Subject: Re: Formal Submission: Jonny's Law and the Legacy of a Life Taken Too Soon

Following your correspondence confirming the publication of my proposals for Jonny's Law on the Assembly website, I am formally submitting a brief, critical addendum to be processed by the Justice Committee alongside my existing file.

Based on my ongoing review and direct analysis of the recorded post-mortem metrics, I am requesting that the following specific clause be officially integrated into the framework of Jonny's Law

Statutory Duty of Emergency Care (Sentencing Aggravator) "Jonny's Law mandates that where a person is experiencing acute, life-threatening medical distress, a willful or negligent failure by those present to immediately summon emergency medical services (999) must be legally codified as a mandatory statutory aggravating factor in sentencing guidelines.

Clinical and pathological data establish that severe stimulant toxicity is a progressive, systemic medical crisis rather than an instantaneous, unpreventable event. Because this crisis unfolds over a multi-hour window, early hospital interventions specifically aggressive medical cooling and central nervous system sedation carry an exceptionally high survival rate. Therefore, the law must recognize that delaying or withholding access to emergency care actively deprives a vulnerable person of their chance of survival, and the sentencing framework must reflect this severe level of culpability.

I request that the Committee formally attaches this clause to my published submission so that it is fully considered when planning the future tabling and clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Criminal Justice (Sentencing etc.) Bill.

Regards

L Ramsey
