility 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • For some claimants, responsibility for paying their own rent falls to them at a relatively low earnings level
2	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Closely aligned to policy design of Universal Credit i.e. all elements of award are tapered 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • More complex than other options • For some claimants, responsibility for paying the shortfall in their rent falls to them at a relatively low earnings level • Potential for increased transactional costs for the landlord
3	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Housing payment prioritised • Aligns with DWP model for exceptions payments • Easier for claimant to understand amount being paid to landlord 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Removes incentive for claimants to take on more financial responsibility as, in some instances, rent is paid to landlord even when claimants are towards the higher end of the earnings scale • Claimants who previously paid their rent directly (e.g. Tax Credit claimants at higher earnings) will now have their rent paid on their behalf, unless they opt out. • Potential for increased transactional costs for the landlord

Recommendation

41. Before a decision can be made on the payment model to adopt, further research is required. A team working on Payment Flexibilities within the Northern Ireland Universal Credit Programme, within the Department for Social Development, are conducting research with stakeholders to determine their views on the preferred approach.
42. The findings from this exercise will be considered by the Payment Flexibilities Oversight Board and recommendations taken forward to be considered by the Executive Sub-Committee. In parallel, the Universal Credit Programme will continue to work with the Department for Work & Pensions to determine what is technically possible.

Appendix 1

Scenario A

Tom and Julie are claiming Universal Credit as a couple. They are both over 25 years old and have one child, Beth, who is 2 years old. They rent a two bedroom property from the NIHE at a cost of £400 per month. Neither partner is currently in paid employment nor do they have any savings.

When their claim to Universal Credit is assessed it is determined they are entitled to the standard allowance plus the child element. As the family are occupying a two bedroom property there is no adjustment made for under occupation. This means the full amount of the rent is allowed.

As the family have no earnings the income taper is not applied and there are no deductions made from the maximum Universal Credit entitlement. An amount of £400 is paid to the NIHE in full payment of the rent and the remaining entitlement is paid to the claimants.

Universal Credit Assessment

Monthly Assessment		Total Income per month
Standard Allowance	£489.06	Universal Credit	£1161.14
Child Element	£272.08	Child Benefit	£87.97 (£20.30 weekly x 52 ÷ 12 = £87.97)
Housing Element	£400.00	Total Monthly Amount	£1249.11
Maximum UC	£1161.14	Universal Credit Payments Made
Less Tariff Income	NIL (Applied to capital over £6,000 and under £16,000)	Housing Element	£400.00 (Paid direct to landlord)
Less Earnings	NIL (After disregard and taper applied)	Total Universal Credit paid direct to customer	£761.14
Adjusted UC Payment	£1161.14

Scenario B

Deborah is claiming Universal Credit as a lone parent. She is 39 years old and has two children Wendy aged 16 and Jake aged 5. Both children are in full-time education. The family are renting a four bedroom property from a private landlord at a cost of £540 per month. Deborah is not currently in paid employment.

When the claim to Universal Credit is assessed it is determined that Deborah is entitled to the standard allowance plus the child element for two children. However, as the family is occupying a larger property than deemed necessary the amount of the Housing Element allowed is restricted to the Local Housing Allowance rate for a three bedroom property, which is £443.65 per month.

As the family have no earnings the income taper is not applied and there are no deductions made from the maximum Universal Credit entitlement. An amount of £443.65, which is the maximum allowable contribution to the rent, is paid direct to the landlord. This leaves a shortfall of £96.35. The remaining Universal Credit entitlement is paid to Deborah.

Deborah can apply for a Discretionary Housing Payment to help with the shortfall in the rent. However, any award will be time limited and the family will be expected to make attempts to reduce their rental costs.

Adjusted UC Payment	£1253.95

As a private rented tenant the amount of the customer's Housing Element is restricted to the Local Housing Allowance rate for a 3 Bedroom property. This is £102.38 per week ($£102.38 \times 52 \div 12 = £443.65$ per month). This leaves a shortfall of £96.35

Scenario C

James is 27 years old with no children and has claimed Universal Credit as a single person. He is renting a one bedroom property in Belfast from a private landlord at a cost of £300 per month. James is currently in full-time employment with earnings of £670 per month.

When the claim to Universal Credit is assessed it is determined that James is entitled to the standard allowance plus a contribution towards the cost of his rent. As he is under 35 years of age he is entitled to the shared room rate only. The appropriate Local Housing Allowance rate for someone in his circumstances is calculated at £187.86 per month. This is a shortfall of £112.32, which remains to be paid to the landlord.

As James is in paid employment his Universal Credit entitlement will be affected. The initial £110.83 of his monthly income is disregarded and the remainder is subject to the 65% taper rate. This means that James' total Universal Credit entitlement will be reduced by £363.46 per month leaving him with an actual entitlement of £135.77. In this case the total amount of the Universal Credit, less a notional amount, will be paid to the landlord. James will be responsible for paying the total shortfall (£164.23) in the rent to his landlord and there will be no payment of Universal Credit paid directly to James.

Universal Credit Assessment

Standard Allowance	£311.55	£559.17 x 65% = £363.46
Housing Element	£187.68	In this case the customer is under 35 years and entitled to the shared room rate only (a single room in a shared property). He is entitled to the Local Housing Allowance rate (LHA) which will vary depending on the Broad Rental Market Area (BRMA). In Belfast this is currently £43.31 per week (£43.31 x 52 ÷ 12 = £187.68, leaving an initial shortfall of £112.32 which is due to be paid to the landlord.

Application of the £65 de minimis debt level:

Where a benefit overpayment is identified by the SSA and the value of that overpayment is less than £65 it is considered that the administrative cost of pursuing the debt outweighs the value of the debt itself and the debt is written-off. This is the position across the UK.

2011-12 Benefit overpayments written off because debt value was below £65:

During 2011-12 the SSA identified 22k volume of benefit overpayments which all fell below the £65 de minimis limit and were, therefore, written off. The total write-off value was £580k. Further analysis has confirmed that the weighted average value of these small overpayments is £32.67. Table 1 provides some analysis.

2011-12 Benefit Overpayments identified where the individual debt value was between £65 and £100: During 2011-12 the SSA identified 7,771 benefit overpayments with debt values between £65 and £100 with an overall debt stock value of £624k. Table 2 provides an analysis. This information provides an indication of the volume and value of debt that would be written off if the SSA increased the current small overpayment write off limit above £65; e.g. increasing it to £80 would result in an increase in write off of approximately £316k (a total of 4,382 individual debts).

The above information is based on the Agency's benefit overpayment activity for 2011-12 for existing Social Security benefits and excludes housing benefit and tax credits.

The introduction of Universal Credit will change the customer landscape of the Social Security System which will change the debt profile and could increase the number of customers and the financial cost of the impact of any increase in the debt write off limit.

Any move away from parity in respect of the de minimis debt level carries a risk of uncertainty to the resulting cost of any change.

Dear Kevin

Amendment to the Welfare Reform Bill (NI)

I am writing to ask for the Committee's support for the proposed Ministerial Amendment to allow the Department to provide discretionary support to meet extreme or exceptional needs. This proposed amendment has previously been outlined and discussed with the Committee.

Background

As you are the Welfare Reform Bill (NI) will remove provision for Community Care Grants and Crisis Loans for living expenses and household items from the social security system. And, as such, the Department will be unable to provide continued discretionary support to meet extreme or exceptional needs unless appropriate enabling statutory provision is in place.

To meet this legislative need the Department firstly investigated whether any other statutory provision existed in Northern Ireland which could be utilised by DSD to pay discretionary support to individuals or households. And, on failing to uncover such provision whether it was appropriate to develop new primary legislation with the use of the Financial Assistance Act (NI) 2009 as an interim solution. However, the preferred option, as you will also be aware, was to insert the necessary enabling provision into the Welfare Reform Bill (NI) at Consideration Stage by way of a Ministerial Amendment.

Ministerial Amendment

Specifically, it is proposed that the amendment (the text of which has been drafted by the Office of the Legislative Council and is attached at Annex A) will introduce a new clause to allow DSD to provide discretionary support in the form of direct financial awards or the provision of goods and services and to bring forward regulations providing further detail, including:

- the circumstances in which discretionary support may be available;
- the conditions (including timescales) which will apply to the payment and/or receipt of discretionary support;
- the form and manner in which applications will be made;

- the detail and verification of information to be provided by those seeking discretionary support;
- arrangements for seeking a review or challenge of decisions; and
- the treatment of fraudulent claims for discretionary support.

The proposed design of the new Discretionary Support Scheme, about which the Committee have already received briefing, provides a lower level view of how these regulations will operate in practice.

The proposed amendment will be subject to the approval of the Executive Committee.

I trust this makes the position clear however should the Committee wish to have further information/briefing I shall be happy to provide.

Yours sincerely

Angela Clarke
Head of Central Social Policy

‘Discretionary support

.—(1) The Department may, in accordance with regulations under this section —

- (a) make payments by way of grant or loan to prescribed persons;
 - (b) provide, or arrange for the provision of, goods or services to prescribed persons.
- (2) Anything done under subsection (1)(a) or (b) is referred to in this section as the provision of discretionary support.
- (3) Regulations may make provision—
- (a) for the Department to provide discretionary support only in prescribed circumstances;
 - (b) conferring a discretion on the Department (subject to any provision made by virtue of paragraph (c) or (d))—
 - (i) as to whether or not to provide discretionary support in a particular case; and
 - (ii) as to the nature of the discretionary support and (in the case of support by way of payments) as to the amount of the payments and the period for or in respect of which they are made;
 - (c) imposing a limit on the amount of the discretionary support that the Department may make in any particular case;
 - (d) restricting the period for or in respect of which the Department may provide discretionary support in any particular case;
 - (e) for claims for discretionary support to be made in the prescribed form and manner and for the procedure to be followed in dealing with and disposing of such claims;
 - (f) imposing conditions on persons claiming or receiving discretionary support requiring them to provide to the Department such information as may be prescribed;
 - (g) for the disclosure of information relating to discretionary support in prescribed circumstances or to prescribed persons;
 - (h) authorising the Department in prescribed circumstance to recover by prescribed means discretionary payments made under this section;
 - (i) requiring or authorising reviews (whether by the Department or a prescribed person) of decisions made by the Department with respect to the provision of discretionary support or the recovery of payments made under this section;
 - (j) for such other matters as appears to the Department to be necessary or expedient in connection with the provision of discretionary support, including provision creating criminal offences and provision amending or applying (with or without modification) any statutory provision.

- (4) In this section “prescribed” means prescribed by, or determined in accordance with, regulations under this section.
- (5) Discretionary support is not to be regarded as a social security benefit; but regulations under this section may provide for any statutory provision relating to a social security benefit (or to such benefits generally) to apply with prescribed modifications to discretionary support.
- (6) The first regulations under this section shall not be made unless a draft of the regulations has been laid before, and approved by a resolution of, the Assembly.
- (7) Other regulations made under this section are subject to negative resolution.
- (8) The Department shall, in respect of each financial year, prepare and lay before the Assembly a report on the operation of regulations made under this section.

An Introduction to Welfare Reform

1 Introduction

The purpose of this briefing paper is to provide the Committee with a broad overview of the Coalition Government's plans for Welfare Reform. Sections 2 to 6 of the paper cover the various strands of welfare reform beginning with the June 2010 Budget and Spending Review announcements and moving on to provide an overview of Universal Credit and the proposed reform of Disability Living Allowance, Housing Benefit, State Pension and State Pension Age. The final section of the paper provides a synopsis of the reaction of key think tanks to the various elements of the Coalition Government's welfare reform programme.

It is important to mention at the outset that this paper does not in any way claim to provide a definitive account and analyses of welfare reform, it is merely an introduction to the reforms which are wide-ranging and their implications multifarious and complex. In order to assist Members further, Research and Library Services will shortly publish a Welfare Reform 'Resource Pack' which will provide links to key Government publications; think tank papers; Assembly Questions, Statements and Debates; and a range of newspaper articles on welfare reform.

2 Welfare Reform: the June 2010 Budget and Spending Review Announcements

The Welfare Reform announcements which formed part of the Coalition Government's June 2010 Budget and Spending Review in October have been widely described as the most radical shake-up of the benefits system since the foundation of the welfare state. A new integrated benefit – Universal Credit – will replace the vast majority of current in-work and out-of-work benefits; Disability Living Allowance will be replaced with a new Personal Independence Payment which will include a new 'objective' medical assessment process; and wide ranging new measures will be introduced to reduce expenditure on housing benefit including caps on Local Housing Allowance payments and an increase to the age threshold for the Shared Room Rate.

Accompanying these changes will be the use of the Consumer Price Index (CPI) for the price indexation of benefits, pensions and tax credits; a cap on the total amount of benefits a household can claim; the introduction of a new personal conditionality and sanctions regime; and a package of changes to State Pensions, State Pension Credit and State Pension Age including an acceleration in the pace of State Pension Age equalisation, a rise in State Pension Age to 66 by April 2020 and the introduction of a 'triple lock' for State Pensions, which will be a rise of a minimum of 2.5% or in line with earnings or prices, whichever is greater. This provides just a very broad overview of some of the elements of welfare reform, for ease of reference further detail is outlined in Table 1.

How and when the various strands of reform will be applied to Northern Ireland will ultimately be a matter for the Department for Social Development, the Northern Ireland Executive and the Northern Ireland Assembly. It is important to bear this in mind when considering the Coalition Government's timetabling and implementation of the various strands of reforms that are mentioned throughout this paper. It is the Coalition Government's intention to introduce a Welfare Reform Bill in January 2011 (which will implement the changes in Great Britain).

The interpretation and application of the principle of parity will be crucial, as will the Social Protection Fund announced in the draft Budget 2011-15. In a Ministerial Statement to the Northern Ireland Assembly on 23 November 2010, the Minister for Social Development commented on the importance of parity to Northern Ireland¹:

“Although social security is a devolved matter, we are constrained by funding issues. Any variance from DWP social security rates and conditions may breach parity. It would be thoughtless folly, therefore, if I, as the Minister for Social Development, took action that put in greater need those already in need. Parity brings a net benefit to Northern Ireland measured in billions of pounds. One figure given to me recently suggests that when the total tax take in Northern Ireland that goes to the Treasury is deducted from the total Budget and welfare payments that come across the Irish Sea, the net benefit to the Executive and the Assembly is at least £3 billion. Nevertheless, I believe that the issue of parity should be considered and scoped, although doing that in a rush would hurt those whom we need to protect most over the next four or five very difficult years”

However, the Minister also stated that he aimed to “stretch the limits of parity in a way that does not prejudice the block grant or those who are on benefits”. Furthermore the Minister announced that his Department were working with organisations and individuals with key roles in welfare and would also be presenting to the Executive a remedies paper which would include:

“a wider analysis of how we should take forward the issue of social welfare. It will recommend a range of interventions as part of the Budget conclusions on welfare, fuel poverty and housing that the Executive should endorse if we are to be judged favourably and judge ourselves favourably on how we address the severity of welfare changes.”

Table 1: At a Glance - Welfare reform announcements in the June Budget and the Spending Review

	June Budget²	Spending Review³ (October)
Child Benefit	A three year freeze on Child Benefit from 2011/12 to help fund significant above indexation increases to Child Tax Credit which the Coalition Government believes is better targeted at low-income families.	From January 2013, a withdrawal of Child Benefit from families with a higher rate taxpayer . The Coalition Government believe that this will save £2.5 billion a year by 2014-15 and will ensure that people in lower incomes are not subsidising those who are better off.
Child Trust Fund	The Coalition Government announced on 24 May 2010 its intention to reduce and then stop Government contributions to Child Trust Funds . It reiterated this point in the June Budget and also announced that the Savings Gateway would not be introduced as the Government believed it was not affordable given the need to reduce the deficit.
Capping Benefits		From 2013, a household benefit cap of around £500 per week will be placed on couple and single parent households. A cap of around £350 per week will be imposed on single adult households. The Coalition Government state that the purpose of the cap is to ensure that no family can receive more in welfare than the median after tax earnings for working households. All Disability Living Allowance claimants, War Widows and working families claiming working tax credits will be exempt from the cap .
Contributory Employment and Support Allowance	Time-limiting contributory ESA for those in the Work-Related Activity Group to one year . The Coalition Government believes that this will save £2 billion per year by 2014-15 and will improve work incentives whilst protecting people with the most severe disabilities and those with the lowest incomes.

	June Budget²	Spending Review³ (October)
Disability Living Allowance	The Coalition Government announces that it would reform Disability Living Allowance to ensure support is targeted on those with the highest medical need. It also announced that objective medical assessments for all DLA claimants would be introduced from 2013-14.	The mobility component of Disability Living Allowance will cease to be paid after an individual has been in a hospital or care home for 28 days (84 days for children in hospital) ⁴ .
Housing Benefit and Local Housing Allowance	The Coalition Government announces that it will introduce a package of reforms to Housing Benefit. This includes changing the percentile of market rents used to calculate Local Housing Allowance rates; capping the maximum Local Housing Allowance payable for each property size; time-limiting receipt of full Housing Benefit for claimants who could be expected to look for work; restricting Housing Benefit for working age claimants in the social rented sector who are occupying a larger property than their household size warrants. From April 2011, Local Housing Allowance rates will be capped at £250 per week for a one bedroom property; £290 for a two bedroom property; £340 for a three bedroom property; and £400 per week for four or more bedrooms. The Government contribution to Discretionary Housing Payments will be increased by £10m in 2011-12 and £40m in each year from 2012-13. From April 2011, Housing Benefit claimants with a disability and non-resident carer will be entitled to funding for an extra bedroom. From April 2013, Housing Benefit awards will be reduced to 90% of the initial award after 12 months for claimants receiving Jobseekers Allowance.	The Coalition Government announce an increase to the age threshold for the Shared Room Rate in Housing Benefit from 25 to 35 . It believes that this will save £215m a year by 2014-15 and will ensure that Housing Benefit rules will reflect the housing expectations of people of a similar age not on benefits.

	June Budget²	Spending Review³ (October)
	[Note: on the 30 November the Coalition Government announced two changes to the timetabling of some of the reforms to provide additional transitional time for existing claimants: All changes that will adjust the way Local Housing Allowance rates are calculated will come into force from April 2011 for new claims. Existing claimants will continue at their current rate of benefit until their claim is reviewed, they will then have a further period of transitional protection at their current Local Housing Allowance rate of up to nine months if there has not been a relevant change in circumstances⁵.]
Indexation	From April 2011, the Coalition Government will use the Consumer Price Index (CPI) for the price indexation of benefits and tax credits. The Government states that CPI provides a more appropriate measure of benefit and pension recipient's inflation experiences than the Retail Price Index (RPI).
Maternity Payments	The Coalition Government announce that from April 2011, eligibility for Sure Start Maternity Grant will be restricted to the first child only and that the Health in Pregnancy Grant will be abolished from January 2011.

	June Budget²	Spending Review³ (October)
State Pensions, Pension Credit and State Pension Age	The Coalition Government will uprate the basic State Pension by a triple guarantee of earnings, prices or 2.5 per cent, whichever is highest, from April 2011. CPI will be used as the measure of prices in the triple guarantee, as for other benefits and tax credits. However, the Government has stated that to ensure the value of a basic State Pension is at least as generous as under the previous uprating rules, the basic State Pension in April 2011 by at least the equivalent of RPI. The Coalition Government also announce that to ensure the lowest income pensioners benefit from the triple guarantee, the standard minimum income guarantee in Pension Credit will increase in April 2011 by the case rise in a full basic State Pension.	The Coalition Government announce a freeze in the maximum Savings Credit award in Pension Credit for four years, thereby limited the spread of means-testing up the income distribution. The Government believes that this will save £330m a year by 2014-15. The Government also announce acceleration in the pace of State Pension Age equalisation. Women's State Pension Age will reach 65 in November 2018. The State Pension Age will then increase to 66 for both men and women from December 2018 to April 2020. The Government states that it is also considering future increases to State Pension Age to manage the ongoing challenges in response to the UK's changing demographics.
Support for Mortgage Interest	The rate at which Support for Mortgage Interest (SMI) is paid is set at 1.58% above the Bank of England Base Rate. It has been frozen at 6.08% since late 2008. The Government maintain that since interest rates have fallen significantly, SMI will, from October 2010, be paid at the level of the Bank of England's published Average Monthly Rate.	The Coalition Government announce the extension of a further year the temporary change to the Support for Mortgage Interest (SMI) scheme, i.e. reducing the waiting period for new working age claimants to 14 weeks and the increase in the limit on eligible mortgage capital to £200,000. These temporary measures were due to expire by January 2011.

Tax Credits	By April 2011, a reduction in tax credit eligibility for families with household income above £40,000. The Coalition Government announces that further changes to this threshold will be made in 2012-13 to focus tax credits on lower income families. It also announces that it would also increase the rate at which tax credits are withdrawn once household income rises. In his budget speech the Chancellor announces that the Government would⁶: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Remove the baby element for new children from April 2011. • Remove the one-off payment to new workers over 50 from April 2012. • Reduce the income disregarded from £25,000 to £10,000 and then £5,000. • Introduce an income disregard for income falls. • Reduce back-dating from three months to one month. • Decline to introduce the pre-election promise of a new tax credit element for infants. The Coalition Government also announces that Frank Field will lead an independent review on poverty which will make recommendations on tackling the underlying causes of poverty. Field's report entitled 'The Foundation Years: preventing poor children becoming poor adults' is subsequently published in December 2010⁷.	By April 2011, a reduction in the percentage of childcare costs that parents can claim through the childcare element of the Working Tax Credit from 80% to its previous 70% level. The Government believes that this will save £385m a year by 2014-15. A change in the eligibility rules so that couples with children must work 24 hours a week between them, with one partner working at least 16 hours per week in order to qualify for WTC. The Government believe that this will save £390m a year by 2014-2015. A freeze in the basic and 30 hour element of Working Tax Credit for three years from 2011-2012. The Government believes that this will save £625m a year by 2014-15.
Universal Credit		The Coalition Government announces that over the next two Parliaments the complex system of means tested working age benefits and tax credits will gradually be replaced by Universal Credit. £2 billion has been set aside in DWP's Departmental Expenditure Limit settlement over the next four years to fund the implementation of Universal Credit.

	June Budget ²	Spending Review ³ (October)
Winter Fuel Payments and Cold Weather Payments	The Coalition Government gives a commitment to protect key benefits for older people including Winter Fuel Payments.	The Coalition Government states that it will make permanent the temporary increases to Cold Weather Payments provided in the past two winters so that eligible households receive £25 for each seven day cold spell recorded or forecast where they live (temperature eligibility criteria applies).

3 Welfare Reform and Universal Credit⁸

“Universal Credit represents a fundamental change for Britain’s welfare system. It will create a leaner but fairer system administered by a single government department delivering support that is integrated and explicitly focused on ensuring that work always pays. It will substantially reduce poverty and, as well as being fairer, the system will also be firmer. The links between benefit payments, earnings and tax will in turn make the system more secure from fraud and error and conditionality will push people to do as much work as is reasonable for them”.

Source: DWP (2010) ‘Universal Credit – welfare that works’

The White Paper, ‘Universal Credit: welfare that works’ published by the Department for Work and Pensions on 11 November 2010⁹, sets out the Coalition Government’s plans to create a new Universal Credit, an integrated working age benefit which will replace the vast majority of current in-work and out-of-work benefits. The White Paper is influenced by the outcome of the Coalition Government’s ‘21st Century Welfare’¹⁰ consultation (published July 2010) and by other reviews such as the Centre for Social Justice publication ‘Dynamic Benefits: towards welfare that works’¹¹. The Government intends to introduce Universal Credit for new claims from October 2013, with a target to complete all existing claims to the new regime by October 2017¹².

In short, the key features of the new Universal Credit regime are as follows:

12 Department for Work and Pensions (2010) Universal Credit: welfare that works, p37.

- Universal Credit will be an integrated working age credit that will provide a basic allowance with additional elements added for children, disability, housing and caring.
- It will replace Working Tax Credit, Child Tax Credit, Housing Benefit, Income Support, income-based Jobseeker's Allowance and income-related Employment and Support Allowance.
- For those in employment paid through Pay As You Earn (PAYE), Universal Credit will be calculated and delivered electronically, with automatically adjusted credit payments.
- For those in employment, Universal Credit will have a taper rate of 65%, meaning that as earnings rise Universal Credit will be withdrawn at a rate of 65p for each pound of net earnings. There will also be higher earnings disregards for other selective groups to reinforce work incentives.
- The Government has made a commitment that no-one will experience a reduction in the benefit they receive as a result of the introduction of Universal Credit.
- Claims for Universal Credit will be made on the basis of households rather than individuals. In line with the Coalition Government announcement in the Spending Review, from 2013 a cap will be applied to the amount of benefits a household can receive. This will be set at around £500 per week for couple and single parent households and around £350 per week for single adult households. The Coalition Government has stated that the purpose of the cap is to ensure that no family can receive more in welfare than median after tax earnings for working households.
- The new Universal Credit regime will be backed by a 'strong system of conditionality' and a new system of financial sanctions.
- Linked to conditionality will be the introduction of mandatory work activity which will compel some recipients to take part in a four week full-time work programme.

Universal Credit Explained

The table below illustrates the current benefits that will be replaced as part of Universal Credit, benefits that will not be included in Universal Credit and benefits that the Government has indicated will be reviewed.

Universal Credit will replace: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Income Support • Jobseekers Allowance (income based) • Employment and Support Allowance (income based) • Housing Benefit • Child Tax Credit • Working Tax Credit 	Outside the Scope of Universal Credit: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Disability Living Allowance • Child Benefit • Jobseekers Allowance (contribution based) • Employment and Support Allowance (contribution based) • Bereavement Benefits • Statutory Sick Pay • Statutory Maternity Pay • Maternity Allowance • Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit 	Benefits under review <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • In-work credit for lone parents • Job Grant • The Social Fund (e.g. budgeting loans may become part of Universal Credit). • Carer's Allowance. • Support for parents with childcare costs. • Mortgage Interest Support.

Universal Credit will consist of a 'basic personal amount' with additional amounts added for disability, caring responsibilities, housing costs and children. The personal amount will provide for basic living costs and will be broadly similar to the current structure of personal allowances in Income Support, JSA and the assessment phase of ESA. For example, the Income Support Personal Allowance Rate (2010/11) for a single person under the age of 25 is £51.85 (per week) and £65.45 for those aged 25 and over. A couple with both partners over the age of 25 can claim a personal allowance of £102.75¹³. However, in line with the Coalition Government announcement in the Spending Review, from 2013 a cap will be applied to the amount of benefits a household can receive. This will be set at around £500 per week for couple and single parent households and around £350 per week for single adult households. DLA claimants and War Widows will be exempt from this cap.

The upper age limit for Universal Credit will be the age at which people are eligible for Pension Credit, which is currently linked to State Pension Age for women.

Some other important information on Universal Credit:

- The Department for Work and Pensions will be the single government Department with responsibility for the delivery of Universal Credit. It remains to be clarified how the existing benefit delivery structures in Northern Ireland will be affected.
- Claims for Universal Credit will normally be made through the internet and most subsequent contact between recipients and the delivery agency will be conducted online. Recipients will have an online account, recipients will be able to access information about their claim and Universal Credit payments (similar to online banking services). Alternative access routes will be made available for people who do not have access to online services (e.g. by telephone and face-to-face interaction).
- All elements of Universal Credit will be obtained through a single application and changes to circumstances (e.g. such as moving into work or having a child) can be reported online.
- The Government are proposing to pay Universal Credit monthly to encourage responsibility and to be consistent with the 'real-time earnings approach'.
- Elements of the Social Fund that can be automated, e.g. budgeting loans, will become part of Universal Credit.

Universal Credit: Older People, Carers, Children, and People with Disabilities

Under the new Universal Credit regime, the additional personal amount will be supplemented with additional amounts for disability, caring responsibilities, housing costs and children. In terms of disability, the Government believes that "the existing structure of overlapping disability premiums is overly complex and causes confusion". The Government is currently considering what extra support for people with disabilities in Universal Credit may be needed over and above benefits available elsewhere in the system.

Universal Credit will replace Housing Benefit and Child Tax Credit and the Government states that it will consider the approach to be taken to support people of pensionable age with the cost of rent and dependent children. The Coalition Government is also considering options for Pension Credit,

"Pension Credit may not be appropriate for all pensioners. Pension Credit is designed for the needs of the majority of low-income pensioners and is not intended to provide in-work support. As pensioners will no longer be able to access help from Working Tax Credit, we are considering an option of allowing those pensioners who choose to extend their working lives to claim Universal Credit, rather than Pension Credit, so that they can take advantage of the tailored in-work arrangements”.

The Coalition Government has stated that it expects around 350,000 children to be moved out of poverty as a result of the new Universal Credit regime. Couples with children will get a higher earnings disregard in relation to the reduction of their benefits when they take-up work. Additions for children within Universal Credit will be based on those currently provided through Child Tax Credit and will be additional to Child Benefit. The Government has stated that it will consider the structure of support for children with disabilities as it looks at the structure for adults with disabilities.

The Coalition Government has also indicated that it is currently considering how best to support parents with childcare costs, e.g. either through an additional payment or an earnings disregard. As a minimum, the Government has indicated that it would be feasible to pay an additional element for childcare on top of the basic Universal Credit award at similar rates to those being offered. However, it is also considering other options such as providing support for childcare through a separate voucher or discount system or recognising childcare through an additional earnings disregard rather than an additional payment. Help with children for people on Universal Credit will be restricted to those in work.

The Coalition Government believes that “for too long, the current system of carer benefits has failed to meet the different needs of carers and has trapped some people on benefits”. It has announced that carers will continue to be eligible for National Insurance credits for protect their financial position in retirement. The Coalition Government is considering whether changes to Carer's Allowance will be necessary to take account of the introduction of Universal Credit.

Universal Credit and Housing

An amount will be added to the basic Universal Credit award to help meet the costs of rent and mortgage interest. For those who rent accommodation, the Coalition Government has stated that this will be “similar to the support currently provided” through Housing Benefit. Further information on the changes to Housing Benefit and Local Housing Allowance are explored further in section 5 of this paper. The Government has stated that it will consider whether changes are needed to the current approach to assistance with Mortgage Interest costs. In the June 2010 Budget, the Coalition announced that since interest rates had fallen significantly, Support for Mortgage Interest (SMI) would be paid at the level of the Bank of England's published Average Monthly Rate.

Tapering and Earnings Disregards

Tapering is defined as the rate at which benefit is reduced to take account of earnings. To ensure that people are encouraged to take up jobs (even if they are only for a few hours per week), the Government has announced that it will allow some groups to earn ‘significantly more’ before their benefits start to be withdrawn. For example, there will be a higher disregard for disabled people and couples with children.

Universal Credit will be withdrawn at a rate of 65p per additional pound of net earnings (after tax and National Insurance) for those earning below the personal tax thresholds and 24p for basic rate tax payers.

Conditionality, Sanctions and Mandatory Work Activity

The Coalition Government states that individuals “who are able to look for or prepare for work should be required to do so as a condition of receiving benefit, and those who fail to meet their responsibilities should face a financial sanction". This is the Government's definition of conditionality. Under the new Universal Credit regime there will be four broad conditionality groups:

- No conditionality: people with a disability or health condition which prevents them from work; carers, lone parents or lead carers with a child under the age of one.
- Keeping in touch with the labour market: lone parent or lead carer in a couple with a child over the age of one but under the age of five.
- Work preparation: people with a disability or those with a health condition which means they have limited capability for work at the current time.
- Full conditionality: jobseekers.

The Coalition Government also states that it will introduce a 'claimant commitment' which sets out what is expected of each recipient of benefits. This will apply to every Income Support, Jobseeker's Allowance and Employment and Support Allowance recipient. It will set out:

- The Government's general expectations of recipients;
- The requirements placed upon them; and
- The consequences for the recipient of failing to meet the agreed standards.

Jobcentre Plus advisers in GB will be given much greater discretion in their role and will be able to:

- Require some jobseekers to attend their local office more frequently to demonstrate the steps they are taking to return to work;
- Require some people to broaden their job searches earlier in their claim;
- Compel people on both the work preparation and active job search categories to undertake activity to address a skill need, e.g. training; and
- Where an adviser believes a jobseeker would benefit from "the habits and routines of working life" refer recipients to Mandatory Work Activity.

A Mandatory Work Activity placement will be for up to four weeks and is "aimed at helping the recipient develop the labour-market discipline associated with full-time employment such as attending on time and regularly, carrying out specific tasks and working under supervision". Failure to attend or complete the placement without good cause will result in a financial sanction e.g. withholding Jobseeker's Allowance for at least six months.

The Coalition Government has stated that it believes "that some sanctions are set at too low a level and the consequences of failing to comply with requirements are not always clear". The Government's proposed future sanctions structure under the existing benefit system is outlined in the table below. It will introduce a new sanctions structure to apply across Jobseeker's Allowance, Employment and Support Allowance and Income Support. It will be for the Northern Ireland Executive to determine if or how a new sanction regime will apply in Northern Ireland.

Table 2: Proposed future sanctions structure under the existing benefits system¹⁴

In all circumstances sanctions will not apply where there is good cause.

Conditionality	Failure	Financial Sanction
Low Jobseeker's Allowance and Employment and Support Allowance Work-Related Activity Group	Includes Failure to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Attend an appointment. • Carry out a jobseekers direction. • Attend employment-related programme. • Attend a Work Focused Interview (ESA). • Carry out work related activity (ESA). 	100% JSA and ESA open ended until re-engagement then fixed minimum period (1, 2 then 4 weeks) Advisers will retain the ability not to impose a sanction for first and subsequent failures where good cause applies.

High Jobseeker's Allowance only	Failure to: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Apply for a job. • Accept job offer. • Take part in Mandatory Work Activity. 	1st failure: 100% Jobseeker's Allowance fixed for 3 months.	2nd failure: 100% Jobseeker's Allowance fixed for 6 months.	3rd failure: 100% Jobseeker's Allowance fixed for 3 years.
Income Support and Employment and Support Allowance lone parents with a child aged over one but below the age of five.	Failure to attend Work Focused Interview	1st failure: 20% (of the over 18-lone parent personal allowance) open-ended until re-engagement.	2nd failure and subsequent failures: Additional 20% (capped at 40% total for any subsequent failures) until re-engagement.

Hardship payments will be available to benefit recipients in need who receive a sanction. However, the Coalition Government has stated that it is considering replacing the current system of hardship payments with loans “to the extent that it is possible.” It is also seeking ways to ensure that “...those who persistently fail to meet the requirements imposed upon them cannot rely on these alternative sources of support for the entire duration of their sanction”.

Universal Credit and Northern Ireland

One of the most notable concerns is the impact of Universal Credit on the benefits and tax credit administration structures in Northern Ireland. Currently, the majority of benefits in Northern Ireland are administered centrally by the Social Security Agency which employs around 5,600 staff. The SSA's main 4 main operation business areas are:

- Pensions, Disability and Carers Service: administers State Pension, State Pension Credit, Disability Living Allowance, Attendance Allowance and Carers Allowance.
- Working Age (Central): administers Incapacity Benefit, Employment and Support Allowance and provides medical support service administration.
- Working Age (Network): administers Income Support, Jobseekers Allowance, allocation of National Insurance numbers, Social Fund and the Belfast Benefit Delivery Centre; and
- Benefits Assurance: delivers the monitoring and reporting of Financial Accuracy, level of fraud and error and decision making standards, error reduction activity, counter fraud activity, benefit uptake activity and Operations Support.

The Agency currently maintains a benefit caseload of approximately 580,000 for individuals living in Northern Ireland with 850,000 benefit accounts. It also provides a benefits processing service for DWP covering approximately 188,000 customers in London¹⁶. The Coalition Government proposes that overall administration of Universal Credit will be managed by one Department – the Department for Work and Pensions. The consultation paper 'Universal Credit: welfare that works' does not contain any further details on how this will impact on the administrative structures and delivery of tax credits and benefits in Northern Ireland.

Universal Credit may also have important implications for other programmes such as 'Customer First' (previously the Strategy Business Review). The Minister for Social Development has indicated that he has not yet made any decision on the roll out of Customer First across the SSA's local office network but has stated that:

*"While it is too early to be definitive about the implications of the proposed introduction in 2013 of Universal Credit, consideration will be given to this in due course. It is clear that the proposed changes have the potential to impact on all the benefits currently delivered through the local office network and it is important that the Agency be positioned to respond flexibly to these challenges in the future"*¹⁷

4 Disability Living Allowance Reform¹⁸

"This is our opportunity to improve the support for disabled people and better enable them to lead full, active and independent lives. Personal Independence Payment will maintain the key principles of DLA, providing cash support to help overcome the barriers which prevent disabled people from participating in everyday life, but it will be delivered in a fairer, more consistent and sustainable manner. It is only right that support should be targeted at those disabled people who face the greatest challenge to leading independent lives."

19 Department for Work and Pensions (2010) Public Consultation – Disability Living Allowance Reform. www.dwp.gov.uk/consultations/2010/dla-reform.shtml

The Coalition Government announced in the June 2010 Budget that it would reform Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and subsequently published the public consultation paper ‘Disability Living Allowance reform’ in December 2010²⁰. The Government proposes to replace DLA with a new benefit – Personal Independence Payment which will be introduced in 2013/14 for new claimants. In 2013, the Government will also begin a ‘managed programme’ to re-assess existing claimants of DLA, starting with those of working age, using the new eligibility criteria and assessment process.

In short, the proposed changes to DLA include²¹:

- Renaming the benefit;
- Simplification of the system with a reduced number of rates;
- The introduction of an assessment process;
- An extension to the qualifying criteria i.e. the new benefit will only be available to those with a long-term health condition expected to last a minimum of 12 months, as opposed to the current six months; and
- A periodic review of for those awarded the benefit.

The new benefit – Personal Independence Payment

The new Personal Independence Payment will be a non means-tested, non-taxable benefit and payment will not be dependent upon having paid National Insurance contributions. It will be available to those in work as well as those who are out of work. Initially, the new Personal Independence Payment will be for working age claimants (16 to 64 years old), the Government has, however, stated that it is considering if it is appropriate to apply the new eligibility and assessment criteria to children. It is also considering whether the upper age limit to new claims for Personal Independence Payment should rise in line with State Pension Age, once it has been equalised for men and women in 2018. The Government has stated that special provisions to fast-track the benefit for people who are terminally ill will be continued.

The new structure – reduced number of rates

The new benefit will be structured differently from DLA. Currently DLA is divided into two parts, i.e. the ‘Care Component’ (with a higher, middle and lower rate payable) and the ‘Mobility Component’ (with a higher and lower rate payable). The Coalition Government believes that the current structure is too complex and difficult to administer. It also believes that ‘care’ and ‘mobility’ may not necessarily be the best proxies for the costs associated with disability and long term illness. For example, it believes ‘mobility’ as currently defined concentrates on an individual’s ability to walk and not on their ability to get around more generally (e.g. through the use of aids and adaptations).

Table 3: Disability Living Allowance Rates

Care Component	Weekly Rates
Highest Rate	£71.40
Middle Rate	£47.80
Lowest Rate	£18.95

Mobility Component	Weekly Rates
Higher Rate	£49.85
Lower Rate	£18.95

(Source: NI Direct²²)

The Government states that it aims to simplify this structure, it proposes that Personal Independence Payment will have two components, with each component having two rates payable:

- The 'mobility component' – which will be awarded on the basis of the individual's ability to get around; and
- The 'daily living component' – which will be awarded on the basis of the individual's ability to participate in daily life.

Changes to qualifying criteria

A core component of the Government's proposals for Personal Independence Payment is that the eligibility criteria will be much more restrictive than it is currently for Disability Living Allowance. The DWP consultation paper on the reforms states that it "...will only be available to people with a long-term health condition or impairment". The Coalition Government proposes that to qualify for Personal Independence Payment an individual must meet the eligibility criteria for a period of six months (the 'Qualifying Period') and be expected to continue to satisfy entitlement conditions for at least a further six months (the 'Prospective Test'). In other words, to qualify for the new benefit an individual's health condition or impairment must be expected to last for at least a minimum of a year. Under the new proposals people with a terminal illness will be exempt from these conditions and the application of these rules for people with fluctuating conditions is under review.

Another important issue with respect to eligibility is the intention to move away from a system that awards automatic entitlement to certain rates of benefit for certain conditions. For example, currently a person born without both legs or has had both legs amputated is entitled to receive the higher rate mobility component DLA. Similarly, certain people with severe visual impairments will become entitled to the higher rate mobility component of DLA from 11 April 2010²³. Instead it is proposed that each application will be assessed on an individual basis, the consultation paper states that this "will deliver a more personalised service that ensures resources are targeted where they are most needed."

In addition to this, the Coalition Government announced as part of the Spending Review in October, that from 2012 the mobility component of DLA will cease to be paid if an individual in receipt of DLA has been in hospital or care home from 28 days (84 for children in hospital)²⁴.

The new assessment process

The Coalition Government announced in the June 2010 budget that the reform of Disability Living Allowance would include a new 'objective' assessment process. Work to develop the new assessment is not yet complete, however, the consultation paper states that the Coalition Government wants:

22 NI Direct - www.nidirect.gov.uk/index/information-and-services/people-with-disabilities/financial-support-for-people-with-disabilities/disability-living-allowance/disability-living-allowance-rates-and-how-to-claim.htm

23 Department for Social Development News Release. 'Severely visual impaired people – entitlement to DLA higher rate mobility component'.

24 This will not apply where the individual is paying for their own care.

“...the new assessment to provide a broader, more objective measurement of the impact of an individual's health condition or impairment on everyday activities than those currently captured on the DLA form. Our initial proposal is that the assessment should consider activities related to an individual's ability to get around, interact with others, manage personal care and treatment needs, and access food and drink”²⁵

The extent to which an individual can carry out certain activities will determine their eligibility for Personal Independent Payment and the level of award. The assessment process will have much greater focus on the use of aids and adaptations (e.g. wheelchairs) and the successful use of these in increasing access to participation in everyday life.

Evidence to be used as part of the new assessment process will be gathered from a variety of sources, e.g. self-reporting, medical evidence from GPs, social workers and other healthcare professionals. The Coalition Government believes that advice from an ‘independent health care professional’ such as a doctor or occupational therapist approved by DWP, will be an important part of the assessment process. This will involve a ‘face to face’ meeting with that professional and an ‘in-depth analysis’ of the individual's circumstances.

The new review process

The consultation emphasises the central role that reviewing awards will play in ensuring that Personal Independence Payment is targeted at those with long term disabilities and/or health condition. It states that within DLA there is no systematic process for checking the ongoing accuracy of awards and that under the new system individuals receiving the new benefit will be subject to periodic review. The review will be based on the new assessment process and the frequency and format of reviews will “vary depending on the individual's needs, the likelihood of their health condition or impairment changing and, potentially, the successful use of aids and adaptations”. The reviews may involve face to face or telephone discussions.

In line with the Coalition Government's new strategy on fraud and error²⁶ (published October 2010), individuals who do not report changes in their circumstances between reviews (e.g. knowingly withholding information which would have resulted in reduced benefit) will have to repay the amount claimed and could be subject to a penalty and/or prosecution.

Linking with other services

The Government's vision for the new Personal Payment Allowance regime is to link it to access with other forms of support in the health and social care system, e.g. providing guidance to individuals on the options open to them; signposting to support available elsewhere; ensuring that individuals can discuss their situation with an appropriate professional who could offer advice or specialist support. The Government is currently scoping the potential for creating linkages and is exploring making elements of this part of the requirements of the benefit where appropriate.

Why does the Coalition Government feel reform is necessary?

The consultation paper outlines four main reasons why the Government feels that reform of DLA is necessary, i.e.:

- “Caseload and expenditure is increasing at a rate never envisaged”: the Government highlights that the number of DLA claimants has increased by 30% in the last 8 years. Currently 3 million people are claiming the benefit across the UK and of these, 1.8m are 25 Department for Work and Pensions (2010) Public consultation - Disability Living Allowance reform, p16.

26 Department for Work and Pensions (2010) Tackling fraud and error in the benefit and tax credits system. www.dwp.gov.uk/docs/tackling-fraud-and-error.pdf of working age. The Government argues that the complexity and subjectivity of the benefit has led to a wider application than was the original intention of the benefit.

- “The current system is too complex and the benefit is not understood”: the Government argues that the system is too complicated, complex to administer and that the claim form is particularly difficult to understand.
- “There is no system to check awards remain correct”: The Government believe that currently there is no straightforward way of reviewing entitlement to DLA on a regular basis to ensure that recipients are receiving the right level of benefit. The Government states that it wants to ensure that the new system can easily identify whether an individual’s condition has deteriorated or improved.
- “The benefit can act as a barrier to work”: The Government argues that evidence suggests that DLA can act as a barrier to work and that people who claim DLA have lower work expectations. The Government argues that the new Universal Credit regime will ensure that even small amounts of work will be more financially rewarding than inactivity.

Disability Living Allowance and Northern Ireland

As of 31 May 2010, there were 183,710 individuals in receipt of Disability Living Allowance in Northern Ireland. Of these, 87,410 were male and 96,300 were female and 13,815 claimants were children under the age of 16 years old. A total of 169,895 claimants were aged 16 to 80+.

As evident from Table 5, Northern Ireland has the highest prevalence of DLA claimants per head of population in the UK (102.7 per 1,000 population in Northern Ireland compared to England with 49.6; Wales with 80.7 and Scotland with 65.9). This equates to one in 10 of the people in Northern Ireland claiming the benefit. West and North Belfast have the highest rates of claimants in Northern Ireland (Table 6). As Table 7 highlights, a significant proportion of DLA awards in Northern Ireland are due to ‘mental health causes’ (for 41,694 claimants this is classified as the main disabling condition), this is followed by arthritis (33,778 claimants), muscle/joint and bone disease (14,515 claimants), back ailments (13,675), and learning difficulties (12,703).

The Minister for Social Development has expressed concern over the impact of the proposed reforms on Northern Ireland,

“I am concerned about the scale, pace and intention of these proposed changes, give the high number of people who are in receipt of DLA here. The Coalition Government has to acknowledge the different circumstances in Northern Ireland. I will work to have our conditions fully recognised.

We have the highest levels of DLA claimants in Britain by far. We don’t have to look too far into Northern Ireland’s past to discover why that is.”²⁷

The Department for Social Development estimate that the proposed changes to DLA will result in a 20% reduction in working age claimants once the proposals have been fully rolled-out (there are currently around 103,500 working age claimants in Northern Ireland)²⁸.

A number of concerns have been expressed by Disability and Welfare organisations about the future of Disability Living Allowance. Disability Action, for example, have suggested that the “obvious consequence of moving to a medical assessment for DLA claimants is that many people will have the benefit removed”. Disability Action also emphasises that the high number of DLA claimants in Northern Ireland is a reflection of a number of factors including large numbers of people disabled as a result of the Troubles, an aging population, people living longer through better medical treatment and better outcomes for babies born prematurely³⁵. Of particular concern to Disability Action is,

“the proposed extension to the qualifying criteria - the new benefit will now only be available to those with a long-term health condition, expected to last a minimum of 12 months, as opposed to the current six months. This will mean that people with conditions that fluctuate over time, for example arthritis or mental health conditions, could be excluded from receiving a benefit that helps them pay the extra costs associated with their condition.”³⁶

Other organisations, such as Mencap have urged the Coalition Government to rethink its proposals for DLA. It has difficulty in particular with the plan to cut the mobility care component of DLA for those in residential care and the impact this will have on people with profound and multiple learning disabilities:

“People with profound and multiple learning disabilities who do not live in the family home are most likely to be living in residential care homes. This money helps them get the personal support they need to get out and take part in activities. Removing this benefit will result in people with a learning disability being stuck in their residential care homes, stripped of the control they have over their lives.”³⁷

RNIB have also questioned the proposed assessment process for the new Personal Independence Payment and whether assessors will have the specialist knowledge required to understand the daily needs of people who are blind or partially sighted:

“RNIB has serious concerns about the effectiveness of the proposed assessment for a Personal Independence Payment, which undermines the Government’s commendable ambition to make the process easier for claimants to understand. The proposal would have blind and partially sighted people meeting with assessors who lack specialist knowledge, to answer questions that cannot provide an accurate picture of their daily needs. It is particularly distressing when in many cases objective medical evidence could clearly demonstrate these needs.”³⁸

5 Housing Benefit Reform

“The Housing Benefit measures should be considered within the wider context of the budget deficit and the reduction in public expenditure that the Government is making to tackle it. Expenditure on Housing Benefit in cash terms has increased significantly from £11 billion in 1999/2000 to £20 billion in 2009/10. Without reform, it is forecast to reach £24 billion by 2015/16. It is essential that the overall cost of Housing Benefit is controlled and therefore the Government is taking these steps in 2011 towards maintaining a more sustainable Housing Benefit system in futureThe amendments to Housing Benefit will create a fairer system of support by taking steps to ensure that people on benefit are not living in accommodation that would be out of reach of most people in work.....”

- Statement by the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in accordance with section 174(2) of the Social Security Administration Act 1992

The Coalition Government announced a number of substantial reforms to the Housing Benefit system in its June 2010 Budget. This included:

- From April 2011, the removal of the five bedroom Local Housing Allowance rate so that the maximum level which can be claimed is for a four bedroom property.
- From April 2011, the introduction of caps so that Local Housing Allowance weekly rates cannot exceed £250 for a one bedroom property; £290 for a two bedroom property; £340 for a three bedroom property and £400 for a four bedroom property.
- From April 2011, the removal of the provision for claimants to retain a maximum of up to £15 per week in cases where their contractual rent is below the Local Housing Allowance rate.
- From April 2011, the inclusion of an additional bedroom within the size criteria used to assess Housing Benefit claims in the private rented sector where a person with disabilities, or long-term health condition, has a proven need for overnight care and this is provided by a non-resident carer.
- From October 2011, setting Local Housing Allowance rates at the 30th percentile of rents in each Broad Rental Market Area rather than the median.
- The Government contribution to Discretionary Housing Payments is to be increased by £10m in 2011-12 and £40m in each year from 2012-13.
- From April 2013, Local Housing Allowance Rates will be uprated based on the Consumer Price Index rather than on the basis of local rents.
- From April 2013, Housing Benefit will be reduced for the long term unemployed receiving income-based Jobseeker’s Allowance to 90% of the initial award (after 12 months of claiming JSA).

The Coalition Government also announced in the Spending Review that from April 2012, there will be an increase in the age threshold for the shared room rate and this would apply to customers up the age of 35 (currently the age threshold is up to the age of 25).

On the 30 November the Coalition Government announced two changes to the timetabling of some of the reforms to provide additional transitional time for existing claimants:

- All changes that will adjust the way Local Housing Allowance rates are calculated will come into force from April 2011 for new claims.
- Existing claimants will continue at their current rate of benefit until their claim is reviewed, they will then have a further period of transitional protection at their current Local Housing Allowance rate of up to nine months if there has not been a relevant change in circumstances⁴⁰.

Whilst considering this section it important to note the timetabling and the extent to which and how Housing Benefit reforms will be implemented in Northern Ireland has yet to be announced. During 2009/10 the Northern Ireland Housing Executive paid a total of £518.02m in Housing Benefit. The number of people receiving Housing Benefit increased by 9% during the year to a total of 150,526 (68,110 in Housing Executive tenancies, 21,133 in housing association tenancies and 61,283 in the private rented sector)⁴¹.

As highlighted at the beginning of this section, the reform of Housing Benefit is one of a number of measures announced by the Coalition Government aimed at addressing the budget deficit. The Coalition Government believe that the reforms will make the system 'fairer' by ensuring that housing choices and accommodation for those on benefits do not exceed those of people in employment. In a recent speech at the Institute for Public Policy Research (ippr) the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, Iain Duncan Smith, stated that "...taxpayers are increasingly seeing people on benefits living in houses they couldn't hope to afford themselves"⁴².

However, there has been concern expressed with regards to this point, for example, the Social Security Advisory Committee states that,⁴³

"In presenting the case for change the Department has made much of the need for the HB system to ensure that housing choices are both prudent and geared to what people in work would expect to pay. However, we find an inherent contradiction in the latter aspiration because it takes no account of the fact that HB is an in-work benefit (and that it has always functioned so as to enable people in work to afford to pay reasonable housing costs calculated by reference to local market rents) and that not all HB recipients are in the labour market (people over state pension age, people who are in the ESA support group, and lone parents of younger children, for example). It also makes no reference to the fact that significant numbers of claimants move between claiming while in work and claiming while out of work.

We have also seen no evidence to suggest that the vast majority of housing choices made by HB recipients have been either reckless or extravagant."

43 Social Security Advisory Committee Report (2010) on the Housing Benefit (Amendment) Regulations 2010 and the Rent Officers (Housing Benefit Functions) Amendment Order 2010, pp. 9-13

In November 2010, the Social Security Advisory Committee⁴⁴ published a report on its response consultation on the Housing Benefit (Amendment) Regulations 2010 (these regulations apply to GB and will give effect to many of the Housing Benefit measures included in the Coalition Government's 2010 Budget)⁴⁵. Crucially, the SSAC recommends "that the Government should not go ahead with the package of amendments as proposed" and that "the Committee raised a number of concerns about the scale and impact of the changes, and the serious effect that this would have on customers claiming Housing Benefit who are living in the private rented sector, particularly those claiming according to Local Housing Allowance rules"⁴⁶. For ease of reference the Social Security Advisory Committee recommendations on the regulations and the Coalition Government's response to those recommendations is set out in the table below.

Table 8: Social Security Advisory Committee Recommendations on Housing Benefit reform

Social Security Advisory Committee Recommendations	Coalition Government's Response
Extending the modification of the property size criteria (which is to be applied to claimants requiring an additional bedroom for a non-resident carer) to households accommodating children subject to shared residence arrangements.	The Government believes that this would introduce an element of double provision into the system where such children could potentially be taken into account in two separate benefit assessments. The Government has no plans to extend the size criteria to any other categories of cases.
Reluctantly recommends that the £15 excess payment is removed.	The Government welcomes the Committee's agreement that this measure should go ahead.
The introduction of the Housing Benefit caps should be deferred until October 2011 (rather than April 2011 as the Government initially proposed).	Deferring this measure for new customers would mean very high Local Housing Allowance rates would be available for much longer. The maximum weekly rates for all new claims will be £400 per week from April 2011. The Government will set LHA rates at the 30th percentile from April 2011 instead of October 2011 as originally planned. However, to give existing customers sufficient time to adjust to their new rate, the Government will provide transitional protection at their existing LHA rate for a period of up to nine months (following the date in which their claim is reviewed).
The restriction of Local Housing Allowance to the four bedroom rate should not proceed until a full race equality impact assessment has been carried out.	The Government states that it has already carried out a full Equality Impact Assessment and that research shows that the cumulative impacts of these measures do not appear to disadvantage one group more disproportionately than another. DWP is considering the scope for commissioning primary research into the impact of the changes on particular groups such as large families and ethnic minority groups.

44 The SSAC is the UK's statutory advisory body for all social security matters except those relating to industrial injuries, war pensions, occupational pensions, and National Insurance contributions. Most proposals for social security regulations must be submitted to the SSAC before they are made.

Social Security Advisory Committee Recommendations	Coalition Government's Response
Three months transitional protection should be made available to better enable the families who currently occupy larger properties to secure larger accommodation.	Families occupying larger properties will, along with existing customers, have a period of up to nine months transitional protection from the date in which their Housing Benefit claim is reviewed.
That the Department urgently re-examines the potential for restructuring the national caps in order to more accurately and realistically reflect the position of London and other high cost areas.	The Government does not accept that Local Housing Allowance Rates should be re-considered. The weekly caps affect very few local authority areas, and all but three Broad Rental Market Areas have at least 30% of properties that are affordable within the new Local Housing rates.
The Government should consider the scope for exempting particularly vulnerable tenants, such as people with disabilities who are receiving care and/or support services, from the caps.	The Government accepts that some benefit recipients are likely to need more support than others. Additional provision has been made through changes to the sizing criteria for some disabled customers as well as additional funding to help those people who will be affected. The Government believes this is the most appropriate way to deal with the most difficult cases. It would be extremely difficult to legislate for every circumstance and to define what is meant by a 'vulnerable' tenant.
The one bedroom shared accommodation rate should continue to be based on median rents.	The Government does not accept this recommendation, this arrangement reflects the housing expectations of people of a similar age not on benefits. As part of the Spending Review, the Government has announced an increase in the age threshold for the shared room rate which from April 2012, will apply to customers up to the age of 35.
That DWP reviews the Broad Rental Market Areas, so as to ensure that 30% of private rented sector properties are available to Housing Benefit claimants in each local authority area.	Broad Rental Market Areas boundaries will remain broadly as they are in the short term, but the Department will reconsider these areas as part of the longer term Housing Benefit measures and specifically in relation to the move to set Local Housing Allowance rates according to the Consumer Price Index (CPI). One option the Government is keen to explore is whether areas could be co-aligned with local authority boundaries.
That DWP reviews the allocation of Discretionary Housing Payments to better reflect the scope and projected impacts across local authorities.	The Government fully accepts that the allocation of Discretionary Housing Payments should be reviewed in the light of these changes. The Department is already working with local authority associations to consider how best to allocate the funding for next year, including the additional funds that was agreed within the Budget.
That the Government considers the scope for bringing forward more of the increase in the Discretionary Housing Payment to year one of the changes.	The Government accepts that supporting customers during the transitional period as changes come into force in 2011 is critical. It also accepts the principle put forward by the SSAC that more support is required during year one of the changes. However, given the adjustments the Government has made to the implementation timescale there is no longer a pressing need to bring forward Discretionary Housing Payment funding.

Social Security Advisory Committee Recommendations	Coalition Government's Response
That DWP explores measures to encourage landlords to stay in/ enter the Local Housing Allowance market, including wider availability of direct payment within the current benefits system and with the proposed Universal Credit.	The Department will work closely with the Department for Communities and Local Government and the devolved administrations to encourage landlords to continue to rent to Housing Benefit tenants. DWP is considering direct payments in the context of the Local Housing Allowance two year review. It is also considering extending the safeguard provision to allow local authorities to consider making direct payments to landlords if it is their view it would secure or retain a tenancy.
That DWP ensures that definitions of 'intentionally homeless' and associated guidance is revised to ensure that the position of households who fall into arrears because of changes to the Housing Benefit entitlement are not excluded from the scope of homelessness provision.	DWP will continue to work closely with the Department for Communities and Local Government and the devolved administrations in relation to the implementation of the Housing Benefit measures. There are currently no plans to change the statutory definition of 'intentionally homeless'. Although the Government does not expect tenants to be made homeless as a result of its reforms, it is the Government's view that should any tenant be made homeless as a result of a reduction of Housing Benefit outside of their control, they should not be considered to have been made homeless intentionally.
That DWP undertakes to put in place a dedicated monitoring and evaluation programme to track and report the impacts of the changes both in real time and over the longer term.	DWP fully accept that a comprehensive evaluation programme should be put in place, this will include examining the behavioural responses of landlords; money management; caseload and average awards; shortfalls in rents; direct payments; breaks in claims due to customers moving home; and evictions and homelessness.
That DWP should out in place an early proactive national campaign to raise awareness and ensure that those likely to be affected will have an opportunity to make necessary preparations.	The Government fully accepts the need for a comprehensive awareness campaign. DWP is developing a range of communication products aimed at raising awareness, e.g. online information sources and printed material where appropriate.

A recent report by the House of Commons Work and Pensions Committee (December 2010) also raised a number of issues with regard to the Housing Benefit reforms announced in the June Budget:

"Some witnesses believed that an increase in evictions and homelessness was inevitable. Larger families occupying bigger and more expensive properties are likely to be most seriously affected by the cap on the total amount of LHA that can be claimed. Many people are likely to struggle to meet the shortfalls between the reduced amount of benefit they receive and the rent they need to pay to secure appropriate homes. As a consequence of the Government's intention to apply downward pressure to rents charged to benefit claimants, many people are likely to have to move to cheaper properties and to cheaper areas..."

We accept that some landlords will lower rents for claimant tenants in response to the caps on LHA rates. However, the extent of that response cannot be accurately predicted and is likely to vary between different areas, depending on local market conditions."⁴⁷

Concerns have also been expressed by a number of local housing and benefit advice bodies with regard to the potential impact of the reforms on Northern Ireland. In evidence to the House of Commons Work and Pensions Committee, the Housing Rights Service stated that it believed the measures would have the following impact on Northern Ireland:

- Restricting access to the private rented sector;
- Limiting the ability of tenants to sustain a home;
- The breakdown of families;
- Increasing rent arrears in the private rented sector and social housing;
- Increasing both direct and indirect costs associated with homelessness;
- Increasing costs associated with managing and recovering rent arrears;
- Increasing demand on advice services;
- Increasing applications for Discretionary Housing Payments; and
- The reluctance of private landlords in the private rented sector to let to people in receipt of benefit and possible withdrawal from the market⁴⁸.

Also in evidence to the Work and Pensions Committee, Law Centre (NI) drew attention to a number of issues including, for example⁴⁹:

- The extent to which the proposals took into consideration the different administration arrangements in Northern Ireland in comparison to GB. That is, Housing Benefit is administered by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive rather than Local Authorities. Social security and training and employment are divided into two Government Departments in NI in contrast to GB where both are under just one Department – DWP.
- The impact of the plans to reduce the initial award of benefit by 10% to those receiving JSA in excess of 12 months. Law Centre (NI) are concerned that those removed from ESA and Incapacity Benefit under the revised medical assessment may have health conditions or disabilities which place them at a disadvantage in the labour market. Law Centre (NI) also believe that consideration must be given to the capacity of the employment market in Northern Ireland in the current economic climate to ensure that people who are genuinely seeking employment are not unfairly penalised.
- The impact on reduction to an LHA rate of the 30th percentile and a total cap on LHA rates on overcrowding and homelessness. Law Centre (NI) argues that not only will this will have a disproportionate effect on families but will also have a knock-on effect on the social housing sector as private rented accommodation becomes harder to access.

Recent commentary from the Head of Research of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive provides a further insight into the potential impact of Housing Benefit reforms on both tenants and landlords in Northern Ireland⁵⁰:

“...The potentially most damaging proposal is the intention to change the LHA allowance calculation from one based on media (mid-point) rent to one based on the 30th percentile.... It is difficult to assess in detail the effect of this, but give that there are some 38,000 private tenants who currently have their HB assessed on the basis of LHAs and that each of them would on average lose £7-8 per week – this means almost £15m would be removed annually from the Government’s support to the private rented sector.”

50 University of Ulster (2010) Northern Ireland Quarterly House Price Index for Q2, 2010. P2. www.nihe.gov.uk/price_index_q2_2010.pdf

This is bad news for tenants and landlords alike. The research undertaken by the University of Ulster indicated that 68 per cent of tenants in the private rented sector who were in receipt of HB (now almost 50,000 tenants) had to pay a shortfall between the HB they receive and the total rent payable to the landlord and that this weekly shortfall amounted to an average of £20 per week. The effect of this new policy on determining LHA will seriously exacerbate this problem. It will inevitably mean more private tenants losing their home and greater difficulties for landlords trying to ensure they collect a viable rent.

All in all the proposed changes to HB set out in the budget will add to the tensions and instability in Northern Ireland's housing market, at a time when Government is trying to promote the private rented sector as more attractive, viable alternative to the social sector...."

6 State Pension Reform – Increase to State Pension Age and the ‘Triple Guarantee’

"This Government believes that the State Pension should be a firm foundation for income in later life. That is why the Government has committed to restoring the earnings link with the basic State Pension from April 2011, with a 'triple guarantee' that the basic State Pension will rise by the highest of average earnings, prices, or 2.5 per cent.

More of us are now reaching State Pension age, and living to claim a State Pension for longer, than ever before. Increasing longevity is a cause for celebration. But the legislative timetable for increases in State Pension age was based on expectations of longevity that have since been revised."

Steve Webb MP, Minister of State for Pensions⁵¹.

The Chancellor announced in the Spending Review that the Coalition Government decided that the increase in State Pension age to 66 should be accelerated to 2020. The Government will introduce a Bill in 2011 to implement this change. If Parliament approves the Government's proposals, the State Pension age for both men and women will rise from 65 in December 2018 to 66 by April 2020 (in GB). To enable this earlier increase to 66, the equalisation timetable will be adjusted from April 2016 so that women's State Pension age will reach 65 by November 2018 (rather than April 2020)⁵². The Government is also considering future increases to State Pension Age (with a possible future rise to 68)⁵³. A total of 4.9 million people in Great Britain will have their State Pension Age revised. Of these, 4.4 million will have an increase in State Pension age of a year or less, the Coalition Government believes that this will result in £30.4 billion of savings between 2016/17 and 2025/26⁵⁴.

In addition to this, the Coalition Government announced in the June 2010 Budget that the basic State Pension would be uprated from April 2011 via a 'triple guarantee' of the growth rate of average earnings, the annual increase in the Consumer Price Index, or 2.5 per cent, whichever is highest. The Consumer Price Index (CPI) (rather than the Retail Price Index) will be used as the measure of prices in the triple guarantee, as for other benefits and tax credits. However, the Government has stated that to ensure the value of a basic State Pension is at least as generous as under the previous uprating rules, that for the April 2011 uprate only, basic State Pension would increase by at least the equivalent of RPI. In December 2010, the Department for Work and Pensions announced that that the basic State Pension would increase by £4.50 to £102.15 in April 2011⁵⁵. To ensure the lowest income pensioners benefit from the triple guarantee, the standard minimum income guarantee in Pension Credit will increase in April 2011 by the cash rise in a full basic State Pension.

7 Reaction of the Think Tanks to Welfare Reform

This section looks briefly at the reaction of some of the key think tanks to:

- Welfare Reform –the June 2010 Budget and October 2010 Spending Review
- Welfare Reform and Universal Credit
- Reform of DLA
- Reform of Housing Benefit
- Reform of State Pension

The June 2010 Budget & October 2010 Spending Review

The Institute for Fiscal Studies (IFS) published a paper in October 2010, entitled: *The distributional effect of tax and benefit reforms to be introduced between June 2010 and April 2014*⁵⁶. The report stated that the Chancellor's was wrong in claiming that the June budget was progressive - if the measures announced in the budget were analysed in isolation, or if their effects were considered over a longer period of time. The IFS analysis found that the overall effect of the new reforms is regressive.

The IFS published a similar analysis which focused on the impact of the reforms in Northern Ireland⁵⁷. This research concluded that where the period 2010-11 is concerned, households in Northern Ireland will be "no more affected than the UK average by tax and benefit changes". However, the report stressed that where the period 2013-14 or 2014-15 is concerned, Northern Ireland will have the second highest average loss as a percentage of income within the regions of the UK. The authors attribute this to the fact that a higher proportion of people in N I are in receipt of DLA and the relatively high proportion of households with children in Northern Ireland compared with the rest of the UK.

The IFS has also commented about the reforms to child benefit, in particular the announcement that it will be withdrawn from higher rate taxpayers from April 2013. The IFS anticipate a number of negative implications from this new form of means testing - for a start many will see the proposed scheme as unfair. Another serious implication is that the policy may distort incentives for some families with children – as a small rise in salary would mean the loss of all their child benefit.⁵⁸

A Fabian Society⁵⁹ report published by the TUC in September 2010 entitled *Where the Money Goes*⁶⁰ used official figures to calculate how different groups in the population benefit from public services. The research estimated the losses to UK households as a result of the Government's proposed cuts in public spending by 2012-13 (excluding the cuts to welfare benefits). By combining this analysis with data on the impact of the proposed tax and benefit changes by 2012-13, the researchers were also able to analyse the impact on households of all fiscal consolidation measures for this year. Their conclusion was that there would be a severe impact on public services, even before the effect of the cuts to benefits and tax credits is considered. They estimated an average cut to households of £1,308 per year.

The Centre for Social Justice made a largely positive response to the Comprehensive Spending Review stating that it was: ...broadly... a brave and necessary reforming agenda and one that the CSJ welcomes.. and ...a spending review of reforming ideas to strike at the heart of the nation's damaging deficit.⁶¹

In relation to families and welfare the CSJ's appraisal struck a more negative note, stating that it was "not yet fully convinced that this CSR is sufficiently focussed on the welfare of Britain's families":

"The family is barely mentioned although we welcome the emphasis on children with disabilities and mental health needs with the expansion of personal budgets and access to psychological therapies. However, there are real cuts in financial assistance to low-income families with the decrease in assistance with childcare. There is already low take up of this benefit"

The CSJ also stated that they:

"...question the continued fairness anomaly in the government's child benefit reforms. As stands they are unfair and we urge the Chancellor to revisit his decision."

In general, the CSJ welcomed the government's reforms to benefits but pointed to the concerns that exist around the implementation of the assessment for incapacity benefit which research has highlighted⁶² stating that these must be addressed, a fact acknowledged by the government.

The Fawcett Society⁶³ referred to independent analysis of the budget by the House of Commons Library which revealed that women will bear the brunt of the cuts. The research found that 72% of the savings identified in the budget would come from women's pockets. Certain benefits to be cut or frozen included the Health in Pregnancy Grant, Sure Start Maternity Grant and Child Benefit, benefits that more women than men rely upon.

The Fawcett Society consequently sought a judicial review of the budget. They believed that the government had not, as required by law, considered the impact of the measures in the budget on equality between men and women. A judicial review was not achieved though the government conceded it had failed to assess how the budget would impact on men and women. The Fawcett Society saw their action as having had a positive and direct impact when, subsequently, the government produced an equality impact assessment on the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Universal Credit

The Institute for Fiscal Studies (IFS) responded to the Universal Credit proposals in January 2011⁶⁴. Its response was positive in relation to many elements: the new system should simplify the existing complicated overlap between benefits and tax credits, make life easier for claimants and reduce fraud and error. Some reservations were expressed however:

"The Universal Credit will dramatically change the welfare system for working-age adults. If successful, it will make the welfare system more effective and coherent. But it will create winners and losers in the process: couples with children will gain from it and, when transitional protection expires, lone parents will lose.”

The authors of the report envisage that Universal Credit system will have both positive and negative implications in relation to work incentives. On average, single adults and the main earners in couples will have stronger incentives. The new system will, however, create weaker incentives for both adults in a couple to work rather than just one. Finally, the policy will lead to stronger incentives for low earners to earn more, but slightly weaker incentives for middle earners to earn more.

The authors concluded that families with children with over £16,000 of savings will be a clear group of losers from the new system. At the moment such families are eligible for tax credits – however they will not qualify for any Universal Credit. The authors infer:

“This may well focus spending on those who need it most, but also gives families an extremely strong incentive to keep financial assets below this level.”

The Institute for Public Policy Research⁶⁵ (IPPR) responded to the Universal Credit White Paper in November 2010⁶⁶ welcoming Universal Credit (UC) as a “sound idea” though expressing reservations about a number of the elements aimed at improving incentives to work and making work pay.

The IPPR identified local differences in child care and transport costs as the main barrier to addressing the real cost of work. They argued that this contradicts the assertion that people will always be better off in work. IPPR predict there will be rises in these costs in the next few years. Because childcare and transport costs vary so widely across the country, it believes that a national Universal Credit system will mean that parents in some parts of the country will find work financially unviable, for example in London.

The IPPR saw a lack of jobs as another major problem, as the UK is experiencing high numbers of young people out of work and growing long term unemployment. In its view, the £2 billion of funding required for UC would be better spent on subsidising jobs so that jobseekers are guaranteed a job- one that they would have to take up.

The IPPR challenged government’s claim that work incentives are key – it considers that the proposed changes will make it harder for working families to afford the childcare that enables them to work warning that that at least half the benefit cuts will hit working families. For example, support for working families for childcare costs through the tax credit system is being reduced from 80% of total costs to 70% and families claiming maximum support for childcare could lose up to £1,500 a year.

The IPPR authors saw compulsory unpaid work as a “right principle” but a “wrong reform”. People’s job prospects, they maintain, will only improve through genuine work, and the unpaid work being proposed by the government is unlikely to offer this and may not be well regarded by employers.

The IPPR were also concerned about the discretion placed upon advisors in imposing compulsory unpaid work. This option will be less effective for the more recently unemployed and consequently will be more punitive in nature (previously it only applied to those who had been receiving Jobseeker’s allowance for two years or more). The IPPR favoured subsidised job schemes which pay a proper wage – as these are more effective than workfare and should be a priority.

65 The IPPR is an independent think tank founded in 1986 by Lord Hollick.

66 Universal Credit White Paper: IPPR response November 2010
<http://www.ippr.org.uk/members/download.asp?f=%2Fecomm%2Ffiles%2Funiversal+credit+white+paper+ippr+response%2Epdf>

The Centre for Social Justice indicated its approval of “Universal Credit: Welfare that works” noting that its own work on welfare had been a major influence on the White Paper. It stated:

“..Britain’s broken communities are defined by five characteristics, which we define as the pathways to poverty: family breakdown, educational failure, drug and alcohol addiction, severe personal indebtedness and economic dependency – caused by intergenerational worklessness. We are delighted to see the government today taking a massive step towards tackling one of the most significant drivers of poverty and cutting through the biggest barrier to work – the welfare state itself.”

In its response to the proposals for Universal Credit, The Joseph Rowntree Foundation (JRF) highlighted issues around conditionality and sanctions in the benefit system. Its recent research report *A Review of Benefit Sanctions*⁶⁷ had warned that whilst international research has shown positive short term effects, little is understood about the longer term impacts of sanctions upon earnings over time, child well-being and job quality. JRF stressed the importance of making sure the rules for sanctions are understood by jobseekers and that some discretion is applied, including around the impact on other members of a household.

JRF stressed the need for a benefit policy which ensures that jobseekers achieve a good job match – as research evidence shows that this leads to higher earnings and less job ‘churning’ in the longer term.

“It will be no good for long term poverty if the benefits bill is reduced by making it easier for people to get stuck in cycles of low-paid, unskilled, insecure and dead-end jobs”⁶⁸

Reform of Disability Living Allowance (DLA)

Think-tank Demos published a report called *Destination Unknown*⁶⁹ in October 2010 which examined the impact on disabled people of the proposed changes to the welfare system. The report estimated that large numbers of individuals with disabilities and their families will have lost out on significant amounts of essential support by 2015. The cuts to benefits and services are likely to have a disproportionate effect on them compared to their non-disabled counterparts. In Destination Unknown Demos discerned a key change in policy was occurring—namely a move away from a ‘social’ model of disability and an increasing focus on the medical aspect of disability. Demos disagreed with the references in the government proposals about “incentives to work” as a rationale for benefit cuts. For a start, it pointed out, DLA is not an out of work benefit and that many employed people receive it. And they further stressed, government needs to make sure there are jobs for disabled people to fill if it is so keen on incentivising work.

The Institute for Fiscal Studies (IFS) commented on the impact on Northern Ireland of the proposed changes to DLA⁷⁰. It estimated that Northern Ireland is likely to be particularly affected by the stricter medical test for claiming DLA due to the fact that NI has a relatively higher proportion claiming DLA compared with other regions in the UK.

Reform of Housing Benefit

The Joseph Rowntree Foundation (JRF) in its Response to the Department for Work and Pensions 21st Century Welfare⁷¹ (October 2010) commented on the benefit reforms announced in the June Budget, including those to Housing Benefit and Local Housing Allowance (LHA). JRF anticipate some negative consequences from these changes, for example, setting LHA at the 30th percentile and restricting the costs of LHA in high rent areas. In its view, these changes will reduce the upper level of support and put downward pressure on private rents. Lower levels of LHA may well increase arrears and evictions and landlords may respond at the margin by reducing their willingness to let to benefit recipients.

JRF estimate that tightening the rules relating to LHA is going to reduce its role as a means of addressing long term need and lead to short duration tenancies in the rental market and thus be unsuitable for the needs of low-income households.

Reducing Housing Benefit by 10% after 12 months claiming Jobseekers Allowance is a controversial move in JRF's view – and JRF anticipates it will confront landlords with possibly increasing arrears and may put the onus on the housing provider to cope with the shortfall.

Reform of State Pension

The proposals state that over a ten year period women's pension age will rise by six years, while over the same period, men's pension age goes up by just one year. Critics of the proposals have stated that women are bearing the brunt of the changes; others have noted that people in their 50s have little chance to plan properly for a delayed retirement. This group, they stress, have seen little return on their savings due to low interest rates and lukewarm investment returns. The implications are that those who don't want to work the extra years will have to save more.

A short overview of the spending review by the Institute for Public Policy Research (ippr) in December 2010⁷² took the view that it was families with children who were the biggest losers from the reforms -in stark contrast to pensioners. Their analysis acknowledged that pensioners will be affected by the changes to savings credit which will be frozen for four years and thus made less generous. However, the IPPR saw the retaining of the winter fuel allowances, free TV licences and bus passes as a very positive result for pensioners across all income groups.

A Guide to the Welfare Reform Bill

1 Introduction

The Welfare Reform Bill for Northern Ireland was introduced to the Assembly by the Minister for Social Development on 1 October 2012. The measures contained within the Bill, and the changes to the social security system announced as part of the Coalition Government's June 2010 Budget and October 2010 Spending Review, have been described as the most radical shake-up of the benefits system since the foundation of the welfare state.

This Guide is intended to assist Members in their scrutiny of the Bill by providing links to key papers and information on welfare reform.

2 An Overview of the Welfare Reform Bill

Universal Credit

Part 1 of the Bill contains provisions and confers regulation-making powers for a new integrated working-age benefit – known as Universal Credit. Universal Credit will replace Working Tax Credit; Child Tax Credit; Housing Benefit; Income Support; income-based Jobseeker's Allowance; and income-related Employment and Support Allowance. Universal Credit will include a standard allowance to provide for basic living costs (it is suggested that this will be comparable to the standard rates for Jobseeker's Allowance and Employment and Support Allowance). This will be supplemented with additional elements for responsibility for children or young people, housing costs and other needs. Universal Credit will be payable to people both in and out of work, providing that they are aged between 18 and the qualifying age for State Pension Credit. Universal Credit may be available to those younger than aged 18 (e.g. young people estranged from their parents).

Claims for Universal Credit will be made on the basis of households rather than individuals and a cap will be applied to the amount of benefits a household can receive. Tapering of benefits will be introduced to ease the transition into work by reducing the support a person receives at a consistent rate as their earnings increase.

Claims for Universal Credit will be made via the internet and claimants will have access to the information about their claim and payments online. The Department for Social Development has indicated that alternative access routes will be made available for people who do not have access to online services (e.g. by telephone and face-to-face interaction).

Universal Credit will be paid on a monthly basis, the Coalition Government state that this is to encourage responsibility and to be consistent with the 'real time earnings approach'. Although there have been indications that more regular payments will be available for 'vulnerable' groups.

Conditionality and Sanctions

Part 2 of the Bill makes provision for changes to the responsibilities of claimants of Jobseeker's Allowance, Income Support and Employment and Support Allowance leading up to the introduction of Universal Credit and the abolition of income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, income-related Employment and Support Allowance and Income Support.

There will be a new claimant commitment which will be a record of the requirements claimants are expected to meet in order to receive benefits. It will also set out the consequences should a claimant fail to meet these requirements. Part 2 sets out the different types of work-related requirements and the expectations to meet these requirements depending on their circumstances and capability for work. The different types of activity are:

- no work-related requirements: the Department will not impose any work-related requirements on e.g. claimants who have a limited capability for both work and work-related activity due to a physical and mental condition, responsible carers with a child under the age of one; and any claimant with regular and substantial caring responsibilities.
- work-focused interview requirements: these interviews are to discuss the steps that a claimant might take (immediately or in the future) to increase (a) their chances of getting work (b) increasing the numbers of hours they work or (c) getting work that is better paid.
- work-preparation requirement: actions specified by DSD for DEL in order to increase a claimants chances of a) their chances of getting work (b) increasing the numbers of hours they work or (c) getting work that is better paid. The work preparation requirement may include taking part in a health-related assessment which will be carried out by a health professional.

- work-search requirement: there are two parts to this requirement – a general requirement that claimants must take all “reasonable action” to obtain paid work; and, a requirement to take any particular action specified by DSD or DEL (e.g. applying for a specific job or registering with a particular recruitment agency).
- work-availability requirement: a requirement that the claimant is able and willing immediately to take up paid work, increase the number of hours they work or get work that is better paid.

The Bill also makes provisions for a new sanctions regime which provides for a reduction in the amount of a claimant’s award in the event of failing to meet certain requirements (e.g. failing to take part in a prescribed type of work placement or mandatory work activity; failing to apply for a particular vacancy when required to do so; failing to take up an offer of paid work; leaving paid work voluntarily or because of misconduct). The Bill makes provision for sanctions of up to three years depending upon the type of failure of the requirements. The Bill also enables regulations to make provision for universal credit payments to be made to claimants who have been sanctioned and who can demonstrate that they are or will be in hardship. It also enables regulations to make provision for such payments to be recoverable.

Personal Independence Payment

Part 4 of the Bill contains the framework for a new benefit called Personal Independence Payment (PIP) which will replace Disability Living Allowance (DLA). The detailed design for PIP will be contained within secondary legislation. It is proposed that there will be a simplification of the system by reducing the number of rates than that currently available under DLA. The intention is to move away from a system that awards automatic entitlement to certain rates of benefit for certain conditions.

There will be a new assessment process and a periodic review of those awarded the benefit. It has been suggested that the eligibility criteria for PIP will be much more restrictive than it is currently for DLA. This may be a particular problem for Northern Ireland given that it has the highest prevalence of DLA claimants per head of population in the UK. Around 1 in 10 people claim DLA in NI, a substantial number of these claims are on the basis of mental health.

Benefits Cap

Part 5 of the Bill contains provisions relating to the administration of social security benefits. It includes provisions for regulations to be made for a benefit cap to be applied to the welfare benefits to which a single person or couple is entitled. ‘Welfare benefit’ means a prescribed benefit, allowance, payment or credit (but will not include state pension credit or certain retirement pensions).

This part of the Bill also sets out measures to deal with benefit fraud (including measures relating to the Housing Executive powers to prosecute housing benefit fraud) and also contains measures that enable DSD to share data with other bodies.

Child Maintenance

In January 2011 the Coalition Government published a consultation document, “Strengthening families, promoting parental responsibility: the future of child maintenance. This document set out proposals that parents should be encouraged and supported to make their own-family arrangements for the maintenance of their children wherever possible, rather than using the statutory maintenance scheme. It was suggested that this would enable the Department to focus on cases where it is not possible for parents to make the arrangement themselves.

Part 6 of the Bill makes provisions to implement the proposals which support the principles in the consultation document and which require primary legislation.

Benefit cap

It is proposed that a benefit cap will be introduced from April 2013. This will limit the amount of benefit people aged 16 to 64 can get. This means you should not get more in benefit payments than you would if you were earning an average wage. This is law in England, Scotland and Wales but not law in Northern Ireland yet.

Benefit cap - what it is

The benefit cap will apply to people aged 16 to 64, also known as 'working age'.

The cap means that households where no one is in work should not get more in benefits than the average wage paid to people in work. This is after tax and National Insurance has been taken off.

A household means you, your partner if you have one and any children you are responsible for and who live with you.

What's included in the benefit cap

When added together the benefit cap will limit the total income you can get from the following benefits:

- Bereavement Allowance
- Carer's Allowance
- Child Benefit
- Child Tax Credit
- Employment and Support Allowance (except where it is paid with the support component)
- Guardian's Allowance
- Housing Benefit
- Incapacity Benefit
- Income Support
- Jobseeker's Allowance
- Maternity Allowance
- Severe Disablement Allowance
- Widowed Parent's Allowance
- Widowed Mothers Allowance
- Widows Pension
- Widows Pension Age-Related

How much is the benefit cap

The actual amount of the benefit cap won't be set until later this year (2012) in England, Scotland and Wales. The amount of the benefit cap will probably be the same in Northern Ireland, but this is not certain until the law is changed. In England, Scotland and Wales the amount of the benefit cap is expected to be:

A maximum of £350 a week if you're a single person and either:

- you have no children
- the children you have responsibility for don't live with you

A maximum of £500 a week if you're either:

- a couple, with or without dependant children
- a lone parent with dependant children

The cap will not apply if you qualify for Working Tax Credit or get any of the following benefits:

- Disability Living Allowance
- Personal Independence Payment (from April 2013)
- Attendance Allowance
- Industrial Injuries Benefits
- Employment and Support Allowance, if paid with the support component
- War Widow's or War Widower's Pension

The cap will be applied through deductions from Housing Benefit payments.

The current understanding is that Households who are not getting housing benefit as of April 2013 will not have the cap applied.

Why is the benefit cap being introduced?

The benefit cap will make sure that households getting benefits will not normally get more in benefit than the average working household receives in pay.

The benefit cap will encourage people to look for work and help to promote fairness between those in work and those getting benefits.

What help will be available

Support and advice will be given to help you through these changes if they affect you.
